Much of Northampton's a bit too ritzy but you can't beat the food at Cha? Cha! Cha! Inexpensive, tasty and healthy. This place can't be beat. For the reader in you, check out Raven Books, the best book store this side of Montague.

Northampton home to a cornucopia of bookstores to find everything from A to Z

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

After all the partying, studying and movie watching, it's often great to spend some time alone by yourself. Solitude can be a great stress reliever, as well as fun. There are many activities which you can do alone, but one stands out to be the best — reading.

Reading, to me at least, is one of my favorite activities. There is almost nothing I enjoy more than to curl up in bed with an engrossing novel or an intriguing mystery. I own tons of books, and my roommate is an avid reader, so my house is a virtual library. I can always find a book that interests me.

A library is always a great place to find books, but many people, like myself, treasure the books they read, and like to have copies of their own. For those who like to buy books, or even just browse through the stacks, Northampton is a Mecca for book lovers.

One of the best used bookstores in town is nestled on 4 Old South Street, right around the corner from Thorne's Marketplace. It appears little from the exterior, but inside lay some great treasures. Co–owned by John Petrovato and Betsy Frederick, Raven Used Books is a great place.

Raven specializes mostly in scholarly titles, including philosophy, gender studies, history, women's studies and gay and lesbian studies. They also have extensive sections on cultural studies and literature.

"We specialize in academic used books," Petrovato said. "We have more in that genre than any other store in Western Massachusetts."

According to Petrovato, Raven has a turnover of over 1,500 books per week, so new books always decorate the shelves. Raven also has a deal with publishing companies to sell slightly damaged books at lower cost. Since his prices are fairly low, he offers no discount to students, but don't despair — at these prices, Raven books are a steal.

Located across from Pleasant Street theater is the Globe Bookshop, which also carries both new and used books. Their specialties range from literature to poetry to gay and lesbian studies. Most of their used selections are priced at approximately 50 percent of the original cost.

If you can't find a book, or it happens to be out of print, the Globe can special order or conduct an out of print books search.

The Globe promotes an active reading series each spring and fall, said owner Mark Brumberg. Usually the Globe hosts events a couple of times a week, from poetry readings to lectures.

Upcoming events at the Globe include local author Philip Graubert who will read from his new book, My dinner with Michael Jackson and Other Stories, on Monday, Nov. 18. Later that week on Wednesday, Nov. 20, poets Catherine Sasanov and M. Wyrebek will read from their respective collections.

Science Fiction and Mystery fans will love The Space Crime Continuum, located on 92 King St. They offer over 5000 new titles, and between 400–500 used titles. Besides books, the store also carries a number of role playing games and trading card games like Magic.

"Our primary interest is in dealing with people as individuals," said co–owner Chris Aylott. "The problem with the chains is that they are very large, very impersonal, and don't care about books or customers.

"We are trying to fight this trend," Aylott said.

The Space Crime Continuum is a friendly place. They have a frequent buyers club that gives customers 10 percent off of everything for a small fee of only five dollars. Aylott said that he and co–owner Deb Tomaselli try and get to know individual customers and their interests, and this club is a great way for that to happen.

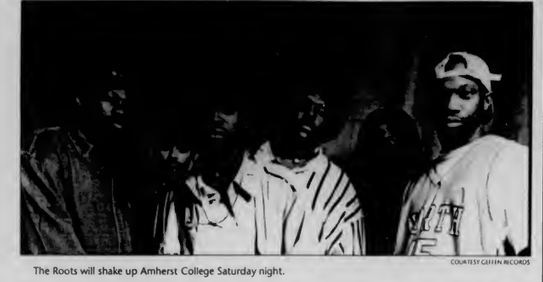
Numerous authors drift in and out of the bookstore, often autographing copies of books for customers. This Saturday, Catherine Hall Page, author of the series Christie and Company will be speaking on her writing.

So whether its popular bestsellers or difficult to locate literature, whatever books you're thinking of curling up with can surely be found in Northampton.

Northampton Astrology
Psychic Readings
by Vandela
★ Astrology
★ Aura Cleansing
★ Palm Reading
★ Tarot Cards
★ Psychic Help
5 $ off with this ad!
20 Damon Rd.
(413) 586-8990

RAVEN USED BOOKS
THOUSANDS OF ACADEMIC AND SCHOLARLY TITLES
Relax in our Reading Chairs
Mon.-Sat. 10-8
Sun. 12-6
584-9868
4 Old South St. • Northampton, MA

BELA is here to stay!!!
Join us in celebrating our 6th year of tasty vegetarian cuisine!
68 Masonic St. (Next to the Firehouse) Northampton, MA 01060
Tues - Sat 12 Noon to 9:00 pm
Dining & Take-Out
586-8011



A-MA-NOUZ Café
MOROCCAN & MEDITERRANEAN CUISINE
Breakfast, Lunch & Dinner.
Turkish Coffee • Daily specials • Now serving beer & wine
FRENCH RENDZ-VOUS
Every Thursday at 8:30 pm
Relax & speak French
44 MAIN ST., NORTHAMPTON, MA (413)585-9128
SUN.-THURS. 8AM-10PM
FRI. & SAT. 8AM-11PM
Every Monday – International Night ~ 10pm at Pearl Street
World Beat • African • Zouk • Arabian • Indian

• Free People
• Dollhouse
• Betsy Johnson
• Ecote
• Bulldog
• PA Company
• NC Love
• Girl Star
• Soda Blu
• URU
• Tripp NYC
• Esprit
• CK Lingerie
• Airwalks
• And Lots More!
Downstairs At Thornes
CONTEMPORARY CLOTHING & FOOTWEAR
25 CENTRAL
150 Main Street • Northampton MA
413-586-8017

Arts & Living

Roots to play Amherst College

COURTESY GEFFEN RECORDS

The Roots will shake up Amherst College Saturday night.

By Chris Maher
Collegian Staff

You will, on Saturday night, quench your thirst for entertainment because it is showtime I tell ya, at Amherst College, the Roots in fact. It's gonna be a hoedown. Now I know what y'all er thinking there. A hip hop show, all dem' rowdy characters. People shakin around on stage sayin nothing at all but yo this, yo that, but hold your horses partner. These guys are performers... ya that's right performers. They got a band, instruments all that stuff and they sing too. Then there's this one guy, Razhel, he makes these noises like you wouldn't believe and with his mouth too, got all his teeth. One of em', Black Thought, wears this five gallon hat, a modern doobie though. Then here's the great part you ready? They have this video in the desert and it's called "Concierto of the Desperado" and then their friend this Jeru guy has this other tune called "Black Cowboy," it's great stuff I tell ya.

"No I ccaann't, I tell you I can't continue" on in this fashion time to get serious folks. The Roots: Amazing. Inspiring. Enlightening — like lightning striking your senses on stage. Those who have seen, ssshhh!! That's enough said, suspense is king. For if the secret of the treasure is revealed to all we will lose the coziness of AC to the exploits of being seated at the Mullins next time — truly great performers in due time gather a following. The Roots qualify of that stature.

Second off, these guys have cojones of gold: their house was a halfway house to traveling musicians of all sorts until people abused the privilege. The halfway house is still open, but with a new code of conduct indicted.

The Roots spent the better part of last year opening for the Beastie Boys. Then they released their sophomore album Illadelph Halflife which is simply groundbreaking, and they are touring with Jeru, what else can be said.

Not much, so on to Jeru the Damaja. He too just let his second album, Wrath of the Math, onto the market. He has not undergone any noticeable changes since his debut, The Sun Rises in the East. The new album holds similar personality. This is mostly attributed to his refusal to listen to new hip hop, he is very selective. He spends a great deal of time reading and nourishing his mind. He has a lot to say about "our world of Babylon" and isn't the least bit hesitant. I have not caught him live but from what I know he should be intense.

This show should be refreshingly potent with this line up and leave you thinking, Do You Want More?

The Roots and Jeru the Damaja will perform tomorrow evening at 8 p.m. at Alumni Gym at Amherst College. Tickets are $5 for Amherst College Students; $10 for all others.

R.A.W, Combination Skin at Bowker

New WORLD Theater presents two one act plays tonight and tomorrow night that demolish stereotypes. R.A.W. ('Cause I'm A Woman) and Combination Skin will be directed by New WORLD Theater's artistic director, Roberta Uno. The show begins at 8 p.m. tonight at Bowker Auditorium.

R.A.W. (Raunchy Asian Women) was written by Diana Son. According to a press release, R.A.W. takes the attitudes of Asian women and compares them against the prevailing notions that present them as exotic and submissive sexual commodities. The play is irreverent and defiant as it works against a stereotype.

Combination Skin is a soul-searching play that examines issues of privilege, loyalty, community and skin color in the African American community. Written by Lisa Jones, the play premiered in 1992 at the Company One Theatre in Hartford.

Performance begins at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on Nov. 15–16. Admission is $8 general public and $5 students and seniors. For tickets or more information, call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545–2511. Bowker Auditorium is located in Stockbridge Hall on the University of Massachusetts Campus.

— Seema Gangatirkar

Hampshire hosts night of laughs

By Daniel E. Fallon
Collegian Correspondent

Something "absurd and peculiar" is going on at Hampshire College this Saturday, as Eugene Mirman presents his wacky sense of humor in his hour-long, senior comedy project. The show will take place the Hampshire College Dining Commons and is free for everyone.

As a comedy major at Hampshire, Mirman is constantly immersed in laughter. For example, he fulfilled a science requirement by taking a class entitled, "The Physiology of Laughter."

Even the student organization which he founded has a sense of humor. Kagflort (the humor organization at Hampshire) has sponsored many "unique" gatherings. For example, when Hampshire students held the annual "Smoke– In" last year, Kagflort held its first "Floss–In," (to keep flossing safe and legal for everyone).

Mirman's monologue on Saturday is actually for his senior thesis. However, don't expect to find the same repetitive style of comedy that makes its way into mainstream entertainment. Mirman is well aware that comedians have been "telling the same kind of jokes." His approach is a combination of wit, insanity, intelligence, reality and obscurity — a healthy mix of everything guaranteed to leave you in hysterics.

He possesses a rare comical intelligence that can compete with any of your favorite popular comedians.

After pursuing many different interests such as writing, art work and other kinds of entertaining, Mirman realized that comedy was his true and ultimate calling. As his centralized concentration is making people laugh, Mirman has prepared a composition of comedy for your enjoyment on Saturday night.

On stage Mirman casts a positive light, incorporating everyone and alienating no one. Speaking about his approach on stage he said, "Often I try to shine a really bright light," trying to bring everyone into the fun.

As a performer Mirman loves, "the abstract of the moment, it's just so..direct." Prepare yourself for that abstract moment, and venture to Hampshire for a must see performance by one of the area's best student entertainers.

Eugene Mirman will perform in the Hampshire College dining commons at 9:30 p.m. The show is free.

Tis' the season for gifts

Lauren Lobik

Halloween is over and November has just begun. What does that mean now? Some are thinking about a turkey dinner followed by relaxing to a game of football, but the retail world is looking forward to something much different.

Christmas is only two months away and anyone who gets junk mail definitely knows that. In the last week many mail trucks and boxes have been filled to the brim with Christmas catalogs telling the public what their loved–ones are sure to want and ask for this holiday season. Think it's too soon to think about the holidays? J.C. Penney and Spiegel both sent their catalogs out more than a month ago.

So what are the fashionable gifts to give out and receive this December? Many stores are giving their customers a wide array of items to choose from. For most, some items are much more of a fantasy than a reality.

The Christmas 1996 issue of the Victoria's Secret catalog is entitled, "Christmas Dreams and Fantasies." In this issue, many items that are featured throughout the catalog are so high–priced, that only the segment of the population who is as wealthy as Donald Trump could afford them.

The first fantasy gift is a fragrance named after the recipient. For $75,000 the lucky lady will be flown with a companion to Paris and will develop a scent exclusively for herself. Another fantasy gift is an English country manor. That's right. For $3,000,000 this home, known as the Bledislow House can be purchased. Lastly, but definitely not least, if none of these gifts strike your fancy, purchase a diamond studded miracle bra. Victoria's Secret has adorned their signature bra with 100 carats of real diamonds combined with hundreds more carats of semi–precious stones. This is no lie. It even comes with a certificate of authenticity.

Feeling a little discouraged that there isn't enough money in the world to buy friends and family the presents they deserve? Things don't get much better! J. Crew sent out their Christmas 1996 issue last week and even though thier merchandise is a lot cheaper than the diamond studded bra, they are definitely not inexpensive. Thinking about buying a wool sweater for that special boyfriend or good–old dad? J. crew has them for $128. That no chump change. Why not try a nice ski hat with a matching scarf and pair of mittens? That'll cost $42 for the hat, $28 for the gloves and $68 for the matching scarf.

Even though it may seem as though shopping is going to be a lost cause in the upcoming Christmas season, don't give up. Shop around and the right price is to be found.

Lauren Lobik is a Collegian columnist.

MOM'S TATTOO STUDIO
17 Roxbury St., Suite #3
Downtown Keene, N.H.
(603) 352-4422
Fine Tattoos and Body Jewelry
- Licensed By State Of N.H.-

amc THEATRES
$2.50 (TWI-LITE) SHOW DAILY
LIMITED TO SEATING
• Boredom SPECIAL ENGAGEMENT
MT. FARMS 4 MT. FARMS MALL ROUTE 9, HADLEY 584-9153
Call Theatre For Showtimes
SPACE JAM* PG
ROMEO & JULIET PG-13
MICHAEL COLLINS R
HAMPSHIRE 6 HAMPSHIRE MALL ROUTE 9 HADLEY 584-7550
Call Theatre For Showtimes
THE MIRROR HAS TWO FACES* PG-13
SLEEPERS R
RANSOM* R
HIGH SCHOOL HIGH PG-13
THE FIRST WIVES CLUB PG

CHEESE PIZZA SALE
$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM
EXPIRES 11/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

Thinking about a career in biomedical research?
UNDERGRADUATE SUMMER RESEARCH INTERNSHIPS available at THE UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT HEALTH CENTER for RESEARCH IN THE BIOLOGICAL AND BIOMEDICAL SCIENCES
Positions are available in a variety of laboratories encompassing research in Cell Biology, Developmental Biology, Immunology, Molecular Biology & Biochemistry, Neuroscience, Cellular and Molecular Pharmacology, and Oral Biology
STIPEND: $3,000
The University of Connecticut Health Center invites applications for a limited number of summer research internships from highly qualified and motivated students who have completed at least their sophomore year and have an interest in obtaining a Ph.D. in the the biological and biomedical sciences. The University of Connecticut Health Care Center houses a division of the Graduate School, the School of Medicine, the School of Dental Medicine and is located in Farmington Connecticut, just west of Hartford, midway between Boston and New York. The program pays a stipend of $3,000 for the ten week research experience. Deadline for applying is Monday, February 3, 1997.
For further information, please contact:
Summer Internship Program
University of Connecticut Health Center
Graduate School Office, MC 1829
Farmington, CT 06030
(860) 679-3150

GOLDEN KEY NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY
ATTENTION!
Annual Reception
When: November 17, 1996
1:30 p.m.
Where: Campus Center Auditorium

Hindu Students' Organization presents
" DIWALI PUJA "
(A Prayer Service to Commemorate Festival of Light)
Followed by An Open - House Folk Night
Date: Saturday, November. 16
Time: 7:00 PM (Doors Open @ 6:45 PM)
Venue: 168, Campus Center, Umass
REFRESHMENTS PROVIDED BY INDIA HOUSE, NORTHAMPTON
($2.00 Donation Requested)
Questions??? Comments??? Contact Anant @ 548-9097 or hindu@stuaf.umass.edu

■ women's soccer

continued from page 12

Lynch questionable with a right hamstring injury, several people will have to pick up her considerable slack, as Lynch will likely not be at 100 percent even if she does play.

Powell, and the rest of her senior midfield mates, will need to play like they did in their sophomore year against the Crimson for the maroon and white to come out on top. The group has shown signs of its greatness recently. Sandy Shimogaki and Julie Magid being named to the A–10 All–Tournament team.

Likewise, freshmen forwards Emma Kurowski, the A–10 Rookie of the Year, and Kate Webb will need to pose problems for the Harvard defense, keeping them on their heels to help sustain the UMass attack. Both began to show signs of maturing late in the season especially after the loss of Rebecca Myers and in the A–10 semifinal win over George Washington.

While records and stats are moot at this juncture, momentum is not, and the Crimson do have an edge in this department.

Harvard's sole loss was a 2–1 decision against UConn on Oct. 23 and the team has rattled off four straight wins since, including a 2–1 decision over Dartmouth, the only other NCAA–selected team Harvard played (other than UConn).

UMass enters Sunday's contest still smarting from a 3–2 loss to Dayton in the A–10 Championship match. While the loss is anything but a momentum builder, it should serve the purpose of being a wake–up call to UMass.

The Minutewomen cruised through an A–10 schedule that offered the challenge of sparring partners with the exception of GW, which makes its first NCAA appearance this year.

UMass rounded out its season slate with tough matches against No. 15 George Mason, No. 6 Texas A&M and No. 23 GW to prepare itself for the NCAAs. While the end result of this difficult scheduling might be a few more losses than the Crimson, it should have the team ready for the tough challenge it will face at Ohiri Field. Readyness and post–season experience just might give UMass the edge in what should be an even, nip–and–tuck match.

■ hockey

continued from page 12

Hero, has not been as impressive this year with a 4.97 GAA, with a .867 save percentage ('95–'96: 2.92 GAA, .900 save percentage).

As of late, the situation in the UMass net has been up for debate, as after a poor start for junior Brian Regan in a 7–2 loss at BU, senior Rich Moriarty has started in two of the last three games. Moriarty has done well for himself, as he has posted a .907 save percentage in two tough losses. He stood on his head last Friday night, stopping 40 shots in a 1– 0 loss to the Wildcats.

It could be a controversy, but it only helps Mallen in a overall sense, because he knows both goalies can be relied upon when he needs them. Regan did look to get back on track last Saturday night, stopping 30 shots in the 4–3 loss to UNH, and the coach must be leaning to his workhorse.

"In the situation right now where both of our goalies are playing real well, I feel comfortable and confident in both goaltenders," Mallen said. "It's a credit to Rich Moriarty, but Brian Regan has a lot of experience, and we need to utilize that, too."

Leading scorers for the Warriors are junior Casey Kesselring (7 points) and sophomore Kris Porter (5 goals). Kesselring and Porter are the assist men for seniors Eric Weichselbaumer and Rob Beck (3 goals apiece). Merrimack lost no one truly important in their offensive punch to graduation, nor did they lose much in the way of experience from their cellar–dwelling 4–18–2 Hockey East record (10– 19–5 overall) a necessity for success this year.

Juniors Dan Juden (2g, 4a) and Chris Fawcett (4g, 1a) are atop the UMass scoring sheet, with senior co–captain Rob Bonneau (4g, 1a) tied with Fawcett for the goals lead.

■ football

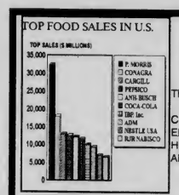
continued from page 12

defensive tackles John Sawyer and Shaun Williams; and place kicker Erik Oke will all conclude their careers as well.

"This group has made it fun again," Hodges said. "I feel totally different about this group, the way they've worked, the way they prepared, and the way they feel about each other. They really care about each other, and they really care about UMass football."



The Minutemen will be facing a UConn team that has had similar expectations and similar results. The Huskies come into this contest at 5–5 (3–4 in the YanCon) as well, after being favored to win the division.

They have lost four of their last five, the only win a forfeit victory over Rhode Island. They will be led however by sophomore quarterback Shane Stafford who has thrown for over 2,000 yards, with 13 touchdowns.

UMass holds a slim 34–30–2 all time advantage in the overall series versus UConn, and UConn has won the last two games and seven of the last 10.

Broadcast Notes: This game will be broadcast on 91.1 FM WMUA, with a one hour pregame show starting at 11:30 a.m. Mike Reiss and Pat Sheeran will call the game.

TOC Bar & Grill
11TH FLOOR • LINCOLN CAMPUS CENTER (413) 545-3217
Munchie Special M-F 4-7
Free Popcorn
Tonight! 9 'til close
Karaoke
From Blues to Rock ABBA to Ziggy
11th Floor Campus Center
Hours: Mon-Fri 4:00pm-12:30am Sat. 3pm-12:30am

TOP FOOD SALES IN U.S.

FOOD SCIENCE
The major with JOBS AND CAREERS
CHEMISTRY, MICROBIOLOGY, BIOTECHNOLOGY, ENGINEERING RELATED TO FOOD QUALITY , SAFETY, HEALTH, MANAGEMENT, ENVIRONMENT, MANAGEMENT AND FOOD PROCESSING.
BE A PART OF THE LARGEST INDUSTRY IN THE U.S. !!
INTRODUCING ..... TWO NEW OPTIONS with emphasis on FOOD TECHNOLOGY MANAGEMENT
FOOD INDUSTRY FOOD PROCESSING MANAGEMENT FOOD TECHNOLOGY
FOOD AND ENVIRONMENTAL SAFETY
FOOD SAFETY FOOD AND HEALTH FOOD AND THE ENVIRONMENT
CALL 5-1015 FOR MORE INFO .

Sunday, November 17, 1996
VIOLENT FEMMES
John M. Greene Hall
Smith College with Cracker

Doors Open at 7 P.M.
Concert Starts at 8 P.M.
Tickets Available at Tickets Unlimited, For the Record in Amherst, Northampton Box Office & Ticketmaster.
General Admission $16.00

Thursday-Friday-Saturday Drink Specials
Red Dog 16oz. Drafts 1.50
Captain Morgan & Coke 2.00
Weekly Specials
1/2 Price Appetizer & Nachos
New Hours
3 - 5 pm Wed-Sat 7-11pm
TODAY'S 93 WHMP ROCK
Friday Night Cider Jack Promo Glasses & T-Shirts
WHMP Live Broadcast
Beat The Cover Get in before 10 PM and No Cover
Dance Music by DJ Bob Paulin
THE PUB
15 East Pleasant Street

Collegian Graphics

CHECK OUT A GREAT CLASS!
GOTTA BE A PEER EDUCATOR
Peer Health Educators...
...learn about cool stuff
...teach workshops in the residence halls and Greek area.
...give out condoms and other goodies at the Campus Center and special events.
...make new friends.
...MAKE A DIFFERENCE!
PEER HEALTH EDUCATION
PUBLIC HEALTH 213/214 or EDUCATION 213/214
6 Credits - 2 Semester Commitment Required
For permission of the instructor call the Division of Health Education 577-5181.
Class will meet on Wednesdays from 2:00 - 4:30pm
Priority is given to those who meet with the instructor before November 22nd.

We Deliver! Kai Chi Chinese - American Cuisine Restaurant & Bar
MT. FARMS MALL ROUTE 9 • HADLEY • 586-2774
Delivery: Sun.-Thurs. Noon-2 a.m. Fri. & Sat. noon-3 a.m.
Enjoy HALF PRICE APPETIZERS 9 PM-Close • 7 Days a Week 31 SELECTIONS!
Ex: Pu Pu (for two) reg. 11.99 Now 5.99
No other promos apply EAT IN ONLY.

WIN! The Guide to Music on the Net

If you love your car and your music, click this out! You could be one of 50 lucky winners of "Plug In", the book, CD-ROM and Website guide to music on the Net.
EVERYONE visiting the site through December 20 saves 17% on Drivers Edge® Auto Club membership, including Free Triptix to the destinations of your choice.
In an emergency Drivers Edge® is a call away. Join now at just $39.95 per family in time for holiday travel!
http: www.lovemycar.com
the instant winner game

Bucci
HAIRCUTS $10. always
25 n pleasant st amherst 256 0733
145 main st northampton 586 0155

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Contest: $100 Amateur Male Review Club Castaway Rt. 5&10 Whately. GUYS call 527-5258. LADIES don't miss this! Monday, Nov. 18? 7:00PM

Horace Boyer Sings The Gospel! Sunday night at 7pm. Episcopal Chaplaincy at UMass, 758 North Pleasant St. 549-5929

APARTMENT FOR RENT

The Boulders 2 bedroom, newly remodeled, on-site appliances, on bus-line. $740.00 Heat and hot water included. 256-0812

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING BREAK '97! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, and Florida. EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH Call (800)786-8790

LAST CHANCE

Legal Assistance Wanted November 15th is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Spring 1997 internship! Get hands-on experience in the field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required — training is provided. Contact Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

EMPLOYMENT

Abt Telephone Research Center seeks candidates for interesting part-time telephone assignments to collect data on a variety of research topics. Absolutely no selling involved. Computer/typing skills required. Flexible hours: Monday-Friday 5pm-11pm, Saturday 11am-5pm, and Sunday 12pm-5pm and 9pm-10pm. Must work a minimum of 20 hours per week. Start at $5.25/hour with paid training and earn up to $7.00/hour. Conveniently located in the new Venture Center, with free rides on nearby bus lines. Interested candidates, please call (413)587-1607. An equal opportunity employer.

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info: call (206) 971-3570 Ext. J50016

FOR SALE

New York Knick Tickets for sale Vs. Seattle, San Antonio, Indiana (888)602-0774 (page)

286 IBM Compatible modem, monitor and printer $250.00, 253-3809

8 yr. old Thoroughbred Mare $2500. Willing, obedient, with lower level training. 585-9781

MAC Powerbook 520 Color, 8MB RAM with Apple Laser printer. Call Aimee 256-0413.

FLEECE SHEETS All colors and sizes. Sets come with a fitted and a flat sheet. Sgl. $35, Dbl. $45, Q $55, K $65. SgLong $40. Call Diana 586-4959

Computer- P90 15" Color monitor, 4xCD 16M SB32 w/spks. Call 6-7234

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst Belchertown line 4 Bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area. Available now 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

Boxing Three private 1/2 hour lessons $69.95. Call 732-8817. In Amherst Tues. & Thurs. Eve.

LOST

Reward for return of brown cowboy hat lost along Rt. 9 or in Northeast Area on Fri. Nov. 1. Please call 549-9961 if found.

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find Out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office: 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed. $35. 800-776-9503. Doctor Approved.

PERSONALS

Dus. Happy 1 year anniversary. Love you very much. Kicks

Attention XLI New Members: Kiera, Amy, Jen, Sandra, Rachel, Amy, Liz, Corrie, Shannen, and Isabel. You're doing great. Keep smiling.

In Chi-O love,
The Sisters of Chi Omega

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublease my room for spring semester, really close to campus! 549-5920

ROOM FOR RENT

Seeking roommate for 4 bdrm apt in Northampton. $300+ Call Kerle 585-8629

ROOM WANTED

Need 1 Bedroom Apartment sublet for 1/1/97 thru 8/97. Call Dave (413)783-7098

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommate needed spring semester starting January 1. On bus line call 256-6034

SERVICES

CAR NEED REPAIR? Let me come to you! Student Rates. 665-4790

Portraits for the Holidays. Professional quality black and white photographs. $35 and up. Call 253-5217.

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Screamsavers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

TO SUBLET

1 Bedroom Apartment in Sunderland on bus line. Available 1/97-8/97. Call 665-3860.

TRAVEL

Bahamas, Ft. Lauderdale, Orlando 11 days! Cruise whenever! Must sell! $450! Includes Two!!! Call 6-8271 Ask for Moises (MD)

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, Ft Elam 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 7/28 7pm Herter 227. Call Project DEEP @ (800)292-0977.

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710.

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

Wanted Tutor for AUTO CAD Realease 13. Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272.

WANTED

Female/Male students moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If you are interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment" call Caroline at 546-5269 for more info. Identity will be confidential upon request.

Desperate for Bibliographic material and I'm not even taking the course. Must have rigorous booklist- textbooks, workbooks, problems for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education). Will pay above $150/negotiable. Call at all times except Mon. and Tues. Don't worry, I am correct (413)545-1771.

2-3 Bedroom house for 3 kind sisters who need to get out of the dorm for Spring Semester or ASAP. Call Merryl 6-2429.

Moped, Ron 253-7983.

PIZZA ✧ THURSDAYS

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day

All others
40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

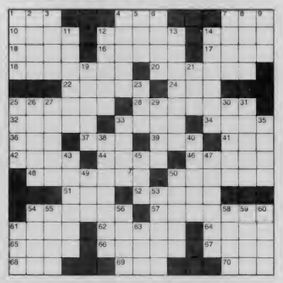
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.



Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

U	R	N			F	E	W				B	A	T
P	O	O	H		I	O	W	A	N		P	A	L	O
A	M	M	O		D	E	E	R	E		A	R	L	O
P	E	A	R	L	S		P	L	A	N	E	S
	R	O	E			L	I	E
F	E	D	O	R	A		G	I	M	L	E	T
H	A	L	S		S	U	S	I	E		S	L	O	P
U	S	A			N	O	V				M	A	T
E	T	T	E		O	T	T	E	R		R	O	S	A
S	E	V	E	R	S		N	I	C	E	S	T
	E	L	I				G	A	L
S	U	N	S	E	T		S	O	L	E	L	Y
D	U	L	L		N	I	N	E	R		N	E	A	T
D	E	N	Y		T	R	E	E	S		T	E	R	I
E	T	A			E	O	N				R	N	S

Collegian Classifieds

"it's a good thing"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Author Thompson
4. Before DOE
7. Mischievous child
10. Slap ___! (2 wds.)
12. Earnings
14. Dashiell heroine
15. Lost Generation nickname
16. Exceed
17. Some sheep
18. Husband's boy
20. Bed cover
22. High fidelity?
24. Ferule
25. Protect
26. Used to advantage
32. Actress Evans
33. Reach across
34. Biblical twin
36. Luau instrument, for short
37. Timor or Corei
39. North Pole product
41. Amenhotep's grandson
42. Type of warfare
44. Blvds.
46. Physicist Joliot-Curie
48. Was at the helm
50. Banquets
51. ___ Mateo
52. Past puberty
54. Furniture wheel
57. Denouements
61. Fail to fascinate
62. Family car
64. Bar order
65. Perfect with for money
66. Very small
67. Vesco da ___
68. From ___ 'Z (2 wds.)
69. Med. workers
70. Merritt Allen's "Johnny ___"

DOWN

1. Keystone ___
2. Medical subj.
3. Exclamation of surprise
4. Emulate Merley
5. Army officer: abbr.
6. Koppel at el
7. Hawkeye's home
8. Vocal palomino
9. Dads
11. Did a buck and wing
12. Romanced
13. Beverly Sills, e.g.
14. Creweler's need
19. Eppie's foster father
21. King: Fr.
23. Yelp
25. Belt
26. Backpacks
27. Not active, as a gas
29. Tubs
30. ___ Park, Colorado
31. Intimidate
33. Except for
35. Western Indians
38. The Importance Of Being ___
40. Give up
43. Hed chow
45. Psychologist LeShan
47. Appraising
49. All-you-can-___
50. Droll
53. Jimmy and Dizzy
54. Crotchety fellow
55. Younger Guthrie
56. Actor Oliver
58. Close in on
59. Wild animals, collectively
60. Casual try
61. Eagle's org.
63. Berlin article

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20

Something that you've been planning for a long time starts to come to fruition. Stay on top of a difficult situation at home—an unhappy person could be in need of a little extra TLC. Avoid the tendency to be headstrong in political situations.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21

Someone with a tendency to overspend wants to borrow your credit cards. Don't let them, or you could be left holding the bill. If you want to treat them to something, share an excursion and choose a few selected items, but don't give them free rein.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21

A lively relationship offers a chance to exercise your wit as well as your intellect. Put it to the test by taking it to a more personal level. Wondering what the other person thinks of you? You'll know when the time is ripe.

CANCER
June 22–July 22

A busy time begins to look dangerously like an overload situation. Look for little ways to relieve your stress. A good laugh with a friend may be all that it takes. You might also want to delegate some of your responsibilities, if possible.

LEO
July 23–August 23

Count on the creative efforts of others to inspire you to greater heights. Be sure to give credit where credit is due, though, or it could come back to haunt you. Something you've been avoiding takes center stage; keep an open mind, and it could be more fun than you thought.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22

You're definitely in a mood to be extravagant, but put the brakes on your impulses when they start to interfere with your responsibilities. A romantic urge could point you in the right direction to start a beautiful new relationship.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23

Trust the experts for advice when you start something new. Your common sense can only carry you so far, and in this case, it's no substitute for cold, hard experience. A domestic problem could be the precursor of worse events to come. Plan ahead.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22

Trust old-fashioned thrift to get you out of a financial tight spot. You might be living beyond your means, but now is a good time to change that habit for the better. Use your creativity to improvise on things that you've eliminated from your budget.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21

Dazzle someone with your insight and skill when it comes to fixing a basic household problem. Your wits are sharp, so use them to advantage. Later in the week, surprise a loved one with a special evening that you've planned.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20

A hectic schedule and stressful projects take their toll. Treat yourself to some R&R. A difficult person gives you a clue that could lead to a deeper understanding. Try to open the channel of communication so you don't lose the ground you've gained.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18

Face-to-face contact may be what it takes to resolve a conflict. Make an effort to go the extra mile for a friend. They'll really appreciate it, and you'll enjoy yourself, too. Once it's time to get serious, don't shy away from the tough decisions.

PISCES
February 19–March 20

Don't allow your attitude to be affected by a sourpuss. Kill them with kindness, and you might even earn yourself a laugh or two. A change of scenery would do you some good. Be alert, and you could discover an opportunity.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom

One of my friends, Will Whitman, had a role in a Shakesperean play. After the shows he started wearing his tights home under his jeans.

I guess he loved Shakespeare.

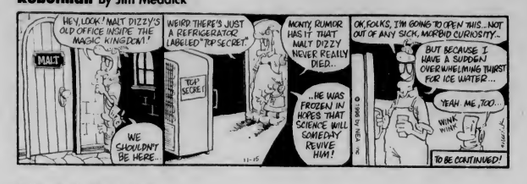
Will actually had some problems which surfaced later in his life.

He couldn't free himself from the things which tormented him. He tried putting his hands inside himself to extract the fiendish devils which lived in him. It worked for a while. But then Will would have to exorcise them again and again.

In short, Will knew how to have a good time.

University² By Frank Cho

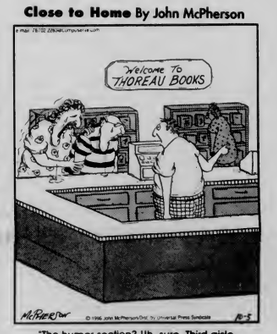
Leedee By Mike Rybicki



Duh By Maura & Micaela

Social Norm By Mr. K

Robotman By Jim Meddick



Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

"The humor section? Uh, sure. Third aisle on the left, near the magazines."

Quote of the Day

"If my parents only knew that all I do is sleep and watch soaps all day..."

–Overheard at the Campus Center

Collegian Graphics

Joke of the Day

Q: What did the Sunderland tobacco farmer say when he lost his tractor?

Today's Staff

Laura Stock
Night Editor

Seema Gangatirkar
Copy Editor

Courtney Smith
Photo Technician

Chris Brown
Production Supervisor

Dan Bodah
Mark McGrath
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH: Chick Cutlet Sand., Philly Cheese Steak, Cheese Pizza
DINNER: Chicken Fajita, Dutchess Meat Pie, Tofu Fajita, Quarter Pound Burger

Hampshire

LUNCH: Hamburger, Chick Cutlet Sand., Handcut Scrod Sub
DINNER: Chicken Fajita, Lite Cod w/ Basil & Garlic Sauce

Worcester

LUNCH: Grilled Cheese, Sloppy Joe, Spaghetti, Vegan Sloppy Joe
DINNER: Chicken Fajita, Tri-Bean Casserole, Pastabilities

Berkshire

LUNCH: Grilled Cheese, Sloppy Joe, Spaghetti, Vegan Sloppy Joe
DINNER: Chicken Fajita, Dutchess Meat Pie, Tri-bean Casserole, Pastabilities

Sports

Minutewomen teams set for NCAA Tournaments

UMass looks for hat–trick against No. 7 Harvard

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

Beneath the scorching August sun, the Massachusetts women's soccer team (15–4–1) whipped itself into shape this preseason with one goal in mind. Through the aches, pains and gallons of sweat, the team focused on playing in the much cooler November air in the NCAA Championships.

Now the time is near and the mission's clear.

On Sunday afternoon, UMass will head on down the Mass. Pike for a 1 p.m. first round NCAA match at No. 7 Harvard (15–1), the first stop in its 14th NCAA Tournament appearance in the 15–year history of the tourney.

Historically, this is the time of the year where UMass shines at their brightest. Its sixth final four appearances are the most of anyone other than 12–time champion North Carolina. Just qualifying 14 times is impressive in and of itself, considering that only UNC and Connecticut have appeared in all 15.

It might be cliché to say, but UMass' 15–4–1 record can be thrown out the window right now.

The loss of the Atlantic 10 Tournament last weekend is meaningless. Nothing means anything at this point except for Sunday's final score, which will tell if UMass heads back to the Pioneer Valley for good, or lives to likely play UConn in Storrs next weekend.

Harvard is a formidable foe, led by Missouri Athletic Club Player of the Year–nominee Emily Stauffer and Naomi Miller, who have 13 goals and nine assists apiece for 35 points on the season.

Sophomore Jennifer Burney and freshman Anne Browning have split the time fairly evenly in the Crimson goal, with Burney and her 0.63 goals against average expected to start against the Minutewomen.

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN
Kate Webb and the women's soccer team heads into tournament action this weekend, when the Minutewomen travel to play Harvard Sunday.

With two young keepers, Harvard might avert a nasty case of déjà vu. The last time Harvard qualified for the NCAAs was in 1994, where it faced UMass in the first round at Richard F. Garber Field, and was downed 3–0 by the Minutewomen. Then–sophomore Amy Powell netted the game–winner early in the first three minutes of the match, as the Crimson was never in contention.

Prior to that match, Harvard last qualified for the NCAAs in 1984, when they were again eliminated by UMass.

Now, the question at hand is: will it be a hat trick for the Minutewomen on Sunday, or will the third time be the charm for the Crimson?

UMass will need a full–team effort if the former is to come true. With two–time All–American Erin

Turn to WOMEN'S SOCCER, page 9

Field hockey faces Northeastern in first round

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Following the Massachusetts field hockey team's 2–1 victory over Ball State University in an NCAA play–in game, Kyle Rothenberger was asked what team she wanted to play in this weekend's NCAA tournament first round.

"I think we're ready for anyone," Rothenberger replied.

Yesterday, the No. 9 Minutewomen were notified that they would face Northeastern tomorrow on the UConn Field Hockey Turf at 12 p.m.

The winner of tomorrow's game will advance to face host Connecticut on Sunday at 2 p.m., with the winner moving on to the Final Four next weekend at Boston College.

UMass has already had a look at the Huskies this year — the two teams played to a 2–1 UMass win at Totman Field on Oct. 2.

The Minutewomen captured that game in a penalty stroke shootout, capped by Sharon Hughes' goal that broke a 2–2 stroke tie.

Now the two teams face each other again, this time with greater rewards as stake.

UMass is coming off its win over Ball State, a game that came on the heels of a full weekend of Atlantic 10 Tournament action. The Minutewomen played a pair of games in as many days, capturing the tourney title, before taking a day to travel back home.

Saskia Fuchs took a commanding lead in the total points column with her impressive performance in the A–10s. The freshman forward tallied four goals and two assists during the championship game alone to earn Most Outstanding Player accolades. She leads the team with 36 points (11 goals, 14 assists).

Rothenberger, who scored the game winner in the play–in game, stands second in scoring with 31 points, on 13 goals and five assists. Rothenberger came away from last weekend's conference tournament with All–Atlantic 10 honors, as well as an All–Tournament selection.

Erica Johnston (29), Courtney MacLean (21) and Kate Putnam (19) are all in double figure scoring as well. Johnston tallied a goal against Ball State to up her total to 12. MacLean notched her first assist of the season on Johnston's goal; while Putnam creates her assist opportunities on the penalty corners.

Northeastern, meanwhile, is led by Kerri Bettenhauser. The junior has netted 19 goals and contributed two assists. Also lending a hand to the attack are Jen White (9 g, 12 a), Katie West (11 g, 3 a), Regina Carl (5 g, 12 a) and Jill Haiko (2 g, 13 a). Jackie Carl, who scored the Huskies' only goal against UMass stands with four goals and an assist.

NCAA Notes: In other regional action this weekend, Virginia and Duke battle on Saturday, with the winner facing North Carolina on Sunday. These teams are in UMass' half of the bracket... In the other half, Saturday action in Iowa pits Princeton aginst Boston University, with the winner facing Iowa... Maryland faces Penn State Saturday and the winner meets Old Dominion Sunday.

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN
The UMass field hockey team, led by Saskia Fuchs, plays Northeastern in NCAA Tournament action tomorrow at UConn.

Seniors try for winning season in finale

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

There is a sign above the Massachusetts Football team locker room that reads, "Football Family."

No two words could describe better of what this group is like and how this team has played throughout the season. Whether after a win or loss, the chemistry and attitudes on this team have been that of a family.

And that group will go out to perform for one last time this season, tomorrow afternoon as the Minutemen tackle the University of Connecticut at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium at 12:30 p.m.

This game marks the last time that 15 members of this UMass team will put on the maroon and white to go out and do battle on the gridiron.

UMass (5–5, 3–4 Yankee Conference) will be looking to end the season with a win and ensure its fourth winning season in five years.

The last few games have been difficult for the Minutemen, as they have dropped their last three straight.

"It's a little disappointing," UMass coach Mike Hodges said. "But what we're trying to do right here is to make sure we send the seniors out of here as winners, 'cause that's exactly what they deserve to be, and that's exactly what they are."

This game will also be one of the last Yankee Conference games ever. Next season the conference will be transformed into the Atlantic 10 Conference.

15 players will take the field for the final time tomorrow. Kory Blackwell — the co–captain cornerback has led the secondary into battle each week and explained what UMass football meant to him.

"[Playing here]'s taught me how to deal with adversity and hopefully it'll help me deal with the world," Blackwell said. "It's taught me how to have a winning attitude in whatever circumstances, and I'm very pleased and honored to be a part of this institution."

Mark Shalala — co–captain and offensive lineman Shalala was a part of the offensive line that has paved the way for the Minutemen's YanCon–leading rushing attack.

"With this team, we came a long way and never gave up," Shalala said. "This was the best experience of my life, I've met so many people, I've been extremely fortunate and UMass has been good to me."

Mark Zych, Dan Markowski — the two will play their final game side by side for the Minutemen at left guard and left tackle respectively. They have started together for the past three years

Ron Felice — The right guard will be greatly missed, as 80 percent of the offensive line is playing in its last game tomorrow.

Ron Brockington — Brockington had 638 yards this season, an average of 6.1 per carry.

Frank Allesio — the tailback, although hampered by an injury this year, is still second in rushing on the team and will have his name attracted to numerous UMass records including third place all–time in rushing.

Justin Reimer — the linebacker has led the team in tackles and solo stops and the conference in tackles for the second straight season. He is third at UMass all–time with 348 stops.

Leggie Beckford — the cornerback leads the team in interceptions.

Free safety Tony Gugliuzza; tight ends, Bryan Healy and Erik Henry, the second leading receiver;

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 9

Minutemen face Warriors; try to halt four–game skid

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

It has been a tough start for the Massachusetts hockey team (1–5, 1–5 in Hockey East) this season in the win column, but their lack of numerical success has to be measured against the quality of competition they have faced. After a split with UMass–Lowell in their first home–and– home series of the season, UMass has dropped four straight games. But, those losses were to nationally ranked squads Boston University and the University of New Hampshire.

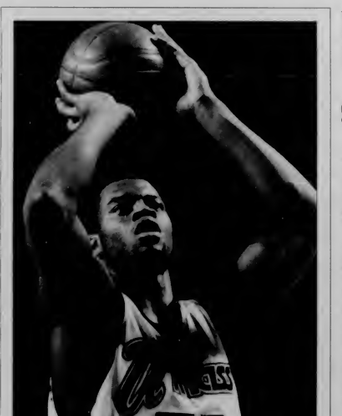
This weekend, the Minutemen will face off against the Warriors of Merrimack College (2–4, 1–3 in HE), who they have had winning results against in recent history. UMass swept the season series between the two teams last year, coming out with three wins, while piling up 17 goals against then–junior goaltenders Martin Legault and Eric Thibeault.

Tonight's game will be in the not–so–immortal confines of the Volpe Complex in North Andover, with the other end of the home–and–home series Saturday night in the spacious William D. Mullins Center. Game times are both at 7 p.m.

Coach Joe Mallen is not going to let the losses to BU and UNH get his team down, but on the other hand, he will not let his team take Merrimack lightly.

"I don't think we can get down about what has happened so far. we played awful hard and we were close with two of the top ten teams in the country," Mallen said. "This is a weekend we really have to try and take a step forward, that is one thing I would say.

"Merrimack is not going to lay down and just give up to us right now. It is going to be an absolute battle, both down there and at home. Obviously, we beat them three times last year and they are going to be bent on revenge."



To get prepared for the game on the small Volpe ice surface, Mallen did not use the old Russian training technique of putting seven players on the ice. All the team did was take a trip across town to Amherst College, a smaller ice surface than the Olympic–sized Mullins rink. This season, it has been slightly apparent that UMass has had problems on smaller ice surfaces, like Tully Forum and Walter Brown Arena.

So, basically, it is just a matter of form over fashion.

"I just think in the first couple of nights we played away on different rinks, everything has been in a little bit tighter quarters, and some of our guys have had difficulty making the adjustment," Mallen said. "Going over to Amherst College enables us to play in a smaller rink, a little bit colder rink, and hopefully the different conditions will get us a little more focused."

The senior tandem of Thibeault and Legault have split time between the pipes so far this season, as the former example has been in the net for both of the Warrior wins versus powerhouse Union (3–2) and UM–Lowell (6–2). Legault, the New England Hockey Writer's 1995–96 Unsung

Turn to HOCKEY, page 9

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN
He shoots...
Inus Norville and the UMass men's basketball team face the Converse All–Stars in preseason exhibition action tonight at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center.

Nash, Maga's last match Dayton, Xavier on slate

By J.R. Adams
Collegian Staff

This Saturday marks the end of an era for Massachusetts volleyball, as it approaches the postseason, and thus the end of the fourth year of Minutewomen volleyball since its reinstatement. The game against Xavier will celebrate the dedication and four year commitment of seniors Susan Maga and Dionne Nash.

This weekend Dayton and Xavier make the trip to Amherst from Ohio to battle the Minutewomen, as the three teams struggle for conference position and admission to the postseason. Dayton, which squares off with UMass on Friday night at 7 p.m., beat the Minutewomen in five games at their last meeting earlier this season in Ohio. Xavier, who comes to town on Saturday for the Senior Night match–up at 7 p.m., lost a three–game sweep to the Minutewomen earlier this season on the same road trip.

"In our last four matches, in order for us to control our own destiny we have to win two of them," UMass coach Bonnie Kenny said. "If we don't we will have to depend on someone else to do something, to beat Xavier and Virginia Tech.

"It's really between us three right now, it's really between us and Xavier," Kenny said.

The Minutewomen are put into this situation by the results of their recent matches. The loss to Temple last week dropped Massachusetts out of a tie with the Owls for third place.

The Minutewomen's most recent result against Boston College does not affect their conference record, but nonetheless they beat the Eagles in three games on Wednesday night at home.

The game showcased a UMass team that was more focussed and efficient, although playing against a much weaker team.

"I don't think we were challenged very much tonight," Kenny said after the win. "We're not going to get any more like that this season."

Senior Night at the Curry Hicks Cage honors the first class of players — Nash and Maga — to play four years in the renewed Massachusetts volleyball program.

Maga has been one the most solid players on the team, playing the important role of a utility player in her senior campaign. In the game against BC, Maga played a crucial role, playing half of the time when the Minutewomen needed solid middle back defense.

"I think it's a very respectable program, I think a lot of people respect what the coach has done," Maga said about UMass volleyball and coach Kenny. "I want people to look at the program and say 'They were there, they started it and look how far the program has come.'"

Nash will leave behind her a legacy of records and performances that will be difficult for anyone to duplicate. She holds the Minutewoman team records in games played (481), matches played (137), kills (1568), digs (1326), total attacks (4026), service aces (151), block assists, and season records in games played (137) and matches played (39). She holds the very respectable career–high numbers of 25 kills and 26 digs in a match, both of which she set this year.

"It's been a long four years, it's been a hard four years, but it's been an enjoyable four years," Nash said. "I can't say enough how much I owe to coach.

"It's been a great experience. I try to tell the freshmen players not to take it for granted. Once it's done it's done, you need to cherish it while it's here, while you've been given the chance to play."

"Our coaches put academics very high. She recruits to work on making people well–rounded," Maga said in agreement.

As the Minutewomen go into this crucial part of the season, they know that whether or not they make the Atlantic 10 playoffs is a direct testament to the leadership of those who have brought the program up from nothing to one of the most prominent in the northeast.

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 52 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Monday, November 18, 1996

Y'know, they might just be addictive...

Morphine brought their unique sound to the Valley with a show at Pearl St. last week. Check out our review (See Arts & Living, page 6.)

Goin' out in style

Senior Justin Reimer led the UMass football team with 10 tackles in the Minutemen's Senior Day victory over Connecticut (see Sports, page 12).

WORLD

Work stoppage ends as Israel grants rights

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Palestinians applied for permits to enter Israel on Sunday after the Jewish state further eased restrictions that have barred thousands of Palestinians from their jobs for months.

Israel announced Saturday that 15,000 more Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza Strip would be allowed to enter. That would bring the number of Palestinians allowed to enter Israel to 50,000, about the same level as before September clashes in Palestinian areas that claimed 79 lives.

Israeli and Palestinian negotiators, meanwhile, began a seventh week of talks Sunday on Israel's delayed withdrawal from Hebron, the last major city it occupies in the West Bank.

In Gaza, Palestinians lined up at a labor ministry office to fill out applications for new entrance permits.

"I think the israeli government step is a good one, but it is not enough," said Khaled Abdullah Ghani, a 39–year–old father of five who has worked construction jobs in Israel for 15 years. He urged israel to let Palestinian workers sleep at their workplaces to save hours of travel every day.

NATION

Ariz. jail riot sparked by alleged misconduct

PHOENIX (AP) — Hundreds of inmates upset about conditions in a "tent city" jail rioted Sunday, arming themselves with poles from their tents, setting fires and trapping 11 guards for nearly three hours.

The situation was resolved after the inmates spoke with Sheriff Joe Arpaio about their complaints of living in the tents, bad food and being assaulted by guards.

"Everything seems to be under control. I met with the little committee that they had formed," said Arpaio, the self–styled "toughest sheriff in America" known for hard–core tactics such the tent city, chain gangs and a ban on cigarettes and nudie magazines.

About 300 to 400 inmates were involved in the riot, which broke out at 1:50 p.m. and lasted until 4:45 p.m. At its peak, inmates tried to get at eight detention officers locked in the control tower, and trapped three more in the tent compound. Two of those were treated for minor injuries.

Thick black smoke poured out of a tool shed the inmates had set on fire earlier and windows were broken in the jail's control tower.

Arpaio said the riot began with what he believed was one inmate assaulting another, and then grew because of general discontent and the fact that only three guards were trying to watch over 600 inmates.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Tue	Wed.
HIGH: 55 LOW: 35	HIGH:45 LOW: 30	HIGH: 50 LOW: 30

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics.....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 12

Faculty address major concerns of UM undergraduate advisees

UMass at a crossroads — the state of academic advising: a Massachusetts Daily Collegian special report

Day One: Faculty reactions to advising
Faculty says departmental advising is strong; student apathy is a real problem; administration is also criticized

Day Two: Collegian study points to advising problems
Students express frustration and confusion with the advising process

Day Three: The proactive University?
Students, administration, critique programs aimed at making UMass more accessible.

Day Four: Cultural organizations and advising
Students of color strive to find a familiar face and guidance at a predominately white University

Day Five: UMass 2000
Will the future forget the undergraduate? What do the next five years hold for UMass and its students?

Editor's Note: this article is the first in a five part special report on the state of academic advising at the University of Massachusetts. The report was conducted by the Collegian news desk.

As the University of Massachusetts prepares to enter its third century, many contend that in order for this institution to thrive, the faculty, administration and staff must remember its roots as a Land Grant school.

Historically, UMass has been a university focused on undergraduate education, as opposed to research. While it may have cost the University name recognition and prestige, the focus on teaching has made UMass a deal for the Commonwealth.

SPECIAL REPORT

In recent times, the role of higher education is changing. Public support on the state and federal level is coming into doubt, forcing institutions such as this one to locate alternative, private funding sources. The fundraising program, Campaign UMass, was implemented to ensure the basic survival of the University and not to secure financial prosperity.

Higher education's pseudo–privatization has forced many universities to look to programs which will bring in the most grant and corporate dollars.

With these pressures in mind, can UMass maintain its role as a school for undergraduates where students can explore the collegiate experience, or will attention be paid to the few who manage to work their way into the profit–oriented programs of the future such as computer science, microbiology and chemical engineering?

The advising connection

The greatest challenge posed to any large university is fostering a sense of community. Academic advising at UMass is the life–line, in many cases, between faculty and students and hence, in forming a real community.

Yet, for faculty, it is time spent distracting them from their research. For the University, advising is a rather unglamorous commitment of resources. With the ever increasing student to faculty ratio, the consolidation of various departments and the elimination of faculty, students are left to wonder, "Will UMass still have time for me when all is said and done?

In a effort to gain national prominence and position itself to thrive in the 21st century, will UMass forget the basic principles it was founded upon — that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts requires an affordable and exceptional undergraduate institution where young minds can both focus and wander?

An examination of academic advising programs is a window through which students, faculty and staff can begin to answer this question.

Faculty: "departmental advising solid"

While it may be easy for disgruntled students to point the finger at the faculty for poor advising services, the departments argue they are doing their job — and a good one at that.

It is not the same for everyone, however. The distinction is actually quite simply, faculty in larger departments face different challenges from those in smaller departments.

"We have always emphasized strong advising," said Karen Lederer, chief undergraduate advisor of the women's studies department. "When faculty are hired they are told there is

Turn to ADVISING, page 3

LBGT students gather for Mt. Holyoke rally

By Amy Risley and Jamie Sinsheimer
Collegian Staff

Last Thursday evening a rally was held at Mount Holyoke College to help combat the fight against homophobia in the Five College area and beyond. Despite the freezing temperatures, attendees of the rally stood outside and braved the cold while speakers addressed the crowd.

Sponsored by the Mt. Holyoke Lesbian/Bisexual Alliance (LBA), the ceremony was emceed by Alycia Curlew and Vicki Kusha, both members of the LBA.

The rally mostly targeted homosexuals on the Mt. Holyoke Campus, since the majority of the attendees were Mt. Holyoke students. There was a minimal turnout of students from the rest of the Five College area.

Supporters met at the front gates and were greeted by volunteers handing out candles and pinning rainbow flags on their shirts. The speakers stood on a small stage under a rainbow arch of balloons symbolizing the diversity of the gay, lesbian and bisexual community.

The first speaker was Joanne Crieghton, the president of Mt. Holyoke College. She spoke of the importance of unification among sexual identities. Crieghton also stated that homophobia should not be tolerated anywhere.

Following Creighton, Rochelle Calhoun of the Ombuds office at Mt. Holyoke affirmed her commitment for justice, and spoke about how society should "combine our differences in a mutually understanding way because we really are the same underneath it all."

Curlew and Kusha constantly maintained the energetic atmosphere by asking the crowd: "Are we going to tolerate homophobia on this campus?" The crowd responded loudly: "No."

An overwhelmingly positive response welcomed the next speaker, Dean of Students and ally Peter Barack. Barack said that the greatest gift he received at Mt. Holyoke was the ability to work together with men and women alike, and he said he was "truly honored" to be a part of this event.

Protestant Chaplain Andrea Evasian and her son, Sascha, stood arm in arm on the stage. Evasian stated that "heterosexual allies need to take hands with homosexual people to fight for our civil rights and liberties."

She told the audience that she and Sascha's father have been together for 12 years, and they are refraining from marriage until gays and lesbians are granted the same right to marry as heterosexuals. She confirmed that her family is "a part of the struggle for justice."

The next speaker was Dean of Students Regina Mooney, who told of how homophobia needs to be seen in context with heterosexism. Mooney, who is openly lesbian, believes that the cure is up to those who are homophobic.

She said that homophobic people need to "study, accept and challenge their fears by facing gays, lesbians and bisexuals with questions." Mooney also told the audience that the only way to combat homophobia is to take risks to be free and help those who are homophobic to "dump their fears."

Bonnie Devlin, a Unitarian Minister in Amherst, warmed up the crowd with a collective "shake for freedom" dance, inviting the crowd

Turn to RALLY, page 2

Hillel offers HRTA internship; Kosher preparation emphasized

By Bryan Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

The Hillel House is accepting applications from HRTA (Hotel Restaurant Travel and Tourism Administration) students for a paid internship involving kosher food preparation at the house.

Hillel has worked with the HRTA department for several years, offering an internship which offers three credits and 10 paid hours, totaling an 18 hour per week commitment, according to Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

"This internship offers excellent hands–on experience," Perlmutter said,"it looks terrific on a resume."

In addition to cooking Friday night dinners, Sunday brunches and holiday meals, the intern will be involved with all aspects of ordering food and supplies.

"People should contact us right away, we hope to hire somebody by mid–December," Perlmutter said.

"It is quite a commitment and it is a demanding job."

Ferris said once the student is hired he or she will begin training with the current intern and his or her faculty sponsor for the rest of the semester.

Ferris said that this Wednesday the current intern, Vicki Dunbar, will be cooking a meal in honor of Malden Mills owner Aaron Feuerstein, who will be speaking at the Mullins Center later that evening.

Like most internships on campus, this will be conducted through Mather Career Center and with the aid of a faculty sponsor within the relevant department.

Students interested in applying must obtain the proper paperwork from Linda Kinney, who is in charge of the HRTA Career Center.

Both the School of Management and the HRTA Department have their own career centers, which work in conjunction with Mather. Kinney said the HRTA Career Center can get students interviews with employers that they might not be able to reach otherwise.

The Hillel House will make the final decision on the hiring of the intern.

For more information, Hillel House can be contacted at 549–1710.

Political fate of Puerto Rico debated

By Cristina Basto
Collegian Staff

On Thursday a debate which addressed three possible political options which Puerto Ricans might face in dealing with their current political situation took place. The event was a part of Puerto Rican Heritage Week.

Puerto Rico has been a United States colony for about a century. Its commonwealth status does not allow Puerto Ricans to make their own economic decisions or determine how they want to be governed.

Partido Democratico Popular constitutes the first option. This party advocates for a free Puerto Rican government in association with the United States. It is much more like the actual current situation, but with a government that has fiscal autonomy. An exponent of this party, Eduardo Melendez, spoke about the economic benefits and the industrial development that Puerto Rico has achieved by being a part of the United States.

Melendez pointed out that the main goal of Partido Democratico Popular is to establish an equal power relationship with the United States in which Puerto Rico could be able to make its own economic decisions and be treated as an economic partner of the United States.

"In association with the United States, we demand a bilateral relationship," Melendez said.

The second political option is the Nuevo Progresista party, which advocates for the statehood of Puerto Rico. Its exponent, Gumercindo Gomez, explained that Puerto Ricans on the island have different rights from those who live in the United States. For example, Puerto Ricans on the island are not able to elect the United States president, while Puerto Ricans living in the states (after a year of residence) are able to do so.

"The actual situation makes Puerto Ricans in the island second class citizens. We have to stop being a colony and demand political equality by becoming part of the Union," Gomez said.

Gomez also pointed out that Puerto Ricans leave the island and come to the United States in search of a better economic future — planning to return one day to Puerto Rico. In reality, Puerto Ricans hardly have the opportunity to return to the island, he noted, many dying in the United States as poor as they have always been.

"The only way to stop this is by integrating Puerto Rico as a U. S. state so that the benefits of being American citizens favor all Puerto Ricans," Gomez said.

A third option is the Partido Independentista, which advocates full sovereignty to Puerto Rico by becoming a republic. Its exponent, Nelson Acosta, said that Puerto Ricans fear that by becoming a separate country, the economy of Puerto Rico will collapse. Puerto Ricans are also scared of what the United States will do to prevent separation should a disagreement occur.

"We won't be another Cuba, Puerto Rico has the people and the potential to maintain a healthy economy," Acosta said.

Acosta added that Puerto Rico has been a colony of the U.S. military for almost 100 years, and some compensation should be given.

Turn to PUERTO RICO, page 2

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN
The stuff that dreams are made of...
Buffy Sainte–Marie, UMass alumni and world–renowned folk singer, lectured in Memorial Hall last Friday afternoon.

Texaco CEO owns up

By Jennifer Brown
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The president of Texaco says racial discrimination problems at his company represent just the "tip of the iceberg" in corporate America.

Other company leaders should examine their management and workers at their companies for similar signs of racism, Peter Bijur, Texaco's president and chief executive officer, said Sunday on CNN's "Late Edition."

"I would suggest that we are just seeing the tip of the iceberg here," said Bijur, whose company agreed last week to pay $176.1 million to settle a racial discrimination lawsuit.

"It's important to drill down below that very tip and get down into what's beneath and find out what's going on. That's what I've done in the last two weeks, and that's what I think needs to be done."

Civil rights leaders echoed Bijur's concerns Sunday, contending other companies have similar problems that haven't been uncovered. "The difference is, in the case of Texaco, they got caught," civil rights activist Jesse Jackson said Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation." "But there are other companies that have not been caught."

NAACP President Kweisi Mfume said lessons learned from the lawsuit can be applied even more broadly.

"The message clearly resonates beyond corporate America," Mfume said on "Late Edition." "It's not just the private sector. It's also the public sector. It's not just Texaco, but it's what's happening at Amoco and other places."

Texaco will pay $115 million cash to about 1,400 current and former employees and to give black employees 10 percent raises over the next five years at an additional cost of $26.1 million. The company also agreed to spend $35 million on a task force to recruit black workers, monitor discrimination and develop diversity and sensitivity training.

The agreement's $176.1 million price tag makes it the largest settlement of a racial discrimination lawsuit in U.S. history. But it pales compared to $1.2 billion in reparations Congress appropriated in 1988 to Japanese–Americans as compensation for their internment in camps during World War II. Payments of $20,000 each went to about 79,000 internees still living. That settlement did not result from a lawsuit.

Both Mfume and Jackson hailed the Texaco settlement as a good first step but said much remains to be done. Both civil rights leaders want changes in employment practices, the working environment, economic development and enforcement of anti–discrimination policies.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Monday, Nov. 18

Class — "Feminism and Mysticism," a free, drop–in class for women focusing on women and Jewish mysticism will be held at 7 p.m. at Chabad House at Amherst, located at 30 N. Hadley Rd. Call 549–4094 for more information.

Tuesday, Nov. 19

Workshop — Amnesty International at UMass is sponsoring a letter writing workshop from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in room 162–75 of the Campus Center. Amnesty officers will be there to offer assistance to anyone who has not written an urgent action letter before. Anyone and everyone interested in supporting a cause is welcome.

Class — "Talmud Class," a free, drop–in class on Jewish oral law will be held at 8 p.m. at Chabad House at Amherst.

Notices

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584–8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Employment — Applications are still being accepted from work–study students for the positions of office manager and research coordinator for the Canabis Reform Coalition. If interested, please pick up and application in room 322 of the Student Union or call 545–1122 to get one mailed to you. Call John Lanzerotta at 546–6359 for more information.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Fall Library Workshops — UMass reference librarians are offering a series of workshops. November sessions will include demonstrations of databases and Web sites in Literature with Literature Specialist Liz Fizpatrick (Nov. 18, from 1–2 p.m.), and the Internet (Nov. 21, from 9:30–11 a.m.) with Internet Resources Librarian Emily Hurn. All workshops will be in the Library Instruction Room, main floor, Du Bois Library. All are welcome, although sign up is required for the Internet sessions. Please call 545–6892 to register.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Tues., Dec. 3 from 5:30–7 p.m. in CC room 165–169.

Final Exam Schedules — The Fall '96 Final Examination Schedule will be available beginning Friday, October 18. Copies will be delivered to students in residence halls, and will be available to off–campus students in the Registrar's Office (213 Whitmore).

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Literature — MOTHERTONGUE, the multilingual student publication by the dept. of Comparative Literature, is currently seeking submissions for the spring '97 publication. We will accept original poetry, short stories, one–acts, international photographs, and art work created by multilingual students. Please submit a copy in English to the Comparative Literature Dept. in 203 South College. Rough drafts are acceptable.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Religious — The Alliance Church of the Pioneer Valley offers rides to students to attend the 10 a.m. service in Amherst. Drivers arrive at the Knowlton and Prince bus stops at 9:45. Please call Mark to confirm, or for other stops, at 253–0361.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy, and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae, and R&B dancers for next semesters annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546–2714 for audition information.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for persons who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and to be sent a volunteer application, please call (413) 733–2251.

■ Puerto Rico

continued from page 1

"If Puerto Rico becomes a Republic, the United States should help with an economic development plan," he said.

Acosta also explained how U.S. investment in the island has generated mostly low–income jobs limiting the possibilities for the advancement of the people. The money generated by these corporations is not invested in Puerto Rico, but instead in areas abroad.

Each political option contained distinct polemic issues. Melendez said that if Puerto Rico becomes a U.S. state, English will be the official language, Americanization will continue and acculturation will occur at a faster rate. Acosta also stood against statehood.

"Puerto Rico will be the poorest state of the Union, the U.S. congress won't invest much money in Puerto Rico and we will be charged about 35 percent of federal tax," he said.

Throughout the debate, it was clear that great nationalistic sentiments were held, as well as the need to keep a Puerto Rican identity.

The debate closed with questions from the audience. Among some of the issues discussed were what will happen with the 2.5 million Puerto Ricans who live in the United States if Puerto Rico became a Republic since the future of Puerto Ricans in America is closely linked to the political decisions on the island.

■ Rally

continued from page 1

to jump around to fight off the harsh and bitter chill.

Approaching a more serious note, she questioned the fact that gays and lesbians are treated as second–class citizens.

"We are not children of a lesser God, we were created equally...," she said. "She loves us all equally."

After the scheduled speakers finished, the microphone was opened up to the crowd. A first–year student read from a list that she wrote which stated who is and who isn't allowed to marry. Among those who are permitted to marry by law according to this woman were "drug dealers, molesters and rapists... while those who are not permitted include gays and lesbians and children."

Other students used the moment to come out for the first time in public, or tell of other supporting events in the Five College area.

At the end of the rally, everyone in the crowd was given a carnation. With flowers in hand, they all marched together and placed them on Mary Lyon's grave, culminating the evening in strong silence.

THANG VO/ COLLEGIAN

Let's Ride!

Rajit Seth, a senior communications major, inquires about a snowboard through Andy Lubets, a senior sports managment major at the Ski Sale last Friday afternoon in the Student Union Ballroom.

Recycle Your Collegian

NOBODY'S PERFECT

Come to UMass – Lincoln Campus Center Rm 165+169
Monday, Nov. 18th thru Thurs, Nov. 21st

Ladies & Mens merchandise from Express-Limited-Structure-Aeropostale and other famous specialty stores & designer labels at

60%-80% OFF their original prices

Ladies Timberland & Kenneth Cole BOOTS & SHOES 19.99-39.99 All 1st Quality Comp. 45.00-125.00

Ladies & Mens JEANS 9.99-12.99 Comp. 28"-42"

Ladies - AeroPostale KNIT TOPS 9.99 Comp. 20"-36"

Mens - Structure KNIT TOPS 9.99 Comp. 49"

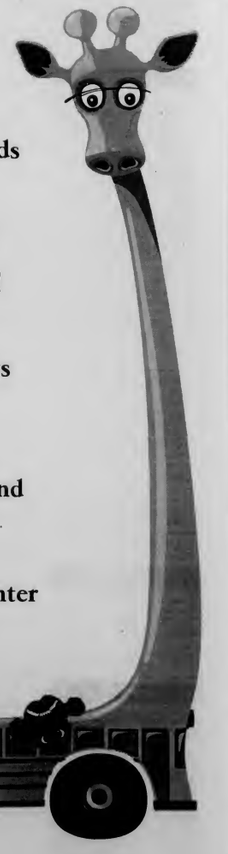
Sale Hours Mon. – Thurs. 8am– 8pm

Visa/AMEX/Disc./ATM Cards/Cash Sorry–No Checks

Super Student Value



Introducing Collegian Classifieds

HALF PRICE THURSDAYS!

Only For Students

Only at the Collegian Newsstand 10am - 2pm

On the Campus Center Concourse

~ SPECIAL REPORT ~

■ Advising

continued from page 1

a strong emphasis and expect to do a lot of advising."

The women's studies department also seems to have the unique program of dividing advising into two forms. These include staff advisors and sponsors.

Staff advisors give more technical advice dealing mostly with requirements and procedures, while sponsors, who may be outside the department, offer advise on a broader level.

The resource economics program is afforded the same luxury of other smaller departments such as women's studies.

Undergraduate program director Richard T. Rogers said he is able to get to know his advisees on a personal level.

"I think having a advisor that knows you on a first–name basis is a real advantage, especially for freshman. On a large campus like UMass, to have a advisor that know [students] by name is a real benefit to our program," he said.

The anthropology department has about 160 majors and 16 faculty members, all of whom advise. The department requires that all students see an advisor in order for them to receive their registration pin numbers.

"We want to be practical. We want students to think about classes t'hey want to take for next semester, but they also need to think ahead," said Donald Proulx, who went on to say that departments must inform their students about their post–graduation options.

The economics department, however, is in a very different situation, as they have a larger enrollment and do not have the resources to keep track of each student personally.

"We treat students like adults," said James Kindhal, chief undergraduate advisor for economics. "I've never heard of any advising problems. Maybe they do exist but I don't know about them."

The sociology department faces an even greater challenge, as it has one advisor for over 400 students: Professor Robert Faulkner, chief undergraduate advisor.

Although pre–registration time gets very hectic for Faulkner, he said, "I like the advising system this way. I enjoy advising students and I am always available when I say I am going to be, that is my responsibility to the students."

In other departments in the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, faculty comments on advising are, for the most part, positive.

In the comparative literature department, students choose their own advisor, which allows them to get to know their advisors on a personal level, according to Director of Undergraduate Advising for the Comparative Literature department Maria Tymoczko.

"We spend a lot of time advising our students, we try to give them a lot of attention," she said. "We try to encourage them, and we know them by their first names."

Tymoczko, however, acknowledges that there are some problems in advising. These problems, she said, center around students who do not go to their advising appointments.

"It is very difficult to advise students who stay away from advising," Tymoczko said, adding that she does not have the resources to keep pace with each student.

In the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, undergraduate advisors with large student populations must structure advising programs concisely and efficiently.

W. Brian O'Connor of the biology department said that informal advising is often the most important.

"A lot of students who come in don't really need a lot of advising, they just need to ask a question or two," he said. "The ones who need it the most are left floundering, or are too afraid or embarrassed to come in."

To combat the problem of apathetic or "floundering" students, the biology department puts out a newsletter every month with information on new courses, internships and study programs.

For students who just have a quick question, the biology department has an advising office, run by Chief Academic Advisor Bruce Byers, which is open eight hours a day on weekdays.

William Mullin, chief undergraduate advisor of the physics department, also expressed worry about students who do not visit their advisors.

"We're easily available to most students, but a lot of students tend to go off on their own," Mullin said. "That makes us worry about students who may be floundering."

To alert students of the upcoming advising period, physics advisors e–mail their students to encourage them to come in before pre–registration.

With a 10–1 student–advisor ratio, Mullin said physics majors tend to get to know their advisors pretty well, and vice–versa.

"We always try to provide students with as much advice as possible, but how to get that contact going is uncertain," he said. "Sometimes by having social events, like our physics club, students get to know their advisors better."

Thomas Arny, chief undergraduate advisor for the astronomy department (and the one advisor for its 30 majors) said he thinks the advising system works fine.

"I don't think there is anything wrong with it personally, but I think the telephone registration system allows some students to bypass me," Arny said. "Some of my advisees never come to see me."

As O'Connor tells prospective students visiting the biology department, "If you are willing to knock on someone's door, this place [UMass] can't be beat."

Dwindling Faculty

Solid advising programs, of course, require a faculty which has the time and numbers to reach its students. For some departments, however, successive budget crunches have meant lay–offs and early retirements. This has placed a tremendous strain on the advising capabilities of many majors.

Norman Sims, the head of the journalism department and chief advisor, said there are fewer faculty members available to students now, and even less will be available in the future.

According to Sims, three faculty members in his department retired in the past few years, and he is expecting the early retirement of two more in the next two years. Having only ten faculty members to begin with, the advising pool will be whittled down to a meager five, Sims said.

"There are fewer faculty now, but the same number of students," Sims said.

Bill Paterson, chief undergraduate advisor of the forestry program, expressed a similar dilemma.

"Our department has seen a 400 percent increase in students, but a loss of one–third of the faculty," he said. "Half of my advisees are outside of my discipline. I don't want to be advising these people because I don't know the field."

The African American Studies faculty are experiencing the same problems.

"That's insufficient now and we're working on a new model," said Ernie Allen, a professor and the chief advisor for the department.

"A problem like this probably exists at every university," W. Brian O'Connor added. "There's just not enough faculty time for advising."

The biology department has a total of 35 faculty members, 20 of whom O'Connor said are advisors, for the 800 majors; this equates to a 1 to 40 ratio.

"Right now we're gearing up for pre–registration, so we will have 15 to 20 faculty members available during those weeks," O'Connor said.

The School of Management has a even more dramatic load. Three primary advisors handle over 750 majors. Their Undergraduate Dean, George Spiro, however, did not express significant complaints.

"We do a first rate job," he said. "We could always use more in the budget [for advising]."

Apathetic students, not indifferent professors

Most faculty dismissed student complaints over their alleged inaccessibility and said that, in fact, students themselves must be more assertive in taking advantage of their options.

"Students are apathetic," said Robert L. Laurence, chief undergraduate advisor for the chemical engineering department. "I've heard of some who don't even bother to figure out who their advisor is."

Michael Schwartz, undergraduate school of education program director, shared these sentiments and said that advising does need improvements — a lot of which has to do with student attitudes.

"It is the responsibility of the students to seek out advising on a campus of this size," he said.

Hotel, restaurant and travel administration chief undergraduate advisor Kathleen Doer said her department has done everything it can to improve advising services.

"I think the guidance is available and it's a two way street," she said.

Robert Faulkner of the sociology department says that although faculty must be held accountable for their actions, students must also be held accountable.

"A big problem for me is when students say, 'My advisor is never there,' or 'I call my advisor all the time and he is never there,'" he said. "I often question what 'never' means. For many students never means that they called or stopped by once."

"We get to know our students on a personal level. Most students stay with their advisor the entire time they are at UMass and we are able to develop a respectable relationship with one another," Donald Proulx said.

"Students have to stay in touch with us," said Michael Coblyn, professor of art, in reference to students who have conflicts with faculty office hours. With students and faculty having extremely busy schedules, some faculty feel that a one–stop advising center may be the answer to these time conflicts.

While Paul R. Cohen, professor of computer science, recognized that often he can not reach the students who need his help most, he does not blame himself.

"Unfortunately, students who need advising most seldom come in, while students who are well–prepared usually come in," he said. "There is definitely an ironic situation."

Advising and Tenure

Students and faculty alike have suggested in the past that advising could be made a more prominent component of the tenure process, which would theoretically force each department to put it on its list of highest priorities.

A majority of faculty, however, say that advising is already considered when a professor is up for tenure, and that enhancing the role advising plays in the process would actually be counterproductive.

Michael Schwartz felt that if faculty were rewarded for advising, it would perhaps be looked at more carefully. He said that teaching and research are usually looked on as being more important.

The assertion seems reasonable — advising is viewed as a impediment for many faculty members, towards the work they must complete to earn secure employment.

"[Advising] takes away from research and public service. All three components are supposed to be considered equal," Bill Paterson said.

W. Brian O'Connor said that most departments consider advising essential all ready.

"In our department, we look at teaching and advising, and whether the faculty member is available at certain times," he added. "You have to realize that not every faculty member wants to do advising."

Professors must be enthusiastic about advising in the first place if they are to offer quality guidance — a difficult prospect under the current criteria for tenure.

Mullin said the physics department already takes advising services into consideration in the tenure process.

While advising is not officially part of tenure, "It's part of what we call a 'service' element of tenure," Mullin said. "Professors must do three things well — research, teaching and service; so in that sense, it already is part of tenure."

Administration take notice

The faculty leaves unclear who is most responsible for "apathetic students" and the dwindling pool of professors. A logical answer is the administration, as some faculty assert.

"Even though the department has very few faculty, they manage to do a very good job advising," said Cristina Gonzalez, professor and chair of the Spanish and Portuguese department.

Gonzalez cited a recent New York Times article which stated that 53.2 percent of college students choose Spanish as their second language of study.

"In the early 1970s, the popularity of Spanish surpassed all other languages, but we still have the same amount of faculty," she said. "We have never had enough faculty.

"The University should wake up. They need to stop denying that this is happening," said Gonzalez in reference to the lack of professors.

She also stressed that UMass invest in more tenure track faculty lines and spend more on teaching assistants.

"There's no doubt that attention should be paid to advising," added W. Brian O'Connor. "A questionnaire done by students from the class of '93 just came out about what they thought about courses and faculty. They thought everything was favorable, except for advising."

Collegian Staff members Michael Elliott, Leigh Faulkner, Daniel E. Levenson, Jonathan Liberty, Beth McCarthy, Laura Stock and Raghuram Vadarevu compiled this special report.

Collegian Correspondents Tamar Carroll and Scott Jason contributed to this report.

TOC Bar & Grill

Munchie Specials Mon-Fri 4-7 pm

On The Big Screen!

Packers vs. Cowboys

Monday Night Football at 9pm

Catch All Your Sports At The Top!

Free Popcorn

Mon-Fri: 4pm - 12:30am
Sat: 3pm-12:30am
11th Floor Campus Center

Wednesday Night is Promo Night
•Free T-Shirts •Free Glassware
This Wednesday Harpoon Night

ENTER TO WIN

MID-SEMESTER RAFFLE

Sponsored by The University Store Computer Dept.

PRIZES INCLUDE:

* IBM STUDENT SURVIVAL KITS
* SOFTWARE PACKAGES
* T-SHIRTS

[NO PURCHASE NECESSARY]

DRAWINGS EVERY TUESDAY AND FRIDAY

NOVEMBER 4 THROUGH NOVEMBER 26

Campus Center 545-2619

M–F, 9-5 Sat, 10-5

Stop by the Computer Dept. to Enter

UNIVERSITY STORE

Collegian Graphics

HELP WANTED

We are offering great part-time positions as Inventory Auditors designed to fit your busy schedule.

Consider All We Have to Offer:

- Starting Salary from $6.50 to $7.50 /Hour
- Paid Training and Management Programs
- Morning, Evening and Weekend Hours
- Flexible Schedules
- Medical Benefits Available
- Credit Union Membership Available
- Potential for Advancement

These are ideal positions for students.
Work 8-10 hours per week during the semester and 30 or more hours during winter and summer breaks.

RGIS INVENTORY SPECIALISTS

See our AD on the web at www.umass.edu under Student Employment Office or call 1-800-511-5830

Fun and Exciting Job Opportunities for Winter Break

event staffers and Collegiate Advantage are hiring students 21+ to travel and work as Marketing Representatives during the month of January. Students hired will run promotions at different college campuses for four weeks. It is the perfect job for winter break! Expense paid travel, great compensation, and excellent career experience. We are looking for individuals who like to travel and are outgoing, responsible, and independent. You can find out more by visiting our information table on the campus center concourse. We are here today from 10am to 3pm. We are conducting on-campus interviews soon, so stop by!

event staffers
313 Congress Street
Boston, MA 02210
617-737-3555 fax 330-1777
event_staffers@ca.shore.net

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Connect Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Peppas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Pump up the boycott!

Tear up those Texaco credit cards! That's right — rip your plastic into little pieces just like the company has been ripping apart the lives of thousands of their employees for generations.

On Friday, Texaco Inc. agreed to a $140 million settlement to be paid out following a discrimination charge from 1,500 employees of color. The $140 million will result in a $115 million payment split among the 1500. The leftover sum will be used to give pay increases, in the range of 10 percent, to people of color.

Although this may be the largest discrimination case ever in the United States, Texaco has not paid enough for the hardship and misery that they have caused to past and present employees.

Mike Burke

Fortunately, Rev. Jesse Jackson and other civil-rights activists have not backed down on their promise for a Texaco boycott.

Obviously Jackson's threat, which could have (and probably will) hurt Texaco's financial power, had a major impact on the corporation to settle the two-year-old lawsuit so quickly. But Texaco's agreement to pay the settlement only marks a minor battle in a major war.

Even if Texaco settled for $140 billion the boycott should continue; they can't just buy indulgences to wipe free their sinful past. We must remember that $140 million to a multi- national corporation is mere pocket change.

A month-long boycott of Texaco will send a crystal clear message to Texaco and other corporations that racism will simply not be accepted.

Just imagine if every American drove past their local Texaco filling stations and beeped their horn in disgust.

Unlike our Founding Fathers who wrote the revolutionary Declaration of Independence, too many Americans are seen as apathetic coach potatoes whose main, and often only, source of news is the watered-down network nightly news that is sponsored by Texaco and other like-minded corporations.

As Americans we must take this advantage to rise up and take politics back into our hands. We have the power to stage a successful boycott of Texaco showing corporations and companies that discriminatory practices will be unacceptable. Although Americans have always been inclined to shut their eyes to such matters, it is time to wake up. Imagine if we had stopped drinking Pepsi a decade ago because Pepsico continued operations in South Africa throughout its apartheid years?

We must realize that we have the power to change the world, and by making a simple, but strong statement such as boycotting Texaco, the world can change.

I commend Jesse Jackson and other civil rights leaders for standing firm. Unfortunately, the civil rights community is not united. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) has not joined in the efforts and this is a shame.

In a New York Times Interview, Kwelsi Mfume, President and Chief Executive of NAACP, commented on the Texaco settlement: "We hope that we are able to structure a model for other corporate entities to emulate."

While this may sound nice and dandy, Mfume's approach is far too conservative. As this is not Texaco's first problem with race relations between corporate heads and workers, can we really expect the corporation to change overnight?

But by supporting an all-out boycott, Texaco would be forced to take truly drastic measures.

We can be assured that this is not the last multi-million dollar settlement that will be dished out in the near future. Just imagine the financial chaos that could result when every person of color uses their Constitutional right to take a racist employer to court. Meanwhile, the rest of us can take part in this war on hate by boycotting and protesting corporate entities like Texaco.

This is how you can change the world. Please think about it next time you buy gas. Don't fill your car or mind with hate.

The boycott may not be the saving answer to this war, but it gives us a weapon to fight the long battle ahead.

Mike Burke is a Collegian Columnist.

Conservative Vision

As a direct result of some of my previous columns this semester, I've been hit with many insulting labels. I've been called a racist, an elitist, a communist. One person even "requested" that I die within the year. While it is perfectly understandable for these people to have adverse opinions to mine, it seems that by labeling me in some way they become no better than who they feel I am.

What it comes down to is that I am no racist, no elitist, no commie and I am still alive. I am, however, a conservative. I want to see nothing but good things for this country and its people. But as of right now, the status quo is not so pleasing to me just as it isn't pleasing to many other people.

Andrew Trodden

I believe that somehow there is a way this nation could turn itself into more of the utopian society that everybody seems to preach about. I don't think that it is completely attainable, but we can get closer. My point here is that to reach that level, things must be done in a conservative manner, and I stress conservative — not communist.

Look at racism. I believe that racism continues to exist in part because we continue to say that it does. I'm not suggesting that we try to bury the idea that racism is all around us. I'm saying that all the screaming and shouting in the world will not change the attitude of a racist. What can change racism is our children. Children aren't born racist. It's a learned thing, so if we can prevent the learning of racism, then racism in a large degree can be prevented. The important thing to remember is that it won't happen overnight, which is what everyone seems to want. With every generation, things would get better.

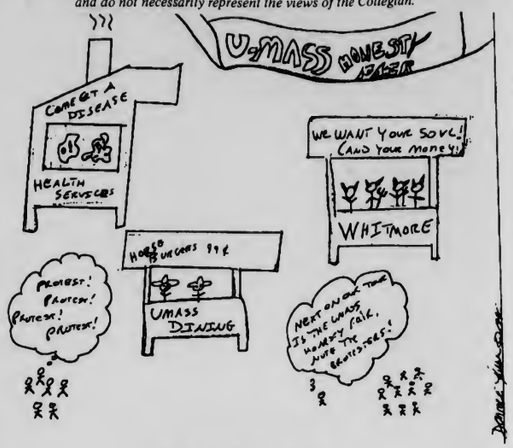
As for my conservative views on welfare, which resulted in the communist label and the request for death, it is not my goal to sink welfare recipients further into the bowels of poverty. I want to see these people rise above that poverty, but I want to see them do it the right way. I believe that there is a better way to help these people. I want to see them get jobs and make better lives for themselves.

I believe that the government needs to help, but just giving these people a welfare check is not the right way. I think the government could better serve the poor by getting them the jobs, getting them into better housing and maybe most importantly, getting them better educations as children. You know children are at that age when we can prevent the development of racism in their innocent little minds.

I really do believe that the world can be a better place for everybody. It could be, but in all honesty I don't think it will be because what we are doing right now is not working, and people in general are afraid of drastic change. For the world to get better, we need that change. So until people accept the need for change and put into action the changes necessary, we will continue to live in a society similar to the one in which we live right now.

I would like to see the day that this world can be the place we all want it to be, but if that day ever happens, it will be long after I'm gone because these changes will take time — and a lot of it at that. We just need to be patient and truly believe that what we do today will someday make things better for our children and for their children. We ourselves may not immediately benefit from our actions, but the knowledge that life will be better for the next generations should be enough to keep us happy.

I know that if I leave this world a better place than when I entered it, I'll feel as though maybe I had a part in that change, and that's enough to put a smile on my face.



Andrew Trodden is a Collegian columnist.

Editorial Policy

The Editorial/Opinion page welcomes columns, letters and cartoons from UMass and the rest of the Five-College Area.
Letters and columns must be typed and double spaced, with the writer's name, local address and phone number attached.
This information is subject to verification prior to publication.
Anonymous submissions will not be printed.
The editorial staff reserves the right to edit letters and columns for grammar, clarity and length.
Any submission that is requested to be left unedited will not be considered for publication.
Submissions become the property of the Collegian and will not be returned.
The Editorial staff is not required to print all submitted material.
Letters should be no longer than 450 words and columns should be about 70 typed lines.
Submissions should be sent to the Editorial Desk, c/o Mark McGrath, 113 Campus Center, UMass Amherst, MA, 01003.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Friend or foe?

Are you aware that Jordan is now considered a "key ally" of the United States? On Wednesday, President Clinton announced that Jordan now joins the ranks of Australia, Japan, South Korea, Egypt and Israel as a key non-NATO ally.

If my memory serves me correctly, Jordan was one of the few countries, if not the only country, that openly volced support for Sadam Hussein during the Gulf War. Curious how they are now an ally.

Matthew Wurtzel

This new status now "makes Jordan eligible for priority consideration for the transfer of excess defense articles, the use of already appropriated military assistance funds for procurement through commercial leases, the stockpiling of U.S. military material and the purchase of depleted uranium munitions," Defense Department deputy spokesman Glyn Davies said.

In short, Jordan can buy American weapons with the blessing of our nation using loans footed by our tax dollars. I find this sudden change in policy toward Jordan peculiar. I don't want to sound like Oliver Stone, but I think there is a conspiracy afoot.

About three years ago, Jordan and Israel signed a hallmark peace agreement now commonly known as the Oslo Accords. In order for the agreements to come to fruition, the United States arbitrated the talks.

Deals were probably struck in back rooms occasionally without another nation's representative present. I suspect that the United States ultimately offered Jordan this status in the future if they signed the agreements. Since Americans have short attention spans, the secret agreement between Jordan and the United States would quietly begin a few years after everyone forgot about them.

Jordan does not deserve this status. The other five non-NATO allies do. Jordan is nothing like the other allies because they are not a democracy, but rather a kingdom. The people have little to no voice in this regime, unlike the other allies who have semi-representational governments, if not full democracies with universal suffrage.

Should Jordan fall to an aggressor, the impacts upon our economy would be minuscule compared to the impact if the other allies like Japan, Korea and Australia fell. Japan is one of our leading trade partners, and any economic problem there leads to problems here and vice versa. When we had a recession, they had one shortly after we did.

Korea, Australia and Israel, meanwhile, are huge markets where numerous American firms have big investments. Intel, the world's leading micro processor manufacturer, has one of the world's largest micro chip plants in Israel. Inexpensive electronics often using American parts are produced in Korea, and resold here. Therefore, attacks upon these nations would have an unbelievable rippling effect on our economy.

Since Jordan sided with Hussein during the war, we should continue to scrutinize it. A better choice for American foreign aid to Jordan would be at the civilian level rather than military level. Building the civilian economy would benefit American business while raising the standard of living in Jordan. When Jordanians live better, they will probably be less belligerent toward our other Middle Eastern ally, Israel.

Matthew Wurtzel is a collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Attack on artists is tasteless

To the editor:

It upsets me greatly to see blatant ignorance on the pages of the Collegian. I am referring to the article "Grateful they're dead," which was downright slanderous and offensive. First of all, the author should get his facts straight before he writes his opinion. Secondly, I understand that the editor should publish opinions and editorials, but not when they are tasteless and offensive. If the Collegian wants to be a respectable newspaper, then it must stop publishing such ignorant garbage.

Jerry Garcia and Kurt Cobain were not leaders. They were members of rock bands. Garcia and the Grateful Dead toured for 30 years and played close to 2,500 shows. Millions of dedicated fans followed them not only for the music, but for the culture, which the author obviously knows nothing about. The Dead were not all about drugs and neither was Kurt Cobain. The artists may have done drugs but their music never mentions anything ever about drugs, except "Casey Jones." Obviously, the author soaks up too much propaganda from America's most ruthless drug, television. Regardless of whether the author likes music or not, he should still respect them as artists, even if they were into drugs. To disrespect and misjudge people is not a good characteristic of one's personality. The author is ignorant and I wonder how many surgeons it's going to take to pull his head out of his rear end.

Ryan Curtis
Central

To the editor:

In response to the article "Grateful they're dead," I'd like to say a few things, some directly to Mr. Molltor, some to the editor. Mr. Editor, what I ask you is this: on a campus which praises and loves diversity, how can you allow such ignorance to any topic into the University newspaper. You people are representatives of this school. If an article is to be written, it should contain facts — not slander. I also recall the same author writing ignorant, judgmental and disrespectful articles such as "Hippies on the beach."

I personally know little about Kurt Cobain, but Mr. Garcia has my respect along with the respect of millions of people around the globe. How can they all be bad judges of character? Jerry led a 30 year movement — a social changing of thought. I do know that the issue at hand is not drugs. Many people have their vices. I will not say that they are right or wrong because it is not my place nor anyone else's to judge anyone else.

To Mr. Molitor, I wish not to waste much more of my energy on you, but you need to know this to live in this world: Respect is what this land is all about kid. You better learn that. Inform yourself of the facts before your write your opinions. If you don't know anything about a certain topic, how can you write about it? Respect your fellow human beings, including those who are deceased. Be tolerant to others and respect their opinions. Lastly, if you have nothing good to say, don't say it — a good rule of thumb.

Lane Wuerthele
Belchertown

Racism needs addressing

To the editor:

I am a senior Engineering student here at the University Massachusetts at Amherst and would like to express my concern regarding an incident that took place on October 4th at the University Campus Store. It involved a colleague of mine, Pierre A. Elysee. Mr. Elysee was wrongly accused of stealing from the University Campus Store and followed by two or more security guards on three different occasions when entering the store. Two of these times he was the only black man in the store. It seems apparent that he was being followed solely because of the color of his skin.

Since I have been a student here at the University, there have been numerous incidents of racism. It is unacceptable that these incidents continue to occur particularly in institutional settings such as the Campus Store. While the institution may not have control over individual students' actions, it does have responsibility for its employees. Clearly the Campus Store staff and management is in need of some diversity training. The institution must respond with zero tolerance level.

We want to make a campus where everyone feels welcome and comfortable. The University must take a more active role in preventing such racist acts from happening in the future. I am aware of the anti-racism work that is being done in the Social Issues Program in the School of Education and would ask you to seriously consider having them work with the Campus Store staff.

Mr. Elysee is an outstanding engineering student at this University, and he, as well as others, do not need to be harassed, followed or slighted in any way based on ethnicity, religion or race.

Chancellor Scott, I implore you to look into this matter and take a leadership role in responding to this injustice. The University deserves a better reputation than incidents like these promote.

Hala Abdul-Rasool
Hadley

Thanks for your support

To the editor:

Second place doesn't count for much in politics. Nevertheless, I made a reasonable showing and managed to get some issues on the table. Amherst isn't California. Reforms move slowly in New England, but the breath of change is in the air.

The main reason for this letter is thanks. I want to thank all of my supporters and campaign workers. Special thanks to the Cannabis Reform Coalition and to the Student Senate for allowing me opportunities to speak on campus. And most of all, I want to thank all of you who gave me your vote on election day.

Terry Franklin
Amherst

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Black Affairs

Monday, November 18, 1996

Shakur remembered at student discussion

By Humphrey brown III
Collegian Staff

On Saturday in the Malcolm X Cultural Center, an event sponsored by the Black Student Union was held to reflect and remember the late Tupac Shakur.

Two of Shakur's movies, "Juice" and "Poetic Justice" were shown, followed by discussions on the life and death of the hip hop icon.

Tupac Shakur was shot and killed in Las Vegas, Nevada on Oct. 13. His death was a shock to thousands of hip hop fans across the nation. The self proclaimed "realest motha- fa ever born" fell victim to the same cycle of black-on- black violence that he spoke of in so many of his songs.

Despite opinions about how Shakur lived his life or what image of himself he painted, the fact that another talented black actor, producer, writer, poet and artist lost his life has touched many in the UMass community.

"We saw him and his lifestyle and we saw the route that he was going... the way that he foretold his own life was like a modern day Nostradamus and it was amazing," sophomore Deena Sellers said.

The debate as to whether or not Shakur's violent death was caused by the actions of his life has been an ongoing discussion, yet Black Student Union President Kenny Lacoste contests that Saturday's event wasn't centered around such talk.

"The purpose of this particular event was to, number one, put more emphasis on the discussion of how Tupac affected the industry of hip hop," Lacoste said. "He was one of the people that brought to life the whole thing about what went on in the hood and everything like that.

"We thought that by watching a couple of the films that he did, we could help to better understand the kind of person that he was."

In the ongoing investigation, police still don't have a solid lead as to who is responsible for the murder of Shakur. It was reported that the one suspect the police did have was recently found dead in New Jersey as a result of single gun shot to the head.

Returning to the gospel

Can you think back to Sunday mornings or afternoons when the only thing that your mother or father would allow you to attend was church?

At church you would receive the spiritual words needed to guide you through the week, even though you may have felt hesitant to attend. Now you're away at school seeking a spiritual outlet or some gospel music to bring you the kind of joy or encouragement you're lacking while away from home.

Onyinyechi Ihedigbo

Yesterday afternoon many students were blessed with the opportunity to receive that type of feeling live at the Blue Wall Cafe. Two choirs — The Encouragement, led by Sam Patterso, and Saints and Friends, led by Zachery Reynolds — came from Springfield to shine some light on students in the spirit of the African word d'Omoja" (meaning "unity").

Voices shouted and hands swung and clapped while praises were sung. Many students jumped up off their chairs — they could not suppress the feelings of joy that came from the music.

How often does one receive such a blessing on campus?

When was the last time you've seen brothers and sisters coming together to fellowship and encourage each other? Yesterday was the day.

Unfortunately, not many brothers and sisters planned to attend. One of the choir leaders addressed this issue saying, "If God wants someone here, he'll bring them."

That was truth, because the more people passed the Blue Wall, hearing the powerful songs of praise, the more people entered.

This event brought thoughts back to the power of the church and its contribution to the struggle of black people during the Civil Rights Movement. Everything was based in the church and its unity. Encouragement was given through the hymnals.

"Gospel is an example of how you can't suppress the power of the spoken word," student poet Shaggy said.

It was those kind of hymnals that were presented yesterday. The power of these songs brought encouragement. The event was closed with the song "I Know I've Been Changed." Students need these spiritual outlets for strength and encouragement to lead them through their struggles on campus.

What is real higher ed?

As an alumnus of UMass–Amherst for more than 20 years, I have been following the brouhaha among faculty and administrators over the latter's attempt to evaluate the degree of multiculturalism existing in individual classrooms.

One has the right, as many faculty members are quite clear, to balk at being monitored by people outside the classroom on something which no one seems to be able to define — "multiculturalism." If it is a value, as the Provost's Task Force on Multiculturalism has stated, then surely many faculty agree with the views of Professor Robert Costrell as noted in a recent issue of The Boston Sunday Globe, "The University has no business evaluating or collecting information on faculty values." And he added that he is especially put off by the Task Force's question: How can multicultural issues be brought into classrooms of faculty who are now passive or hostile to them?

R. Jay Allain

The specter of the Thought Police hovering such hallowed ground is disconcerting. But I believe the current and intensifying crisis in this society compels all of us to move with all deliberate speed to not only understand what multiculturalism is, but practice it. It is hardly surprising that the UMass faculty, more than 85 percent of whom are white, would turn this into a debate over "academic freedom" and the meaning of words.

Change is seldom easy and examining one's own privilege — something bestowed at birth simply because you are born white — is discomforting. Twenty-eight years ago, after the waves of "civil disorders" (riots) swept the country, the Kerner Commission reported the United States was moving toward "two societies— one white, one black, separate and unequal."

"White America was shocked; black America, on the other hand, wondered why the phrase 'moving towards' was used," writer Ty DePass commented.

And the hard-won gains of the Civil Rights era have now eroded to a large extent. The "angry white males" have chosen to scapegoat people of color, poor people and women (among others) instead of looking at much larger forces such as "downsizing" and the global economy, the flight of jobs overseas and the Federal Government's avoidance of the need to develop a far-reaching program to save urban America. In short, UMass faculty and their cohorts around the country, ensconced within their Ivory Tower, engage in semantics while the citizens suffer. One must decide whether to change or endorse evil.

The simple fact is that millions of U.S. citizens are being denied a piece of the American Dream due to no fault of their own. It's hard to define multiculturalism? Then just teach your students that in a 1987 study sponsored by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, more than 50 million Americans lived in families whose average incomes were $5,000 a year.

Ask your students to consider that in a recent study, a white job applicant was four times as likely to be hired as an equally qualified African-American applicant. Then ask: What should we do about it?

And finally, dear faculty, show your students — in word and deed — that you are not like these elites, that you are educating yourself about all forms of oppression that stifle human potential, and that your classroom is a just and democratic place (if we still dare to use such words as though they had meaning). Perhaps the UMass-Amherst administrators are wrong to legislate morality, but their instincts are correct.

As Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. warned us: "Riot is the language of the unheard." Surely our much esteemed faculty will not claim to be deaf to the swelling din.

Studying: The Lost Art

There comes a time in every student's life when he or she must (reluctantly) turn off the TV and the radio to wrap themselves in their books. But for some people, no matter how hard they try to focus on the words on the page, the information just won't sink in.

It's as though the words are written in Sanskrit, and only the professors and their TA acolytes have the cuneiform tablets that can decipher that precious A.P.–delivering knowledge.

Gregory Casimir

Or worse yet, experiencing the terribly frustrating feeling of going to the test under the impression that you actually know the material, and WHAM!, the test is in front of you, and YOU DON'T KNOW $&@%!

You've probably heard many tips on how to take accurate notes, and you know that you need a quiet environment to study. But the key to learning how to study effectively starts with mental training.

One thing that was emphasized at the Men Of Color Conference was the need to learn to study properly.

Studying isn't a complicated process. It is often seen as a complex task involving great physical and mental pain. It's really common sense. If you realize that there is a pattern, you can unlock the mystery of studying.

Studying involves a step by step procedure. Once you establish a certain routine, then you can train your brain to make studying an integral process of the mind–like a habit.

The first basic part of studying is that you have to want to know the information to know it, not just to remember it. This is because it is unrealistic to remember all that information. It's like trying to fit five gallons of water into a glass that can only hold a quart. But if you know the main ideas, you can synthesize all the other pertinent facts together.

The strategy to approaching studying lies in finding a foundation. Each aspect of whatever you study has a basic foundation, a skeleton of basic facts that is fleshed out throughout the chapter with more ancillary facts.

The key to finding the skeleton lies in reading the chapter summaries and the topic headings marking each section first, before you begin to embark on reading the entire chapter. That way you will have general idea of what the author is trying to get across.

This is where highlighting and note–taking come into play. As you peruse through the chapter, highlight key words and definitions, or write them to on index cards. Either method works well, depending on the individual.

Lastly, the most important part of studying is time! It is foolish to think that you will do well on a test without allotting enough time to digest the information. Studying the night before isn't studying — it's cramming. Although I am at times guilty of cramming myself, if you take a look at the grades you get when you cram and compare them to a studying grade, you should be able to see the obvious difference.

And if there isn't much of a difference, then go on with yo bad self, whoever you are. But for most of us, that isn't the case.

With time you give yourself the space to reread your notes or highlights so you won't be inundated with too much information. That way, you can retain old facts and still have room to take in new ones.

Studying takes time, effort and a desire to do well. There is always going to be that one subject that will seem to get best of you no matter how hard you try. But there is no reason that your overall semester should suffer because you don't know how to sit down for at least two hours a day and make sense of the material in front of you.

These are just some tips from one student on the yard to another. As Charles Barron said, "Change the conversation with yourself." If you tell yourself that you can do it, then you'll find a way. If you tell yourself that you can't do it, then you won't be able to."

And if so, next semester you and I won't be having this conversation.

THANG VO/COLLEGIAN

The Blue Wall was in the spirit yesterday as the Saints and Friends choir, along with other singers and musicians, praised the name of the Lord with song.

Go 'Head, Cause I Ain't Mad at Cha

Ladies, do you remember when you were younger and you wanted to hang out with the boys? Or during that "tomboy" stage you wanted to play football with the guys, but they wouldn't let you play 'cause they knew that you would kick their asses?

Well, I went through that and thank God I got over it. Now I'm damn proud to be a woman. However, that reminiscent feeling returned when the Collegiate Coalition of Black Men for Community Consciousness announced that they would be sponsoring the First Annual Men of Color Conference. I suddenly found myself confronting the same rush of emotions that had confronted me during the Million Man March.

Emie Michaud

I supported this event with all my heart. However, I felt that the reasons that were give to me were destructive. I was induced to believe that black men's problems took priority over any issue that a black woman would have and wanted to voice at the conference. Black women's voices were not needed nor wanted.

I thought I had come to terms with that gender issue, but in reality I had not even touched the surface of my inner feelings. So I began to think: why couldn't I go? Don't I need as much help in being retained at this university? Don't I have to benefit from the topics being discussed? Isn't it sexist not to also let women attend? And because I have a big mouth, of course, I asked these questions of my male peers and I got the same answers.

"No, Emie, it's not because you're a woman... Yes, we want you to be retained... Yes, Emie, we know you have a lot to gain from this conference also... Yes, we realize that our women are also suffering from the same problems... Yes, we know that all students of color have to gain from this conference. however, this is a conference for MEN of color!" And that was it.

Nothing I could say or do could convince these men to give their consent for me to attend. Not one single man of color acknowledged that I should be able to attend. So I asked why and guess what I was told?

"Women of Color are graduating at a higher rate than men and they are doing better than men of color in the work place so they need this more than the women do."

Now I heard this from several very intelligent men and all I wanted to do was express to them how angry these comments made me. I could not believe that these men were giving me the inadequate excuse that black women were doing better so they don't need as much help as the men.

As I continued to listen, these intelligent black men became idiots and I wanted to just knock them out!

That is one of the oldest excuses that the black race has given their women in order to deny and ignore black women's equality issues. "Y'all got it made so we don't have to worry about y'all." Or "We have to worry about the race first." Meaning we have to worry about the men first.

That old excuse about black women being better off is just another reason for black men to ignore and treat us like the fourth–class citizens that we have been since the first Africans were forced onto this God forsaken, pseudo– democratic country "Black women get hired more than black men do:" That's something else I hear. Well, that's right, because we are fourth–class citizens, and fourth–class citizens are not as threatening to the white population.

The white population thinks "their own men won't listen to them, so we can do whatever we want to them and no one will pay attention." Not too many societies listen to fourth class citizens, including this one. The answers that those men gave me gives men a right to continue ignoring the needs of black women.

By saying that black men need this because they are not graduating at the rate that black women are is an inadequate hide–behind–your–gender excuse that doesn't confront the real issue, which is that not enough non–white students are graduating from this university, period.

Black men, I love you with all my heart. Y'all are beautiful, strong and best of all y'all got what I like the most — your beautiful ebony hue. Yet, when you fail to see that you are falling for the same divide–and–conquer techniques that white people want you to fall for, that is when we cannot have peace between us. And something dangerous develops out of this.

I feel that I had an a lot to gain from the conference and although I had registered to go, I didn't, because it's something that I know black men on this campus needed to do for themselves. Besides, I will not be afflicted with the divide–and–conquer disease and not support my brothers in their endeavors. They did a great thing that weekend. They took the first step in self–improvement, to finding that inner– self and perfecting it. There is no greater challenge than improving the inner–self and I will always support those who want to grow.

I want to say that those who went and put it on, it's about time. But I also want to advise black men that the idea is self–improvement and not self–exclusion. Black women are a part of the whole black body and this body cannot survive without its other half.

Emie Michaud is a Collegian Correspondent and the Black Mass Communications Project Public Affairs Director.

Pro–Existence

How dare you treat me
the way you do
You call me by the names you choose not by the name given to me at birth
Do you not see that I am somebody human mind spirit soul
I'm invisible
I only object is used for your purpose of pleasure
I object is breast
I
object is thigh
I
object is big butty
I
object is pussy
I
only object is used for your purpose
I
object is used as trophy
I
is used for your purpose

We were put together on earth for each other our purpose was to pro–exist
to reproduce to make family to be happy
not for me to fulfill your desire false images satire

Your power is less without my own
So why choose to disown
Make claim of object
Not human

the children cry for they have no mother nor father
sister nor brother is this the reality you choose to exist
yes, you choose to exist

Now, I stand alone forced to play your trophy for I need you
I need Love

Our purpose is to pro–exist

By Onyinyechi Ihedigbo

BLACK AFFAIRS WANTS YOU 2 WRITE FOR THE BLACK AFFAIRS PAGE INTERESTED? CONTACT HUMPHREY BROWN III AT 6-0977 OR LEAVE A NOTE AT THE COLLEGIAN, LOCATED IN 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

Arts & Living

Translated Yiddish play opens

God of Vengeance offers up issues of religion and morality

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

GOD OF VENGEANCE
Rand Theater
Nov. 14

"Don't be afraid. I won't hurt you."

These usually comforting words took on a completely different meaning on Thursday evening — echoing control, fear and morality. Pride and religion were two strong forces in Sholem Asch's play, God of Vengeance, presented at the Rand Theater by the University of Massachusetts Theater Department.

The Yiddish play, in a new translation by UMass Masters of Fine Arts candidate Ami Levinson, centers around the plight of Rivkele (Niae Knight), the daughter of Jewish brothel owner Yankel (Charles C. Smith). Set in 1906 Warsaw, the family lives upstairs from the scrupulous place, and Yankel tries desperately to shelter his daughter from its workings.

To prove his daughter's respectability to the community, Yankel hires a scribe (Aaron Lyons) to copy the Torah, as well as arranging her marriage to a Rabbinical student. And so begins the conflict: Rivkele wants no part of her father's plan. Instead, she engages in an affair with one of the prostitutes downstairs, Manke (Pamela G. Wroblewski).

In many religions marriage is an important facet, and in the play this holds true. All Yankel wants for his daughter is respect — he carries around so much guilt over operating a brothel, he is reduced to bragging to street people and giving them money to gain their respect. He realizes that no one in the town thinks of him as a decent man, so in turn, he tries to rectify this by living his own life through his daughter. Though he promises her he won't hurt her, he does exactly that — both physically and emotionally.

So while this sets the stage for an endearing look at the father-daughter relationship, Smith's portrayal as Yankel is dry and not persuading. His presence looms over her as if he is trying to be God himself, such as when he speaks lines such as "Are you still an honorable kosher girl?" While this line should instill fear, he sounds more as though he is reading off of a TelePrompTer.

Despite this flaw, God of Vengeance went off without a hitch. From the opening scene of Rivkele dancing upstairs to a traditional Yiddish song, her image being mirrored downstairs by one of the brothel girls, to the surprising ending, the play was both sad and tempestuous.

The acting highlights of the evening go without doubt to Knight and Wroblewski. Knight's performance is breathtaking and expressive — the audience fully believes in Rivkela' love for Manke. From their first kiss to when they are ripped apart, Knight's passion and emotion are so convincing we want their love to be fully consummated. The chemistry between the two young women is amazing.

The two-tier set — the top, a living room enshrouded in pale blue light, and the bottom, a brothel immersed in a red hue — added to the ambience. The stage was incredibly intricate and well constructed, right down to the shower of rain that fell during a stormy scene. The audience was, however, a bit sparse; this did not affect the energy of the cast, as they put forth a superb effort.

God of Vengeance, an eloquent look at both Jewish life and unlawful love in the early 20th century should not be missed.

COURTESY: PETER ANDERSON

Morphine members Mark Sandman, Dana Colley and Billy Conway.

Noho receives ample dose of Morphine

By Scott Bernard
Collegian Staff

MORPHINE
Pearl Street
Nov. 12

"From Boston, Massachusetts we are Morphine, at your service..." With that, Mark Sandman launched his trio into a non-stop 90-minute set of jazz-and-blues-influenced rock with "Have a Lucky Day."

The guitarless combo proved that it does just fine without that albatross. Dana Colley's baritone saxophone takes up the lead space, while Sandman's eccentric two-string slide bass provides rhythm and occasional doses of electric feedback to create a sound which is definitely nongeneric and certainly interesting. Morphine has created complex "head music" which is enjoyable.

The proof of this was in the third song of the set, "Honey White." The rousing rocker garnered the biggest reception and the band knew that they had a captive audience.

Sandman read a brief poem with a surreal backing by his bandmates before beginning "Sharks Patrol These Waters," a piece performed in a near spoken word style. Sandman held the audience in sway as he paused in the middle causing one audience member to scream out, "Drop the bomb!," to which Sandman obliged.

Colley soon demonstrated his amazing double saxophone technique on the funky, upbeat "Supersex," playing the baritone and alto saxes at the same time. The band played a few cuts off their forthcoming album to great response. These songs, particularly "11 O'Clock," displayed an even darker, thuddier sound, with Sandman letting his bass feed back several times. The band lightened up a bit with the garrulously titled "Early to Bed, Early to Rise, Makes a Man or Woman Miss Out on the Nightlife."

Drummer Billy Conway began a solo which led into "All Around the World" which in turn led to a particularly dark, oppressive and feedback-drenched "Freelove." To end the regular set, Sandman marched out to what he called "The old 'Battle Hymn of the Republic'," otherwise known as "Cure for Pain".

However, Morphine refused to leave the stage, and several times Sandman apologetically announced, "Well, maybe we can play just one more."

They began with "The Virgin Bride." Sandman said that this song is so sad, "that we didn't include it on any albums. We could play a relatively happy song, but there will be no joy here tonight."

There was also a playful rendition of "Yes," with Sandman repeating the title for several minutes to Conway's accompaniment before continuing with the rest of the song. Sandman also acquiesced to finally playing "Buena" after telling the audience earlier, "It's too early for that one."

Finally Morphine chilled the audience out with its finale, "Looks Like Rain," before finally leaving the stage to great applause.

Hampden, Herter premiere new exhibits

Augusta Savage Gallery: Currently on display are paintings by Sopheap Pich. Exhibition is titled "Empty Wooden Cigarette Boxes from Cambodia." Augusta Savage Gallery is located in the New Africa House in the Central Residential Area at the University of Massachusetts. Gallery hours are Monday and Tuesday from 1 to 7 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday from 1 to 5 p.m. For more information call 545-5177.

Burnett Gallery: Photography show entitled "Natives of the Soil; Local Trees of Here and Then" is currently on display. The Burnett Gallery is located in the Jones Library. Hours are Monday through Saturday from 9 to 5:30 p.m. and Tuesday and Thursday until 9:30 p.m. The Jones Library is located on 43 Amity Street in Amherst.

Hampden Gallery: Works by graduate students opens on Nov. 25. Hampden is located in Hampden Commons in the Southwest Residential Area. Hours are Monday through Friday from 3 to 7 p.m., and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. For more information call 545-0680.

Herter Gallery: "New Work" by James Esber opens today. Reception runs from 4 to 6 p.m. Gallery hours are Mon through Fri from 11 to 4 p.m., and Sundays from 12 to 4 p.m. Herter Gallery is located in the Herter Annex at UMass. For more information call 545-0976.

Mount Holyoke College Art Museum: "Painting abstract" features works by Gregory Amenoff, John L. Moore and Katherine Porter. For more information call 538-2245.

Smith College of Museum of Art: "Mortals and Immortals" on display until Jan. 5. The 20 sculpture pieces spanning more than four centuries of Roman civilization from the Miller Collection. Museum hours are Tuesday, Friday and Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., Wednesday and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m. and Thursday from noon to 8 p.m. For more information call 585-2760.

Student Union Art Gallery: Gallery is holding its annual Midway Exhibition for M.F.A. candidates. Exhibit includes painting, sculpture, photography and printmaking. Gallery hours are Monday through Thursday from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Fri from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. For more information call 545-0792.

University Art Gallery: John Gibson will talk about his work within the context of still life painting tonight at 7 p.m. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. 545-3670.

Wheeler Art Gallery: Student art on display beginning today and running until Dec. 12 Wheeler Gallery is located in Wheeler Hall in the Central Residential Area. Hours are Monday through Thursday from 4 to 8 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. For more information call 545-0680.

— compiled by Seema Gangatirkar

Munchie Madness 3-6PM MONDAY-FRIDAY
Vegetarian Potato Skins 6.99 3.50
Sweet Potato Fries 4.99 2.50
Shrimp Tempura 6.25 3.13
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

CHECK OUT A GREAT CLASS!
GOTTA BE A PEER EDUCATOR
Peer Health Educators...
...learn about cool stuff
...teach workshops in the residence halls and Greek area.
...give out condoms and other goodies at the Campus Center and special events.
...make new friends.
...MAKE A DIFFERENCE!
PEER HEALTH EDUCATION
PUBLIC HEALTH 213/214 or EDUCATION 213/214
6 Credits - 2 Semester Commitment Required
For permission of the instructor call the Division of Health Education 577-5181.
Class will meet on Wednesdays from 2:00 - 4:30pm
Priority is given to those who meet with the instructor before November 22nd.

ATTEND Information Night
Tuesday, November 19, 1996, 6pm-8pm
LOCATION Campus Center
DISCIPLINES Engineering, Computer Science, Math, MIS, Business/Management
YOURS FOR THE TAKING
SALES & MARKETING = IBM
Not a bad gig: Seize on immeasurable opportunity in the exploding consumer and sophisticated, multi-billion dollar business markets.
Draw on the world-class technology, research and marketing power of IBM Corporation. Work with the industry's best third-party developers on applications, entertainment, reference and education products.
Market and sell industry-leading hardware, software, multimedia, and on-line services worldwide, using the latest in multimedia, 3D graphics, and advanced video communications.
We are taking the entire concept of computing to the Nth Degree. And unless you know something we don't, this is probably the best place on Earth to start your career.
Recent graduates and professionals with technical degrees or backgrounds can help drive one of the world's most important families of business and consumer products into the next century.
Join us.
And take your career to the Nth Degree.
IBM.
VISIT www.cybrblu.ibm.com

■ basketball

continued from page 12

Converse, which featured former UMass stand-out Jim McCoy, could crack the double digit mark.

The two teams played to 25–19 UMass lead before they hit a scoring stalemate. Norville hit a shot with 4:13 remaining in the first half to end the three–minute scoring drought. From there, the younger guys went to work.

With 3:44 remaining, Basit knocked down a pair free throws to give UMass a 29–20 lead. Seconds later, he came up with a block of a Converse shot.

With just under 3:30 left, Charlton Clarke hit his first shot of the night. Basit followed with a bucket of his own and ran down court pumping his fist into the air.

"I thought Ajmal played well," Flint said. "He played with a lot of enthusiasm. He kept a lot of balls alive. I just hope he can keep it up."

Ketner added a pair of free throws to increase the UMass edge to 37–23 and the Minutemen cruised into intermission with a 45–28 advantage.

"This is basketball, that's what I came here to play," said Basit, who was playing in his first game. "That's what I played in high school, when I was a little kid. The only difference is there's more people watching me. It's still basketball, it's fun."

The Minutemen pulled away in the second half, never allowing Converse closer than the 17–point halftime margin.

Weeks opened the half with a pair of baskets, while Smith hit the floor diving after a loose ball. Ketner stopped an All– Star drive with a block just under five minutes into the half, and Clarke converted at the other end of the floor to put UMass up 60–33.

Ketner hit a short–range jumper of his own, and Clarke followed with a long bomb to give UMass a 64–33 lead.

"We always try to have inside presence because we're not going to come down and shoot 25 three–pointers every time," Clarke said. "What we have to do is establish inside presence, then our shots come much easier."

Once that presence was established by the younger players, Padilla and Travieso had the chance to work the ball around and establish themselves on the perimeter.

They each nailed a three–pointer, increasing the Minutemen lead to 28.

UMass slammed the door on Converse with five minutes to play in the game. Working off a strong passing series, Ajmal outletted the ball to Padilla, who carried it upcourt before finding Clarke. Clarke dished to Ketner, who thundered home a dunk to seal UMass' fate.

"We just come out a lot harder in the second half," Ketner said. "Plus we really want to put them away."

HUI CAO / COLLEGIAN

Freshman Chris Kirkland helped the UMass men's basketball team cruise to a win over the Converse All–Stars on Friday night.

■ women's soccer

continued from page 12

Both were fouled hard several times keeping trainer Pam Bockol busy, yet their zeal was unrelenting. If their gritty play proved nothing else yesterday, it is that each has the pain threshold of a vending machine that just swallowed Mike Tyson's (or, more appropriately, Evander Holyfield's) last quarter.

After a few more great Harvard scoring bids were stymied by Dion, UMass notched the equalizer as Erica Iverson scored on a 30–yard shot that beat Crimson keeper Jen Burney to the top corner, 70:10 into the match.

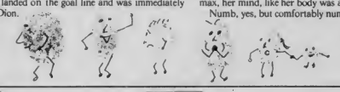
A frenzied 20 minutes of soccer produced no goals, sending the match into the netherworld of overtime. The scariest moment for either side before the extra session though came in the 76th minute, when a Crimson shot was deflected twice before reaching Dion, who had to crawl like a baby to beat an on–rushing Harvard attacker from the suddenly loose ball.

Stauffer, a finalist for the Missouri Athletic Club's Player of the Year award, hushed all 1,408 in attendance as she literally came within millimeters of scoring.

Stauffer unloaded a powerful shot earmarked for the top left corner of the goal, which struck the cross bar, went straight down, landed on the goal line and was immediately smothered by Dion.

If that didn't induce cardiac arrest, Harvard's chance five minutes into the second overtime would. Stauffer fed a wide open Jessica Larson six yards out, who somehow managed not to score, with Dion making as big a save as you'll ever see. With sheer grit and determination, UMass pressed on.

Powell nearly won it late in the second overtime, and Emma Kurowski had a tremendous bid six minutes into the third, but weary from the explosive contest, it would be a weaker goal that decided it.



Iverson sent a crossing pass from 30 yards out in the match's 132nd minute, which deflected off the head of Larson and past Burney, inducing both pandemonium and heartache simultaneously.

Battle–worn, Iverson did not remember how the play was set up when asked following the match.

"The last play was... just... um... I can't even remember where I got the ball from... my mind is just a jumble," a half delirious, half euphoric Iverson said. "It's so hard to keep your focus out there when you're as tired as we were. It was very difficult."

After 131:22 of exhausting soccer and an exhilarating climax, her mind, like her body was apparently numb.

Numb, yes, but comfortably numb.

■ comeback

continued from page 12

nobody in particular, "Best game I've ever seen in this place. Best ever."

Call Saturday's game what you want. "The Great U–Game of 1996;" "The Miracle in McGuirk;" "The Comeback over Connecticut..." What the UMass Minutemen did on this chilly day in November ranks with the greatest games in the program's storied history, just as big as any of those 17 Yankee Conference championships.

So make sure you call it a classic.

The first 51 minutes of Saturday's game went much like the Minutemen's season. They fell behind early, but they fought back to take a 12–7 lead, which they promptly lost before halftime. Two UConn TD passes gave the Huskies a 21–12 lead at halftime, and as the late autumn shadows began to slowly creep onto both the cold concrete of McGuirk and the UMass season, Husky Dak Newton's 80– yard punt return with 12:36 left in the fourth quarter gave Connecticut a 38–19 lead. The scamper appeared to be the nail in the Minutemen's coffin.

The comeback started slowly. A 13–play, 60–yard drive capped off by a 1–yard TD toss from Smith to Brian Healy brought the Minutemen within 13; but Smith's pass on the two–point conversion was intercepted, and UConn got the ball back with a 38–25 lead that still seemed safe.

"We needed a big play," UMass coach Mike Hodges said. "[We got it], but certainly not the way we expected".

What Hodges got was the biggest play of the year for UMass, and quite possibly the biggest of his five–year tenure in Amherst.

Following a stellar series by the defense, which left the Huskies with a fourth down and 44 yards, senior co–captain Kory Blackwell took UConn punter Mike Morelli's boot at the UMass 33, found a seam up the belly of the Husky defense, cut back outside, and didn't stop until he reached the endzone, bringing UMass within a touchdown at 38–32.

"After the punt return for a touchdown, we could feel it", Hodges said. "The punt return made the kids believe they could do it."

A leader to the end, Blackwell deferred all credit to his teammates.

"[The return] was a team effort," he said. "I won't take full credit. My teammates made great blocks, and I just followed them."

The final play, the Smith toss to Henry, resurrected the game, and perhaps the season, for UMass. A 5–6 fall, with a four–game losing streak to end it, seems a lot worse than a 6–5 season that ended with a comeback thriller over UConn, a bitter rival in every sport.

And so goes the 1996 Massachusetts football team: a team that had started with high expectations, expectations that had been severely challenged following a 50–14 shellacking in Villanova to start the season; a team that had rebounded to beat Holy Cross and Richmond in overtime, and then Northeastern, BU and Buffalo before the end of October; a team that rolled to a 5–2 record, and first place in the Yankee Conference's New England division, heading into an Oct. 26 showdown with New Hampshire.

A team that would see YanCon title hopes dashed before its eyes.

UMass found itself down 19–0 to UNH before it could blink, and when it was all said and done, the Minutemen had lost 40–7, and when a tough Maine squad came to Amherst and left with a 22–14 win a week later, Massachusetts found itself mathematically eliminated from the YanCon title hunt.

But the Minutemen never quit. A week later, they went down to William and Mary, and played evenly with the best team in the conference for 52 minutes before a late surge put the Tribe over the top. UMass went into Saturday's game with UConn 5–5, playing for a winning record and pride, which Hodges has always said is a big thing for a Minuteman.

This time, when it was all said and done, there was little the Minutemen could do to contain their emotions.

"I can't put into words how I feel," Blackwell said. "It's unexplainable."

An emotional Justin Reimer added, "If I could sum up how I feel in one word, it would be spent."

Now coach Hodges has a tough task ahead of him. Massachusetts loses 15 players to graduation, including Blackwell, Reimer, tailback Frank Alessio, fullback Ron Brockington and four members of the offensive line.

"Now we have to replace 15 players, and if we can find 15 players with as much courage and guts as these guys, we'll keep getting better and better," he said.

Good luck, coach.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist.

■ football

continued from page 12

18–for–39 with three touchdowns, including the game winner.

"Erik is probably the best tight end I've ever had on my line with me," Smith said. "I stepped up, saw him in the endzone and tried to throw it as hard as I could. He made a great catch, and the offensive line gave me all the time in the world. They're an unbelievable bunch of guys."

Henry was the leading receiver on the day, with seven grabs for 112 yards and the touchdown. He finishes the year tied for the top spot on the team in receiving with sophomore Doug Clark, who had six catches Saturday. Each had 20 receptions for the year.

Facing a 19–point deficit, the Minutemen started things off with a 15–play, 60–yard touchdown drive, capped by a one yard–TD pass from Smith to senior tight end Bryan Healy.

An ensuing onsides kick by UMass was unsuccessful but UConn's possession saw the Huskies flagged twice for penalties, sacked twice for a total loss of 20 yards and stopped for a loss on a run, forcing them to punt on a fourth–and–44 at their own 25–yard line.

It was then time for another UMass senior to go out in style, as co–captain cornerback Kory Blackwell took the punt return and ran it 67 yards for the touchdown, the first time since 1991 the feat had been accomplished. The extra point cut the Huskies' lead to six with 6:04 left.

"I'm not going to take credit for that. It was a total team effort, the blocking was just great and I just followed the blocks," Blackwell said.

Hodges was happy his seniors ended their careers on a winning note.

"You just can't be more happy for the seniors," he said. "We sent them out with a memory that they'll never, ever forget, ever. The feelings on the sidelines and in that locker room were just amazing, just amazing."

Senior fullback Ron Brockington went out in style himself, paving the way on the ground for UMass with 138 yards on just 18 carries (7.7 ypc) and two touchdowns. He ends the season as the team's leading rusher with 776 yards and an average of 6.3 yards per carry.

And speaking of hard workers, when this game was over, the five guys who make up the offensive line just did not have another ounce of energy to give. The most underrated positions in football deserved to be recognized once again as on Saturday they just kept on fighting; four of the five played in their last game as a Minutemen, a great one at that.

The offensive line, which graduates four of its five players, was also recognized after the win.

"This win never would have happened without our offensive line," Smith said. "They punished people all day, they pushed people around, they didn't allow many sacks, and they played an outstanding game. It's a great thing to send those guys off with a victory."

Center Matt Alegi will be the only returnee as seniors Dan Markowski, Mark Zych, Ron Felice and Mark Shalala concluded their careers.

"That was the best win I've ever been a part of," co– captain Shalala said. "They way they fought, we all came together and played, its unbelievable, I love these guys. To finish off like we did is just great."

Senior linebacker Justin Reimer led the team in tackles with 10, and broke his own record for solo tackles in a season. He finishes his career third on the all–time UMass list in that department, third in career total tackles and fourth in single season with 144 total stops.

"You got to give UMass credit," UConn coach Skip Holtz said. "They hung around, they hung around, they fought, they fought and they played hard. I give them a lot of credit."

Collegian Graphics

DOMINO'S PIZZA
CHEESE PIZZA SALE
$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM
EXPIRES 11/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

DID YOU KNOW?
The University Health Services Offers Contact Lenses!!!
With all these great features:
•Same day fitting or replacement in many cases
•Wide variety of lenses available
•Convenient On-Campus location
•Free sample start-up solutions
•Contacts mailed FREE!* normal delivery
WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?
For appointments call Eye Care Services
577-5244

BayBank®
Member FDIC
A BankBoston Company
Visit our Web site at www.BayBank.com
* Banking transactions are free. Optional Bill Payment feature costs $3.50 per month, waived for the first three months. Free Calendar Creator software offer through December 31 or while supplies last.

Minutewomen end season as NU claims NCAA win

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Throughout the entire season, Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon said that her team was focused on getting to the NCAA Tournament.

NORTHEASTERN 3
MASSACHUSETTS 0

After working to capture the Atlantic 10 Championship, and thereby an automatic berth into an NCAA play-in game, the Minutewomen reached that goal by beating Ball State to advance to the tourney.

That road through the post-season came to an abrupt end Saturday in Storrs, Conn., where the Minutewomen fell victim to the Northeastern Huskies 3-0 in the first-round of the tournament.

The Minutewomen finish the season 17-6, which included a perfect record in conference play. Northeastern improved to 17-6 with the win.

The teams played to a scoreless tie at intermission, and that knot remained until there were 15 minutes left to play in the game.

Jen White netted an unassisted tally with 14:21 left in regulation. After Andrea DeVoe directed a shot to the UMass cage on a penalty corner, White picked up the rebound and put Northeastern on the board.

Only four minutes removed from their first goal, the Huskies got an insurance goal to pad their lead at 2-0. Katie West was credited with the penalty corner tally that was disputed and eventually ruled a goal after it deflected into the net off a UMass stick.

White snuffed out any chance UMass had of recovering when she gave the Huskies their final goal of the contest. With less than five minutes remaining on the clock, White knocked home her second goal of the day on a penalty corner.

The Minutewomen had their best chance when Saskia Fuchs carried the ball into the Northeastern zone, forcing NU net-minder Danielle Butsch to come out from the goal- mouth to face her. Fuchs then tried to feed Erica Johnston to the empty cage, but was just wide.

Butsch finished the day with six saves, as UMass recorded 10 shots. Minutewoman goalie Hilary Rose concluded the season with a seven-save effort.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Hilary Rose made seven saves in the UMass net, but it was not enough as the field hockey team fell to Northeastern 3-0 in Saturday's NCAA Tournament action.

■ hockey

continued from page 12

and tonight we stopped the bleeding and we're starting to move forward."

Feeling that several people were too "comfortable" with their place in the lineup, Mallen juggled his lines, breaking up his top trio of Tom Perry, Rob Bonneau and Warren Norris for the first time this year. Bonneau and Norris skated alongside Steve MacKinnon, while Perry skated with Dan Juden and Chris Fawcett.

The plan worked as Norris tied a school record with four assists in the game, while Bonneau had two goals and an assist and MacKinnon had a goal and two assists.

"We needed to make a change to get some life going here," Mallen said. "Last night's performance was not a good one and changing the lines gives you different chemistry."

Merrimack scoring 1:34 into the game did nothing to dampen UMass spirits as Juden answered back with an unassisted on a tremendous individual effort at the 5:33 mark of the first period.

Rob Beck tallied for the Warriors at 9:38 of a wild opening frame, but Bonneau tied it back up at 16:24 as MacKinnon sent him a perfect cross-ice feed to the right post; all Bonneau had to do was tap it into the empty right side of net.

Some questionable officiating by the usually accurate arbitrator Drew Taylor gave the Warriors a 1:39 two-man advantage before the end of the first, which they parlayed into two goals to take a 4-2 lead into the locker room.

"It was pretty positive in the locker room after the first period; we knew that we were going to come back and win this game," Bonneau said. "We had a little team meeting today and we knew that this was a must win game. Every guy in the locker room knew that we were going to win after the first period even though we were down two goals."

UMass, now with Brian Regan in net after Rich Moriarty made the start, only came out harder for a second period in which they outshot Merrimack 16-3, and, most importantly, outscored the Warriors 3-0.

Regan kept UMass in the game, making 14 saves on 15 shots, and was credited with the win.

The Minutemen struck for three quick goals in a 2:59 span to take the lead before skating off at the end of the period.

Junior Mike Gaffney scored only the second goal of his career on the power play at 10:54 when his slap shot from the point deflected off of a defenseman.

MacKinnon tallied at the 12:00 mark, redirecting a low wrist shot by former Cushing Academy teammate Brad Norton past Merrimack goaltender Martin Leagault.

After scoring his second career goal, Gaffney scored his second of the night at the 13:53 mark with a long wrist shot through Leagult's five-hole. The senior was replaced in the Warrior net by Eric Thibeault after the goal.

UMass got a clutch insurance goal 7:12 into the third period when MacKinnon again fed Bonneau for an easy tap- in at the post.

Things got interesting when Merrimack drew to within a goal at 6-5 on a power play with 4:35 to play, as Kris Porter knocked in the rebound of a Darrel Scoville shot, but UMass hung on for the win.

The contest was the antithesis of Friday's contest, when Merrimack took a 5-0 lead by the end of the second period against a defenseless Regan, who was left all alone far too many times.

UMass did tally a pair of noteworthy third period goals that brought the final to a more respectable 6-2.

Dennis Wright scored the first goal, hammering in a slap shot from the point on a face-off win by Jeff Blanchard, the freshman center's first point.

Dean Stork scored his first career goal with a little under three minutes to play when he beat Thibeault with a 15-foot wrist shot on a Perry feed. Strok exhibited his uncommonly smooth hands on the play, collecting and shooting the puck in one unbroken, silent rhythm.

After eight straight league contests to open the season, UMass gets a break from Hockey East play this weekend as it hosts Army on Friday at 7 p.m. and travels to No. 2 Vermont's Gutterson Field House on Sunday for a 2 p.m. matinee.

Minuteman Notes: Freshman Nathan Sell collapsed in front of the UMass bench during a stoppage in play during the third period of Friday's game, a scary sight anywhere, but at this school in particular. Sell was all right though. The victim of a crosscheck to the neck, blood flow to Sell's head had been temporarily cut off, dazing him. He remembered the incident, was able to skate to the bench after it, and did not lose consciousness. Sell sat out Saturday night's game as a precautionary measure.

■ hunt

continued from page 12

trouble for UMass, but if she stayed back it would have been double. She came out of nowhere to track down Gudeman from behind. No referee decision, it was all-ball.

After the game, Powell could barely stand up straight, and Lynch was questionable to play up to gametime. The seniors came through on the doorstep of possibly their last game in the maroon and white. But it was the heirs to next year's throne of leadership who proved the most in this game.

In the second half UMass picked up its game to another notch, and Iverson and Dion began to lead the way. In one of the most spectacular goals of the year, the junior defender took the ball at the top of the box, rifling a shot that beat Burney top corner a little over 70 minutes into the match. After that, the game got very, very interesting...

It was time for Dion's moment in the sun, the one beating down on her for most of the afternoon. The only mistake she made this afternoon was not bringing her suntan lotion. Whenever possible, Harvard chose to put Dion looking into the sun, but that was where she shined. With 11:35 left in the second half, the Crimson were able to get consecutive corner kicks. Dion made a diving save to her left on the first corner, and roped in the second with another big stop.

On the this day, an angel was on the junior keeper's shoulder. With 9:25 left in the first OT, junior All-America midfielder Emily Stauffer was finally able to get free from the UMass defensive pressure. She launched a rocket that beat Dion, but instead of net, connected with the crossbar. Bouncing precariously on the goal line, Dion crawled to the ball and took it into her thankful arms.

Some people talk about "the zone," and today Dion was in the midst of that mythic state of mind.

"The team played great in front of me, and I couldn't ask for anything more from Erica," Dion said. "I felt like I was [in the zone], but I don't know. After I made that first save, I was feeling pretty good about myself.

"You feel pretty good about the way you are playing, and you are keeping everything out of the back. When the goal went in, my head went down a little bit, I have to admit, but as a team, we were able to pull ourselves out of it."

So, they will now go to face Connecticut this weekend. (Forget diction, this is going with the song reference, please!!!)

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

take Kaplan and get into the right school.

MCAT

- Highly trained, expert teachers who know the tests inside and out.
- Personalized, computerized study plans, tailored to your individual needs.
- Proven methods, guaranteed to raise your score.

Class starts November 23!!

the leader in test prep

KAPLAN

1-800-KAP-TEST

www.kaplan.com

Auto Glass Center
American & Foreign
• Same Day Service
• Billed Directly To Insurance Company
• Windshields Replaced

North Amherst Motors
A Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

The Right Place to Be!
3 Barbers Everyday
Unisex Hair Styling
Amherst Barbers
Tel. 253-1722
40 Main Street, Amherst, MA
(Next to Newbury Comics)
Jim & Gabe — Guys & Gals Clipper Cuts, Layer Cuts Razor Cuts, Flat Tops Kid Cuts, Fades Appointment Not Necessary
Tom & Terri
Hours: Mon – Fri 8 – 5:15pm
Sat 8 - 2:45pm
Proprietors: Jim Reed and Terri Lancrini

ATTENTION HOOP FANS!!!
For all the information you need on this year's men's basketball team, check out the Collegian's 1996-97 hoop preview issue. This special issue will feature profiles on each player, as well as stats and stories. Watch for it where you pick up the Collegian, Dec. 5.

Bucci
HAIRCUTS $10. always
25 n. pleasant st amherst 256.0733
145 main st northampton 586.0155

VOLUNTEERS FOR ISRAEL
Feel the satisfaction of making a valued contribution to the Jewish State.
Live and work side-by-side with the young men & women of the IDF.
ISRAEL NEEDS YOU NOW!
Perform non-combative duties at an Israeli supply or maintenance base.
FROM $729*
Includes: Roundtrip airfare, room & kosher board, tours, and lectures.
VOLUNTEERS FOR ISRAEL
330 W 42 St, Ste 1618 • NY, NY 10036
phone (212) 643-6868 • email volisrael@aol.com
http:\\member.aol.com\volisrael\index.html
* Plus application fee. This program was, present & future is partially subsidized by UJA & Israel

EXPERT AUTO BODY REPAIRS, AUTO PAINTING and GLASS REPLACEMENT
MARSHALL STEINBECK
PROFESSIONAL COLLISION WORK
• OVEN BAKED URETHANE FINISHES
• FREE ESTIMATES & CLAIMS ASSISTANCE
• INSURANCE APPROVED GLASS REPLACEMENT
• PROFESSIONAL UNIBODY REPAIR AND FRAME STRAIGHTENING
256-8157 256-1385
53 South Prospect Street, Amherst, Massachusetts

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE DISCOUNT OIL
Northampton Holyoke
584-4112 • 535-1888
SAME DAY DELIVERY
NEWS SAYS GET WELL, YOU BROKEN MARLOWE

Eating Disorder Programs
Fall 1995-96
Sponsored by University Health Services
Eating Disorder Assessment Program
For individuals - with Nutritionists, Mental Health Clinician, Physician and/or Nurse Practitioner. Tuesdays or Fridays - Confidentiality Assured.
Call 577-5233, General Medicine 2.
Friends and Family Group
Single sessions for those concerned about somebody with an eating disorder.
Call 577-5233,General Medicine 2.
Peer Support Group
For those struggling with anorexia, bulimia, or compulsive overeating. Wednesday 4:30 - 6 pm, at the Campus Center. Room number posted by elevator. Confidentiality Assured.
Call 577-5233,General Medicine 2.
Peer Health Connections
A confidential phone line for help around eating disorders - yourself or someone you know.
Call 577- 168.

DID YOU KNOW?
The University Health Services Offers Contact Lenses!!!
With all these great features:
•Same day fitting or replacement in many cases
•Wide variety of lenses available
•Convenient On-Campus location
•Free sample start-up solutions
•Contacts mailed FREE!* normal delivery
WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?
For appointments call Eye Care Services
577-5244

Finally, you won't mind being carded.

Now when you use your Visa card, you'll save big at these places.

VISA REWARDS

It's everywhere you want to be.

© 1996 Visa U.S.A. Inc

Mrs. Fields SAVE $4 ON ANY PURCHASE OF $20 OR MORE
OR SAVE $2 ON ANY PURCHASE OF $10 OR MORE.
Yum! Treat yourself to something tasty for less when you pay with your Visa® card at participating Mrs. Fields locations. Save $4 on any purchase of $20 or more. Or save $2 on any purchase of $10 or more. Offer valid August 1, 1996, through January 31, 1997.
Terms and Conditions: Certificate redemption is solely the responsibility of Mrs. Fields. Offer valid August 1, 1996, through January 31, 1997 at participating Mrs. Fields retail locations or while supplies last. One certificate per customer per visit. Any other use constitutes fraud. Not valid with any other offer; void where prohibited, taxed, or restricted by law. Valid only when you use your Visa® card. Applicable taxes must be paid by bearer. Only redeemable in the U.S. Cash value 1/100 cent. Visa Rewards is a service mark of Visa International Service Association. VISA REWARDS

LIMITED
ENJOY THE BEST IN AMERICAN FASHION.
Save $10 on any purchase of $65 or more. Or save $20 on any purchase of $100 or more. Simply present this certificate and pay with your Visa® card at The Limited. Offer valid August 1, 1996, through January 31, 1997.
Terms and Conditions: Certificate redemption is solely the responsibility of The Limited. Offer valid August 1, 1996, through January 31, 1997. Valid for one purchase only and must be presented at the time of purchase. Cannot be used toward the purchase of The Limited Gift Certificates. Offer valid on sale merchandise. Not valid with any other offer. Any other use constitutes fraud. Void where prohibited, taxed, or restricted by law. Valid only when you use your Visa® card. Applicable taxes must be paid by bearer. Only redeemable in the U.S. Cash value 1/100 cent. Visa Rewards is a service mark of Visa International Service Association. Ltd. #288 VISA REWARDS

TAKE 15% OFF ANY SINGLE ITEM PURCHASED AT STRUCTURE
Structure invites you to take 15% off the purchase of any single item when you pay with your Visa® card and present this certificate. Structure Style is authentic dressing for real life. Our relaxed fit allows you to look good while feeling comfortable and confident. Offer valid November 1, 1996, through January 31, 1997.
STRUCTURE VISA REWARDS
Terms and Conditions: Certificate redemption is solely the responsibility of Structure. Offer valid November 1, 1996, through January 31, 1997 at Structure stores only. Only one certificate or discount may be used per purchase. This certificate is not redeemable for cash, nor is it valid toward any previously purchased merchandise. Certificate cannot be applied to the purchase of gift certificates or on resilined merchandise. Associates of Structure and its affiliates are not eligible to receive this discount. Good only for purchase of products indicated. Not valid with any other offer. Any other use constitutes fraud. Void where prohibited, taxed, or restricted by law. Valid only when you use your Visa® card. Applicable taxes must be paid by bearer. Only redeemable in the U.S. Cash value 1/100 cent. Visa Rewards is a service mark of Visa International Service Association. STR 98

Firestone MASTERCARE CAR SERVICE FIRESTONE TIRE & SERVICE CENTERS $12.99
OIL CHANGE AND/OR SAVE 10% ON ANY BRIDGESTONE OR FIRESTONE TIRE PURCHASE.
Pay with your Visa® card and get an oil change for only $12.99! Or save 10% on the regular price (based on the store's catalog/POS system) of Bridgestone or Firestone tires. To redeem this offer, present this certificate when you pay at any of the over 1,300 company-owned Firestone Tire & Service Center locations. Mention code P100 #03468 for oil change offer and code P100 #03476 for tire offer. Offer valid August 1, 1996, through January 31, 1997.
Terms and Conditions: Certificate redemption is solely the responsibility of Firestone. Offer valid August 1, 1996, through January 31, 1997. Good only for purchase of oil change services and/or tires indicated at company-owned Firestone Tire & Service Centers. Savings based on 1995 average national selling prices. Oil change offer good for most vehicles and includes: installation of new oil filter, refill with up to 5 quarts of Kendall® 10W-30 oil, and chassis lubrication (if applicable). This price includes oil disposal fee. Tire offer includes performance and light truck radials. Not valid with any other offer and cannot be used to reduce outstanding debt. Void where prohibited, taxed, or restricted by law. Valid only when you use your Visa® card. Applicable taxes must be paid by bearer. Only redeemable in the U.S. Cash value 1/100 cent. Visa Rewards is a service mark of Visa International Service Association. VISA REWARDS

Insight MICROSOFT OFFICE PRO 95 CD-ROM FOR $169.
Save $360 on the Microsoft Office Pro 95 CD-ROM (regularly-priced at $529) when you use your Visa® card at Insight® — America's discount source for computers, hardware, and software. Microsoft Office Pro 95 includes Word, Excel, Powerpoint, Schedule, and Access. To place an order or receive a FREE catalog, call 1-800-927-3246, 24 hours a day. Reference code 217058-V when ordering. Offer valid August 1, 1996, through November 30, 1996.
Terms and Conditions: Certificate redemption is solely the responsibility of Insight Direct. Offer valid August 1, 1996, through November 30, 1996. Valid only with photocopy of current student ID. Only one order per person. Does not include shipping charges. Any other use constitutes fraud. Not valid with any other offer. Void where prohibited, taxed, or restricted by law. Valid only when you use your Visa® card. Applicable taxes must be paid by bearer. Only redeemable in the U.S. and Canada. Cash value 1/100 cent. Visa Rewards is a service mark of Visa International Service Association. VISA REWARDS

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

HOMETOWN HIGH
Do you remember applying to college? Would you like to help high school students learn more about the university and the admissions process at UMass Amherst? The Undergraduate Admissions Office is looking for undergraduate students to return to their hometown high school during the winter break and represent the admissions office to prospective university applicants. Volunteers will be required to attend one training session, and to schedule an appointment with their high school guidance office to visit the school while you are at home during wintersession. Training sessions will be on Wednesday, Nov. 20th or Thursday Nov. 21st from 6:00pm to 8:00pm in the Campus Center. Volunteers are only required to attend one session. If you have any questions, please contact Rich Toomey or Shelby Gile at 545-3043. Please leave your name, number and the name of your high school.

CHINESE FOOD Ke-Chi delivering Sunday-Thursday to 2am, Friday and Saturday to 3am

The Mullins Center Hockey League is looking for experienced hockey players and/or experienced teams to join in the spring. If interested contact Harold at 545-3990

Attention Men and Women Rugby Players For info regarding the Annual Formal contact QB 546-4662 or Michelle 549-7367

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Need a place to stay during Winter break? Sublease our apt. in Colonial Village. 2 big bedrooms Call 253-6631

The Boulders 2 badroom, newly renovated, on-site appliances, on bus line. $740.00 Heat and hot water included. 256-0812

AUTO FOR SALE

Attn! Leaving Country! Must sell 88 Honda Accord Sspd., 4dr., 124k mi. New engine/exhaust system in '95 Snow tires incl. $2,500 Call 253-0823

EMPLOYMENT

Snowboard Coaches part-time at private school with ski hill. Decent pay, experience preferred. Call Jack Shea 413-774-7411

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available. Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info call (206) 971-3570 Ext. J50016

ENTERTAINMENT

Sax! Druggi Rock 'n Roll! Now that I have your attention- Having a party? You need a DJ! Call Eileen @ 253-6588 Raging Disco, Funk, Cheezy 80's music - whatever! No techno, the st gives me a headache! Call me!

FOR SALE

3 Pair Doc Marten's: 1 black boot, 2 gr shoes, Size 8. Must Sell! Call 546-1451

MAC Centris 610 8MB RAM 80MB HD Full page monitor (gray scale) External fax modem Ethernet card Call Fernao 549-3927 Price negotiable

Set of 4 Rims 14" white w/black & chrome 80 546-6485 Ask for Gen

CAR CD PLAYER IN-DASH! 1 year old, good condition JVC. Paid $400, sacrifice for $75 firm 665-8127 Leave message

New York Knick Tickets for sale Vs Seattle, San Antonio, Indiana (888)602-0774 (pager)

MAC Powerbook 520 Color, 8MB RAM with Apple Laser printer Call Aimee 256-0413

HOUSE FOR RENT

Secluded Riverfront Home N. Green River ARTISTS INN Residence Living or Studio Space Avail Immed Part-Furnished 14x24 $350/mo or 20x24 $375/mo + % util., sec dep., references, some pets ok, gas heat, washr/dry, snow mvd, kitchen cathedral ceiling, fireplace, balcony East Colrain, 20 min/GFLD, 40 min/UMass 624-3978

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst Belchertown line 4 Bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area Available now 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

Boxing Three private 1/2 hour lessons $89.95 Call 732-8817 In Amherst Tues & Thurs Eve

MISCELLANEOUS

Rental Problems Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new housing or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs Guaranteed $35 800-776-9503 Doctor Approved

PERSONALS

Attention XLI New Members: Kiera, Amy, Jen, Sandra, Rachel, Amy, Liz, Corrie, Shannon, and Isabel You're doing great! Keep smiling

In Chi-O love,
The Sistars of Chi Omega

ROOM FOR RENT
Sublease my room for spring semester, really close to campus! 549-5920

Seeking roommate for 4 bdrm apt in Northampton $300+ Call Karla 585-8629

ROOM WANTED

Need 1 Bedroom Apartment sublet for 1/1/97 thru 8/97 Call Dave (413)783-7098

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommate needed spring semester starting January 1. On bus line call 256-6034

SERVICES

Psychic Readings Your home or mine, free newsletter. Please call Sendy (413)467-3739

Typing: Rates by page, semester or package 413-467-2452

GORILLAGRAMS Flowers, Birthdays, Balloons etc. Send the crazy gorillas. We'll go anywhere, anytime! Restaurants, classrooms, dorms. Student Rates available! Call 256-0287

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info

Angel Chat - Winging your way with Angelic answers to your questions. Cell 1-800-539-3930

CAR NEED REPAIR? Let me come to you! Student Rates 665-4790

Portraits for the Holidays. Professional quality black and white photographs $35 and up. Call 253-5217

SERVICES

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free tasting and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

Take over our lease 1/97. Large sunny 2 bedroom apt. On bus route. Heat/Hot Water. Free Gym. The Boulders. $740. 256-8984

1 Bedroom Apartment in Sunderland on bus line. Available 1/97 8/97 Call 665-3860

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK TRIPS Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida. Best prices, best parties. GROUP DISCOUNTS Space is limited. For free brochure CALL TODAY 1-800-959-4SUN

Spring Break America's Premier Student Travel Co.! Party in Cancun & Nassau from $799!! Find out how to go for free & earn extra cash!!! Call 800-798-1509

Bahamas, Ft. Lauderdale, Orlando 11 days! Cruise whenever. Must sell! $450 Includes Two!!! Call 6-8271 Ask for Moises (MO)

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, FL from 2 credits!! March 15-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project DEEP @ (800)292-0977

TRAVEL

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

STUDENTS moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment" call Caroline at 546-5269 for more info. Identity confidential upon request.

Wanted Tutor for AUTO CAD Release 13. Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272

Desperate for Bibliographic material and I'm not even taking the course. Must have rigorous booklist- textbooks, workbooks, problems for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education). Will pay above $150/negotiable. Call at all times except Mon. and Tues. Don't worry, I am correct (413)549-1771

2-3 Bedroom house for 3 kind sisters who need to get out of the dorm for Spring Semester or ASAP. Call Merryl 6-2429

THURSDAYS

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day

All others
40¢ per word/day

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the ad filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

K	A	Y			H	S	T				I	M	P
O	N	I	T		W	A	G	E	S		N	O	R	A
P	A	P	A		O	U	T	D	O		E	W	E	S
S	T	E	P	S	O	N		S	P	R	E	A	D
		P	I	E	T	Y		R	O	D
S	H	I	E	L	O		A	V	A	I	L	E	D
L	I	N	D	A		S	P	A	N		E	S	A	U
U	K	E		S	E	A		T	O	Y		T	U	T
G	E	R	M		A	V	E	S		I	R	E	N	E
S	T	E	E	R	E	D		F	E	A	S	T	S
		S	A	N		A	D	U	L	T
C	A	S	T	E	R		E	N	D	I	N	G	S
B	O	R	E		S	E	D	A	N		N	E	A	T
S	O	L	D		T	E	E	N	Y		G	A	M	A
A	T	O			D	R	S				R	E	B

Collegian Classifieds
"it's a good thing"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Vose imperfection
5. Direction in a Steinbeck title
8. Skatar Fretsanne
14. Strong tie
15. "In a cowslip's bell ..." (The Tempest)
16. Inactive
17. Realization
19. Fortune-telling card
20. Highest point
21. "___ Academic" (TV oldie)
23. Goblet: Sp.
24. "___ it the truth!
27. Native of Paisley
29. Mame et al
32. Frigid weather feature
36. U.K.'s continent
37. Rate of movement
39. For rent
40. Sharpness
42. Growl viciously
44. Lonesome Dove lad
45. Property claims
47. Doze
49. For shame!
50. Soaked
52. Pundits
54. Colorado Indians
56. Enjoy a cafe
57. Jail (slang)
60. Delighted exclamation
62. Iacto
65. Haunting
67. Butcher shop purchases
71. Before fix or form
72. Opposite of sweather
73. "Dream Children" essayist
74. Sometimes-squeaky door part
75. Margrite or Descartes
76. Garden pest

DOWN
1. Heaf's league: abbr.
2. Part of the Louisiana Purchase
3. Comment from Thor
4. Asian language
5. One Ger.
6. Brewery product
7. Señor's double affirmative
8. Tnes out
9. Bed Fr.
10. Sloth
11. Son of Agrippina II
12. A ___ in the bucket
13. Unsorted wheat flour
18. Doorways out
22. ___-6
25. Pinches
26. The Hardy Boys, e.g.
28. After Sept.
29. Sound
30. Encouraged
31. Polar mammals
33. Chin fissure
34. Comedian Jerry
35. Feminine ending
36. Slippery ones
38. Emotion described by Kierkegaard
41. Tolerating
43. Stubbs of the Four Tops
46. Cast
48. Wall Street sell-off
51. Paleo's opposite
53. Donald, to Scrooge McDuck
55. Of the sun
57. One of Eve's sons
58. Actress Hatcher
59. Seuss' If ___ The Zoo
61. Healthy
63. Flatfish
64. Andy Taylor's son
66. Paris-to-Zürich dir.
68. Those Magnificent
69. Nectar inspector
70. Morose

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
Although the time is ripe for romance and affection, take care not to make promises you can't keep. In business, take proposals to an unbiased party for evaluation.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
Avoid spending time with someone who values form over function. In both business and romance, you'll be better off with someone who cares about serious issues as deeply as you do.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
A silent type may have a helpful bit of information for you, but it's up to you to draw them out. Demands won't work, so you'll have to resort to your charm instead. At a social gathering, you might just meet the person you've been looking for.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
Avoid wasting time worrying what others think. You're very close to figuring out something that will change your life forever. Make sure that the goals you're working towards today will have positive consequences in the long run.

LEO
July 23-August 23
Don't try to figure out everything that's happened in your life in a couple of days. You could still be discovering new lessons for years. Absorb as much as possible, and if you're feeling shell-shocked, trust in a close friend to ease your burden.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
Take steps to ensure that some action results from your meetings and discussions. You could produce some pretty impressive figures if you strike early. Take time out from your busy schedule to give some extra TLC to someone close.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
Bask in the sense of accomplishment you're feeling lately. Even if your achievement is an intangible, your success will carry over into other areas in your life. Don't neglect your personal relationships.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
Focus your time and financial energies on making investments rather than just spending. Then indulge in a romantic interlude that showcases your creativity and romantic nature, rather than your disposable income.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
Make an effort to listen instead of speaking. Not only will you acquire some priceless information, but you will avoid stepping into a trap. A fiercely competitive person is eyeing your accomplishments with an eye to the future.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
Grit your teeth and schedule a meeting with a person you've been trying to avoid. Don't talk too much, and plan an escape route if you really think it's going to be too much to handle.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18
Operating on intuition may not be your strong suit, but it's vital this week to pay attention to your first impressions as well as your irrational impulses. You don't have to follow them blindly, but you shouldn't ignore them completely.

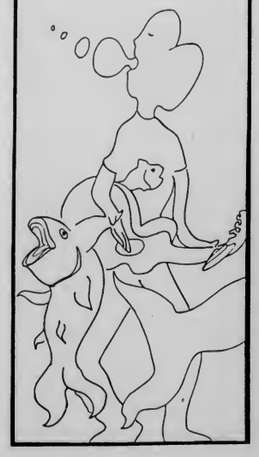
PISCES
February 19-March 20
Thinking about spring and gardening puts you in the mood to tackle anything. Channel your energy into specific tasks, and you'll enjoy a particularly productive spring and summer.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of These By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick



Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom

Sometimes I feel depressed, but I really love my tropical fish. I give them a few rules before I put 'em in the tank....

no biting
no chasing other fish
take your turn on the food

And no matter how bad you feel... no jumping out because... believe it or not...
" that's not water on the other side of the glass."

Then I give them their names and they're off to their new life.

University² By Frank Cho

Social Norm By Mr. K-

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Frumpy The Clown By Judd Winick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

Quote of the Day

"Why you stuck up ...half witted ...scruffy-looking nerf-herder!"

–Leia, to Han

Quote of the Night

"You're a parasite for sore eyes."

–Gregory Ratoff

Today's Staff

Chris Conner
Night Editor

Suzanne Barber
Copy Editor

Thang Vo
Photo Technician

Lorraine Urbanski
Production Supervisor

Sandra Krauss
Chris Lavin
Production

Dining Commons Menu

Menu unavailable. Please refer to this guide to help you decide where to eat.

1. First, go get some dice (6 sided, preferably).
2. Find one you like, and roll it.

If you roll:

- Go to Franklin D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Berkshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Hampshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Worcester D.C. for dinner.
- Get Pizza for dinner!
- Roll again.

SportsWeekend

Collegian Sports • Monday, November 18, 1996

Inside this issue:

- The UMass field hockey team dropped its weekend contest with Northeastern in the first round of the NCAA Tournament. See page 8 for the story.
- Junior Rebecca Donoghue qualified at Saturday's ECACs at Franklin Park for the NCAA Cross Country Championships in Arizona. Read tomorrow's Collegian for the low-down.
- The volleyball team clinched a spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament with its perfect weekend record. See tomorrow's Collegian for the wrap-up.
- The women's swimming and diving team edged Boston University in weekend competition, as underclassmen led the way. Check out the Collegian for the story tomorrow.

Minutewomen take three OTs, but get the job done

Massachusetts advances in tourney after Harvard seals its own fate

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Danielle Dion made 20 saves in an outstanding performance in the UMass net, as the women's soccer team beat Harvard in the NCAA Tournament.

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — It has been established through decades of dominance that the Massachusetts women's soccer team (16–4–1) is the class of the Commonwealth.

This year No. 7 Harvard (15-2), led by the tremendous skills and speed of junior Emily Stauffer, rightfully felt that it was the best that Massachusetts has to offer.

Upon a sunsplashed Ohiri Field yesterday, the two sides waged war in the first round of the NCAA Tournament. This was a violent, bloody affair that was hard-fought for every moment of the 131:22 that it took to declare a victor.

Both sides gave all they had to give in the remarkable match, and with energy spent, it fittingly was an own goal which gave UMass a 2–1 win 11:22 into the third overtime.

"Harvard is one of the best teams I've ever seen in New England," coach Jim Rudy said. "They're a wonderful side. They're as good as any team we've ever had at UMass. We're very pleased to beat a team of that caliber. I kept talking to [assistant coach Chris Chamides] and saying 'That's really great,' and it was them I was talking about."

UMass' authority had been challenged by a new power rising in the east, situated by the banks of the Charles River. Harvard is a great club which believed that this would be the day that the Crimson, snubbed from last year's tournament, finally rose to the top.

But in the end, it was just another tequila sunrise and this old world looks just the same.

UMass is the best in the Bay State and will travel to Connecticut this weekend for its annual bout with the Huskies for the top spot in the northeast region. In nine of the 14 years that both schools have been selected for the NCAA Tournament, the ancient rivals have battled.

MASSACHUSETTS	2
HARVARD	1

For UMass, this fulfilling victory will be savored, especially by its savior Danielle Dion, who made 20 saves in the Minutewoman goal, most of which were of the acrobatic variety. Her team clearly overpowered by the Crimson, Dion was UMass' shepherd in an hour of darkness. Harvard outshot UMass 35–14 yesterday.

Battling a blinding setting sun in the later stages of the match and much of the overtime periods, Dion shone.

"It was a factor," Dion said of the late-afternoon Allston sun. "I couldn't see a lot of the balls that were coming in. I was guessing on some of them, but I guess I guessed right."

Dion, from start to finish, was hotter than her home town of Atlanta in the UMass goal, making several saves with fully-extended dives on balls that 99 percent of the goalkeepers in the nation would not have laid a finger on.

"She did what she needed to, or else my wife, who's dying to eat over here, would be eating by now," Rudy said.

Harvard battled through UMass' bunker defense and finally punched one past Dion at the 42:24 mark, as Gina Foster buried a 12-yard blast into the top left corner of the goal.

While the first half was controlled by the Crimson, as UMass sat back in its bunker and gauged Harvard's plan of attack, the second was more even.

Harvard nearly made it a 2–0 match in the 57th minute as Erin Lynch made a flying back save on a Naomi Miller rocket off of a rebound in front.

Playing hurt in a violent, smash-mouth contest, Lynch and midfielder Amy Powell vigorously attacked the ball on all sections of the pitch.

Turn to WOMEN'S SOCCER, page 7

Massachusetts stays in NCAA hunt

Jorma Kansanen

CAMBRIDGE — Should I stay or should I go?

At approximately 9:15 a.m. EST yesterday morning, this classic rock song came over the radio, as my fellow women's soccer beat-writer, Leigh Torbin, and I motored down Route 9 in Belchertown. We were on our way to cover the first round NCAA Tournament match between the Massachusetts (16–4–1) and No. 7 Harvard (15–2) squads, and the song seemed oddly appropriate. But in true superstitious fashion, we did not want to mention that fact.

Would UMass stay in postseason competition with a win over the Crimson at Ohiri Field, or would this year's team go back home to Amherst for the final time this season?

I think the Minutewomen wanted to stay…

After two overtime periods, UMass came out with a 2–1 win in sudden death overtime on a hated aspect of the game: an own goal. Junior defender Erica Iverson sent a ball into the box, with the attempted header by Harvard defender Jessica Larson deflecting past keeper Jen Burney, ending a contest beyond any adjectival description.

After 21 games of the season, Iverson was finally given sweet retribution for a certain little own goal in UMass' season-opening 2–1 win over Fairfield. The ball had careomed off her in that match that counted for the only goal UMass allowed in its first nine matches. Life can be sweet sometimes, don't you think?

"That last play… God, I can't even remember where I got the ball," Iverson said, amidst victorious oblivion. "It meant to be a cross to one of our players, and it ended up being a flick-on by one of their players into the goal. So, it kind of foiled the keeper's plans to catch it.

"It wasn't going where I planned it to go, and then she flicked it in, and then… chaos!"

She and fellow junior, keeper Danielle Dion, led the embattled Minutewomen yesterday. Dion made 20 saves off of 35 shots attempted, and Iverson just did not let any Crimson offensive rush in front of her go uncontested or untackled.

They were not alone in the gutsy, tenacious play yesterday for UMass, as the players with the most at stake, such as seniors Amy Powell and Erin Lynch, gave every ounce of effort their bruised and battered bodies could sustain.

Powell has played the second half of the season with back problems, while Lynch sat out last weekend's A-10 finals match with a sore hamstring. In one of the game's most remarkable moments, Lynch was able to stop a prospective attack by slide-tackling Harvard's Karen Gudeman.

Have you ever had a pulled hamstring? It hurts, take my word on it. If she missed the play it would have been

Turn to HUNT, page 8

Line changes spark UM to home–and–home split

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts hockey coach Joe Mallen was, visibly distressed after his team lost the opening end of a home–and– home series with Merrimack Friday night at the Volpe Complex in North Andover, but just before he boarded the team bus, he said "tomorrow is another day."

Indeed it was a day–and–night difference as UMass (2–7, 2–7 Hockey East) played exceptionally in a 6–5 win over the Warriors (5–5, 2–4) on Saturday night at the William D. Mullins Center, 24 hours after losing 6–2.

The Minutemen played a spirited game Saturday night, bouncing back from a trio of first period deficits, and later rattling off four unanswered goals in one of their best efforts of the year, just one night after unquestionably their worst.

MERRIMACK	6
MASSACHUSETTS	2

"A lot of guys on our team have got to work a lot harder to win Hockey East games and that's what I told them," Mallen said after Friday's loss.

The end result was obvious, as the team came out inspired on Saturday, winning before a rowdy 2,825 fans at Mullins.

MASSACHUSETTS	6
MERRIMACK	5

"It was a character win for us, a real gut check," Mallen said. "We've had some hard games and the schedule to start hasn't been in our favor. We've been in a downward spiral

Turn to HOCKEY, page 8

UM seniors end careers on winning note

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

John Sawyer and the UMass football team capped off the 1996 season with a dramatic come–from–behind victory over UConn Saturday.

Minutemen get exhibition win, focus now on upcoming season

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

After dropping a 77–73 decision to Marathon Oil in its first exhibition game of the season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team left nothing to chance Friday night.

The Minutemen jumped out to a 8–0 lead and never looked back as they cruised to a 85–52 win over the Converse All– Stars.

While much of the preseason hype surrounding the UMass program has been about the backcourt tandem of Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso, several newcomers played aggressive roles in Friday's win.

Ajmal Basit and Lari Ketner complimented Tyrone Weeks and Inus Norville under the basket, while Winston Smith saw time at small forward.

MASSACHUSETTS	85
CONVERSE	52

UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint was cautiously optimistic following his team's victory.

"This is going to be a long process, especially when we have young guys," Flint said. "I told them, The next one counts.'

"I'm still going to keep talking about getting better every day, get better in practices as individuals and learn from our mistakes in the games."

The Minutemen, building on the experience of their guard corps, kept the All-Stars scoreless for three minutes and rifled off 20 points before

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 7

Seniors spark Minutemen to emotional comeback over rival Husky squad

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

You just couldn't have picked a better way for the Massachusetts football team to end its season.

After trailing 38–19 with 12:36 left in the fourth quarter, the Minutemen showed what the team is made of, as it fought its way back to win the game 39–38 over the Connecticut Huskies Saturday afternoon at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

MASSACHUSETTS	39
CONNECTICUT	38

With :36 left, it all came down to the last play for the Minutemen. On a fourth–and–19, freshman quarterback Jeff Smith dropped back and fired a bullet over the middle, splitting the defenders, to senior tight end Erik Henry for the touchdown and the win.

It would be UMass' most dramatic victory this season and a great way for the Minutemen (6–5, 4–4 Yankee Conference) to send out their 15 seniors. The win UMass also gave its fourth winning season in five years.

The game marked the final contest in YanCon history. Next year, the conference will become the Atlantic 10.

"This was an amazing football game, just amazing," UMass coach Mike Hodges said. "I love these kids, and I'm proud of these kids and that's why. 'Cause that's the kind of kids that they are right there, that's the way they play.

"They believe in each other, they kept playing and you just can't get any more exciting than that. I can't believe it, I really can't believe it."

The winning touchdown would come on the same exact play in the same exact situation the Minutemen faced in Richmond (Sept. 21). Then, on the fourth–and–19 Smith found Henry over the middle with three seconds left to force overtime.

Luke Meredith

Smith had a career day Saturday, going

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

When the miracle fourth quarter comeback began to unravel, my colleague Mike Corey and I left our usual catbird seats in the Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium pressbox and grabbed two empty seats down in the stands.

The tension of this amazing comeback was whipping the 7,216 fans in attendance into a frenzy. When Jeff Smith capped off the 1996 Minuteman season with a 20–yard touchdown strike to senior Erik Henry, an elderly gentleman adorned in a faded old Massachusetts baseball jacket and a mesh UMass hat that had seen better days announced to

Turn to COMEBACK, page 7

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 53 • New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 • Tuesday, November 19, 1996

Minutewomen rock ECAC'S

The UMass women's cross-country team competed in the ECAC tournament this weekend, and Rebecca Donaghue won a spot in Nationals. Check out the results inside (see Sports, page 10).

The CIA drug scandal exposed

Recent reports assert CIA involvement in drug smuggling to South Central Los Angeles in order to fund the Contras in Nicaragua. Check out our extensive coverage (See Multicultural Affairs, page

WORLD

Fidel Castro takes Italy by storm

ROME (AP) — Banners wave in the streets, declaring: "Welcome, comandante." Admirers follow him, shouting: "Viva Cuba." And on Monday, government leaders trekked one by one over to the Holiday Inn to pay homage.

Fidel Castro — the man Italians call "Maximum Leader" — is holding court.

Castro's revolutionary spirit still evokes respect and passion here, and Italians have been giving him an enthusiastic reception since he arrived Saturday.

At the U.N. World Food Summit, delegates flocked around him, taking photographs and begging autographs. On Sunday, he dined at the home of Gianni Agnelli, Fiat automotive mogul and one of the the nation's richest men.

The Holiday Inn on the outskirts of Rome has become the Cuban leader's headquarters.

Dressed in a blue suit and a red-and-yellow dotted tie, Castro received admirers Monday in a private conference room around a red table covered with notepads, water bottles and clipboards.

"He has such a great, huge curiosity of all that concerns Europe and Italy," gushed Fausto Bertinotti, head of Italy's hard-line communist party, as he left his audience with Castro.

NATION

Forget friendly fire; blame meteorites?

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — "Conventional wisdom" dictates that a meteorite, not a missile, streaked across the path of a Pakistani jet in the skies above the TWA Flight 800 crash site this weekend, a top FBI official said Monday.

Nevertheless, FBI assistant director James Kallstrom said the report by the pilot is being "taken seriously and will be thoroughly investigated," including examining radar and other sensors that would indicate whether there was any object in the area.

"We don't really know what it was," said Kallstrom, head of the investigation into the TWA crash. "The conventional wisdom is that it was a meteorite shower."

The pilot of a Pakistan International Airline jet reported seeing a streak of light around 10:30 p.m. Saturday shortly after departing from Kennedy Airport for Frankfurt, Germany. FBI agents interviewed the crew on Sunday.

The pilot, Whaid Shah, said his co-pilot saw an orange light "coming from the left hand side to the ride hand side in front of the aircraft." He said it was three to four miles in front of the aircraft and above it.

The National Weather Service said a meteor shower was under way in the area at the time. "There's a pretty fair chance that what he saw was a meteor," meteorologist Edward Yandrich said. The reported sighting renewed speculation that a missile had downed Flight 800 four months ago.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Weds.	Thursday
HIGH: 45 LOW: 30	HIGH: 50 LOW: 30	HIGH: 45 LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics .....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 10

Students raise major concerns on advising in Collegian study

UMass at a crossroads — the state of academic advising: a Massachusetts Daily Collegian special report

Day One: Faculty reactions to advising
Faculty says departmental advising is strong; student apathy is a real problem; administration is also criticized

Day Two: Collegian study points to advising problems
Students express frustration and confusion with the advising process

Day Three: The proactive University?
Students, administration, critique programs aimed at making UMass more accesible.

Day Four: Cultural organizations and advising
Students of color strive to find a familiar face and guidance at a predominately white University

Day Five: UMass 2000
Will the future forget the undergraduate? What do the next five years hold for UMass and its students?

Special Report
Collegian News

Editor's Note: this article is the second in a five part special report on the state of academic advising at the University of Massachusetts. The report was compiled by the Collegian news desk.

In the late '80s, the students at the University of Massachusetts were dealt a serious blow that posed a threat to the future of higher education in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The state government (both the Dukakis and Weld Administrations) implemented massive UMass budget cuts. Along with raising the cost of tuition by over 100 percent, these cuts caused an exodus of many renowned faculty members, resulting in many problems for students at the state's flagship University.

With the absence of many faculty members, an enormous hole opened up in academic advising, leaving many students to feel that they were just "another number." This feeling was echoed in a survey conducted by the University earlier this year.

According to a June 1996 survey coordinated by the Student Affairs Research, Information and Systems Office (SARIS), approximately 65 percent of respondents said "most students at UMass are treated like numbers, not people." In addition, roughly 47 percent of the respondents felt that administrators did not care about students, according to SARIS.

These survey results present an alarming trend within the University. The trend was reiterated in a recent survey compiled by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

In the Collegian survey, 57 percent of undergraduate respondents said that they knew the name of their advisors, but ironically 50 percent of the same respondents said that their advisors did not know their name.

These findings, among others, highlight the concerns of many undergraduates, who feel that the University is leaving them out in the cold when it comes to advising, personal guidance and career preparation.

Approximately 66 percent of undergraduates surveyed by the Collegian said that they benefited "barely" or "not at all" from academic advising, in terms of planning for post– graduation life.

A SARIS study puts the number of students who were "dissatisfied" or "very dissatisfied" with advising at almost 30 percent — still a sizable portion of the total undergraduate population.

However, the same SARIS study stated that approximately 40 percent of undergraduates had "no basis" to make a judgement on the University's career planning and placement services, implying that

Turn to ADVISING page 3

KENNETH W P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Birds of Paradise?
Seagulls caught taking a peek at the recently cleaned up campus pond.

U.S. still opposed to U.N. head

States remains sole dissenter on Boutros-Ghali's re-election

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The United States stood alone Monday in opposing a second term for Boutros Boutros-Ghali as the Security Council met to pick a secretary-general to lead the United Nations into the 21st century.

U.S. Ambassador Madeleine Albright told the 14 other council members at a closed-door meeting that she had written instructions to veto re-election for the Egyptian diplomat, saying Boutros-Ghali has lost the confidence of Congress.

Albright warned that Congress would not let the United States make good on its $1 billion U.N. debt as long as Boutros-Ghali remains, diplomats said on condition of anonymity.

But the United States was isolated diplomatically in its campaign to oust Boutros-Ghali, an Egyptian. African countries submitted a resolution calling for Boutros-Ghali's re-election, and the council scheduled a vote for Tuesday morning.

The Africans have insisted that their continent deserves two terms of representation in the post, as has been U.N. tradition. Diplomats said the resolution endorsing Boutros-Ghali was joined by Egypt, Honduras, Russia, China, Guinea-Bissau, Botswana, Germany, Chile, Indonesia and France.

A U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Secretary of State Warren Christopher had given Albright written instructions to deny Boutros-Ghali a new five-year term after his first expires Dec. 31.

Boutros-Ghali's supporters claim the Clinton administration has used the U.N. chief as a scapegoat to cover its own foreign policy miscues in Somalia, Bosnia and Rwanda.

The standoff threatens to further strain the United Nations at a time when its effectiveness is being questioned. Congress' refusal to pay America's debts to the United Nations has thrown the organization into a financial crisis.

Critics have demanded the United Nations institute reforms and reduce its staff.

U.N. officials say American allies, including French President Jacques Chirac, Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien and German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, have urged President Clinton to relent in his opposition.

The council selects a candidate and then forwards the name to the full General Assembly for ratification. The nomination process could go on for weeks, and nothing prevents the renomination of a candidate who has been vetoed earlier in the process.

The five permanent members — the United States, China, Russia, France and Britain — hold veto power in the council.

In an effort to appease the Africans, the United States has agreed to a selection formula weighted in favor of African candidates. The formula calls for limiting the second round of voting to African candidates once Boutros-Ghali is vetoed.

KENNETH W P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Smith unites against hate
Following a display of racial hatred, Smith College united together last night for an emotional rally. This public demonstration marked the second rally this semester centered on racial problems at the College.

Feminist research methods focusses on Israeli women

By Michelle Hillman
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Women's Studies program and the UMass Graduate School are sponsoring a Women's Studies Graduate Minor lecture series. The first speaker of the series will be Dr. Shulamit Reinharz, on Wednesday, Nov. 20 at 12:15 p.m. in Campus Center room 803.

Reinharz, professor of sociology, director of the Brandeis University Women's Studies program and the director of the International Research Institute on Jewish Women will speak as part of the new Women's Studies Graduate lecture series. Her lecture is entitled "Feminist Research Methods: Past, Present and Future."

Nancy Patteson, graduate assistant for the Women's Studies program said speakers included in the lecture series range from "some research that has national and international recognition, and also graduate students."

In 1991, Reinharz became a full professor of sociology at Brandeis University, the first and only woman to earn that rank in sociology at Brandeis. The same year she became director of the Women's Studies Program, which integrates faculty, staff and students interested in issues relating to women.

In 1992, Reinharz created a graduate program in Women's Studies, a National Board for Women's Studies at Brandeis University and a Resident and Visiting Scholars Program. Reinharz serves as Chair for the National Commission on American Jewish Women and has created an internship program in the prevention of violence against women and children.

Reinharz's research focuses on women in Israeli history, perceptions and experiences of miscarriage, gender and aging and the lost contributions of women to sociology. Reinharz lectures around the country on topics related to Judaism, feminism and sociology.

The lecture series "covers a wide spectrum, we're really tryig to be diverse in the resources we tap into," said Patteson.

"We're trying to provide a forum for people to talk about feminist research. Feminist theory and women's studies effect all disciplines. The methods can be applied to humanities, school of management, etc. It really is far reaching," said Patteson.

The graduate minor program is in the process of developing a program description and will be accepting forman applications in March. The program requires a minimum of 14 credits.

America lags in education goals

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — America as a whole has made little headway in reaching eight national education goals for the year 2000, although some states have made significant progress, a panel monitoring the project reports.

"At our present rate of progress, we're not going to make it," said Ken Nelson, executive director of the National Education Goals Panel. "We have to escalate our commitment to it, and it's best done at the state and local level."

The bipartisan panel was set up to track progress in meeting the "Goals 2000" developed after President Bush and the governors held an education summit in 1989 in Charlottesville, Va.

The goals say that by 2000:

- All U.S. children will start school ready to learn.
- The high school graduation rate will be 90 percent or higher.
- Students will leave grades 4, 8 and 12 having shown competency over challenging subject matter.
- U.S. students will be the first in the world in math and science.
- Every American adult will be literate.
- Schools will be free of drugs, guns and violence.
- Schools will promote partnerships with parents.
- Teachers will be able to access professional development.

The panel's report, being released Tuesday, said that since 1990, the nation has scored higher marks on five of more than 20 indicators set up to measure performance toward "Goals 2000."

Fourth- and eight-graders are doing better in math, students are experiencing fewer threats and injuries at school, family reading is more prevalent, national performance has improved in infant health and more students are earning math and science degrees.

National performance declined, however, on eight of the indicators and remained unchanged in many areas, the report said.

For instance, performance has declined in reading achievement at grade 12, teacher preparation and participation in adult education.

Meanwhile, drug activity and classroom disruptions are on the rise, the report said.

For Your Information

PIIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an PIIs, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Tuesday, Nov. 19

Workshop — Amnesty International at UMass is sponsoring a letter writing workshop from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in room 162–75 of the Campus Center. Amnesty officers will be there to offer assistance to anyone who has not written an urgent action letter before. Anyone and everyone interested in supporting a cause is welcome.

Class — "Talmud Class," a free, drop–in class on Jewish oral law will be held at 8 p.m. at Chabad House at Amherst.

Wednesday, Nov. 20

MASSPIRG — A Hunger Banquet will be held at 6 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The event is sponsored by the Massachusetts Student Public Interest Group. For more information, contact the MASS Student PIRG Organizer at 545–0199.

Meeting — The UMass Poetry Society will meet at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 911. Attendance is strongly urged as nominations for upcoming elections will be held. For more information, call Tim at 546–0562.

Meeting — The Economics Club is holding a meeting for all economics majors from the Five Colleges. A representative form the Mather Career Center will be holding a resume workshop. For more information, call 549–4089 or 586–7398.

Meeting — The Golden Key Honor society will hold a general body meeting at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 804–808. General elections for officers will be held. For more information, call Michelle at 549–0189.

Film — Half the Kingdom will be shown at 3:30 p.m. in the Hillel House Recreation Room. The Jewish Film Class invites all interested.

Reading — The Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures will host Gennadiy Samsonenko's reading of his book, Rekviem po Sergeyu Grin'kovu from 6:30–8 p.m. in Herter Hall room 601. The reading will be in Russian.

Discussion — A multiracial, anti–racism coalition–building meeting will be held at 7 p.m. All those interested should attend The location is TBA. For more information, call Judith Schneider at 253–1432 or Nikki Morse at 546–0432.

Class — "Tanya Class," a free, drop–in class on the Tanya, the Chassidic text of mysticism, will be held at 8 p.m. at Chabad House at Amherst.

Religion — "How Do Interfaith Relationships and Marriages Impact Religious Identity and Religious Communities?" will be held in Butterfield Main Lounge at 7:30 p.m. The event is a part of the Religion and Identity Series. All are welcome. For more information, call 546– 5174.

Lecture — "U.S. Foreign Policy Toward Russia, Scandinavia and the Baltic Republics" by U.S. Ambassador to Finland, Derek Shearer. Amherst College, Merrill II, 7:30 p.m. Free and open to the public. For more information, call 549–4600.

Poetry — There will be a poetry and prose reading at the Student Union Art Gallery at 7:30 p.m., sponsored by the Spectrum. Anyone interested in reading their work in a non– competitive environment is welcome to sign up. Please call 545–2240 for more information.

Presentation — "Bosnia 1996: War Crimes, International Law and Democratization" is the title of a presentation by noted scholar Beverly Allen. Preceding her talk will be a reading by Northampton poet Adrian Oktenberg from her new book, The Bosnia Elegies. The event takes place at 7:30 p.m. at Stoddard Hall, Smith College. For more information, call Friends of Bosnia at 586–6450.

Thursday, Nov. 21

Coffee Hour — Signing Coffee Hour sponsored by UMass HANDS at 7 p.m. in the Bluewall. Any questions, call the office at 545–1952 or stop by the office in room 306 of the Student Union.

Film Festival — The UMass Dept. of Germanic Languages and Literatures and its German Club are sponsoring a Heinrich Boll Film Festival in Thompson 106, starting at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free; popcorn and soda will be provided. For more information, call 545–2350.

Poetry Reading — An evening of original poetry will be held at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Art Gallery. All are encouraged to read original works and to have them published. Sign up for the reading at the Art Gallery or contact Maria at 253–6674 for further information.

Friday, Nov. 22

Religious Services — "Thanksgiving" Shabbat services with a free meal at 6 p.m. at Chabad House, 30 N. Hadley Rd., Amherst. Free and open to the public and for more information, call 549–4094.

Sleep Out — An event sponsored by MASSPIRG to educate the campus community about homlessness by sleeping outside. Students raise money by getting pledges for hours sleeping out. For more information, contact Melanie Undem, MASS Student PIRG Organizer, at 545– 0199.

Notices

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584– 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly Delesus at 546–1083.

Employment — Applications are still being accepted from work–study students for the positions of office manager and research coordinator for the Canabis Reform Coalition. If interested, please pick up and application in room 322 of the Student Union or call 545–1122 to get one mailed to you. Call John Lanzerotta at 546–6359 for more information.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Fall Library Workshops — UMass reference librarians are offering a series of workshops. November sessions will include demonstrations of databases and Web sites in Literature with Literature Specialist Liz Fitzpatrick (Nov. 18, from 1–2 p.m.), and the Internet (Nov. 21, from 9:30–11 a.m.) with Internet Resources Librarian Emily Hurn. All workshops will be in the Library Instruction Room, main floor, Du Bois Library. All are welcome, although sign up is required for the Internet sessions. Please call 545–6892 to register.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Tues., Dec. 3 from 5:30–7 p.m. in CC room 165–169.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Lincln. All conversations are confidential.

Literature — mOTHERTONGUE, the multilingual student publication by the Dept. of Comparative Literature, is currently seeking submissions for the spring '97 publication. We will accept original poetry, short stories, one–acts, international photographs and art work created by multilingual students. Please submit a copy in English to the Comparative Literature Dept. in 203 South College. Rough drafts are acceptable.

A night of Puerto Rican poetry

Una Noche de Poesta culminates Heritage week celebrations

By Viraphanh Douangmany
Collegian Correspondent

Poet Gabriel Garcia Lorca said in his theury of the "duende" that the only true form of poetry was the oral performance. Una Noche de Poesta, a night of poetry, sponsored by Boricuos Unidos, overflowed with duende culminating a week long celebration of Puerto Rican Heritage.

The event included popular Puerto Rican poets along with a jazz band attracting a large crowd, who packed the Graduate Lounge to capacity last Friday night.

With the artists such as as Magdelena Gomez, University of Massachusetts professer Martin Espada, Willie Perdomo and founders of an up and coming poetry group, Dark Souls Collective.

Dark Soul Collective is an organization who is intent upon uplifting and educating communities of color using poetry to move foward. The event drew in a spectrum of Latinos who embraced the resonating themes of the night — family, identity, culture, politics and revolution.

Former trustee and UMass alumni (class of '96), Danny Rivera began the event with a poem intitled, "Pumas for Tevas."

According to Rivera, it was about, "...coming into the University and forgetting where we came from."

Next came "GRFX" (pronounced graphics) a founding member of the Sunday Tea Party. GRFX quickly brought out the consciousness of the indigenous struggle currently waged in Mexico with bold statements and metaphors.

The Zapatistas were "correctionists" not insurrectionists he offered. He later talked about being the product of a two nation family, a Panamanian father and an American mother. His last poem conveyed the relationship between foreign aid and economic and political repression laced in the phrase "greedy through democracy."

Following GRFX was "Bonafide," from the Bronx, NY, one of the founding member of Dark Souls Collective. He recited a poem enhanced by audio recordings of drum beats and piano tunes.

One poem called, "Blindfolded and Rubbed" was his self– proclaimed revolutionary work. Interspersed in this poem was the Young Lords Party and Amerika–ka–ka.

His other poem entitled "Where I'm From" gave local color to to his New York environment. He prefaced by saying, "If we don't come from positive places how can we write of positive things?"

Another of Bonafide's poems described the social ills including police harassment. "[the suspect] meets your complexion — I mean description."

Bonafide brought the audience to laughter in his final poem, "Cerebral Intercourse." With phrases such as "mental foreplay" and "my cerebral corner," he caused the audience to scream out "otro, otro," or more, more.

Gomez, poet, playwright, educator, described how a white South Carolina kindergarten teacher wrote on the face of an African American child with a magic marker.

"We do not have to go as far as South Carolina to be shocked and stunned...go to the Valley," said Gomez.

Gomez highlighted the struggle of students of color in institutions of learning. One of her poems referred to a racial incident at the University Store where an African American student was wrongly apprehended for theft.

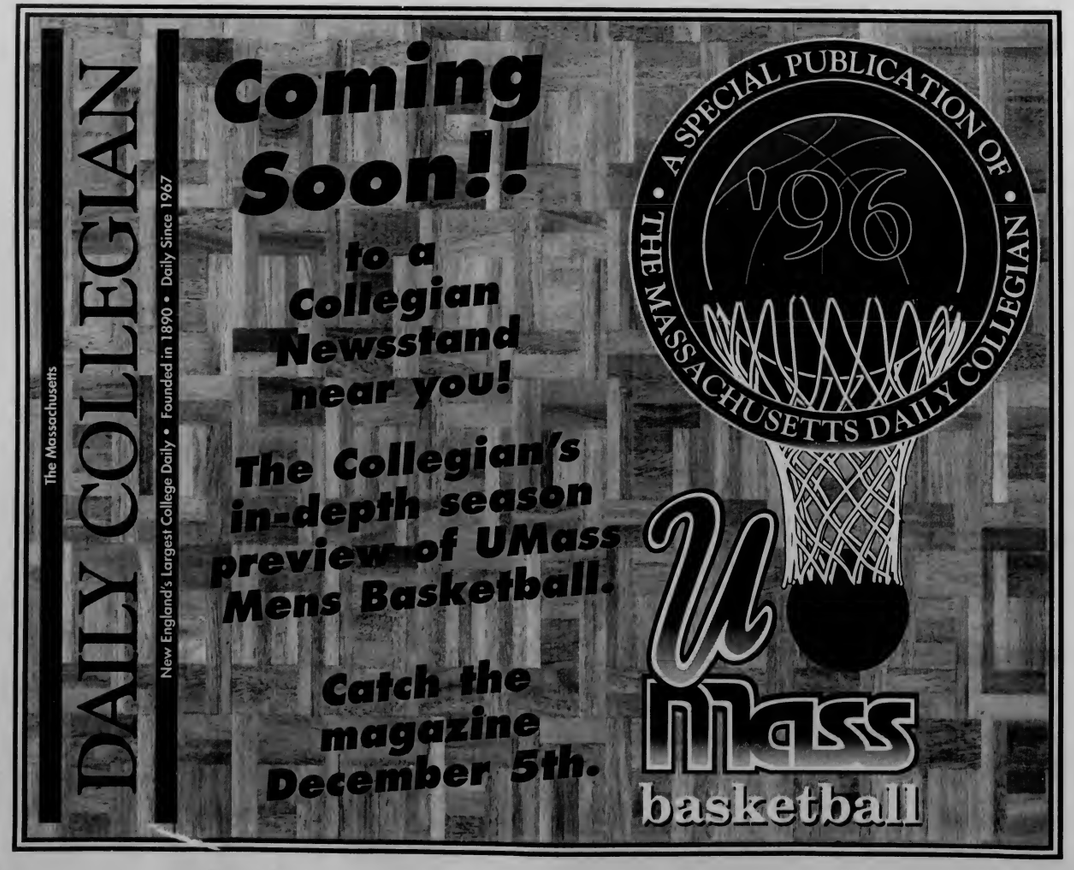
Citing some UMass faculty reactions to multicultural education in the classroom, she said that educators need to be more humble about what they don't know.

"People need to stop being afraid of being challenged," Gomez said.

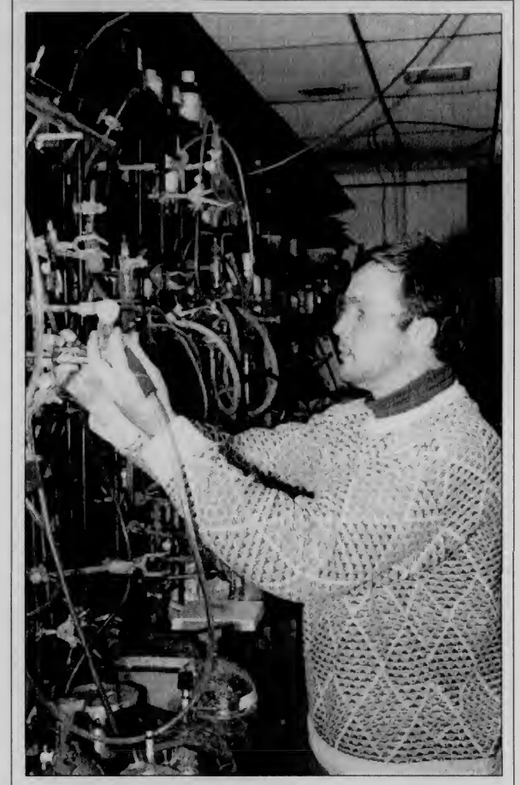
Referring to a mandate at Holyoke Public Schools for children to recite the Pledge of Allegiance, one of her poems read, "I pledge forced out of the mouth of an unknowing child. We are many nations under God. Some of us are indivisible, most of us remain invisible."

Gomez's recited another poem dedicated "to those that forgot where they came from and pretend they remember."

UMass professor, Martin Espada, introduced as an invaluable mentor to Boricuos Unidos, began his presentation by saying, "I remember when this was a radical and subversive idea, now it's a radical and subversive reality."



Willie Perdomo, self–described witness, participant, and observer, performed selected poetry from his published work intitled, "Where a Nickel Costs a Dime." Accomplished and highly acclaimed poet and playwright Amiri Baraka has described Perdomo to be "a new and important voice."



"Shaggy," another founder of Dark Soul Collective, closed the evening. A UMass undergraduate from Springfield, he was a recent winner at Claudia Cafe's Poetry Slam. He expressed joy that students from Chestnut Middle School of Springfield could attend this event.

MARISA JONES/COLLEGIAN

Magdelena Gomez, poet, playwright and educator, spoke last week at Una Noche de Poesta, part of Puerto Rican Heritage week.

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

And you think you're smart...
Matt Blais, a Ph.D. candidate in Organometallic chemistry synthesizes special catalysts in an oxygen free environment. These catalysts give plastics special properties that make them more useful.

New course offerings in Judaic Studies

By Bryan Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

Judaic Studies is offering several new classes, which cover a diverse array of subjects, for the spring semester. In addition to new three–credit classses being offered, the department will also be offering several new one credit classes to be taught at Hillel House.

One new class being offered is "Women in Jewish History" and it will be taught by Professor Ruth Abrams.

Professor Shmuel Bolozky, chairman of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, said he has requested to have general education status designated for the class. Bolozky said he is waiting for the ruling of the general education committee, which convenes to review the contents of a course and decide whether it should receive general education status.

If the course is granted a diversity requirement after students have taken the course, they will still receive the general education credit, said Bolozky.

Other new classes being offered are: "World Jewry Since 1945," "Jewish Mysticism," "Hitler's Myth of a Thousand Years' Reich" and "Readings in Jewish Literature Through the Ages."

Hillel House has teamed up with the Judaic Studies and Near East Department since 1985. The partnership has made one–credit courses available to students. The courses being offered are: "A Jewish–Christian Encounter," "Judaism and Vegetarianism," "Divisions and Conflicts in Israeli Society," "The Sabbath in Kabbalah, Community and Cyberspace" and "Torah and Haftarah Cantillation."

Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter said "the courses are pretty diverse, they will cover all kinds of different things." Perlmutter said the course on the Sabbath will involve producing "a multimedia CD–Rom on how the Sabbath is celebrated through the culture and history of the Sabbath."

The course will be taught by Jamie Elkin, a UMass graduate student and Hillel House scholar in residence.

Perlmutter said he is very exited about the "Judaism and Vegetarianism" course, which will be taught by Batya Bauman, a resident of the area. He said the first Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi of Israel was a vegetarian. Perlmutter said vegetarianism is suggested in the Bible, and is present throughout Jewish history and culture.

All courses taught at Hillel are accredited through the Judaic and Near East Studies Department. Bolozky said there are approximately 25 students who are majoring either in Judaic or Near East Studies, but because courses are not restricted to majors, there are close to 500 students taking courses through the department each semester.

■ advising

continued from page 1

many were not properly informed about their options.

The problem may begin when students enter the University, as 44 percent said, in the Collegian survey that they were not sufficiently informed about academic resources, such as advising, during their first semester.

Some undeclared freshman said they were unaware that the University Advising Center even existed — the center which serves all undeclared majors on campus.

Others simply said that they did not know where to look if they did want advising in the first place.

Most faculty members said that students, for the most part, lacked initiative in determining what the University has to offer and thus, professors were not at fault for students who feel alienated or confused.

If this is the case, students are at a disadvantage, as the Collegian survey indicates that the University is not doing its job initially, leaving many with nowhere to turn.

Surprisingly, the SARIS survey indicated that most student feel that the faculty is not the real problem.

With a faculty waiting for students to knock on their doors and an Administration which apparently has not offered incoming student what they need, where then does the responsibility rest?

According to Collegian survey, students are split on the issue. More than one third blame other students for their own "apathy," suggesting that the faculty criticisms were correct. Nearly 27 percent said that most professors were indifferent to student concerns and had "better things to do" than advise undergraduates.

The same amount said that both students and professors share the responsibility for alleged shortcomings of undergraduate advising programs.

With little consensus on the part of students and faculty on the uncertainty of undergraduate academic advising programs, the magnifying glass must turn to the administration and the programs they have implemented to address the concerns voiced by students and faculty.

Wednesday's Collegian will examine just this — focusing on how students, faculty and administration view newly and already established advising programs which serve the undergraduate community.

Note: the survey conducted by the Collegian randomly selected approximately 175 undergraduate students from the UMass community for questioning.

Michael Elliott and Raghuram Vadarevu are Collegian staff members.

Collegian Staff members Leigh Faulkner, Joseph Fountain, Daniel Levenson, Jonathan Liberty, Beth McCarthy, Laura Stock contributed to this special report.

Your Massachusetts Daily Collegian...
Available at newsstands and restroom floors near you !!

New York
Boston
Two Great Umass Campus Locations

Munchies Store
at Southwest
Hampden Dining Commons
Hours; M-F 8 am to 8:30 pm
Sat. & Sun. 12:30 pm to 7:30 pm

Peter Pan Office
Next to the Umass Travel Agency
in the Umass Campus Center
Tel. 256-0431 or 545-2006

Tickets must be purchased in advance.
Buses stop in front of Fine Arts Center at Halgus Mall.
For Complete Schedule and Fare Information Call 1-800-343-9998
Look us up on the Worldwide Web http://www.peterpan-bus.com

COMPLIMENTARY PASSES
EXCLUSIVELY FOR AMERICAN EXPRESS® CARDMEMBERS.

WHEN & WHERE.
November 20, 7:30pm
AMC Hampshire 6 Theatre

WHAT.
Cardmembers get two complimentary passes to a pre-release screening of Universal's blockbuster Daylight.

HOW.
Just bring the American Express® Card or Optima® Card and your student ID to the location listed below to pick up your passes.

NOW.
If you're not yet a Cardmember and would like to take part in our exclusive previews, it's easy to apply for the Card. Just call 1-800-942-AMEX, ext. 4114.

MORE TO COME.
Daylight is one in a series of five major motion pictures to be previewed on your campus this year, compliments of American Express.

PICK UP YOUR TICKETS HERE.
University Center
November 19 - November 20

AFI Entertainment
Cards

©1996 American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Yuldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Cusimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Iamze Simshemer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renée LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Parpas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

The fearful society

A boy lies cold and dead in a tent, shot in the back. A 10-month old baby lies helpless on a wooden floor. Her mother lies next to her — cold and dead, shot in the head.

A man trembles, curled on the floor of a desolate cabin, shot, surrounded, "terrified that agents might shoot his three daughters, even if he surrendered. I really feel we're living in lost and evil days," says a barber.

The New York Times recently interviewed "ordinary Americans' on the growing feverish fear of the people at a Greyhound Bus Terminal in Chicago.

A retired insurance agent said, "I'm afraid. America sure is changing it has gotten to the point, people typically lament, that school children cannot be allowed to roam freely. And darkness can virtually make prisoners of women."

People read the Times. The Times enables their fear.

A wise human once recognized that a sacred culture is much easier to control than a free--thinking one. In a Times article titled, "The Fate of Flight 800: Voices," a woman named Becky Bobinson is quoted as saying, "It is not even safe to leave a dog out. There are people who steal dogs and sell them."

Fear. Planes are blown up, dogs are stolen.

"The darkness can virtually make prisoners of women."

Mike Hinkley

The mean-world syndrome is a concept developed by George Gerbner, professor of communications and dean emeritus at the University of Pennsylvania's Annenburg School of Communication. The mean-world syndrome says that people, through interaction with the media, come to an unrealistic perception that the world is an extremely dangerous place.

"One of the most pervasive consequences of the mean-world syndrome, which is accompanied by insecurity, is dependence and demand for protection. It sets up a demand for punishment," says Gerbner. "Politically, it mainly means that there is pressure for repression."

The state department reports that crime has gone down over the last 10 years, and that domestic terrorism has declined "sharply" over those same 10 years. Yet, FBI director Louis Freeh, speaking about TWA Flight 800 and Oklahoma City bombings, says, "These events are not just the basis, but that predicts for more retaliation and more terrorism against the United States."

Larry Johnson, former state department counter-terrorism expert thinks that "the question that ought to be asked is what does he mean by more?"

America imprisons more individuals per capita than any country in the world. America kills more of its own citizens per capita than any democratic country in the world. In Baltimore, almost 70 percent of black males between the ages of 18–34 are either in prison, on parole, or on probation. This is not justice: this is a police state. In 1991, National Guardsmen made 2,500 searches of private property, and in 1992, 6,500.

The man on the floor of the cabin is named Randy Weaver, he once sold two shotguns to an undercover FBI agent that he had met at a convention of white separatists. A warrant was issued for his arrest. Agents surrounded his remote Idaho cabin. His son Samuel and his dog Striker were shot and killed by the agents. Samuel was shot in the back. A sniper, shooting at Weaver, shot Mrs. Weaver in the head as she cradled her baby daughter, Ellen. Days later Weaver surrendered to the agents.

Weaver holds political viewpoints different from most people; he believes in separation of the races, and he has a strong distrust for his government. The government has paid the Weaver family $3.1 million for killing Samuel and Mrs. Weaver.

Weaver has said words to the effect of "I was singled out and investigated because of my political views and because of my fear and distrust of the federal government. Everything that has happened since has only increased my fears 100 fold."

Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols will be tried for bombing the federal building in Oklahoma City.

Concerning the investigation that produced the two defendants, Ronald Woods, former U.S. Attorney and FBI agent, said that "The FBI cut every corner, broke every rule, I think this was just a big case to them, the bigger the case, the looser the rules become."

Apparently the FBI is allowed flagrant abuses of the legal process when attempting to satiate the collective thirst of a frightened populace, bombing, a piece of anti-terrorism legislation that would loosen the restrictions on FBI wire tapping powers was soundly defeated in Congress. Following the bombing, the legislation quickly passed.

Gas used on Branch Davidians in the Waco compound would have been in clear violation of the Geneva Convention Chemical Warfare Protocols of 1925 (finally ratified in 1975) if it was used in war in the same manner. According to the FBI, in 1982, there were 52 acts of terrorism in the United States. In 1994, there were none. In 1995, there were two.

Said President Clinton on "This Week with David Brinkley," "We need to move as quickly as we can to do everything we can to try and strengthen this country's hand against terrorism."

Sut Jhally, professor of communication at UMass, teaches the concept of the mean--world syndrome.

Says Professor Jhally, "I think that what's always more interesting to look at than the events themselves is the reaction to them, because the reaction tells you what's going on in society, rather than the event itself. And therefore what I think is more interesting about Oklahoma and TWA, and to some extent Waco, is the way those events are used to construct new justifications for new policies and new ways of dealing with... terrorism"

Concentration of power in the global media shrinks increasingly. The lines between media and government become harder to discern. People are ever more frightened of the world around them. Writes Peter Cassidy in The Progressive: "Civilians are now more likely to face military style law enforcement than at any time since the Civil War, after which the Comitatus Act was passed to prohibit the military from getting involved in civilian affairs."

How many more must die like the Weavers, like the children of the Branch Davidians, shot and burned and cold and dead? Such as an act is in order, now. And one must ask the New York Times — who exactly is it that makes the darkness make prisoners of women?

Mike Hinkley is a UMass student.

Oil's not well

The Texaco's Corporation recent discrimination settlement has sparked cries for an all--out boycott from civil rights leaders at the NAACP to the editorial pages at the Collegian.

As satisfying as this may sound for those who now realize Texaco's oppressive, racist legacy, selecting another company to purchase gas from is not much of a solution.

Michael Elliott

Socially conscious consumers do not have an oil company to rally around because one has never existed.

Examine the history — it's surprisingly easy to find from some very accessible sources, such as the New York Times and PBS. America's historical dependence on foreign and domestic oil highlights issues which dwarf a simple case of discrimination.

Yet, most Americans are content with this reality — or at least indifferent. Everytime someone turns the key, they accept this reality no matter how repulsive it may seem to them.

In 1990, the United States went to war against Iraq to preserve the relatively inexpensive price of oil. A hostile regime in control of both Kuwaiti and Saudi oil reserves would have meant less leverage for American companies. Never mind the nonsense about defending democracy and the new world order — the U.S. backed military campaign killed several hundred Americans and several hundred- thousand Iraqis for nothing more than cheap gas.

Shell Oil, a Dutch firm who does a healthy business in the American market, has evoked an international backlash for their support of a military dictatorship in Nigeria which has repeatedly trampled on small village populations who opposed oil related industrial activity in their homelands. Accounts include government troops massacring civilians with the tacit approval of west African Shell representatives; all for a $1.30 a gallon.

So, the answer to avoid Texaco and Shell oil, right? Don't forget Exxon and their botched clean up of the Alaska disaster. It is a lose--lose situation for the consumer.

But does anyone really care?

For some, public transportation is their answer. Just don't drive, they say. Tax dollars, however, tend to be spent elsewhere, making it unlikely that the entire country will somehow embark on a major initiative to link cities, boroughs and neighborhoods with a form of convenient, affordable public transit. A better argument is, quite simply, people like to drive.

A solution, at this moment, is not apparent. The long--term goal is obviously a movement to reduce American fossil--fuel dependence.

In the meanwhile, it will be interesting to examine how Texaco will attempt to bury its record behind the million dollar settlement. A boycott may let them know that people are watching, at least until the next company is exposed in some fiasco. In the end, it won't last.

All is not lost, fortunately. An effective industry--wide campaign could be mounted, concentrating on each company collectively.

Consumers can not expect oil companies to be anything but greedy. They can, however, demand that these companies end their discriminatory practices, refuse to do business with dictators and discourage the U.S. military from bombing civilians and overthrowing foreign governments.

Read the facts, they're out there.

Michael Elliott is a Collegian columnist.

Editorial Policy

The Editorial/Opinion page welcomes columns, letters and cartoons from UMass and the rest of the Five–College Area.

Letters and columns must be typed and double spaced, with the writer's name, local address and phone number attached. This information is subject to verification prior to publication.

Anonymous submissions will not be printed.

The editorial staff reserves the right to edit letters and columns for grammar, clarity and length.

Any submission that is requested to be left unedited will not be considered for publication.

Submissions become the property of the Collegian and will not be returned.

The Editorial staff is not required to print all submitted material.

Letters should be no longer than 450 words and columns should be about 70 typed lines.

Submissions should be sent to the Editorial Desk, c/o Mark McGrath, 113 Campus Center, UMass Amherst, MA, 01003.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Attention Great Candy Thief

This column is dedicated to the genius who figured it a good idea to bash in the glass panels on the candy machines in Bartlett Hall recently.

I was hungry that afternoon. I was tired; the end of the day was near. I was in the middle of a long class, and needed some sort of pick–me–up. It was during my five–minute break that I figured I'd go get a Butterfinger bar or a pack of Twinkies, something to hold me off till dinner and to jump start my body for the remainder of class.

How could I know, as I made my way around the corner that there would be a surprise waiting for me, that there would be no snacks in the snack machine? How frustrated did you make me that day when you decided that you could do campus a service by mutilating the poor snack machine, and stealing all its goodies?

Mark McGrath

There must have been a good reason. Let me guess, you were sick and tired of the oppressive practices retained by those evil candy companies? To think, blue M&Ms. Maybe you heard that nearly 40 percent of the deaths that occur in the United States are due in some way to heart disease. You felt that by keeping chocolate out of the population's hands, you could save a few lives.

Perhaps you weren't that well intentioned. Perhaps you were hungry. Perhaps you couldn't scrape up another dime. Perhaps that evil vending machine stole your quarter. Whatever the reason was, I'm sure you were justified in your action. I know that I've become pretty frustrated with those machines too.

Maybe you're just stupid.

To think, all that trouble for a couple of candy bars. I mean you really took a chance to get them. If someone had seen you, you could have been arrested... For a pack of Pom–Poms.

Maybe someone did see. Were you doing it to impress a chick? Guy? Were you surrounded by a bunch of your weasely little associates as you kicked those poor machines in? Did they think it was funny? Did they all move in on your conquest as if it were a broken piñata? I'll bet they loved you.

You are the man.

I could hear it echoing in the emptiness of that candy machine. You are the man.

Since that day, I've seen bunches of other machines busted in, just like the ones in Bartlett. Is that you again, my friend? Or do you have a fan club? The candy machine in my residence hall has since met a similar fate. Could you live in my very building? The thought sends a chill down my spine. To think, I live with a louse. Too bad I haven't gotten a chance to meet you. I would surely give you a piece of my mind. I'll bet you're laughing right now, enjoying your minute of fame, or ought I say infamy. I have news for you. It's over. You can now go back to being the lowest form of life on this campus (even lower than the stuff they slop on your plate at the D.C.). Oh yeah... one more thing... after pulling a stunt like that. I'd be willing to bet that you have more cavities than friends.

But I know you do have some friends. You know, the ones who rip pages out of the books in the library. Every time I go to that place, I end up chasing down a book which invariably has the vital pages torn from it. You know, a Xerox machine isn't as expensive as you may think. What is it? A dime a copy. If you're poor, I'll treat for copies, but for the sake of thousands of other students, don't be so selfish as to steal knowledge. The fact that you act the way you do clearly shows that you do not have the mental capacity to be able to digest such knowledge anyway.

I'll bet you're also one of those "cool" guys who enjoys flying things out of windows, regardless of who or what may be positioned underneath. You know, I never was able to figure out the logic behind that practice. Oh yeah... silly me. I forgot. It's so ridiculously fun. You get drunk, and dropping jars of tomato sauce out the window from 20 floors gives you your jollies. I'm sorry. You're the cool ones. I'm not like you, and therefore could never understand.

There are a lot of things I can't possibly understand about the way students act toward this campus. I was under the impression that we came to UMass because we cared enough to learn, not so much to wreak havoc on the place. I figured that students at this university were concerned with their surroundings.

We are lucky to attend a first–class university, and the University deserves to be treated that way. Through juvenile conduct, UMass' reputation has flip–flopped over the years between "The Zoo" or "ZooMass" to the township "Hooterville."

I don't know about anyone else on this campus, but I love this place and will defend its merits until I am blue in the face; but the conduct of students like the Great Candy Thief, the Page Tearer and the Couch Dropper makes such a job imperceivably difficult.

There is a difference between the so–called elite colleges and universities and schools like UMass, but it has little to do with the actual education. It has more to do with how its students choose to approach their education. With such contemptible displays of conduct from its students, UMass may be showing that it is not ready to be part of the upper echelon. Perhaps you think we are no better than the residents of "Hooterville."

If that's how you feel, you might as well jump now, because the good ship UMass is about to take off, and the rest of us will be well served to get rid of some dead weight.

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Doctress Neutopia Exposed

To the editor:

As much as it is a duty of student leaders to speak out when the administration acts egregiously, it is also the duty of student leaders to speak out when the administration is wrongly criticized.

In her column, (Nov. 1, Elizabeth Hubbard, a.k.a. Doctress Neutopia), stated that her computer account was shut down because she violated copyright law, and implied that the true reason was that OIT administrators disagreed with her often controversial political views.

Simply stated, this is not true.

Doctress Neutopia was not a UMass student, she had graduated several years before alt.society.neutopia even existed. Like all persons not associated with the University, she was not entitled to an OIT account and she did not have one. Instead, a faculty member obtained the account and then permitted Neutopia to use it.

Using this account, she violated numerous University policies. She slandered the character of her ex–boyfriends and arguably violated anti–stalking laws in her pursuit of a UMass student. She also spent most of the summer of 1995 attacking OIT administrators, often in crude manners.

During this rather long summer of provocation, the administrators of OIT extended to her every possible benefit of the doubt and bent over backwards to ensure her continued freedom of expression. They are civil libertarians and deserve to be credited for their defense of free speech.

While we and the students we represent may disagree with OIT, we can not ignore an unfounded attack upon OIT and particularly upon OIT administrators who acted quite nobly under rather trying circumstance. Doctress Neutopia is free to say anything she pleases; as the ACLU reminds us, the solution to bad speech is more speech — good speech.

We merely wish to present the other of the story.

Ed Cuttine
Grad. rep Fac. Sen. Comm. on Computers and Electronic Communications
Ben Delong
Undergrad. rep Fac. Sen. Comm. on Computers and Electronic Communications

Blatant propaganda

To the editor:

I am really very surprised at the blatant propaganda that the Collegian sees fit to print under the guise of the "Developing Nations" epithet. Try as I might, I cannot understand what exactly the focus of your page is, or how it relates to "Developing Nations."

From the caption to the stories there exists a level of racist propaganda I thought would be unthinkable in an American newspaper. All indications are that the Developing Nations page consistently contains a dedicated attack against Israel and Jewish people in general, rather than having anything newsworthy or any comment of real quality. It is in all actuality a sad and pathetic attempt to hide hatred and racism in an area of real interest. The conviction that the page is just an excuse for poorly written attacks on both Israel and Jewish people in general is strengthened when both "articles" are simply reactions to the same CAMERA criticism and recount the same Patria incident. The duplication of the same anti–Israeli sentiment through the use of a single event tells of questionable editing and reduces the validity of the Developing Nations "section" even more. The stories both leave whatever validity they once had behind, and leap into the worst kind of yellow journalism — propaganda. Why does the Developing Nations page never cover countries other than Arab ones "cruelly under the thumb of a tyrannical Israel?"

I urge the Collegian to use the Developing Nations section to its full potential and cover stories and items of interest that concern all developing nations, and not allow it to be abused by those few who use it for their own intolerant purposes. Until that happens, the credibility of the Collegian as a bastion of public thought and a hate–free publication remains very much in question.

Jamison D. Roof Grayson

Multicultural Affairs

Tuesday, November 19, 1996

American justice: CIA style

By Lisa Chiu
Collegian Staff

News Analysis

Everyone's talking about it, and everyone has an opinion on it. One of the most provocative news stories in years was broken this August when Gary Webb of the San Jose Mercury released his controversial three part series entitled, "Dark Alliance" which argued that "America's 'crack' plague had roots in the Nicaragua war."

The report confirmed what had been suspected and discussed discreetly for years — that the United States government, using the CIA, had been a party to cocaine smuggling during the Reagan era.

The scandal gained notoriety at a steady pace, enraging many African Americans, and forcing national media outlets and members of Congress to take note and action.

Recently, prominent newspapers such as The Washington Post and The Los Angeles Times, have released their own evaluations of the allegations contained in Webb's story, mostly trying to play down the shocking revelations.

The events which have occurred since "Dark Alliance," appeared sheds light not only on "mass hysteria" or "crazed conspiracy" as The Post and The LA Times would have you believe, but on the greater issues of how America, this supposedly democratic bastion, deals with the Third World as well as its own people of color in black America. These are issues that The Post and The LA Times would have you ignore, along with questions about the role and nature of the CIA itself.

Webb's three part series begins, "It is one of the most bizarre alliances in modern history: The union of a U.S. backed army attempting to overthrow a revolutionary socialist government and the Nazi–toting 'gangstas' of Compton and South Central L.A."

His story is thrilling, running like a movie, with a plot of corruption, drugs, gangs and a whole slew of characters — only they are real. The allegation that the CIA knowingly aided the largest anti–communist group in Nicaragua, the Fuerza Democratica Nicaraguense [Nicaraguan Democratic Force] (FDN), commonly known as the Contras, through the selling of crack cocaine to the inner–cities of black America is enough to incite anyone to riot.

In 1981, the CIA helped to create a 5,000 man army in Nicaragua by combining existing anti–communist groups, and members of the deposed dictatorship hoping for the overthrow of the popular socialist Sandinista government who advocated for the withdrawal of multinational corporate involvement in Nicaragua. The Sandinistas came into power after ousting U.S. backed right wing dictator Anastasio Somoza. From [illegible] the FDN, run by the United [illegible] guerilla warfare, fought [illegible] Sandinistas until a ceasefire in [illegible].

This part of the [illegible] even if most Am[illegible] about it. What [illegible] showing a whole history of governmental involvement [illegible] ties, is to make the American p[illegible] finally see how these individual [illegible] acters were acting in only one s[illegible] of a much larger drama.

The cast

Oscar Danilo Blandon Reyes — Nicaraguan cocaine distributer and founder of the FDN in California. He began working for the FDN in 1981 and said that he supposedly sold a ton of cocaine that year — the equivalent of $54 million, of which a part was sent to fund the Contras. Later acting as an informant for the DEA, he was released from jail after serving only 28 months. He also received $166,000 from the government for his work as an informant.

Juan Norvin Meneses Cantarero — Nicaraguan distributer and partner of Blandon. Currently serving time in Nicaragua on drug charges. At a fundraising dinner by Adolfo Calero, the leader of the Contras in June 1984, he picked up the dinner check.

Ricky Donnell Ross — African American middleman crack dealer. He turned cocaine powder obtained by Blandon into crack and sold it wholesale to gangs in Los Angeles and other parts of the United States.

Enrique Bermudez — FDN commander and CIA agent, supposedly told Blandon when he visited him in Honduras, the FDN base for its troops, that "the end justifies the means," in the fight to overthrow the Sandinista government.

The story begins when Blandon fled Nicaragua in 1979, and joined with other Nicaraguans in exile to overthrow the Sandinista government. He agreed to raise money in Los Angeles for the fight against the socialist Sandinista government.

In 1982, Meneses and Blandon decided to work together to raise money for the Contras by selling cocaine.

According to Webb, federal agents knew of Meneses's drug involvement since 1974, though he never spent a day in prison. Webb claims that the CIA did not want him to be convicted.

According to The LA Times, in 1982 Blandon and Meneses traveled to Honduras to meet with Bermudez, commander of the FDN. Meneses denies being a party to this visit. According to Blandon, they were told that the Contra revolution was so important, and Bermudez encouraged them to raise money in any way possible, saying, "the end justifies the means."

Webb reports that Blandon testified in a cocaine trafficking trial in San Diego, saying that it was after the meeting with Bermudez that he began selling drugs to raise money for the Contra revolution.

In 1983, Blandon began working with Ross, an African American middleman dealer who had strong connections to the Crips and the Bloods, African American gangs in Los Angeles.

When the Reagan administration agreed to fund the Contras with $195 million between 1981–1988, Blandon and Meneses saw no more reason to continue their contributions to the Contras. The LA Times claims that Blandon stopped sending money to the Contras in 1982 or 1983.

Blandon was arrested by FBI agents and convicted of drug charges in 1992. He turned informant and successfully aided the DEA in convicting Ross by a sting operation in 1995.

Ross is now awaiting trial in California. His lawyer is arguing that he is not guilty and cites the Mercury's article that the CIA involvement as evidence of this.

What is in dispute?

What is at the heart of the controversy is not the guilt or innocence of Blandon, Meneses or Ross. One can even argue that it is not whether the CIA knew that Contra members on its payroll sold drugs to fund the anti–communist movement — although this is a major issue.

What is at the heart of it all is the response that this story has had in the African American community and in the United States. The Mercury News story was ignored by the press for weeks, while much of the African American community [illegible]

Congressman Maxine Waters, who represents South Central Los Angeles, along with Jesse Jackson Jr. and members of the Black Congressional Caucus demanded that the CIA and the Justice Department conduct investigations on this matter. Radio talk shows across the country held discussions on the issue. Activist Dick Gregory led a protest march in Washington. Hundreds of thousands of people a day visited The Mercury News' website to read and download Webb's story. Suddenly Washington got scared, because black folks were mad.

Enter the [illegible] enter the critics, enter the bomb squad to diffuse the anger invoked in America's black communities. Week after Webb's story debuted, The Post followed closely by the LA Times [illegible] of the "official jou[illegible] even [illegible] The Mercury News [illegible] story went [illegible]

• Opposition [illegible] tic integrity of [illegible] directly involved [illegible] with Ross's lawyer [illegible] Post stated that Webb met with Fenster where he supplied him with information about Blandon, drugs and the CIA, as well as giving Fenster suggestions as to what to ask Blandon on the stand. Fenster later used this information to support his assertion that Ross's current drug conviction should be dismissed because an undercover informant tied to the Contras was part of a CIA–approved plan to raise drug money to fund the Contras.

According to the Oct. 16 issue of Alexander Cockburn's Counterpunch newsletter, Webb says that he thought giving Fenster questions to ask Blandon was the only way of getting statements on the record from Blandon.

In addition, Counterpunch also asserts that one of the two authors of The Post's article, Walter Pincus was closely involved with the CIA in 1968. Counterpunch says Pincus wrote an expose about himself in The Post, describing trips he had made to Vienna, Accra and New Delhi acting as an observer at conferences for the CIA.

"It was clearly an apprenticeship, in which, as he well knew, Pincus was being assessed as officer material. He evidently made a good impression: the CIA asked him to work further. Pincus says he declined. The Mercury News would certainly be entitled to scoff at the attack on their work written in part by a former CIA asset," said the Counterpunch article.

When asked at a community meeting in South–Central Los Angeles this past weekend, if Pincus was an asset of the CIA, CIA Director John Deutch said no, although he had heard of him before.

• The national media disputes the actual amounts which Blandon sent back to Nicaragua. The LA Times argues that the Blandon sent back less than $50,000, while The Mercury News says that Blandon stated in court that all of the profits of what they sold was going to the Contras. The dollar equivalent of a ton of cocaine (what they sold in 1981) would be $54 million.

•They question the dates In which Blandon met with Ross, saying that Blandon worked with him after he had already agreed to stop funding the Contras. The LA Times says that Blandon stopped funding the Contras in either 1982 or 1983. Even The LA Times says that this date is significant because it was in late 1983 when Blandon began to sell cocaine to Ross.

•They dismissed the actual effect Ross' activities may have had on the African American community. The Post says that although Nicaraguans took part in the drug trade during the '80s, most of the cocaine trade can be attributed to Colombian and Mexican smugglers, as well as Jamaicans, Dominicans, Haitians and other groups.

Even the CIA can't avoid the truth

The one thing these newspapers did not try to deny was that the United States government did have some role in this drug scandal. Sure, they tried to play down the furor over it, and diffuse the scandal by implying that Webb had no journalistic integrity; that a lot of money was sent back to Nicaragua — but not that much; that "perhaps when Blandon worked with Ross the CIA involvement had already stopped;" and even that "even if Ross did sell to gang members [illegible]

But, they didn't and couldn't dispute the assertion that there was [illegible] government involvement because it was true. The Post and [illegible] articles would have generated so much attention if the allegations did not fall "on fertile ground."

The LA Times said that the Contras have been associated with intrigue since the Iran–Contra Affair came to light in 1986, when the Reagan administration secretly sold high–tech missiles to Iran to try to free hostages in Beirut, and then illegally used the proceeds to aid the Nicaraguan Contras.

The Post article also said, "And since the earliest days of the Cold War, the CIA has faced accusations that it tolerated drug trafficking by groups it supported, because it considered communism a greater evil."

In fact a two year Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee investigation, chaired by Sen. John F. Kerry (D–Mass.) concluded in a 437 page report released in 1989, that the havoc created by the civil war in Nicaragua was "exploited easily by [illegible] involved in drug trafficking."

The Post also goes on to say [illegible] in some cases the committee found that drug smugglers were [illegible] actual Contras accepted weapons [illegible] money and equipment from drug smugglers."

The subcommittee report as well [illegible] that these are serious quotes on the [illegible] in Central America failed to address the drug issue for "fear of jeopardizing the war effort against Nicaragua."

When The Post asked Sen. Kerry how the committee's report in 1989 squares with the recent discovery, Kerry replied, "There is no question in my mind that people affiliated with, on the payroll of, and carrying the credentials of the CIA were involved in drug trafficking while involved in support of the Contras..."

The LA Times story had to admit governmental involvement. According to its three part story, "The special prosecutors who investigated the Iran–Contra scandal, for example, found excerpts in the diaries of then–Lt. Col. Oliver L. North indicating that from 1984–1986, when North ran a secret operation to maintain the Contras, he received several reports of allegations that drug traffickers were attempting to use the Contra airlift operation to ship cocaine. Officials with the DEA said North never took the information to them..."

The LA Times also quotes from the subcommittee report as well which said that the Reagan administration "delayed, halted or interfered" with anti–drug investigations when they conflicted with its determination to help the Contras."

In both quasi–official articles, the issue of governmental involvement in drug trafficking on a huge scale is buried between text which picks at the tiny details and minutia of the Blandon–Meneses–Ross case. The larger picture is thereby ignored, and the mainstream press organs can thus claim to have discredited The Mercury News account while in fact confirming all the basic points.

The CIA role in the crack epidemic wasn't designed principly to obliterate black men. Rather, our government carefully planned an attack to obliterate the Sandinista government and innocent civilians. But, they were more than ready to sacrifice the health, lives and communities of the inner city residents, especially African Americans, to achieve this end.

What this story exposes is the inherent contradictions of America's government — that at the same time the War on Drugs, or war on young black men was being ruthlessly waged, the authorities were a party to drug dealing on the largest scale. At the same time it expresses sentiments of democracy, this nation was training death squads in Nicaragua to kill and destroy.

This contradiction is symptomatic of structural problems in both American foreign and domestic policy. For, after the dust settles on the crack controversy in the United States, the system which created it will still exist and is ever more ready to repeat the methods it believes works so well — subversion, violence and concealment.

One also cannot neglect the long and sordid history the CIA has had with illegal drugs. According to Counterpunch, ever since the early days of the creation of the CIA, there has been an "understandable alliance" with drug smugglers in Sicily, Southeast Asia and Afghanistan.

"The CIA needs local criminals for its purposes. Criminal associations market drugs. Drug money is hard to trace. All of these are vital building blocks for an outfit like the CIA. The story has been vividly and meticulously documented in such work as Alfred McCoy's Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia. No vague hypothesis or nebulous conspiracy–mongering mad McCoy's work. He got names, dates and places and said the government was behind it."

Last Saturday when Deutch went to South–Central Los Angeles to a Watts high school to address the angry community meeting. He attempted to quell the anger, but did not succeed. The troubled audience's expected answers and recording of Saturday's LA Times, they left even more upset than when they came.

Deutch promised that he would continue to investigate the allegations, but so far has found no evidence of the conspiracy theory.

One audience member asked Deutch, according to an editorial by Maureen Dowd of The New York Times, if [illegible] Nicaraguan Juanita Millender–McDonald who invited Deutch to L.A. stated that given the CIA's "wicked" record, the rule of justice should be reve[illegible]

"It is not up to us to prove the CIA was involved in drug trafficking in South Central Los Angeles," said Deutch. "The burden, it is up to them to prove they were not."

Dowd also asserts that it is [illegible] the right to be skeptical, it [illegible] sees examples from the [illegible] in the '30s where 652 [illegible] suffered from syphilis [illegible] in the name of science, the [illegible] of the Black [illegible] the [illegible] droppings of [illegible]

[illegible] are criminals or [illegible] unlikely that the CIA plot was motivated [illegible] desire to bring crack cocaine into America's poorest black neighborhoods in order to kill a certain racial group. But, it has been shown in Senate hearings and otherwise proven, that the U.S. government did know about the sale of drugs to Americans by Contras, and that members of the Contras on CIA payrolls (CIA employees, therefore) were sending drugs inside the United States for the purpose of funding their right wing revolution.

The truth is unavoidable, and the United States must accept the fact that they were involved in the deaths of hundreds of thousands of inner city black Americans. Yet another reason, among many circulating these days, to abolish the CIA. Come on Deutch, we all know the truth.

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS
CIA Director John M. Deutch

> "There was no evidence of a conspiracy by the CIA to encourage drug trafficking from Latin America during this or any other period.
>
> — CIA Director, John M. Deutch, before a crowd of 800 angry community members in South–Central Los Angeles

Basic facts on the war on drugs

Editor's note: The following is an excerpt from the Schaffer Drug Library (http://calyx.com/~schaffer/GOVPUBS/guo/gaomenu.html) by Clifford A Schaffer.

•The first American anti–drug law was an 1875 San Francisco ordinance which outlawed the smoking of opium in opium dens. It was passed because of the fear that Chinese men were luring white women to their opium dens.

It was defined as associating with Chinese men. It was followed by other similar laws, including federal laws in which trafficking in opium was forbidden to anyone of Chinese origin, and restrictions on the importation of smoking opium.

The laws did not have anything really to do with the importation of opium as a drug, because the importation and use of opium in other forms, such as in the common medication laudunum, were not affected.

The laws were directed at smoking opium because it was perceived that smoking opium was a peculiarly Chinese custom. In short, it was a way of legally targeting the Chinese.

Cocaine was outlawed because of fears that "Superhuman Negro Cocaine Fiends" or "Cocainized Niggers" (actual terms used by newspapers in the early 1900's) take large amounts of cocaine which would make them go on a violent sexual rampage and rape white women.

There is little evidence that any black men actually did this, if only because it would have been certain death. The United States set a record in 1905 with 105 recorded lynchings of black men. At the same time, police nationwide switched from .32 caliber pistols to .38 caliber pistols because it was believed that the superhuman Negro Cocaine Fiend could not be killed with the smaller gun...

Marijuana was outlawed in 1937 as a repressive measure against Mexican workers who crossed the border seeking jobs during the Depression. The specific reason given for the outlawing of the hemp plant was its supposed violent effect on the degenerate races. (Testimony of Bureau of Narcotics Commissioner Harry J. Anslinger, in testimony before Congress on hearings on the Marijuana Tax Act of 1937)...

Newspapers across the country carried lurid stories of the awful things that these drugs did to racial minorities, and of the horrors that people of racial minorities inflicted on innocent white people while they were under the influence of these drugs. Later research has shown that not a single one of the stories used to promote these laws could be substantiated.

There never was any scholarly evidence that the laws were necessary, or even beneficial, to public health and safety and none was presented when the laws were passed...

•At the present time, one–fourth of all of the young black men in America are either in prison or on parole. Most of them were arrested on non–violent drug charges.

In Washington, DC, the Bush administration's "demonstration" city, half of all of the black men in the city are currently in jail or on parole. More than 90 percent have an arrest records. The same is true of inner city black men in Baltimore, New York, New Jersey and Florida.

Two–thirds of all of today's black male high school students will be dead, disabled, or in prison before their thirtieth birthday. The majority will go to prison because of non–violent drug charges. For every black man who goes to college, three will go to prison.

By the year 2000, about half of all black men in America will have gone to prison. Most of them will go to prison for non–violent drug charges. Most of those who go to prison will be released into society again. Because they are black men with a prison record, they will be permanently unemployable.

Your government and drugs...

To state media sensationalism to the contrary, blacks are less involved in [illegible] than whites. Statistics from the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) [illegible] the racial breakdown of drug use. Seventy–five percent of those reporting cocaine use in 1991 were white, 14 percent were black and [illegible] of those reporting crack use in the same year were black and 10 percent were Latino."

[illegible], The Final Call 11/5/96

"A careful review of the history of [illegible] operations in the Caribbean and South and Central American shows a 40–year connection between crime and covert operations that has been repeatedly blown back on the United States." Jim Blum, [former special counsel to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee] testified. "Other operations in Asia and Europe have had similar consequences... the worst in the narcotics area."

In shocking testimony, Mr. Blum described how U.S. covert operations helped criminals and drug dealers in Afghanistan, Cuba, Vietnam, France, China, Haiti, Bolivia, Argentina and Panama. "We are sill living with the resulting heroin problem," spawned by U.S. intelligence connections with Asian dealers after World War II, Mr. Blum said."

— Tyrone Muhammad The Final Call 11/5/96

"Although at the level of US foreign policy, anti– communism is pursued for its own sake , a 'moral imperative'. ... At another level it is inextricably bound up with a far older section of methods and aims, that lust for power: the acquisition, maintenance, use and enjoyment of influence and prestige.

In this scheme of things, 'communism' is no more than the name ascribed to those people who stand in the way of the realization of such ambitions (as 'national security' is the name given for the reason for fighting 'communists')... 'fascism' is as much used as 'Marxist') has been so overused and so abused by American politicians and the media as to render it virtually meaningless. (The [illegible] are the same to the word 'fascist'.) But merely having a name for something — witches or flying saucers — establishes a certain credence to it.

At the same time, the American public, as we have seen, has been soundly conditioned to react Pavlovianly to the term: ...it means 'us' against 'them.'

And 'them' can mean a peasant in The Philippines, a mural–painter in Nicaragua, a legally–elected prime minister in British Guiana or a European intellectual, a Cambodian neutralist, an African nationalist — all, somehow, part of the same monolithic conspiracy; each, in some way, a threat to the American way of life; no land too small, too poor, or too far away to pose such a threat, the "communist threat."

— William Blum, The CIA, A Forgotten History, 1986

> Blandon and Meneses were dope dealers and were known by all [U.S.] law enforcement, and had an operation big enough that they had to have 14 locations. It's enough to say 'Mr. CIA you stand accused, you have stood accused before. You were the sponsors of the Contras,
>
> — Rep. Maxine Waters -Calif)
> The Final Call 11/5/96

> Thank you, Mr. CIA Official, for being here, but I'd just like to ask you, how you can trust the CIA to investigate itself?

Arts & Living

Space Jam: a little blast of fun

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

SPACE JAM
Directed by Ivan Reitman with Michael Jordan, Bugs Bunny, Bill Murray
Playing at Mt. Farms Theater

Finding a movie these days that can truly entertain an audience of any age is not an easy task.

Although the emphasis political leaders has recently placed on traditional family values has somewhat forced Hollywood to create more suitable subject matter, for the most part there are never really more than a handful of films every year that parents can really feel comfortable taking their children to. Not only is Space Jam one of these films, but any college aged student can equally find the excitement that this movie offers.

Space Jam may not contain all the substance of Who Framed Roger Rabbit? but it still has a tremendous amount to offer. First of all, the film's tempo never slows down for even a second, making this one of the most originally thrilling movies of the year. Even the hokier parts with Michael Jordan as a young boy telling his father how he wants to be like him one day, is still both endearing and amusing. The film successfully combines this heartfelt entertainment with the excitement of NBA basketball, and throws both aspects into the zany world of the Looney Tunes.

When a greedy outer space theme park promoter wants new attractions, he sends his exploited little workers to capture Bugs Bunny and friends. Using his sharp wit, Bugs is able to convince his abductors that the Tunes deserve a chance to defend themselves. The Looney Tunes challenge the space freaks to a good old game of basketball, but little do they know that their unwelcomed guests have the power to suck the talent out of professional sports stars. In a state of panic Bugs decides to enlist the help of recently retired Jordan to help the Tunes defend themselves.

Jordan is far more entertaining on the court than behind the camera, but his performance although dry is still necessary. He represents the ideal role model that can adhere to both children and adults the same. Bill Murray provides strong support and resembles the needed human comic relief. The real stars are the Looney Tunes who, not surprisingly, work terrific opposite human actors. Mel Blanc's voice characterizations are inevitably missed. During his long career he established the vibrant personalities of some of the most famous cartoon characters including the Looney Tunes.

Space Jam blends the worlds of real life and cartoons in a joyful and simple way. There are numerous cameos from both basketball and Hollywood stars including a great voice talent by Danny DeVito as the sinister theme park owner. The films overall humor is quite diverse ranging from laugh-able cartoon gags to some hilarious movie spoofs. All in all no one should be left unsatisfied by one of the more fun movies to grace the screen in quite some time. A-

The Femmes prove their love to Smith

By Jacob W. Michaels
Collegian Staff

VIOLENT FEMMES
John M. Greene Hall
Nov. 17

NORTHAMPTON — The last time the Violent Femmes were in the Valley, two years ago, they closed out the 1995 Spring Concert with a disappointing set.

Their performance Sunday night at Smith College should erase any lingering memories of that dreary performance.

Seemingly much more comfortable in the smaller confines of John M. Greene Hall than they were at the open–air Spring Concert, the band thrilled the crowd by mixing their most popular songs in with their lesser known ones.

Their second and third songs — "Out the Window" and "Prove My Love" — off Why Do Birds Sing? and their self–titled album respectively, set the tone for the evening, as the band played to the crowd, who happily sang along.

The Femmes, up to that point, had been playing with just a plain black background, and using simple white lights for effect. On the next song, however, they let the lights go down, with just a single red spotlight on lead singer Gordon Gano. Suddenly, the lights flashed back on, and behind them a banner reading "Violent Femmes, American Music since 1981," was revealed.

The Milwaukee natives then sang a short ditty "for a fel-

Turn to FEMMES, page 7

India offers exciting additions to world beat scene

India is home to a lush variety of music. Grown from thousands of years of continuous development, Indian classical music has diversified into a large number of regional and formal styles. India also has the largest film industry in the world. Most of India's popular music is taken from film soundtracks; instead of bands being the stars, it is composers or actors (who sing the songs) who become the objects of popular fame.

The complexity and variety of India's music makes it difficult for non–Indians to learn about. Add to this that the U.S. is relatively isolated from the media of other countries, and you get a situation where "Indian music" calls Ravi Shankar to mind most readily for Americans. However, with the growing popularity of "world music," Indian music has become a bit more accessible in this country. RealWorld, the record label run by Peter Gabriel as a division of Caroline Records, has brought out a number of Indian albums. Unfortunately, RealWorld releases are usually marked by a particular production and musical style whose aim is to blend traditional styles, often from several regions, into a slick product. The results are often a little too close to Gabriel's own music.

Modern Indian pop and eclectic music are available on several other labels. Batish presents the truly unique Sitar Power of Aswan Batish, overtly mixing American styles such as bluegrass with Indian musical structures. Batish's songs are kitschy, goofy and loads of fun. Luaka Bop, another superstar–owned (David Byrne) label, has put out Dance, Raja, Dance, an excellent collection of film music featuring the songs of Vijaya Anand. It's difficult to know what to expect from Anand's brilliant songs, which delight with their wild flips between various musical references and instrumentation. This past summer, Shanachie released Forbidden Kiss, and album featuring the film songs of S.D. Burman, performed by vocalist Najma Akhtar with backing by acoustic instrumentalists.

As for classical Indian music, a small "labor of love" label in New York City, India Archive Music, has for years been putting out CD's by numerous well–respected and accomplished performers. They have just released an astonishing 10 new albums, and there's a lot to like about these CD's. Not only are the performances well–recorded sessions with master musicians, the packaging and liner notes are simple, dignified and packed with detailed information. The only problem with the liner notes is that they are perhaps a little difficult for the newcomer to follow.

The best of these releases are by vocalist Prabhakar Karekar and sarangi player Ustad Sultan Khan. Karekar sings khayal, a form whose roots go back to Muslim devotional songs called qawali. Accompanied by Subhash Kamat on tabla, also a great vocalist himself, Karekar moves beautifully through intricate explorations and improvisations within the structures of Ragas Bilaskhani Todi and Chandrakauns.

Ustad Sultan Khan comes, as with most of the performers on these CD's, from a long family tradition of skilled musicians. His instrument, the sarangi, is a bowed instrument with three main strings, renowned for its closeness in sound to that of the human voice. Sultan Khan is accompanied by Anuradha Pal, one of the women who has taken advantage of a loosening in the unspoken traditions against female percussionists and learned the tabla. Together they move through complex and sometimes blindingly quick passages with great precision. "Raga Marwa" has a meditative, serene mood, excellently evoked on this recording.

Another CD deserving note is Mandolin Dreams, a Snehasish Mozumder album on the new Latitudes label. Mozumder plays two ragas, and a piece with folk influences as well, to the accompaniment of Subhem Chatterjee on tabla. Although a pleasure to listen to, the CD has unfortunately sparse liner notes.

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian Staff columnist.

DiFranco brings folk-punk to Noho

By Amy Risley and Jamie Sinsheimer
Collegian Staff

Tonight at John M. Greene Hall on the Smith College campus, singer–songwriter Ani DiFranco will be performing. DiFranco, best known for her raucous vocals and feverish ballads will be performing in front of a sold out audience — a symbol of the dedicated following she has accumulated over the past eight years.

Originally from Buffalo, NY, DiFranco started playing the guitar at a young age. She started teaching herself different songs by the Beatles, and began performing on the stages of small coffee houses by the age of 11. Surrounded by influential folk legends such as Suzanne Vega and Michelle Shocked, her elders soon noticed that DiFranco had a rare, vicious talent.

Leaving home at the age of 19, DiFranco moved to New York City with more than 100 songs under her belt. Word of mouth had produced many requests for her to perform at small colleges and bars, and she eventually scraped together $1,500 to produce her first self–titled album.

In 1990 DiFranco founded Righteous Babe Records with the help of her personal manager Dale Anderson, despite major labels vying to sign her. Since then she has released a total of nine albums, including 1996's Dilate which has sold almost 80,000 copies.

The business, currently a small organization run out of a Main Street office building in Buffalo, has stayed in her hometown because she feels that starting a new business is important to the dilapidated area.

Until recently, she was the sole artist on her label. This past year she signed folk singer Utah Phillips, and together they released an album entitled The Past Didn't Go Anywhere. Unlike previous releases from Righteous Babe, this album hosts Phillips' unique storytelling with Ani's acoustic harmonies as a backdrop.

Amidst her rapidly growing success, DiFranco constantly books small, personal venues. Her empowering lyrics convey inspirational messages that touch upon the women's movement for respect, abortion, self–determined sexuality and relationships.

DiFranco's unique style has often been called folk–punk, but travels far past the binds of any musical genre. Her albums present a delectable mix of sharp spoken word, hip– hop and sincerely heart wrenching vocals. This astonishing musical talent has likened her to such musical greats as Bob Dylan, as stated in this month's Ms. Magazine.

Backed by percussionist Andy Stochansky and bassist Sara Lee, and armed with an acoustic guitar, black fingerpicks and a tatooed breast–plate, DiFranco strongly projects this raging talent on stage. Her display of astonishingly sharp rhythms and melancholic harmonies are what brings her audiences repeatedly coming back for more.

COURTESY ALBERT SANCHEZ

Ani DiFranco, a favorite with the locals, will play a sold– out show at Smith College tonight.

Touted by many as the hottest independent musician around, DiFranco has recently been caught under fire by many of her fans who feel that she is "selling out" to the mainstream. This loyal following feels that DiFranco is an icon to the feminist culture and rejects the new, more romantic approach she takes on Dilate.

Despite this rejection from some of her fans, DiFranco still goes out and blows her audiences away with her powerful live performances. Her presence travels overwhelmingly beyond her petite frame and ignites a passionate spirit unlike any other performer of her time.

Ani DiFranco will be performing at 8 p.m. at John M. Greene Hall at Smith College tonight. The show is sold out.

take Kaplan and get into the right school.
MCAT
• Highly trained, expert teachers who know the tests inside and out.
• Personalized, computerized study plans, tailored to your individual needs.
• Proven methods, guaranteed to raise your score.
Class starts November 23!!
the leader in test prep
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

University of Massachusetts - Amherst
HERTER HALL, room 601
20 НОЯБРЯ 1996г. в 6:30 вечера
состоится встреча с
Геннадием Самсоненко
- автором книги
РЕКВИЕМ
ПО
СЕРГЕЮ
ГРИНЬКОВУ
Sponsored by the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures
Желающие могут приобрести книгу на встрече с автором, или заказать её по почте: P.O. Box 108, South Glastonbury, CT 06073
(стоимость книги $12.00, включая пересылку)

OOPS!
•Free Estimates
•Lifetime Repair Warranty
•Auto Glass Replacement
•Car & Truck Rental
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

EL ACUÑA
BAR & GRILL
NOVEMBER DRINK SPECIALS!
$1 DRAFTS!
$1.75 BUD/ BUD LIGHT POUNDERS!
WEEKLY MUNCHIE SPECIALS
Every Tuesday after 9pm — 10 cent wings!
Every Wednesday after 9pm — 75 cent spicy fries!
Every Thursday after 9pm — $3 Nachos!
LIVE BANDS EVERY TUESDAY & WEDNESDAY NIGHTS
Full menu served until closing every night!
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst, MA
(413) 253 - 4040

DOMINO'S PIZZA
CHEESE PIZZA SALE
$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM
EXPIRES 11/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

The Roots played Amherst College Saturday night but not for long enough. COURTESY T. ERIC MUNROE

The Roots dig deep; AC cuts show short

By Chris Maher
Collegian Correspondent

THE ROOTS
Alumni Gym, Amherst College
Nov. 16

The show started off with a duo called Master Mind. "When I say master you say mind — master — mind...master— mind," echoed the young talent morphing them unforgettable as far as the unknown opener often goes.

Up next, Jeru The Damaja was quick to show why he is the "Original Dirty Rotten Scoundrel." Jeru may sound cynical and unbearably frustrated at the world on the albums but he hides it well. There was nothing capable (within reason) of reversing the glow of the smile he held on stage. The intensity of his love for the art hip hop was omnipresent, comparable to motherly love.

While attempting to conduct a hip hop show, he was often interrupted from lack of inspiration. He did work to move the still footed crowd questioning then threatening "Y'all did pay $10 to see this didn't you? Don't worry these lights are bright I can see whose movin' the rest of y'all, I see ya and were comin sfta ya." He kept his cool, took it in stride and ended the show strong. His performance was tight but as the story seems to go, Amherst fronted on another hot prospect.

The Roots were disabled from the start missing Malik B and show cornerstone Rahzel "The GodFather Of Noize" (attending delivery of his firstborn son). Black Thought was sore–throated but strong–hearted. Their set began slow gaining momentum with each piece touching upon "Section," "Proceed" and "Momentum."

The Roots played an old school set live which is the basic element of why they are well reputed performers. They pumped the crowd into this part of the show with "Push Up Your Lighter." It was about 20 minutes long and not as overwhelming without the presence of Rahzel. They touched upon numerous classics randomly from Schooly D, KRS– ONE, Rakim, Method Man, Audio Two and Whodini to say a few. The set ended with a bass solo that was intense and far beyond the norm but the crowd responded well.

Then the show returned to The Roots material that oddly enough ended within 15 minutes. They closed with "Clones."

Turns out, the crowd was shortchanged — the Roots were shorthanded, yet not shortwinded. In a interview with drummer QuestLove, he expressed the groups deep disappointment. They cut 40–plus minutes short because the school only hired police detail till 11 p.m. They were great, but couldn't vocalize their motto Do You Want More? because as we learn one way or another, Amherst fronted on another hot prospect.

■ Femmes

continued from page 6

low Wisconsin native," the now–deceased Jeffrey Dahmer.

Gano continued to play to the crowd, stopping band members Brian Ritchie and Guy Hoffman in the middle of "Blister in the Sun" to let the crowd sing. He would do the same other times in the show, letting the crowd's clapping carry the beat.

At other times, Gano would stop, cross his arms and give the audience a smile, waiting for their applause before continuing.

The Femmes continued to play more of their better–known songs, including "Girl Trouble" off of Why Do Birds Sing? and "Old Mother Reagan," and "No Killing" off The Blind Leading the Naked.

As the evening wound to a close, Hoffman kept things going. In the middle of "Black Girls," Gano and Ritchie left the stage leaving the drummer who played an incredible drum solo, switching drum sets in the middle and eventually throwing away his drum brushes without missing a beat.

The band finished off with the remainder of their big hits, including "Gone Daddy Gone," and "Kiss Off."

After leaving the stage before a brief encore, the band returned playing "Mirror Mirror" off their latest release New Times.

Then they did something they didn't seem interested in doing last time they were here. They played the song they thought the audience most wanted to hear — "Day After Day."

■ coach

continued from page 10

Rockne's Irish all–time victory record — and 215-94-7 overall. The Chicago Sun–Times reported yesterday that Notre Dame wants Barnett to succeed Holtz and has agreed to talk with him, possibly as early as today. The Sun–Times cited unidentified sources. Holtz, 59, could be interested in returning to the NFL, specifically the Minnesota Vikings.

After Saturday's 60-6 rout of Pittsburgh, Holtz said he wants the program to have a solid foundation when he leaves. With the recruiting period starting next month, Notre Dame can't afford to be without a coach for long.

On Sunday, he said he feels good about both the direction of the program and recruiting.

"Can we beat anybody in the country today? Yeah, I think we're capable," he said. "You look at next year, do you think it could be a good football team? Yeah, but we have to get a great wide receiver.

"Recruiting really is probably further along at this stage of the year than any other time. It appears that we will have an exceptional recruiting class."

Bulldogs upset Alabama over weekend

Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Jackie Sherrill's personal burden and Mississippi State's misery against Alabama have been relieved.

"We'll celebrate this game for a long time. I hope to hell it's not 15 years before we have the opportunity to beat them again," Sherrill said after his Bulldogs upset Alabama 17-16 late Saturday night.

Brian Hazlewood kicked a 39-yard field goal with 8:49 left and the much-maligned Mississippi State defense, ranked last in the Southeastern Conference, shut Alabama down the final three possessions.

Mississippi State (4-5, 2-4) won against Alabama for only the second time in 38 games. It was Sherrill's first victory as a coach against his alma mater in eight tries, six with the Bulldogs.

So many people — players, students — for so many years, they have been carrying that burden, and all of sudden the burden is gone," Sherrill said. "They can no longer say, 'well we haven't beaten Alabama.' We've beaten everybody in this league since I've been here."

The loss kept Alabama from clinching its fourth SEC championship game appearance in five years, and dropped the Tide seven spots to 15th in The Associated Press Top 25 poll released Sunday.

"If we won this game, we would have been in the championship game and would have taken a little pressure off of us. We didn't do it, so it will be sort of an uptight week," said Alabama coach Gene Stallings, whose team must beat Auburn to ensure another title game matchup against No. 1 Florida.

Said safety Kevin Jackson, "We put ourselves in a predicament. This week we have to worry about Auburn."

It appeared that Alabama kicker Jon Brock, whose missed extra point in the first half proved costly, and quarterback Freddie Kitchens, benched for the most of the game after a key interception, would have a chance to redeem themselves.

Kitchens drove the Tide to the 39 in the final minute. But his fourth-and-4 pass was incomplete and Brock never got to try a game-winning field goal.

Alabama had its only lead when Brock's 42-yard field goal with 11:27 left made it 16-14.

On the next offensive play, State quarterback Derrick Taite threw a short pass to 248-pound tight end Reginald Kelly, who rumbled 69 yards to the Alabama 11 to set up Hazlewood's game-winner.

Izell McGill's second interception, off backup Warren Foust, ended the next Alabama drive. Paul Lacoste's 19th tackle of the game was a sack of Kitchens forced a Crimson Tide punt with about three minutes left.

Both goalposts were torn down within two minutes after State posted its first victory over the Crimson Tide since a 6-3 shocker in 1980 that broke top-ranked Alabama's SEC record 28-game winning streak.

Big wins are more common occurrences for Alabama, which has won six national championships.

"We just didn't play the way we are used to playing at Alabama," defensive back Deshea Townsend said. "We don't tear down goalposts. It is just a game and there is always another year."

Alabama lost despite Dennis Riddle (19 carries for 103 yards) and Shaun Alexander (15 for 107) becoming the first Tide runners to rush for 100 yards in the same game since 1992.

Alexander, whose first carry came with 12 minutes left in the second quarter, had another solid performance. A week earlier in a 26-0 victory at Louisiana State, the redshirt freshman came off the bench for a school-record 291 yards and four touchdowns.

"It is probably the biggest win that's been here for a long time," said Sherrill, who played on the Bear Bryant-coached Crimson Tide teams that won national titles in 1964 and 1965. Mississippi State, 3-8 on the season, must win against Arkansas and Mississippi for Sherrill to avoid consecutive losing seasons for the first time in his 19-year coaching career. The Bulldogs went to three bowls in four seasons after Sherrill arrived in 1991, following just one winning season the previous decade.

Alabama quickly answered both Mississippi State first-half touchdowns, including Foust directing an 11-play, 80-yard drive in his first action. Alexander scored on an 11-yard TD run with 2:46 left, but Brock's extra point attempt was wide right.

Lamont Woodberry's diving 12-yard TD catch after McGill intercepted Kitchens gave State a 14-7 lead. A play before the touchdown, Jackson was called for pass interference on the third-and-23.

Robert Isaac, who rushed for 103 yards on 21 carries, put State in front with a 17-yard run after emerging from a pack of defenders at the 15 in the final minute of the first quarter. Riddle capped Alabama's next possession with a 3-yard TD run.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
WHERE PERFECTION IS ACHIEVED EACH AND EVERYDAY!!!

TRAVEL SMART!
One Way Roundtrip
LONDON FROM NY, BOSTON or DC
$154 $249
FROM NEW YORK
PARIS $224 $427
ROME $259 $489
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA $235 $446
Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurailpasses available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
342 Madison Ave., NY, NY 10173
212-986-8420*
800-272-9676
* in NYC

ANTONIO'S
OPEN 7 DAYS
12PM - 1AM
HAMPDEN SNACKBAR
SOUTHWEST
E' SEMPRE BUONA

AMERICAN CREW
Quality Grooming Products For Men
Regency Hairstylist
189 N. Pleasant St.
253-9526
We Use and Recommend the Best in Men's Haircare

CHECK OUT A GREAT CLASS!
GOTTA BE A PEER EDUCATOR
Peer Health Educators...
...learn about cool stuff
...teach workshops in the residence halls and Greek area.
...give out condoms and other goodies at the Campus Center and special events.
...make new friends.
...MAKE A DIFFERENCE!
PEER HEALTH EDUCATION
PUBLIC HEALTH 213/214 or EDUCATION 213/214
6 Credits - 2 Semester Commitment Required
For permission of the instructor call the Division of Health Education 577-5181.
Class will meet on Wednesdays from 2:00 - 4:30pm
Priority is given to those who meet with the instructor before November 22nd.

TODAY'S 99.3 MODERN ROCK WHMP-FM
PRESENTS
Snow Show 96
DECEMBER 2nd, PEARL STREET NIGHTCLUB
The Lemonheads
Goldfinger
SUPERDRAG
Doors Open at 7:30pm
Downstairs BIG BANG SHOWCASE
TICKETS ON SALE NOW
Tickets Available at: Strawberries, Northampton Box Office, TIX Unlimited @ UMass, For The Record in Amherst,

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Need a place to stay during Winter break? Sublease our apt in Colonial Village 2 big bedrooms Call 253-6631

The Boulders 2 bedroom, newly renovated, on-site appliances, on bus line. $740.00 Heat and hot water included. 256-0812

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING BREAK '97! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, and Florida. EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH! Call (800)700 0790

MAKE MONEY
$1000's Possible Reading books part-time at home. Toll-free (800)898-3778 ext R-1732 for listings

Snowboard Coaches part-time at private school with ski hill. Decent pay, experience preferred. Call Jack Shaa 413-774-7411

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R5003

EMPLOYMENT

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

ENTERTAINMENT

Sex! Drugs! Rock 'n Roll! Now that I have your attention: Having a party? You need a DJ! Call Eileen @ 253-6588. Raging Disco, Funk, Cheesy 80's music - whatever! No techno, the st gives me a headache! Call me!

FOR SALE

3 Pair Doc Morton's: 1 black boot, 2 pr. shoes. Size 8. Must Sell! Call 546-1451.

MAC Centris 610 8MB RAM 80MB HD. Full page monitor (gray scale) External fax modem. Ethernet card. Call Ferrao 549-3927. Price negotiable.

Set of 4 Rims 14" white w/black & chrome. BO 546-6485. Ask for Dan.

CAR CD PLAYER IN-DASH! 1 year old, good condition JVC. Paid $400, sacrifice for $75 firm. 665-8127 Leave message

FOR SALE

New York Knick Tickets for sale Vs. Seattle, San Antonio, Indiana (888)602-0774 (pager)

HOUSE FOR RENT

Secluded Riverfront Home N. Green River ARTISTS INN Residence Living or Studio Space Avail. immed Part-furnished 14x24. $350/mo or 20x24 $375/mo + ½ util., sec. dep., references, some pets ok, gas heat, wash/dry, snow mvl, kitchen cathedral ceiling, fireplace, balcony. East Colrain, 20 min/GFLD, 40 min/UMass 624-3928

Amherst Belchertown line 4 Bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area. Available now 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

Boxing Three private 1/2 hour lessons $69.95. Call 732-5817. In Amherst Tues. & Thurs. Eve.

MUSICIANS

Attention Bands Lava Lounge ICP Productions booking for UMass bands to perform at our club. Call Joe at 582-9898 or Mal at 584-7111

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed. $35 800-776-9563. Doctor Approved

PERSONALS

Happy Anniversary Fifi! Here's my RSVP to your wonderful invitation. I hear those Shakespeare films can be interesting. Con amor, Kirby

To All Collegian Staff-
The weather's here,
wish you were beautiful
Jacob

Happy 21st Birthday Melissa P. We will drink to old times! Big Sciences, Big Plans, and Jerry and Corky!! Love, Your Roome Chrissy

Attention XΩ New Members: Kiera, Amy, Jen, Sandra, Rachel, Amy, Liz, Carrie, Shannon, and Isabel. You're doing great. Keep smiling.
In Chi-O love,
The Sisters of Chi Omega

ROOM FOR RENT

Female Students: On-Campus housing available for Intersession. $250. Call Karen (508)682-9213, Kathy (617)479-7636

ROOM FOR RENT

Female Students: On-Campus living. Room and Board. Starting at $2000/semester. Singles available. Immediate occupancy for Spring Semester. Call Karen (508)682-9213, Kathy (617)479-7636

Seeking roommate for 4 bdrm apt in Northampton. $300+. Call Karla 585-8629

ROOM WANTED

Need 1 Bedroom Apartment sublet for 1/1/97 thru 8/97. Call Dave (413)783-7088

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Psychic Readings Your home or mine, free newsletter. Please call Sendy (413)467-3739

GORILLAGRAMS Flowers, Birthdays, Balloons etc. Send the crazy gorillas. We'll go anywhere, anytime! Restaurants, classrooms, dorms. Student Rates available! Call 256-0287

SERVICES

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info.

Angel Chat - Writing your way with Angelic answers to your questions. Call 1-800-539-3930

CAR NEED REPAIR? Let me come to you! Student Rates. 665-4790

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TO SUBLET

Take over our lease 1/97. Large sunny 2 bedroom apt. On bus route. Heat/Hot Water. Free Gym. The Boulders. $740. 256-8984

1 Bedroom Apartment in Sunderland on bus line. Available 1/97-8/97. Call 665-3860

TRAVEL

SS Cruise Ships Hiring $$
Travel free. Exotic places. Save $$$! Seasonal/Permanent. No experience necessary. Travel/Employment Directory. Free Info! Act now! HTTP \\WWW.Tropicel-Destinations.com. Brett @ Tropical-Destinations.com (413)625-6487

Bahamas, Ft. Lauderdale, Orlando 11 days! Cruise whenever. Must sell! $450. Includes Twa!!! Call 6-6271. Ask for Masses (MO)

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, FL Earn 2 credits! March 16-22. Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227. Call Project DEEP @ (800)82-0977.

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info. (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Connie 567-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

Wanted Tutor for AUTO CAD Realease 13. Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272

WANTED

Desperate for Bibliographic material and I'm not even failing the course. Must have rigorous booklist- textbooks, workbooks, problems for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education). Will pay above $150/negotiable. Call at all times except Mon. and Tues. Don't worry, I am correct. (413)548-1271

PRICE ✧ THURSDAYS

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day

All others
40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

N	I	C	K		E	A	S	T		L	I	N	D	A
B	O	L	O		I	L	I	E		I	N	E	R	T
A	W	A	R	E	N	E	S	S		T	A	R	O	T
	A	P	E	X			I	T	S		C	O	P	A
		A	I	N	T		S	C	O	T
	A	U	N	T	I	E	S		I	C	I	C	L	E
E	U	R		S	P	E	E	D		T	O	L	E	T
E	D	G	E		S	N	A	R	L		N	E	W	T
L	I	E	N	S		S	L	E	E	P		F	I	E
S	O	D	D	E	N		S	A	V	A	N	T	S
		U	T	E	S		D	I	N	E
S	T	I	R		O	O	H		I	P	S	O
E	E	R	I	E		L	A	M	B	C	H	O	P	S
T	R	A	N	S		A	L	E	E		E	L	I	A
H	I	N	G	E		R	E	N	E		W	E	E	D

Collegian Classifieds "what a bargain"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Lingers
5. Tennis trophy name
10. Brother of Jacob
14. Ersatz butter
15. Elicit
16. ___ fide
17. Cooking substance
18. Office clerk
19. Before take or time
20. Restricted
22. Dead ducks
24. Frosted vase
25. French term of endearment
27. Joined (up)
30. Hurried
34. Intuitive letters
35. Start to have effect
37. Ascend
38. Feasted
39. Married mujer: abbr.
40. "Alley ___"
43. Jamboree gp.
44. Feudal slave
46. Common Sense author
48. Author Wallace
49. Marrows
52. Coat collar continuations
54. Conducts
55. Nobelist Sir John Boyd ___
56. Gas or milk unit
59. Land of Che's demise
63. Potpourri
64. Squeaky sound
67. Adverse fate
68. Large number
69. Wail
70. Sundance's Placa
71. Snake sound
72. Forty-___
73. Actor Connery

DOWN
1. Lounge about
2. Jai ___
3. Bacterium
4. Blood-pressure builder
5. E.G. Marshall, on TV
6. Dedicated
7. One of a series of books: abbr.
8. Singer Turner
9. Suit fabrics
10. Sri Lanka timber trees
11. Bird of peace
12. Lab.
13. God of war
21. Plain part
23. Table scrap
25. Double this and be stylish
26. The ___ Hilton (1967 Moriarty film)
27. Harass
28. Adlai's running mate in 1956
29. Imitative ones
31. High-minded
32. Canvas holder
33. Attracts
36. Like most TV fare
41. Witness
42. Cultured item
45. Chaps
47. Blockhead
50. Recent: prefix
51. Rockette highstep
53. Lion packs
56. Gee whiz!
57. ___ Do Is Dream Of You (2 wds.)
58. Pinocchio's peccadilloes
59. Ordered
60. Ballot
61. Jot
62. ___ Alone (Milland film) (2 wds.)
65. Baseball stat.
66. Before zwei

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Stay on task this week. Diversions will be tempting, but you need to stay focused. Later, there will be time for an adventure with the whole family. Open your heart to something (or someone) unusual. You could gain a richer outlook on life.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
Although you might feel caught in a rut, you're able to accomplish some things by force of habit. Use this strength to free yourself to dream of other things. The more you look for, the more you'll find. Plan a romantic getaway for the weekend.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
Although your stress level is high, now is not the time to make demands. You could come across the wrong way. Catch up on small tasks to free yourself to enjoy a relaxing weekend. An outdoor excursion is just the thing to recharge your batteries.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
This is a good week to refurbish your exercise program. Focus on your health and you'll enjoy the results for years to come. It may be time to sit down with a partner and discuss your plans for the future.

LEO
July 23–August 23
A desk full of busy work will keep you occupied for most of the week. Be ready for an interesting weekend. Some fun in the sun might be in order. Take a special friend along and be ready for anything—you never know what could be just around the corner! Enjoy!

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
You're a super shopper this week, with bargains coming from every direction. Check out your obligations for the next week or so before you splurge—you need to keep the budget balanced. Cover all your bases before accepting another responsibility.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23
Working together with another person brings out the best in you for this week. You might almost be able to anticipate each other's ideas. That's good. Making them come true, however, is another matter. Be practical, as well as creative.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
Don't focus on the weaknesses of a group you're involved in. Just pull your weight, and focus on the task at hand—slow and steady wins the race. Stick with the basics in other areas this week—extravagance is unnecessary and detrimental.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21
Catch up on your social obligations before midweek. You'll feel better, and so will your friends. Be sure you have all the information before giving a situation up as hopeless. You could be missing some important facts. Read the directions.

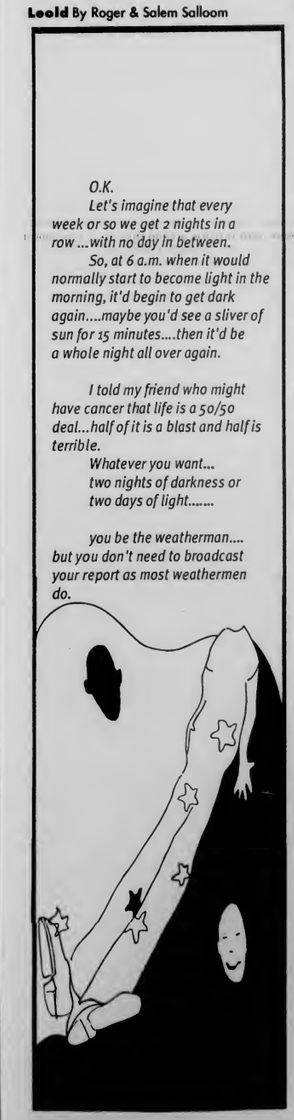
CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20
Your generous streak is showing. Before you rush out to the mall, think about the people you know. One might need a little extra something, and you could be just the person to give it to them. You don't have to be lavish, just thoughtful.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18
Someone who ordinarily grates on your nerves could have a gem of advice for you, if you're able to hear it. Be open to innovations, even if they're replacing your old favorites. It might be time for a change. A loved one brings you a special piece of news.

PISCES
February 19–March 20
Bring together an unusual group of people for a social gathering. You'll have fun, and you might gain a new insight into an old problem. A romantic relationship gains momentum. Stoke the fires with a special event just for the two of you.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

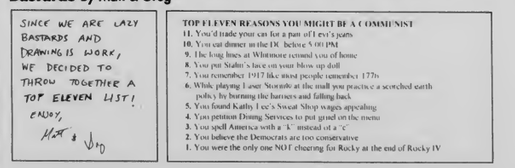
Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas



Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom



University² By Frank Cho

Generation X By Chris Lehman

Bastards By Matt & Greg

Quote of the Day

"I was thrown out of college for cheating on a metaphysics exam; I looked into the soul of the boy next to me.

-Woody Allen"

Correction:
The Collegian regrets the publication of the "Joke of the Day" on Nov. 8 regarding feminists. The editorial content of the joke did not intend to represent the Collegian's view.

Recycle your Collegian

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

Dave hadn't lost a ball in seven years.

Today's Staff

Mike Burke
Night Editor

Seema Gangatirkar
Copy Editor

Kenneth W.P. Scott
Photo Technician

Brian Inocencio
Production Supervisor

Roberto Snow
Thang Vo
Production

Dining Commons Menu

Menu unavailable. Please refer to this guide to help you decide where to eat.

1 First, go get some dice (6 sided, preferably).

2 Find one you like, and roll it.

If you roll:

- Go to Franklin D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Berkshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Hampshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Worcester D.C. for dinner.
- Get Pizza for dinner!
- Roll again.

Sports

Donaghue heads to NCAA's; X–C ends 15th

by Corey Peter Goodman
Collegian Staff

For all but one member of the Massachusetts women's cross country team, a long, hard season has drawn to a close.

UMass completed its 1996 campaign Saturday with a satisfying 15th place finish at the ECAC Championships at Boston's Franklin Park. Junior Rebecca Donaghue extended her season by earning her second straight trip to the NCAA Cross Country Championships.

"I was real proud of the team's effort," coach Julie LaFreniere said. "Nearly everyone finished their season off with personal records.

Several teams finished ahead of the Minutewomen, most notably Villanova, Georgetown, Providence, Dartmouth and Boston College who hashed out the top five spots respectively.

"Realistically, we finished right about where we should have finished," LaFreniere said. "The field of 33 teams was real strong, and we thought we held our own."

UMass' top five runners included Rebecca Donaghue who finished the race 11th, at 16:57, while running her fastest race of the season.

Behind Donaghue was senior Katie Greenia, who crossed the finish line 91st, at 18:09. Christy Martin was only seconds behind Greenia when she finished 105th, at 18:25.

Sharon Tilloston and Molly Dunlap were UMass' fourth and fifth place finishers at 133rd and 147th places respectively.

For now, the Minutewomen can only sit back and root for Donaghue, their star runner, as she sets out to achieve her goal of becoming an all-American runner when she competes next Monday at the Championships in Tucson, Arizona. All Donaghue must do is finish among the top 25 American runners, and the all-American title is hers.

"I've had this in my sights since I was a sophomore, and hopefully this will be my year," Donaghue said.

Donaghue hopes to avenge last year's appearance at the NCAA's, where she fell midway through the race, and saw her hopes of becoming an all-American dash away in front of her.

"I'm not at all nervous about falling again, I'm a more focused runner now," Donaghue said. "I think I'm a little more nervous about the plane ride though."

This year Donaghue appears to be in prime shape for competition.

"Rebecca has only run extremely hard twice this season, so she is in top condition physically," LaFreniere said. "The ECAC's fielded many national quality runners, and Rebecca ran alongside them, so I'm expecting a lot out of her."

Though the cards are laid out in front of her, Donaghue knows becoming an all-American will take an all-American effort.

"I'm going to go out there, and run the best race I can," Donaghue said. "I don't think there is too much pressure on me. I'm a junior, and I have another year left, but I don't want to have to wait until next year."

This year the Minutewomen will say good-bye to seniors Katie Greenia, Molly Dunlap and Kristin Donaldson.

"We are really going to miss them, they were great runners," LaFreniere said.

As for their successful season, LaFreniere has no complaints.

"I really enjoyed coaching this team this year," LaFreniere said. "The girls didn't just compete well, but they trained well also."

"When people work real hard for you, give 100 percent all of the time, and show the kind of heart these girls showed, it makes my job all the more pleasurable," LaFreniere said.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Rebecca Donaghue qualified for Nationals this weekend for the UMass women's cross–country team

UM drowns BU Terriers

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

It was a meet that went down to the wire Saturday night, but freshman Billy Hunter swam his team to victory as the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team splashed a tidal wave over Beantown against the Terriers of Boston University, 152-139.

Coach Ross Yarworth entered both Hunter and Rich Slingluff, a fellow frosh, from the water polo team to swim against the Terriers. UMass now improves their dual meet record to 2-0.

"Billy Hunter was unbelievable. He must have won every race he was in by six seconds or more," Slingluff said.

Yarworth expected a tough match-up between the Terriers and his Minutemen, and that is just what he got. "They're a good solid team, they're very similar to us," Yarworth said.

Hunter won three individual events, along with being part of the Minutemen's 200 free relay team which was the deciding factor in Saturday's meet. The events he took single-handedly were the 100 breast at 1:00.95, the 200 individual medley at 2:01.26, and the 200 breast at 2:14.88. Obviously, the three hour practice the water polo team endured on Saturday morning didn't effect Hunter against B.U.

Yarworth, who is sporting a new hairdo after his water polo team beat Queens College to go to the final four in San Diego in two weeks, (the team, for the second year in a row, shaved his head) is putting his squad through their toughest training period this month.

"The swimmers are starting to be separated into their own particular races during practices instead of a mixed variety. The sprinters are training as sprinters, the distance swimmers are swimming in their particular lanes, and the individual strokes are swimming in their separate lanes," Yarworth said.

They missed their meet last weekend against Providence, so the men were ready to go in the pool in Boston.

Junior Sean Anderson and freshman Ed Hefferon both left the pool in Boston as double-winners to represent the Minutemen. Anderson took the 50 free in 21.62 and the 100 free in 48.59, while Hefferon dove to win both the one and three meter diving events with scores of 197.92 and 251.10.

Overall, Yarworth predicted a team that would swim their hearts out. They did. Win or lose, he predicted a team that would swim hard. It showed in the final outcome.

As he pointed to the numerous championship banners that decorate the practice pool in Boyden Gym, he explained that the team is well trained, and they understand what those championships mean. The team knows they didn't get those banners for nothing.

The Minutemen look to make it three in a row as they travel along side the Minutewomen to Jamaica, NY to face St. John's. Both meets are scheduled to start at 2 p.m. on Saturday. Look for Hunter, Anderson and Hefferon to make more of an impact on men's swimming against the Red Storm.

Lou Holtz resigns from ND

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Lou Holtz is out as coach at Notre Dame and the announcement will come today at his weekly news conference.

Holtz met yesterday with Notre Dame athletic director Mike Wadsworth and the Rev. William Beauchamp, the university's executive vice president.

"He met with the administration and told them he's leaving," two university sources, who spoke on the condition they not be identified, told The Associated Press yesterday.

The university declined to confirm Holtz's resignation, saying only that he had met with Wadsworth and Beauchamp.

"They have reached a decision and it will be announced at 1 p.m. [today]," school spokesman John Heisler said. Wadsworth declined comment today, while Beauchamp was not immediately available.

The resignation, which takes effect after the season, ends nearly a week a speculation that Holtz's 11th season would be his last.

And Holtz did nothing to deny it, at one point saying Sunday: "We can talk about this forever, but there isn't much I'm going to say. But there's a time and a place for everything."

And that time is today, when Holtz has his usual news conference with local media and conference call with national media.

Holtz's future plans were not immediately known, nor was it clear whether his successor would be announced today. Among the top contenders to replace Holtz in college football's glamour job are Northwestern's Gary Barnett and Irish defensive coordinator Bob Davie.

Yesterday, Barnett was asked about the Notre Dame coaching position. He said, "I don't think you ever say never. I don't know at this point in time."

Others mentioned include LSU's Gerry DiNardo, former UCLA coach Terry Donahue and Wisconsin's Barry Alvarez.

The 10th-ranked Irish (7-2) have two games remaining — at home against Rutgers and at Southern California. A bowl bid, probably the Orange or Fiesta, would close out Holtz's career at Notre Dame. Holtz is 99-29-2 at Notre Dame — six wins shy of tying Knute

Turn to COACH, page 7

UM V–Ball spikes Dayton & Xavier; moves on

By S.A. Grant
Collegian Staff

To the surprise of many outside the Massachusetts locker room, the Minutewomen achieved their preseason goal of qualifying for the Atlantic–10 post–season tournament, and did it on Senior Night.

Though the win over Xavier on Saturday clinched the berth, it was the upset of second–place Dayton the previous night which gave more cause for celebration, setting the stage for Saturday's match and reminding UMass (26–8) it could beat the best of the A–10. Both contests were held at Curry Hicks Cage.

This season was thought by some to be a rebuilding year for the Minutewomen. They lost their leading scorer, among others, from last season, and by mid–season this year, half their starting lineup were freshmen.

And that was again the case against Dayton, where the team came back from 1–0 to stun the Flyers.

UMass defeats Dayton, 3–1

"We needed that one," said victorious coach Bonnie Kenny afterward.

But they certainly couldn't have expected it. Dayton came to town 24–5, with only two losses in the A–10. The Flyers, led by The Chinese Connection, beat UMass on Oct. 12, 3– 2, and have all but assured themselves the number two seed in the playoffs.

With their win (11–15, 16–14, 15–9, 16–14), the Minutewomen have now downed the top two teams in the league, the other being first–place Rhode Island. The only playoff team that they will not have beaten is Temple, who dropped them twice.

"We played great defense, we passed well enough to run the middle, and I'm proud that we kept our poise. We didn't keep it the whole match, but it was there when we needed it the most."

UMass lost the first match, despite coming back from a 7– 1 deficit early on. The game was tied at eight and at 11, but a couple of unforced errors precluded the home team from scoring again.

The third game was the turning point, as UMass' momentum from game two obviously carried over. With the score 4–1, it had scored 14 of the match's last 15 points. To its credit, Dayton would take the lead at 7–6 on a Jody Clare ace, but it would never lead again in the game.

When UMass was down 13–6 in game two, fans were already starting to think about the next evening, when they would celebrate the collegiate careers of Dionne Nash and Susan Maga. But then the "poise" took over.

With sophomore Katie Pearce serving, the Minutemen stormed back frighteningly quickly to make it 13–12 (a 13– 11 Dayton time–out didn't accomplish much), thanks in part to an ace by Pearce.

The Minutewomen, got the serve back immediately after the Flyers got it to game point, 14–12. With Maga serving, it was soon 14–14, before a Nash/Michelle Paciorek block ended the game.

Nash earned a career–high 30 kills, while freshmen Kari Hogancamp, Sarah Watters and Jill Meyers all played well, as did Michelle Paciorek.

"We can't get confident, we're still in control of our own destiny," said Kenny.

Kenny's squad proved they were expert navigators 22 hours later.

UMass sweeps Xavier, 3–0

This was Nash's and Maga's last match in Curry Hicks Cage, and the two played like it. After the 15–7, 15–10, 15–4 win, they both admitted to feeling a little nostalgic.

"Whenever I had time to stand around a little bit I thought about [this being my last time playing here]," said Nash.

"At moments," agreed Maga. "I definitely thought about it, too.

And their best UMass moment?

"When we beat Rhode Island this season for the first time since freshman year," said Maga. "Last night was up there, also."

"I definitely think beating Rhode Island was the biggest part of my career here." said Nash, whose parents made the trip from Lancaster, Calif. to see her play.

Nash earned 20 kills and seven digs versus the Musketeers. It was her tenth 20–plus kill match of the season. Meanwhile, Maga, who substituted regularly for Paciorek, notched a match–high three service aces.

The loss eliminates Xavier (21–13), along with every team below them in the standings, from post–season play. Xavier was right on UMass' tail, in fifth place, for that final playoff spot.

THANG VO /COLLEGIAN

Woo–hah! UConn's all in check...
The UMass women's soccer team faces Connecticut in an NCAA second round matchup this weekend.

Vermont struggles early on; Scandal hits Minnesota

Leigh Torbin on College Hockey

My mind might still be buzzing a little from an exhilarating women's soccer match on Sunday, but the coolest game on Earth can be neglected no longer. It's time to fire up the hockey machine once again, this time to take a look at the college game.

The machine doesn't need a jump start nearly as bad as Vermont though. Somewhere in between now and the last time this column ran the team bandwagon has had some problems and limped into a Burlington Mobil station.

No one's got their foot on the clutch and the engine starting to choke.

The Catamounts have had a rough pair of weekends as they stagger into matchups with Dartmouth and Massachusetts this weekend.

RPI went into the always sold out Gutterson Fieldhouse and snapped the Cats nine–game home winning streak with a classic old–time hockey effort. The Engineers clutched and grabbed and aggressively pressured UVM, grinding down an team with some decent size.

Hopefully a copy of this game tape has been forwarded to the UMass hockey office, because there's nothing RPI can do than a similarly built UMass team can't.

A night after falling 4–2, Union waltzed into Burlington a night after beating Dartmouth 7–3 and outplayed the Cats, but fell 1–0. Losing to Union would have gotten then No. 2 Vermont the (name yet–to–be–determined) college hockey version of the infamous Booty Schwag.

The Skating Dutchmen outshot UVM 43–28 in their own barn, 15–3 in the third period and held the Catamount power play, generally more potent than Goldschlager, to an 0–for–7 mark.

The woes continued for the pride of the Green Mountain State when It traveled upstate this past weekend and fell to Cornell and just slipped by Colgate 5–4.

A good cleansing is needed after the Cornell–Colgate swing or UVM could be primed for another upset this weekend.

• If the sport's small time there's no incentive to cheat, thus if a sport is going to be "big–time" it has to have a few scandals. College hoops and football are loaded with them, and that's just at Boston College.

So, it's somewhat reassuring for the good of the sport to see that in the wake of Maine's heavy sentence levied by the NCAA this summer, that other scandals have emerged and the Black Marks of Maine aren't isolated In dishonesty.

The Gophers are no longer hiding underground. Bill Murray, in the form of the Minneapolis Star–Tribune, is out to get them ala Caddyshack.

Last month coach Doug Woog admitted to giving Chris McAlpine an illegal payment after his scholarship ran out to finish the spring 1994 quarter.

In a copyrighted story on Sunday, the state's largest paper reported that Woog, a former assistant coach and McAlpine deceived school officials to conceal the payment. Likewise, athletic department officials ignored "strong signals" of a possible violation after the payment.

Acknowledging the illegal payment last month, men's Athletic Director Mark Dienhart suspended Woog for two games without pay, eliminated a scholarship for the 1997–98 season, and informed the NCAA.

Complicating the mess though is that, according to the Star–Tribune, several school officials and players heard rumors but didn't report them at the time. The university never thoroughly investigated the incident until the fecal matter hit the fan a month ago.

Leigh Torbin is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 54 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Wednesday, November 20, 1996

Music of the night

The Czech Philharmonic, with conductor Vladimir Válek will perform tonight at the Fine Arts Center. More information inside (See Arts & Living, page 6).

Juden steps up

Junior forward Dan Juden is becoming a two–way threat for the ever–improving hockey squad. Check out our feature (See Sports, page 12).

WORLD

Anti–Communist Serbs protest President

NIS, Yugoslavia (AP) — Chanting "Thieves! Thieves!" anti–Communists turned out by the thousands across Serbia yesterday for rallies accusing President Slobodan Milosevic of trying to steal their victory in local elections.

Milosevic's pro–Communist coalition conceded defeat on Monday, a day after the elections. But the Communist–led electoral commission remained silent on the outcome, raising fears that Milosevic was plotting to rig the results to undo losses in almost all of Serbia's big towns and cities.

Opposition leaders said activists were on the streets in 30 towns where they were claiming victory. That could not be independently verified, but independent radio B–92 had live reports from several towns where demonstrations were going on.

In Nis, Serbia's second–largest city, an angry, flag–waving crowd of more than 20,000 yelled "Thieves!" and "They are Stealing our Votes!" Opposition leader Vul Draskovic told them to storm City Hall if election officials declare the Nis vote invalid.

NATION

Commuter plane crash leaves 13 dead in Ill.

QUINCY, Ill. (AP) — Two commuter planes collided on a runway and exploded into a fireball yesterday, killing all 13 people aboard both aircraft.

A United Express plane with nine passengers and two crew members collided with a smaller commuter plane carrying two people at Baldwin Municipal Airport, officials said. There were no survivors. Witnesses told WGEM radio in Quincy that both planes were enveloped in a ball of fire after colliding shortly after 5 p.m. Mike Coultas, a private pilot who was arriving at the airport when the crash occurred, told CNN the larger plane was landing on one runway as the other was preparing to takeoff from another runway.

"I kept thinking to myself I can't believe this aircraft on Runway 4 does not see the other aircraft," which was landing, Coultas said.

"Just about the time I got to the fence to park my car the two aircraft impacted at the intersections of the two runways and then exploded into a ball of flames," Coultas added.

Don Zochert, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration, said the United Express plane was a Beech 1900 aircraft. Police said the plane was coming in from Burlington, Iowa.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 35 LOW: 20	HIGH: 40 LOW: 20	HIGH: 40 LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics .....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial .....page 4
FYI .....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 12

Students, administration critique current UM advising programs

UMass at a crossroads — the state of academic advising: a Massachusetts Daily Collegian special report

Day One: Faculty reactions to advising
Faculty says departmental advising is strong; student apathy is a real problem; administration is also criticized

Day Two: Collegian study points to advising problems
Students express frustration and confusion with the advising process

Day Three: The proactive University?
Students, administration, critique programs aimed at making UMass more accessible

Day Four: Cultural organizations and advising
Students of color strive to find a familiar face and guidance at a predominately white University

Day Five: UMass 2000
Will the future forget the undergraduate? What do the next five years hold for UMass and its students?

Editor's Note: this article is the third in a five part special report on that state of academic advising at the University of Massachusetts. The report was compiled by the Collegian news department.

Special Report
Collegian News

Realizing that student frustration and discontent was on the rise as advising and mentoring resources become increasingly scare, the University of Massachusetts administration has implemented several programs in the last five years which address these concerns.

Several of the initiatives, such as the Talent Advancement Program and the newly created "Universe Through the University" program, are based in residential areas. There purpose was not only to open students up to different aspects of the university, but to foster a sense of community at a school that can easily overwhelm in-coming students.

Other programs, such as the University Advising Center (UAC), are designed to help undeclared and recently declared students shuffle through UMass bureaucracy and course registration.

Student and administrative comments on these programs are for the most part, positive. However, several problems persist, most notably with the UAC. Understaffed and cramped into a small work space, the UAC is running on full capacity and may not have the resources to sufficiently serve students in coming years as UMass seeks to expand academically.

University Advising Center

At the end of pre–registration week, hundreds of students without a declared major will have filtered through the tiny UAC office on the east wing of Machmer Hall.

According to UAC staff, the office appears to be doing a more than adequate job of directing these students in the direction best suited for them individually.

Students said they found the University Advising Center extremely helpful and that the help they received incorporated their life styles as well as their academics.

Jenn Donnellan, a sophomore who decided on a major of anthropology after a visit to the UAC, said that she had a very positive experience with her counselor.

"[The UAC advisor] definitely related to me and shared some common experiences," said Donnellan. "If you're lost they definitely guide you in the right direction."

Andrea Cavallozzo, a sophomore who is undeclared, also praised UAC and said that "they're always really helpful here."

Muzzy Qazilbash explained that although UAC "specialize in academics," the counselors do make a concerted effort to incorporate the students personal life with their academics.

Extracurricular activities such as sports, clubs and jobs are also taken into consideration when the student needs help ironing out a class schedule.

"We're one stop shopping," said Linda Rooney, director of UAC, which is currently located on the first floor of Machmer Hall. "We try to be the first and last resort place."

Rooney said that the UAC not only tries to help students find a major, but they also provide supplemental advising for other departments and the deans

Turn to ADVISING, page 3

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN

Looks good, don't you think?
Lizia Costas a junior environmental design major, checked out the sale at Nobody's Perfect yesterday afternoon at the Campus Center.

Compassion & integrity in the workworld; Feuerstein advises how at Mullins tonight

By Bryan Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

Malden Mills president, CEO and owner Aaron Feuerstein will present a speech concerning "The Bottom Line Versus the Right Thing; Can One Succeed in Business and Maintain Integrity?" tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Mullins Center.

Feuerstein gained national attention last December when he responded to a fire which destroyed his textile factories in Lawrence, by guaranteeing three months pay to his 3000 employers and beginning to rebuild his factories.

The event is being co–sponsored by University of Massachusetts Hillel House and the School of Management. The speech will focus on Feuerstein's business philosophy and its relationship to his Orthodox Judaism.

Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter said, "he is an orthodox Jew with a strong connection to Jewish tradition which calls for care and compassion." He further said, "he is bucking the trend [of downsizing and corporate relocation] in American industry."

Lou Wigdor, School of Management spokesman said "in an age of downsizing and re–engineering... Feuerstein is actually subsidizing some of his workers."

Wigdor said that the success of Feuerstein's synthetic fabric, Polertech, allowed him to pay workers at other factories that were not doing as well, such as textile designs for upholstery. He said it is out of the ordinary for such a large concentration of textile factories to be located in Massachusetts, since most textiles factories have moved out the United States.

Wigdor said that approximately 80 percent of the factory's employees are back on the job, while the others are most probably collecting unemployment insurance.

Skeptics point out the fact that because Feuerstein had total control over his firm, and he does not have to answer to shareholders or a board, that it much easier for him to subsidize his workers while losing profit.

One of the main questions Feuerstein is expected to address is whether or not a publicly held firm (which most large firms are) can operate in the same benevolent manner that Feuerstein can in a private setting?

Feuerstein remains active in his local Jewish community as the treasurer of his synagogue, the Young Israel of Brookline, which was founded by his father in 1930.

"This my father told me as a little boy," Feuerstein said, quoting Hillel, the ancient rabbi. "In a situation which is devoid of morality, try to be a man and do something worthwhile."

In 1996, Feuerstein received honorary doctorate degrees from Middlebury College, UMass at Dartmouth, Boston University and Yeshiva University of New York, his alma mater. He has also received awards such as the Award for Humanitarian Effort from the Anti–Defamation League in New York, and the CEO of the Year Award from George Washington University.

The lecture is part of the Charles and Janet Nirenberg Lecture Series on Business Leadership.

Tickets are free to the public but must be obtained in advance from the Mullins Center Box at 545–0505.

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN

Pat Crosson, the UMass Provost, spoke yesterday at the Faculty Senate Council on the status of women.
See page 8 for story.

Care & Sharing Day aims to support local charities

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

Today marks the culmination of "Caring and Sharing Day" at the University of Massachusetts, in honor of the annual Commonwealth of Massachusetts Campaign (COMEC) fundraiser, which supports several charitable agencies.

"COMEC is an opportunity for the University to give to the community and demonstrate our care," said University COMEC coordinator Gloria Fox.

Over 400 international, national, state and local charitable agencies are involved in the campaign. Some of the organizations include United Ways, the UMass Foundation for Children, the Environmental Federation of New England and the National Voluntary Health Agency.

Local charities include the Amherst Survival Center, Western Massachusetts Food Bank and the Salvation Army.

Around noon, the UMass Minuteman Marching Band will visit several places on campus including the Physical Plant, the Parking Office, Health Services and the Whitmore Courtyard.

–At 1:00 p.m. UMass Men's Basketball Coach James "Bruiser" Flint will speak at a rally on the west side of the Campus Center.

Fox said Flint will address that COMEC is a team effort.

Some recipients of the charities will be speaking at the event. Also, some representatives of the agencies will speak very briefly about their causes.

Throughout the day, apples from the University orchards will be distributed to persons by the COMEC department chairs as a symbol of the campaign and to express thanks to those who have already taken part.

Last Friday, Chancellor David K. Scott distributed apples to Physical Plant employees at 6:30 a.m.

"The event went very well," said Fox. "It was a great time; there was a sense of good fellowship."

Scott donates one percent of his $150,000 salary annually to the

Turn to COMEC, page 3

Clinton reverses Rwanda plan; No combat troops will be deployed

By Susanne M. Schafer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration sharply scaled back its proposed military relief mission to Rwanda yesterday, opting to send about 1,000 logistics specialists instead of combat troops.

Defense Secretary William Perry said the "very positive development" of hundreds of thousands of refugees returning home to Rwanda prompted the administration to adjust its strategy.

"We are modifying our plans based on this dramatic change," Perry told a conference on military procurement.

"The U.S. contribution will be less than 1,000 and these will be support — logistics — not combat troops," Perry added. Perry said a final decision on the Canadian-led multinational military relief effort will be made tomorrow in Stuttgart, Germany, at a meeting of officials from nations offering to join the 10,000- to 12,000-strong force.

A senior administration official later said discussions with U.S. allies and with Rwanda and its neighbors would continue at least through Saturday. The U.S. force would arrive two to three days after a final decision is made, she said.

The official said the plan would not go forward without the support of the Rwandan government, which repeated yesterday that with refugees returning, the mission is not needed.

"Obviously, we need the consent of the Rwandan government," the U.S. official said. "Given the nature of the mission, it wouldn't be worthwhile if [Rwanda] weren't agreeable."

In the meantime, U.S. airlift control teams have been sent to three airfields in Africa to help provide relief supplies. Those teams will work out of airports in Rwanda, Kenya and Uganda, Perry said.

Perry said the situation in Africa "still remains very fluid" and the administration is prepared to step up its efforts if needed.

The Clinton administration was on the verge last week of sending In 1,000 combat-ready paratroopers to seize an airport to deliver relief supplies, bolstered by 3,000 support troops in nearby countries.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Wednesday, Nov. 20

Film — Join the Biracial/Multiracial Students Association at 7 p.m. in the New Africa House library to watch Imitation of Life, a classic film that addresses the "tragic mulatto." All are invited to join, watch or discuss issues in the biracial community. For more information, contact Jordan at 546–3548.

MASSPIRG — A Hunger Banquet will be held at 6 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The event is sponsored by the Massachusetts Student Public Interest Group. For more information, contact the MASS Student PIRG Organizer at 545–0199.

Meeting — The UMass Poetry Society will meet at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 911. Attendance is strongly urged as nominations for upcoming elections will be held. For more information, call Tim at 546–0562.

Meeting — The Economics Club is holding a meeting for all economics majors from the five colleges. A representative from the Mather Career Center will be holding a resume workshop. For more information, call 549– 4089 or 586–7398.

Meeting — The Golden Key Honor society will hold a general body meeting at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 804–808. General elections for officers will be held. For more information, call Michelle at 549–0189.

Film — "Half the Kingdom" will be shown at 3:30 p.m. in the Hillel House Recreation Room. The Jewish Film Class invites all interested.

Reading — The Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures will host Gennadiy Samsonenko's reading of his book, "Rekviem po Sergeyu Grin'kovu" from 6:30 to 8:00 p.m. in Herter Hall room 601. The reading will be in Russian.

Discussion — A multiracial, anti–racism coalition–building meeting will be held at 7 p.m. All those interested should attend. The location is TBA. For more information, call Judith Schneider at 253–1432 or Nikki Morse at 546–0432.

Class — "Tanya Class," a free, drop–in class on the Tanya, the Chassidic text of mysticism, will be held at 8 p.m. at Chabad House at Amherst.

Religion — "How Do Interfaith Relationships and Marriages Impact Religious Identity and Religious Communities?" will be held in Butterfield Main Lounge at 7:30 p.m. The event is a part of the Religion and Identity Series. All are welcome. For more information, call 546–5174.

Lecture — "U.S. Foreign Policy Toward Russia, Scandinavia, and the Baltic Republics" by U.S. Ambassador to Finland, Derek Shearer, Amherst College, Merrill II, 7:30 p.m. Free and open to the public. For more information, call 549–4600.

Poetry — There will be a poetry and prose reading at the Student Union Art Gallery at 7:30 p.m., sponsored by the Spectrum. Anyone interested in reading their work in a non– competitive environment is welcome to sign up. Please call 545–2240 for more information.

Presentation — "Bosnia 1996: War Crimes, International Law, and Democratization" is the title of a presentation by noted scholar Beverly Allen. Preceding her talk will be a reading by Northampton poet Adrian Oktenberg from her new book, The Bosnia Elegies. The event takes place at 7:30 p.m. at Stoddard Hall, Smith College. For more information, call Friends of Bosnia at 586–6450.

Thursday, Nov. 21

Coffee Hour — Signing Coffee Hour sponsored by UMass HANDS at 7 p.m. in the Bluewall. Any questions, call the office at 545–1952 or stop by the office in room 306 of the Student Union.

Film Festival — The UMass Dept. of Germanic Languages and Literatures and its German Club are sponsoring a Heinrich Boll Film Festival in Thompson 106, starting at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free; popcorn and soda will be provided. For more information, call 545–2350.

Meeting — S.H.A.R.E. Students Helping Area Reach–Out Efforts is having a general meeting from 7–8 p.m. in Campus Center room 804–08. New members are welcome.

Meeting — The Math Club will meet at 7 p.m. in LGRT 1521D. A film, "Donald Duck in Mathmagic Land" and then a game of pool in the Student Union. All math majors are invited to attend.

Poetry Reading — An evening of original poetry will be held at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Art Gallery. All are encouraged to read original works and to have them published. Sign up for the reading at the Art Gallery or contact Maria at 253–6674 for further information.

Skip–A–Meal — To help Oxfam America, MASSPIRG and Dining Services are encouraging students to skip a dinner. Proceeds from the meal will be donated to help the hungry.

Friday, Nov. 22

Religious Services — "Thanksgiving" Shabbat services with a free meal at 6 p.m. at Chabad House, 30 N. Hadley Rd., Amherst. Free and open to the public and for more information, call 549–4094.

Sleep Out — An event sponsored by MASSPIRG to educate the campus community about homelessness by sleeping outside. Students raise money by getting pledges for hours sleeping out. For more information, contact Melanie Undem, MASS Student PIRG Organizer, at 545– 0199.

Saturday, Nov. 23

Concert — Holiday, Tizzy, Ribboncandy, the Radio Angels and Jeremy Willis perform at Greenough Residence Hall from 7 – 11 p.m. Admission is $3 for UMass students and $4 for all others. For more information, call 665–7243.

Dance — Club Spin at the Bluewall from 9 p.m.–1 a.m. General admission before 10:30 is $3, after, $5. Special discount for AASA members. Bring a canned good and get $1 off admission. Sponsored by the Asian American Students Association. For more information, call 545–0189.

Notices

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584– 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Fall Library Workshops — UMass reference librarians are offering a series of workshops. November sessions will include demonstrations of databases and Web sites in Literature with Literature Specialist Liz Fitzpatrick (Nov. 18, from 1–2 p.m.,) and the Internet (Nov. 21, from 9:30–11 a.m.) with Internet Resources Librarian Emily Hurn. All workshops will be in the Library Instruction Room, main floor, W. E. B. Du Bois Library. All are welcome, although sign up is required for the Internet sessions. Please call 545– 6892 to register.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Tues., Dec. 3 from 5:30–7 p.m. in CC room 165–169.

Campus Police Log

Accident — Leaving the Scene
Nov. 14
A parked vehicle on Infirmary Way was struck. The offending vehicle left the scene.

Accident — Personal Injury
Nov. 17
There was a two–vehicle accident on University Drive. One operator complained of neck pain but declined medical treatment.

Alarm — (Pre) Fire
Nov. 17
A bulletin board in Brown Residence Hall was set on fire.

Alarm — Fire
Nov. 14
There was a malicious activation of a pull station in Boyden Gymnasium.

Animal Complaint
Nov. 15
There was a report of a barking dog in a vehicle in the Campus Center Garage.
Nov. 18
A bat was removed from a room in Thoreau Residence Hall by Environmental Health & Services.

Annoying Behavior
Nov. 14
An individual motorist reported being followed by another motorist on University Drive.
Nov. 16
Staff from Van Meter Residence Hall requested assistance with unruly individuals.
An individual in Greenough Residence Hall was screaming for a prolonged period of time. Police checked the well– being of the individual.
Nov. 17
There was a report of intoxicated individuals knocking on doors at the North Village Apartments.

Assault & Battery
Nov. 15
There was a report from University Health Services of an individual injured in an off–campus fight. The case was referred to Amherst Police.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering
Nov. 16
A vending machine in Hills House was broken into. The cash box was stolen.
A vending machine in Lewis Residence Hall was broken into. The cash box was stolen.

Disorderly Conduct
Nov. 17
Five intoxicated individuals caused a disturbance in the lobby of John Adams Residence Hall.

Disturbance
Nov. 15
There was an argument between several individuals on Stockbridge Road.
Nov. 16
An unruly individual in the lobby of John Quincy Adams Residence Hall was issued a warning.
An unruly individual in the Mullins Center was removed.

Drug Law Offenses
Nov. 16
Michael Venne, 23, of 103 Stonia Dr., Chicopee, was arrested on Southwest Circle on a warrant from Northampton District Court.

Health/Safety Hazard
Nov. 15
A syringe was found in a waste basket in Boyden Gymnasium.
Nov. 16
A car fire in parking lot 32 was extinguished by Amherst Fire Department.
Nov. 17
A brush fire on Thatcher Way was extinguished by the Amherst Fire Department.

Larceny
Nov. 14
Four measuring tapes were reported stolen from Hasbrouck Laboratory.
A tire was stolen from a vehicle in parking lot 49.
A chair was stolen from the Brown Residence Hall lounge.
A chair was stolen from the lobby of Coolidge Residence Hall.
Nov. 15
Clothing was stolen from a locker in the Curry Hicks Cage.
A parking decal was stolen from a vehicle in parking lot 22.
There was a report from an individual in Kennedy Residence Hall of a credit card previously stolen used for illegal purchases.
Nov. 16
An UPS delivery was claimed by another individual in Brooks Residence Hall.

Liquor Law Violations
Nov. 16
Dennis J. O'Brien, 20, of 150 Melrose Ave., Needham, was arrested in Moore Residence Hall for disorderly conduct.

Vandalism
Nov. 14
Emergency lights were damaged on a vehicle in the Campus Center Garage.
Nov. 15
Sexual graffiti was written on a door in Brett Residence Hall.
A vehicle in parking lot 22 was damaged.
Nov. 16
A vehicle in parking lot 63 was damaged.
A vending machine in Tobin Hall was broken into. The contents were stolen.
A vehicle in parking lot 11 was keyed.
Nov. 17
A vending machine in Gorman Residence Hall was damaged.
A women's bathroom was maliciously damaged in McNamara Residence Hall.
A vending machine was damaged in Thatcher Residence Hall.

Introducing
Collegian Classifieds
HALF PRICE
THURSDAYS!
Only For Students
Only at the Collegian Newsstand
10am - 2pm
On the Campus Center
Concourse

CAMPUS ACTIVITIES AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PRESENTS
Weekly Program Series:
Something Every Friday
featuring
Singer/Songwriter
Barbara Kessler

1995 WINNER ARTIST OF THE YEAR NEW FOLK AWARD
Bluewall Cafe
November 22, 1996
8:00 pm, Free
This series made possible by a Grant from Auxiliary Services and the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and
DAILY COLLEGIAN
"Moll Flanders"
• • •
Immediately Following

For more information check out our website:
http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/calendar.htm

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN

What do you think it means?
Onlookers admire the untitled painting by Jennifer Tibbetts featured at the Student Union Art Gallery yesterday morning in the Student Union.

Panel examines future of Israel

Netanyahu's election and future of the peace process discussed

By Adam Klein
Collegian Correspondent

The election of Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu raised serious questions about Israel's desire and ability to continue the peace process.

In a discussion last night, held at the Octagon building at Amherst College entitled, "Israel and the Middle East," a panel of Five College faculty addressed how Netanyahu's administration is handling the conflict with the Palestinians.

The panelists were Professor Jay Berkovitz, University of Massachusetts, Professor Donna Divine, Smith College and Professor Gordy Levin, Amherst College.

Berkovitz, a supporter of Netanyahu was in Israel during the recent election.

"It was the most tumultuous time ever in Israel," Berkovitz said.

The media portrayed Netanyahu's supporters as ultra–religious right–wing fanatics when in fact most of Netanyahu's supporters were moderates, according to Berkovitz.

Voters supported Netanyahu because he was seen as the candidate that could prevent Israel from becoming a completely secular state, he said.

On the peace process, Berkovitz said, "it is a runaway train going in the right direction, but without a reliable breaking system."

Gordy Levin disagreed with Berkovitz. He said, "the election of Netanyahu [was] an absolute disaster for the state of Israel," because Netanyahu will never allow a Palestinian state.

According to Levin, Netanyahu is a skillful and clever politician, but not wise, and combines the worst aspects of Israeli and American politics. Levin said, "this combination gives him his capacity to be politically effective."

Levin compared Netanyahu's vision of a Jewish state with notions of German purity and apartheid. The Israeli government cannot be democratic because it is unjust to the Palestinians by denying them equal rights as citizens, said Levin.

"One–hundred–sixty–thousand Arabs have been kept under force of arms in Jerusalem for 40 years," he said.

Donna Divine said that Netanyahu's slim victory is attributable to issues of security (i.e. bus bombs) and religion.

Netanyahu promised to support the settlements of the separatist ultra–orthodox groups with government funds and maintain the pure Jewish culture of Israel, she said.

However, under pressure to conform with the peace process, he has abandoned this goal, and the religious community feels betrayed, said Divine.

■ advising

continued from page 1

offices.

"We're focusing on being the generalized advising center," Rooney said.

UAC, however, is not free of problems.

The current work–force is understaffed, which became apparent this week when dozens of students were seen waiting outside the office for help with pre–registration, throughout the day.

Two deans, the director, and an office manager oversee the advising staff of five graduate students, who are given two weeks of intensive training, according to Quailbash. There are only two or three advisors in the office at one time. On an average day, approximately 30 students will seek advising. During pre–registration, however, these few advisors must try to accommodate nearly 100 students a day, said Qazilbash.

To answer "simple questions and book appointments", there are a total of 14 undergraduate student counselors of which two are present at all times, said Jose Conde, a sophomore student counselor.

"Students have been really patient," added Qazilbash. "They do see that we are working and then not waiting while we're on coffee break."

According to Rooney, nearly 6,000 students will come through UAC a semester, 2,900 without a major.

Qazilbash said that last year, UAC attempted to alleviate this problem by splitting into two advising centers. The UAC concentrates on undeclared students and the declared students will be directed to a academic Dean's office.

However, this does not resolve a major problem — an under–staffed work force.

Students have not only complained about long–lines, but feel short–changed by the fact that UAC can not provide a permanent advisor. If students continue to use UAC, they are going to be faced with acquainting themselves again with a new face each time.

Rooney said he would like to have more permanent advisors who work full time.

The unanimous complaint by the staff is that their biggest problem is the size of the office itself. The office is extremely small for the amount of students they have to accommodate.

In addition, it is not handicapped accessible.

Qazilbash said that on occasions when a student does come in for personal problems, they are not getting the level of privacy that one deserves due to the tight space.

According to Robin Coolbeth, the office manager, there has been some talk among the deans of building a new facility which would not only increase space, but would centralize all of the advising programs.

Such proposals exist, according to Elizabeth Petroff, associate dean of academic advising, who said that the UAC may be relocated to a larger space in the Goodell building.

If given the proper resources and funding by the University, this could very well be one of the more effective advising centers on campus.

However, several advisors have pointed out that students do not come in until they are in trouble, which makes advising more difficult. If it has gotten to the point where the student cannot be helped, it makes the most advanced advising facility completely ineffective.

Thus, the University is challenged with the task of reaching out to students as soon as they begin their first day of classes — which means more dollars and a larger work space for the UAC.

Residential academic advancement programs

Less controversy surrounds residential based academic programs. According to Collegian sources, most students seem satisfied by what the university has to offer.

Two programs, the recently conceived "Universe Through the University" and Talent Advancement Program have ambitious goals — to make UMass as manageable as a school about half its size.

Advising is a central component in both programs, as the University asserts that these programs bring students into increased contact with departments and advisers.

"Universe Through the University"

The "Universe Through the University" program, first offered this year to undeclared incoming freshman, is designed to make new students feel more at home in a University environment.

According to Carol Rogers, coordinator of the project and graduate student in the UMass School of Education, the program has been doing well in it's first semester.

"Universe Through the University" offers students a variety of services. A weekly series offers students a chance to hear from the deans of different departments about different colleges within the institution.

"There's an on–site advising office in Patterson Residence Hall," added Rogers.

Lee Dagle, residence hall director for the Patterson– Mackimee Residence cluster, where the students live and engage in many of the program's offered activities and services, was optimistic about the potential of the program.

"I think it' proven to be really beneficial for people," said Dagle.

"Our basic concern we have is that students get the resources that they need," she added.

Participants in the program take two classes together, a faculty–taught seminar entitled, "Twenty–First Century Challenges," and "College Writing."

In addition to a tutoring and a mentor program, students have also been provided with workshops on time management, choosing a major and study skills.

Talent Advancement Program

The Talent Advancement Program (TAP) has 1030 participants and is the largest Residential Academic Programs offered by the University.

It differs from the "Universe Through the University" program, in that it involves students coming into the university with a declared major.

Open to first year students in a variety of majors; students are given the opportunity to live, study and take classes together in a effort to foster a sense of community and create a collective interest in their academic discipline.

The first TAP program began in 1991 with the school of management. Its main purpose was to "create a small college within a large university for freshman," according to Therese Pasquale, assistant director of residential academic programs.

"At such a large institution, it's important to be connected with a small group. Students involved in TAP live on or near the same floor. They take several classes together in a classroom located in the residence hall," she said.

Pasquale also explained as first year students there is a need to connect with other students on the floor.

"The TAP program helps speed that connection up because everyone on the floor are first year students involved in the same major. Eventually the connection happens with everyone, it just helps to speed up the process of building a community both academically and socially," she said.

The TAP programs "allows students to get one of the advantages of going to a small school. The programs makes it easier for freshman to find their place," added Pasquale.

Almost all freshman involved in the TAP program take their freshman writing classes together.

"The students having classes together creates a real opportunity to form study groups and peer support groups. TAP forms a learning community, it helps students to have a successful first year because the feel part of a small group," she said.

For faculty, TAP also provides for a unique experience.

"Teachers go into residence halls to teach. They feel more connected to the lives of students, it goes beyond the classroom," said Pasquale who also added that the programs tries to add new majors every year.

First year nursing students and roommates, Adrienne Petito and Ruthie Kaplan said that TAP programs are beneficial.

"Because most everyone on the floor is are the same classes everyone usually studies at the same time, so the floor is quiet," said Petito.

Senior Alana Clermont, a resident assistant on the physical science TAP floor in Washington Tower said,

"Everyone helps each other. They are all in the same classes so they have the same homework. TAP helps forms a sense of community on the floor."

Michael Elliott, Leigh Faulkner, Daniel E. Levenson and Beth McCarthy are Collegian staff members.

Jonathan Liberty, Collegian staff member, contributed to this special report.

■ COMEC

continued from page 1

campaign. Scott said at a faculty senate meeting that he hopes to increase his percentage.

"There's a very real term called 'the helper's high' which has been scientifically proven," said Scott

"The phenomenon begins with a charitable act, which brings on a rush of good feeling, followed by a release of endorphin chemicals in the brain, and finally, a sense of satisfaction that lasts for hours."

"On Nov. 20, I'm asking the entire campus to reach a COMEC high," said Scott.

UMass is presently the number three donor in the Commonwealth.

As of Nov. 18, $177,000 has been raised, which is about 83 percent of $190,000 campus goal.

Fox said that the goal of the campaign's participation rate is 27 percent.

Yet, Scott has said that he would like the goal to be 50 percent.

UMass Worcester is presently at 53 percent participation rate and is the number one donor in the state.

Fox said that in order to improve the percentage of participation in the COMEC Campaign people "should just give a small amount, they'll get a good feeling and they'll want to give again.

"We even ask people for just one dollar," Fox said.

"If you are giving one dollar or $3,000, we ask you to designate where you want that money to go and we will make sure that it goes to your charitable agency," Fox said.

HELP WANTED
We are offering great part-time positions as Inventory Auditors designed to fit your busy schedule.
Consider All We Have to Offer:
- Starting Salary from $6.50 to $7.50 /Hour
- Paid Training and Management Programs
- Morning, Evening and Weekend Hours
- Flexible Schedules
- Medical Benefits Available
- Credit Union Membership Available
- Potential for Advancement

These are ideal positions for students.
Work 8-10 hours per week during the semester and 30 or more hours during winter and summer breaks.
RGIS INVENTORY SPECIALISTS
See our AD on the web at www.umass.edu under Student Employment Office or call 1-800-511-5830. Interviewing at UMass Campus Center-
Nov 21: 8:30am-8:30pm Room 917 Nov 25: 8:30am-8:30pm Room 163-73

DOMINO'S PIZZA
CHEESE PIZZA SALE
$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM
EXPIRES 11/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Humphrey Brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Jamie Smithemier Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Michael Elliott News Editor Maureen Majercwiski Assistant Operations Manager
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

The ticket system stinks

Of all the inane procedures conducted at the University, few are as annoying as trying to get tickets for basketball and hockey games.

I have one exceedingly simple question, which is this: If we all pay for athletic tickets through the service fee that is part of our tuition as undergraduates, why are we not guaranteed tickets for hockey and basketball games?

Think about it. If a similar system were used for housing services, everyone would pay their tuition and housing fee, show up at school and then maybe about 20 percent would get a place to live — the rest would be left wandering around, sleeping in downtown Amherst.

It should be obvious to anyone how this system is inherently flawed.

Even worse than the lack of available tickets is the charging of admission to students who are unable to procure tickets through this wonderful system set up by this fine establishment.

Okay, enough sarcasm. But really, doesn't this seem like a totally unfair and ass-backwards way of running things?

Boy, I can hear those letters to the editor being written right now. Something along the lines of "At a University this large... blah blah... blah... blah."

The bottom line is that at a University this large, where we have THE ALMIGHTY MULLINS CENTER there is absolutely no reason why many more students who want tickets to games should not be able to get them, and without waiting in line in the middle of winter at 5 a.m. either.

Athletics should be a part of school pride, not profit.

I took it upon myself to do a little research into the subject, and what I came up with was absolutely shocking.

According to the Bursar's office all undergraduates enrolled in the University pay a $361 "service fee" each semester. In a written statement provided by the office, the service fee is explained: "Funding from this fee is used to provide students with a comprehensive program of Fine Arts Council events and reduced student ticket prices, men's and women's intercollegiate athletic programs, the transit system and it also supports bond payments for student used campus buildings."

The Office of Institutional research says there are currently 17,731 undergraduates enrolled in the University. At $361 a piece paid as the "service fee," that means the University is recieving $6,400,891 each semester, and $12,801,782 a year.

Remember that the next time you're buried in a pre-dawn snowstorm while trying to get tickets that you've already paid for.

Of the 9,500 seats in the Mullins Center, only 3,500 of these seats are handed out to undergraduate service fee– paying students. According to the Athletic Ticket Office, at least part of seats are made available to season ticket holders.

Only 19 percent of the undergraduate student body has access to tickets for men's hockey and basketball games. Furthermore, this lucky 19 percent only has access through the service fee to 37 percent of the available seats for any given home game.

How much money does the University make off of the other 6500 seats? Do they sell them for profit? Are they given to rich alumni so that we can get more money for research and finally join the glorious elite AAU?

Can anyone answer that for me? Hmm?

With 10 men's basketball home games last year and, assuming the other 6500 tickets were sold, a $15 ticket price, the University would have recieved $975,000. I have no idea how many tickets were actually sold, but it would seem to make sense that tickets not given out to undergraduates be sold. If they were not sold, then who were they given away to?

This year there will be 12 men's basketball home games; at $15 per ticket they will receive $1.17 million in ticket sales if the tickets are sold to paying customers.

If all of the men's basketball tickets not distributed to students are sold, they are generating, in my estimation, over $1 million a year. My question is this: Where the hell does all that money go?

Only 19 percent of the undergraduate student body has access to tickets for men's hockey and basketball games. Furthermore, this lucky 19 percent only has access through the service fee to 37 percent of the available seats for any given home game.

Daniel E. Levenson

The statistics for men's hockey are the same.

While I'm on the subject of the service fee, let's take a look at another absurd part of the fee — the section which states that it "supports bond payments for student used campus buildings."

I would be extremely curious as to exactly which buildings we are helping to pay for, and how much students actually use these buildings. Are they dorms? Is it the library? Are we contributing money to help pay for the fine quality lecture halls in Thompson, with their nasty broken seats and dingy interiors? Or maybe the Fine Arts Center, eight billion tons of ugly concrete?

Does part of the fee go to finance the preparation and serving of the fine cuisine they serve us in the so-called "dining" halls?

I am sick and tired of paying for services and facilities that are sub–standard, and I think it's about time someone looked into exactly where all this money is going and who's benefiting. It should be the students.

Unfortunately, I tend to doubt it is.

Daniel E. Levenson is a Collegian columnist.

Delegates encourage Zionist efforts

SEATTLE — This majestic Pacific northwest city and several of its prominent companies proudly played host to the Council of Jewish Federations (CJF) 65th annual General Assembly (GA), attracting approximately 3,000 enthusiastic delegates hailing from Canada and the United States.

Henry J. Brier

Essential components of the Nov. 13 through Nov. 16 Puget Sound conference, which was swiftly evacuated during the first night because of what Seattle Police called a "bogus" bomb scare, were plenaries where delegates offered unwavering support for a strong and secure Israel as The National Home for Jews, better known as Zionism.

Additionally integral segments of the GA in the Emerald City were spoken words on the present Israeli leadership and the preceding administration.

"It is clear that Israel today is far stronger than it was half a century ago, when it was an embryonic fledgling entity that nearly lost its life in the War of Independence," said the esteemed Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu Thursday night via satellite hookup from Jerusalem, where it was Friday morning. "We have a strong State and we have a thriving economy. I think Israel is going to be one of the great success stories of the twenty-first century, indeed of the twentieth century."

Hours before the GA began, Prime Minister Netanyahu cancelled his intention to deliver his speech at the conference because the plan for Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank city Hebron was in advanced stages which, he said, required his presence as the highest–ranking officer.

Proudly supportive of the GA and its objectives was the main sponsor, the Seattle–based Boeing Company, recognized as the world's largest airplane manufacturer. Delegates enjoyed both complimentary coffee from Starbucks and bags from Eddie Bauer, as these Seattle–based companies were also supportive major sponsors.

In attendance at the GA was former Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres, who lost his re–election bid this past May when his campaign platform of furthering the peace process was perceived by the slight Israeli majority as neglecting needed consideration for security considerations. The 1994 Nobel Peace Prize Laureate said during a Friday morning press conference that there exists now "a window of opportunity" to establish peace, and future generations of Israelis and Palestinians should be proud to reap the benefits of what he hopes will be accomplished within the next four years.

"We now have an opportunity to translate a long march in history to a new promise in the future," Peres eloquently said in his speech to the entire GA later on Friday morning. "This is our task. This should be our agenda, and for this we have both to volunteer and mobilize all of our forces."

To many, Israel represents safe haven where refugees can escape to in the event that history repeats itself. The role that the North American Jew presently enjoys entails the freedom to fulfill productive societal positions in fields such as psychology and political science, and this time period and opportunity has been closely paralleled to those of the German Jew during the decades preceding World War II.

However, a main difference is that in the early 1940s, when Nazi Germany implemented their "Final Solution," an elaborate plan to eliminate world Jewry, refugees escaping Europe were consistently denied entry to countries throughout the world.

Therefore, after failing to gain access nearly everywhere, the exiles were returned to countries such as Germany, Poland, Switzerland, France and Greece, places under Nazi rule where a horrid fate awaited them. Outside of being smuggled into what in 1948 officially became Israel, where the natives and the mandatory power also minimized immigration on a quota basis, the only exit from Europe for Jews was through smokestacks.

Individuals with an even remote knowledge of history know this.

This is why a strong and secure Israel with even further worldwide political and business relations maintains so high a priority.

This is why the peace process has the potential to mutually benefit all individuals privy to the ongoing dialogue and developments in the Middle East.

"I'm convinced that we can offer the vision of a final settlement that would give the Palestinians the freedom to conduct their lives," Prime Minister Netanyahu said. "At the same time [we need] the security necessary to conduct and maintain the life of The State of Israel and allow itself its future prosperity with security."

Henry J. Brier is a Collegian columnist.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Should we trust cops?

It's hard to trust cops.

The concept of them that most of us had as kids (what we were thinking of if we said "I wanna be a policeman when I grow up?") is the same one many adults still retain: they are pure, upstanding, moral and objective enforcers of unadulterated Justice — just interested in the facts, ma'am.

On the other hand, incidents like the beating of Rodney King, the less–publicized murder of Detroit resident Malice Green and the suspicious circumstances around the shooting of African–American Ben Schoolfield by the Springfield police have built a depiction of police whose tradition reaches at least as far back as the Black Panther movement: the cop as "The Man", or more often, "Pig."

Daniel Bodah

Somewhere in between these two stereotypes, real cops play out the roles of their social class. They aren't the moral servants and protectors of some blind goddess with a sword in one hand and scales in the other. They also aren't all monsters who extort money, sell drugs, torture minorities and the underprivileged and fix evidence to cover their tracks. Cops are, on some level, just people doing a job.

Ben Schoolfield was driving a van the police were told had been stolen at gunpoint — he had borrowed it from a friend. They had the idea that he was armed — he wasn't. The official story seems to go that a rookie cop accidentally broke the window of the van with his gun when he approached too closely, and then Schoolfield grabbed the gun. In the struggle, Schoolfield was "accidentally" shot dead.

Everyone knows that accidents happen, but what's come up in private investigations of the Schoolfield killing directly contradicts the official story peddled by the police. It has been demonstrated that the cop could not have accidentally broken Schoolfield's window, and that even if he had intentionally broken it with his gun, he would have been injured (which he wasn't.) The most immediate conclusion we're left with is that the cop shot Schoolfield from a distance through the window. By any report, the cops violated many official procedures for handling such an incident — procedures intended to prevent just these sorts of events.

We don't know if the police have evidence presenting a believable scenario because they refuse to release the results of the internal probe they conducted. The cop who shot Schoolfield was exonerated, and a private party was held in his honor by his fellow cops, at which he was congratulated on "a job well done." The organizer of this party was kicked off the force a little later, after he had called a bunch of local African–American leaders leaving mocking messages in a fake African–American accent while making reference to church burnings in the South, among other things. .

So yeah, maybe all cops are just folks doin' a job on one level. But cops are also a class with an enormous degree of power over the rest of us. Individual cops who want to keep status on the force have to submit to the rules of the class. And as numerous incidents reveal, the cop class is rife with corruption, racism and incidents of abuse of power. These are structural problems, built into the class, not the aberrant behavior of a few random cops acting as individuals. The police leadership protects and covers up wrongdoing by their boys. The cop class is structured to promote these sorts of behavior more than the actions of cops who abide by the rules, and are "soft" on alleged "criminals" in the interest of preserving the presumption of innocence.

If you apply a consciousness of class realities to crime, you'll quickly see several facts: one, the police need crime to justify their existence and salaries; two, the police arrest a disproportionate number of people from disadvantaged classes (this has been shown by numerous sociological studies;) three, disadvantaged classes inevitably commit more crimes than the upper classes; four, the police are overwhelmingly employed to protect the wealth in the capitalist class. It's not too hard to conclude that the disadvantaged classes will revolt against their economic slavery, often from necessity, through acts such as theft and drug dealing. It's also not too hard to see the cop class as a sort of private army for the wealthy (and their pets, the middle class.)

I'm not trying to say that cops join the force for these reasons, or that cops are even really aware that they serve this role for the elite. Besides, it's hard to imagine a successful alternative to cops. If someone were in my house threatening me with a gun, I would be glad to see the cops enter without knocking. I'd rather it was a brave friend or neighbor, but still...

In the current sad situation, police departments in L.A., Detroit and Springfield continue resisting reforms aimed at eliminating the structural abuses they are known for. "We the people" adopt the hip cynicism that makes our protesting, angry comments a beloved form of entertainment. Looking at the federally–commissioned report on civil disturbances which reviewed waves of rioting in the '60s, you can see nothing has changed.

When will we demand that our men in blue be trustworthy and accountable?

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian columnist.

Imagine this

I don't know, but I have been told many times in the past that I look a little like John Lennon.

You know, that guy who is the father of Julian Lennon? Wait, that also might be dating me a little too much, especially for our reading public out in PC land. But when it comes down to it, I would rather be compared to the elder Lennon because I've heard the younger one's recordings. Awful.

Jorma Kansanen

But this is not an Arts and Living column, or a journey into the sublime intricacies of smash–mouth hockey — it's on my certain little resemblance to one of the greatest songwriters in history.

I wouldn't be saying this if it hadn't happened umpteen times. Last week, it did for the one–thousand–umpteenth time. Believe me, I have counted.

But, hey, I just don't see it.

I am not from Lee–vah–puhl (Liverpool), although I have been there. Cream is an awesome club to dance the night away, and Albert Dock, with the mini–Tate Gallery, is cool to stroll upon with the "love of your life," but don't go near the football club. Manchester United all the way... we're the real Reds in the Northwest of England, for all of you Scousers in the audience. And I may make a good omelette, but I am not the Eggman. But a society that bases almost all of its initial judgments on superficial means does see it, and I felt I needed to get all of this off my chest. After all these years, I have learnt to deal with this phenomenon, if you can call it that, with a series of one–liners that both stimulate and exacerbate the workings of the cerebellum. You know, the noodle... the belfry... the brain. Here is a little sample:

"Come together" — One of the first experiences of my Lennon–like facial structure was at 18 years old. I was at a friend's party at WPI (Worcester Polytechnic Institute,) and at the time of the night where you either get lucky or go home alone (oh! so sad), I met this quite attractive woman.

We talked for a minute or so, and just when our conversation almost dissolved into the koo–koo juice I was drinking, she said with an "I soooo drunk" giggle, "You know, you look just like John Lennon." I commented that I did not know if that was a good/bad thing, with her saying that it was a good thing. Bells went off in my mind, and I thought I finally met my "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds."

So, I responded, "Hey, let's come together." Stupid, stupid, stupid. I did not know what was more koo–koo, me or my drink. And just when I expected her to step back and punt, she giggled, smiled, and walked away. Damn. But I saw her at future parties, and it did end up as a happily ever after story. One thing I have to say, though — I only use that one with friends, and not with people who kick balls (i.e. soccer, football) for a living.

"Give Peace A Chance" — At a Dead show a few years back, I ran into this guy from Oregon whom I had not seen in a few years. We talked for a while, and he introduced me to his tour–mates. One of them was his fiance, who looked and dressed in Valley fashion: cords with patches, moccasins, thread bracelets, three–day old unwashed hair, etc. In my true gentlemanly–style, I introduced myself. All she did was squint at me. Bewilderment rippled her face, and I thought I had a zit on my nose or something.

I asked, "What's wrong?" She gradually smiled from ear– to–ear, and then slowly said, "Wow, man, you look just like John Lennon!" I replied in said fashion, "Hey, give peace a chance, here Sunshine!" She laughed, and gave me a big hug. Gee–willikers. Yeah, it was as sweet as it sounds.

"Happiness is a Warm Gun" — The incident that prompted me to write this column was last week. I was walking past Herter, and these two baby–faced, not a minute over–18 white trash punks were walking towards me. Dressed in their 311–style best (i.e. over–sized pants, NBA jackets, hat turned backwards,) they walked like they lived in the ghetto all their lives. You could tell they weren't from Compton but Easthampton, and were just wanna–bes.

I hear one of them say, "Look, this guy thinks he's John Lennon." I do not condone violence, or the use of hand guns. I write about hockey, but in real–life, I do not live like Tie Domi. But I had to do it.

I stopped right in front of them, gave them my best crazy Kramer look, and chortled, "Hee, hee, hee... happiness is a warm gun." They did not know what to do with themselves. I think one said, "Mommy?," and the other did a number one in their pants. Aah, life is good.

Nobody told me there would be days like these, strange days, indeed.

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

Wake up and organize

For many people, the word privatization brings little more to mind than the unfocused image of private companies doing business in formerly public arenas. However, it is a growing trend among mainstream economic strategizing to which we must pay closer attention.

Over the last 20 years, conservative economists and their political cohorts, from Reagan to Gingrich, have waged a massive campaign on the American consciousness to instill in us a distrust in government enterprise. Thought to be bloated and inefficient, these government operations were to be replaced with market–driven private enterprise, a notion that was celebrated by the corporate mainstream media. Now, this columnist is far from a cheerleader for the federal government, but I feel we should closely examine what has been and is still being put forth as progress.

Sam McAfee

Since the Great Depression, government intervention in the economy in the form of social programs, progressive taxation and public enterprises (postal service, public schools and transportation) have done much to alleviate the havoc caused by the unfettered markets of the 1920s. Now we are to assume that giant corporate bureaucracies are more efficient and would better serve the interests of the public than giant government bureaucracies. There is no real evidence that this is true.

The clear difference between these situations is that while the government spends our tax dollars to provide services over which we have at least limited authority, private corporations serve only their investors and provide service completely without our control.

Take for instance the case of Boston City Hospital, a facility previously open to those who could not afford insurance or emergency treatment fees, which no longer exists thanks to its merger into John Silber's Boston University empire. Not only will poor Bostonians not be treated for emergencies, but unionized service workers no longer have contracts for even some jobs under Silber's strictly anti–union policy. This is a case of privatization for no motive other than greed. The services provided are not superior, job security is virtually non–existent and overpaid administrators can use the lower operation cost from lay–offs to increase their own paychecks.

These actions are often hailed by the corporate media structure as progress, especially when they just got the biggest public give–away in years, the Telecommunications Act. Corporate communication empires have of course celebrated the logic of the market since it is in their interest. Few saw antitrust issues in this cannibalization of public airwaves, access to which is limited only by one's bank account.

Mainstream policy makers and politicians alike have all been centering restructuring plans around corporate involvement in the public sphere. Even Sen. Kerry masks carving up the UMass system for corporate plundering in the rhetoric of efficiency and market–driven quality standards. Rather than increasing funding to the system as a whole, legislators have squeezed the budget for public education as a means to force public institutions into accepting private investment.

While the Graduate Union battles to increase their meager benefits in the face of an unwavering administration bought off by tantalizing corporate offers, the undergrads daydream of basketball days gone past while services are stripped away, classes get more crowded and tuition and fees increase. What will it take for the undergrads to realize that this fight is not just about TA wages or Pizza Hut in the Hatch? It is not just a graduate issue, or even just a school issue. It is about the quality and accountability of goods and services in America. It is about more for the rich and less for the rest. Wake up and organize!

Sam McAfee is a Collegian Columnist.

Waiting for superstardom?

I think it would be cool to be a celebrity.

If anything, I already have the name. I'd join Madonna and Cher as being known around the world on a first–name only basis.

Every morning, I could pick up the National Enquirer and find all my most embarassing moments listed on the front page. Like the time I fell down the stairs going to the Collegian — that would be a great photograph on the front page of a broadsheet.

Everytime I stepped out of my dorm room, flash bulubs would go off in my face. I'd have to wear sunglasses to prevent being blinded by the lights.

Seema Gangatirkar

I would never be able to go to class. It'd be a tough squeeze, you know, with the entourage and stuff. I'd hate to disrupt class with all the commotion.

And of course my phone would ring insistently for social engagements in Hollywood. I could have that candelit dinner with Tom Cruise or go on a shopping spree at K–Mart with Rosie O'Donnell.

And if I were really lucky, Grenada could make a stamp commerating me. Just this week they made one for Rocky. Sure, Sylvester Stallone's a happening sort of guy, but I don't get what he's got that I don't that puts him on a stamp.

And to top it all off, I'd never have to wait for a table in a restaurant again. Immediately, I'd be ushered to the best table in the house, already set with the food I like. And since I'd be filthy rich, I could tell the waiter to put it all on a tab. My accountant would handle it.

Actually, being a celebrity would be cool for about six minutes and then I'd probably want to retire to some distant planet.

Take Michael Jackson for instance. How much abuse can one person take?

The poor slob is a little weird and probably a lot misunderstood. Since I don't know him personally, I can't comment on what he's like, but I'm sure all the nasty things people say about him hurt. Especially when none of us have a real basis for anything that we say.

Or how about Madonna. The woman can't even give birth in private before her story is splashed all over the tabloids and talk shows. Do we have no shame?

Sure, we all want to know how Madonna, Jr. is going to turn out, but isn't there some kind of waiting period before newspapers attempt to get a picture of the little tyke? Unfortunately there isn't.

You only have to open up the Arts & Living page of the Boston Globe and check out the lives of people splayed all over the pages.

In the Nov. 18 issue of the paper, we learned that Dobbie Rowe, the mother of Jackson's baby, once posed topless. The picture was run on the Saturday edition of The New York Post. Never mind that the photo was three years old or that Rowe posed for the photograph as part of a magazine profile on her employer, a dermatologist.

In the same issue, we have a column by Diane White on Sarah Ferguson, the Duchess of York.

"Fergie," as the Duchess is popularly known, has had her share of troubles. Thanks to the tabloids, we all got to take part in those mishaps. But if you really think about it, was it necessary to go on ad nauseum about Fergie's toe–sucking habit? And does the Globe really need to devote valuable column space to a woman who has done nothing but cause herself and the Royal family embarassment?

The Globe and other publications give up the space because people want to know what the rich and famous are up to.

The desire to know more about celebrities has led to the evolution of those oh so well–mannered and reliable tabloid shows like "Hard Copy," "American Journal" and "Inside Edition."

The stories that spill the sleaze about celebrities are packaged into neat little bundles of vicious rumor and half– truths.

And we buy all of it, never really thinking about the person behind the name. Partly because a celebrity is so far removed from our daily existence and partly because it's so much more cool to rag on Cruise's sexuality or Oprah Winfrey's current diet than to debate the war in Rwanda.

There are those who argue that people who place themselves in the spotlight are fair game and should be able to handle any and all criticism, truthful or not.

It is an unfair burden to place on anyone, regardless of whether a person has attained celebrity status or not. There ought to be a basic respect for privacy.

I'll probably never get my three minutes on "Hard Copy" or my face on the cover of People magazine, but it doesn't matter.

I'll always have Grenada.

Seema Gangatirkar is a Collegian columnist.

A strong girl

Haven't we all been fascinated by someone? A drive, a demeanor, a face; it captures our attention and doesn't let us go until we are dismissed. This domination can be sexual, it can be mental or it can be spiritual. Sometimes, when you meet a very unique and special person, it can be all three.

Christopher Hassett

The first time I saw her I was sitting in the hotel lobby of the Four Seasons Hotel in Boston. She had just gotten off a bus from New York. I marveled at how she could walk about without being swamped by fans. I wondered how long she would be able to do that. After selling over 13 million albums and winning five Grammys, she certainly couldn't do that today.

I remember the first time I heard her. It was riding home from work with Ryan, a fellow house painter. The line "would she go down on you in a theater" seemed written for me. I had recently, 11 months ago at the time, ended a serious, at least on my end, relationship. We both worked in a movie theater. I'll leave the rest to your imagination.

I was marveling over this song as I listened to it again and again on my recently purchased CD, when a friend, Paul, told me he was interviewing her that weekend. Paul produces a television show which interviews up and coming musical artists. Since she had only sold 1 million albums in the United States at the time, she was still virtually unknown.

When I told my friends about my meeting her they said, "Alanis Morissette, who's that?" The picture I have of that meeting, the both of us side–by–side, is my most treasured possession today. It rests framed on my dresser in my dorm room as I type.

That night Paul took us to see her at The Paradise night club in Boston. It was wonderful. Perhaps 1000 of us crowded into this tiny little club with Morissette herself a mere meter away from me. The fact that a few hours ago I was chatting with her about her song lyrics only heightened my euphoria.

The next time I saw her was at Brandies University. I bought my friends concert tickets for Christmas so I knew I would have people to go with and I would get a ride to the concert. Charlie and Mark both couldn't handle the floor and went to go sit in the bleachers to listen to the concert. Jay and I couldn't be dragged off the floor. I can recall no other time in my life when I felt such sheer bliss: my best friend and I listening to Alanis Morissette live.

I have yet to meet anyone else who has attended three Alanis Morissette concerts. Thirteen million records after I first met her, I went to go see her again at Great Woods with Louis and Zephyr. They were still dating then and it was cute to see them together and enjoying the music of my Alanis.

Zephyr, like myself, comes from a conservative Christian family. We were raised as Jehovah's Witnesses. On the way home from the concert that night, we both spoke about how personal her song "Forgiven" seemed to both of us. We had both made promises to "God," both broken them, and both still work at deprogramming each other.

What I learned I rejected but I believe again and I will suffer the consequence of this inquisition. We all had a reason to be there; we all needed something to cling to. So we did.

I grieve over the fact that I will, more than likely, never meet her again. I spoke with her for a mere 20 minutes or so, but in that time I got a glimmer into the nature of this remarkable woman who hits notes with the precision of a laser guided missile and writes lyrics that are specific enough to evoke and vague enough to make everyone believe the song was written for them. Perhaps someday I can beg my editor to let me do a what–ever–happened–to piece on that wonder of the '90s, Alanis Morissette. But that would be tragic.

Due to my words of praise I have converted at least half a dozen people into Morissette fandom. I can not wait to see her again. But why, some people ask, do I love her so very much? At a time of my life when I was reeling from the ministrations of Mister Duplicity and trying to overcome an 18 year–long guilt complex, Alanis assured me that she's been there too. You can overcome such wrongs even though it will hurt, even maim along the way. Admitting that you were hurt doesn't mean you are weak. No one would call Alanis weak.

Even today, "You Oughtta Know" can still bring a lump to my throat. But unlike myself, when it comes to hurtful ex– lovers, Alanis isn't bitter at all. She truly would hate to bug you in the middle of dinner.

Christopher Hassett is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Live and let live, Molitor!

To the editor:

Mr Molitor, here are five words for your article, "Grateful they're dead." Live and let live, Erik. Your jealousy of these "two well–known entertainers" has led you to write a very misguided, negative and narrow minded article.

Yes, Jerry Garcia and Kurt Cobain are leaders and spokesmen for our generation because we made them leaders. Obviously, Garcia didn't sell out every concert he performed in the last few years or sell millions of dollars worth of records because he was a bad musician and his music "sucked." You rambled on about how you hate them without backing up a single statement. By this, we all know you never gave them a chance. If you actually listened to Garcia, you would have realized that his songs were neither about "drugs" or "self–misery."

Your outrageous statement that in honoring Garcia, you will end up "face down in the same gutter both of them ended up in" is ignorant to say the least. Try to justify that statement to President Clinton, Bill Weld, Doctors, professionals and others who enjoy Garcia's music. Here's some advice someone should have given you long ago, "If you don't have something good to say, then don't say it at all."

The real problem with our generation is negative people with narrow minds putting down everything. Who are you to judge another's actions? Instead of spitting on someone else's talents, you should take your negative energy and work on generating some positive, worthwhile ideas for your articles.

We've seen it before and I'm sure we'll see it again. That is using negativity on an issue that others feel strongly about to make up for your lack of writing skills. Through writing this letter to the editor, I've come up with a little advice for myself. When we were all immature back in elementary school, the teachers used to say, "Just ignore the negative, narrow minded people who always make fun of people and they'll go away." Hopefully your mentality will grow up.

D.J. McCormick
Amherst

In defense of the Dining Commons

To the editor:

I eat at the University Dining Commons on a regular basis, and the amount of food wasted by the people who eat there is disgraceful. Every day I feel sad and angry as I observe trays on the conveyor belts carrying entire sandwiches and similar items to be thrown away. On one occasion I saw a man set down a tray with four glasses, each one half–filled with Coke. There is no excuse for this. People who waste food should be ashamed; they cause prices to rise for all of us and selfishly despise the blessings of abundance which God has given us.

I would also like to disagree with those who complain about the food served in the Dining Commons. I have lived in many similar dorm situations and the food here at UMass is the best I've ever had in terms of quality, quantity and variety. In addition, the employees in general are friendly and eager to help. Maybe if we express our appreciation more and criticize less, we can help this world be a nicer place.

Steve Parker
Southwest

Remembering Bloody Sunday

To the editor:

On November 21, 1920, 14 innocent Irish citizens were machine gunned at a football match between County Dublin and County Tipperary by the English Black and Tans. The English Police came to the match looking for Sinn Feiners possibly involved in the previous killings of the day of British Secret Service Officers; some of the Irish victims were spectators and some were players. "Bloody Sunday" was the name eventually given to this day which bled the most horrific acts of the whole Anglo–Irish war. Thursday marks the 75th anniversary of "Bloody Sunday," and all who died must not be forgoten on this day. So tomorrow tonight, please, God bless their eternal souls and enjoy a pint of Guiness in their honor.

Michael J. Staunton
Amherst

Put up your dukes

Over Veterans' Day weekend I decided to take advantage of the three day weekend and make the lovely journey back home to beautiful Staten Island. The weekend was pretty ordinary. I did laundry. My mommy took me shopping. By the time Monday morning rolled around, I was glad that I would soon be coming back to school. Nothing interesting ever happens at home. I didn't even have any good stories to tell about my weekend. Nothing had sparked an idea for my next Collegian column. I was beginning to think it was a wasted weekend. Boy oh boy, was I wrong.

Ellza Berkowitz

You should understand that no trip home is complete without going to the Diner and my weekend was almost over, so Monday morning seemed like a good time to make a trip to the Unicorn Diner for breakfast. My friends Heather and Jami picked me up and we were off. The Unicorn Diner, here we come. You would think that in the three minutes it takes to get to this place, we could stay out of trouble. That's what I thought, at least. Oh, well. I was wrong.

As we were nearing the Diner, Heather had to stop short to make the left into the parking lot, and by the obscene gesturing of the passengers in the car behind us, we figured they had to stop short as well. No big deal. There was no accident. We were all fine, but when Heather responded to their obscene gesturing with some of her own, this carload of people (if you could call them that) took it upon themsleves to follow us into the parking lot. As the three of us exited the car, the driver of the other car stopped her car and got out. She didn't look happy.

By this time we were just a little confused. Why had this woman followed us? What did she want from us? Why was she waving her fists in the air like a lunatic? Little did we know that she really was a lunatic and not just faking it. It didn't take us long to figure that out.

"Who wants the first punch?"

Was she serious? I didn't think she was serious. She was a grandmother, for goodness sakes. Her two grandkids and her daughter were waiting in the car. She was a cute, little, wrinkled, white–haired grandma. My opinion of her changed slightly when, out of nowhere, she punched me in the face. Ouch. I stood there stunned. Only one word ran through my head. What?!?!?!? Was I just punched in the face by an old lady? My suspicions were confirmed when she punched me in the face once more. Actually, if my friend Jami didn't get in between us, she would have beat the crap out of me. I was so shocked that I just stood there like the moron that I am.

So, I did what I thought was the right thing to do. I tackled her. No, that's a lie. Actually, I called the police. I don't know what I expected the police to do. I wanted them to arrest her. I wanted them to punch her repeatedly in the face and see how she liked it. They did neither.

Unfortunately for me, this woman had family in the police department and of course, her family were the police that arrived. They ignored me and my friends and comforted the poor old lady. Who wouldn't comfort an old lady that just got slapped in the face? That's right, she told them that I slapped her in the face. Her daughter backed her up. Now I was the bad one. I felt like I was trapped in a bad episode of 90210. I had no control over the situation. It was really no fun. As I had imagined, the officer wanted to know what I wanted to do about the situation. Grandma was gracious enough to tell the officer that she'd let me off the hook if I did the same. So, I did the same. What was I supposed to do? It was her word against mine. I had witnesses that were willing to back me up, but she had witnesses that were willing to lie for her.

As I think back on the incident, I get really annoyed. That woman had no right to touch me. I wasn't even the one who gave her the finger. I just happened to be the closest to her pale, wrinkled fist. The funniest part about the entire incident is that the reason this pathetic excuse for a human being was mad to begin with was because she didn't want her grandkids to be exposed to my friend's middle finger. Isn't that funny? Not only did the kids' mom give us the finger first, but did this woman think that these kids were benefiting from watching their grandma beat up a 19–year– old old? I almost feel bad for those kids because they are going to grow up and be violent, miserable people, just like the rest of their family.

The most frustrating experience of my life occured simply because I wanted a nice fruit cup or maybe a Denver omelette. Instead of a good breakfast, I recieved the first (and second) punch of my life. It just wasn't worth it.

Eliza Berkowitz is a UMass student.

Arts & Living

Czech Philharmonic to play FAC

COURTESY ZDNECK CHRAPEK

Vladimir Válek will conduct the renowned 100-year-old Czech Philharmonic Orchestra tonight.

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

For 100 years, the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra has been known for excellence and impeccable musical standards. Tonight, the world renowned orchestra will take the stage at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The concert begins at 8 p.m.

Since its founding in the 19th century by members of the Prague National Theatre Orchestra, the Czech Philharmonic has made a name for itself. Its musical excellence has been demonstrated many times over on regular tours to Great Britain, Belgium, Canada and more. The current United States tour is the seventh visit the orchestra has made to this country.

The program will begin with Smetana's "Vlatava" from Ma Vlast (My Country). Later, the orchestra will be joined by violinist Alyssa Park for Brahms' "Violin Concerto in D Major, Op. 77." The concert finishes with an excerpt from Antonin Dvorák's popular Symphony No. 9, Op. 95, "From the New World."

From the beginning, the orchestra has had a special connection with Dvorak — he conducted the ensemble's first performance on Jan. 4, 1896. Other famous conductors include Gustav Mahler, Richard Strauss, Edward Grieg, Leonard Bernstein and Zubin Mehta.

Currently, the orchestra is under the baton of Vladimir Válek. Valek is one of the Czech Republic's most prominent conductors. He is the principal conductor for the Czech Radio Symphony Orchestra and the Prague Symphony Orchestra.

At the age of 16, Park won the International Tchaikovsky Violin Competition in Moscow. Not only was she the youngest prize winner ever in the history of the competition, but she was also awarded distinctions for most promising talent.

Tickets are $30, $25 and $15. Tickets for Five College students are $5 and under age 17 are $10. For more information or tickets, call the box office at 545-2511 or (800) 999-UMAS.

Circus time for Rolling Stones

THE ROLLING STONES
Rock And Roll Circus
(ABKCO)

Back in the heady days of 1968, Mick Jagger had an idea — assemble the royalty of the British rock world and put on an "entertainment extravaganza." The Rock And Roll Circus was conceived. However, due to legal entanglements and bruised egos, it remained unreleased for almost 30 years. Now, after achieving legendary status as one of the great lost artifacts of rock music, the wait is over.

The line-up selected by Jagger included The Who, John Lennon and Yoko Ono, Eric Clapton and of course, the Rolling Stones. Not a bad roster. In keeping up with the circus spirit, fire-eaters, clowns and Jethro Tull were brought in for three-ring authenticity. Nothing, however, could overshadow the musical performances.

The first highlight is The Who's "A Quick One While He's Away." Rumor has it that one of the reasons Rock And Roll Circus was shelved for so long was that the Stones felt the Who stole the show. They were absolutely right. The seven minute-long Tommy prototype is utterly explosive. Drummer Keith Moon and guitarist Pete Townsend attack their instruments ferociously — John Entwistle's bass barely manages to keep the music from descending into total chaos. Glaze over this mess with some fine three-part vocal harmonies and Townsend's witty lyrics and you have one of the finest performances in rock history. Amazing.

After mediocre sets by Taj Mahal and Marianne Faithful, The Dirty Mac takes the stage. Consisting of The Jimi Hendrix Experience's Mitch Mitchell on drums, Rolling Stone Keith Richards on bass, Eric Clapton on guitar and John Lennon on vocals/guitar, they deliver a loose, relatively unprofessional rendition of The Beatles' "Yer Blues." Good fun, but nothing exceptional.

However, "Whole Lotta Yoko" pushes the listener's patience to the limit — five minutes of Yoko Ono doing her very best dolphin imitation over a generic blues riff. Absolute torture.

Finally, it's the hosts' turn. Performing songs largely from their just released Beggar's Bunquet LP, the Stones at first appear to be sleepwalking through their set. However, after lifeless versions of "Jumpin' Jack Flash" and "You Can't Always get What You Want," they wake up with a vengeance.

"Sympathy For The Devil" becomes an eight-minute orgy of Jagger's screams and Richards' lethal guitar, all set to a persistent conga beat. Truly satanic and very, very chilling — the Stones would never again sound so evil.

Rock And Roll Circus is clearly worth the wait, though it can't quite live up to the three decades of hype which preceded it. However, as a historical document it is invaluable. Any fan of rock history or culture should consider this album to be essential to their collection. B (John Hendrickson)

BLIND MELON
Nico
Capitol Records

Maybe it's because of Halloween, but fall seems to be the time for dead rock starts to make a comeback. Think of it: this fall has seen Kurt Cobain speaking to the living From The Muddy Banks Of The Wishkah with his boys in Nirvana, Jerry Garcia has been seen Doozin' At The Knick near a Shady Grove and John Lennon is on the Beatles Anthology Volume 5. Shannon Hoon now drops by to present Blind Melon leftovers, with a "portion of the proceeds" going "to help musicians recover from drug and alcohol abuse problems," the former of which took Hoon's life over a year ago.

Nico, named after and dedicated to Hoon's daughter, is similar to Bob Dylan's Bootleg Series in that it is made up of studio outtakes and acoustic tracks (as well as a ditty from Blind Melon's 1991 demo tape.) And, like the Great Nasal One, Blind Melon's outtakes are better than most band's regular album material.

No joke. Without the pressure of putting out actual albums, we see Melon more relaxed, except these guys take their relaxation with a few bottles of Jolt. Opening up with a dramatic, unregretful cover of Steppenwolf's "The Pusher," from a 1994 skiing break in California, the album flows through the song "Soup," mysteriously left over from the album of the same name, and moves from the basic rock of that song into the sinister, evil twin of the "bee-girl song," that is "No Rain (Ripped Away Version)."

Around the middle of this disc, the songs are tragically beautiful and makes one sad about the big loss of last fall. Hoon meditates on the loss of a loved one on "Soul One," from the '91 demo tape — why didn't he think about loss and death before he shot up?

"Glitch," with the whole band putting in various, resonating percussion, augmented by mellotron is simply majestic. "Letters From The Porcupine," a piece recorded on an answering machine of Hoon singing and playing guitar, resonates with the same ghostly quality as Lennon's voice does on the "new" Beatles songs like "Free As A Bird." This disc is amazingly played and sung and works as a great memorial. Heroin sucks. A (Joshua Boyd)

SONNY ROLLINS
Silver City: A Celebration of 25 years on Milestone
Milestone/Fantasy, Inc.

The new best-of collection from veteran saxophonist Sonny Rollins starts off with him soloing alone on 1978's live "Autumn Nocturne" from that year's Don't Stop The Carnival album. His playing here is as it always has been — rapid, melodic and almost story-telling. His band on that album, including Tony Williams on drums, falls into the ballad late, sounding disconnected at first, but eventually all are in the mix equally to finish the live song.

Rollins was a large, looming figure in the construction of "hard bop," the mainly '50s jazz style that took what Charlie Parker did in the '40s and gave it a little extra diesel gas. In this solo-heavy melodic style, Rollins' authoritative playing made him a sought-after partner of such players as Miles Davis and the Modern Jazz Quartet. However, this new compilation only focuses on his past 25 years with Milestone Records, a long time for any jazz artist to stay on one label.

His '70s stuff is mostly ballads, mainly-acoustic jazz (with the exception of guitar and bass). "To A Wild Rose," from 1974's The Cutting Edge, is spare with a nice Rollins' epilogue and "Skylark" from his first Milestone album in '72, Sonny Rollin's Next Album, is also sweetly soft with solo blowing at the end.

Eighties' jazz — what are we to do with it? On Silver City, the main body of the songs is from that Kenny G-bad-jazz-dominated decade. Perfect example of Rollins getting swallowed up in the mix is his "less talk, more light jazz" version of the '80s ballad, "Just Once." However, the live "G-Man" is very commendable for the upbeat ride it takes the listener on. His '80s stuff, though, is too erratic to place.

Rollins in the '90s, again like many others, has brought jazz back to basics, with hard-bop-oriented tunes coming back into dominance. The ballads "Cabin In The Sky," from his most recent album Plus 3 and "Darn That Dream," augmented by a brass choir, show Rollins comfortable with his own style again. A good overview of a veteran going through a few primes and a few dips. B- (J.B.)

NEW RADIANT STORM KING
Hurricane Necklace
Grass Records

For the past five-plus years local music fans have been teased and tempted and, downright, spoiled with New Radiant Storm King, one of the few surviving local bands to have a significant following outside the Valley.

While this may be true the band has received nowhere near the respect or praise as acts like Polvo or Unwound, two bands with distinct sounds from NRSK, but are basically running down the same musical road — a road where Sonic Youth serves as the main map.

Live, NRSK has proven to be the best act in the area. Their concert sound, which although remarkably laid back, is filled with a high amount of energy and loud guitars. And to make their live set even more tempatious, for the past two years the band has been featuring a slew of fantastic new songs off this album, Hurricane Necklace, which was released last month.

Although the songwriting on Hurricane may mark the band's finest hour, the album itself falls off mark. New Radiant's trademark sound is so watered down, they sound more like an adult alternative rock act than the best guitar-led trio in New England.

The album is far too over-produced leaving the guitars stuck in the background producing a dull, smooth sound. Songs like "Honor Roll" and "Lovers in Waco" which have both become concert favorites are just lost in the shuffle.

It is hard to imagine why a band like NRSK, which has refused to sell out or conform to industry hype, would record in such a polished manner.

With five albums under their belt, NRSK can not be seen as newcomers by any means. Perhaps Hurricane Necklace serves as just an experiment. Either way, the songs themselves, no matter how they are recorded, are decent enough to make this collection one of the more worthwhile local releases of the semester. Just see them live. B (Mike Burke)

THE COUNTING CROWS
Recovering the Satellites
DGC

As the '90s progress, and the alternative grunge scene fades into history, joining such past movements such as new-wave and hair metal on the scrap heap of pop-culture, bands associated with the alterna-pop scene struggle to maintain freshness in the post-angst late '90s.

Case in point? The Counting Crows, who try to push the envelope with their latest release, Recovering the Satellites.

Do they achieve every band's dream of longevity?

Well, pretty much.

You'll be happy to know that the Crows have cracked open their sound, revealing a fresher, leaner new album. The most progressive song off of the new effort is the first single, "Angels of the Silences," which is a straight-up classic rock rave, in the vein of "Rain King" from the band's debut album, August and Everything After. Beatles and R.E.M. influences abound, especially in the opening track, "Catapult," but it's done without pretension.

Lead singer Adam Duritz's lyrics read more like a confessional than August, and the obligatory rock star coming to grips with new found fame he didn't ask for, a new thing in these credibility-obsessed times, are exposed in "Have You Seen Me Lately?" The gem of the album is "Goodnight Elizabeth," a folk-grunge love song that highlights the best of what the Crows can do, and is destined to be an AOR staple in a few months.

But be advised, Recovering the Satellites is not perfect. The tail-end of the album is mired in Duritz's whining, and drags, similar to their first album. But overall, the Crows handle the dreaded "sophomore slump" admirably, and if they keep it up, they may survive the '90s just yet. B+ (Luke Meredith)

GHOSTFACE KILLAH
Ironman
Epic

Ironman is the trade mark of the triathlete: Ghostface Killah, Raekwon the Chef and Cappadona. They control this whole triathalon from the inside while eight other colleagues on the inside try to sabotage competition.

Overall this is a gem of the Wu-Tang collection. It's atmosphere is similar to Raekwon's Only Built for Cuban Linx but it sounds cleaned up. The beats are crazy tight and incorporate horns more than expected from the RZA. RZA did all the tracks but "Fish" by True Master. Peep out the beats on "Daytona 500" and "Black Jesus."

"All That I Got is You" dedicated to his mother features Mary J. Blige. It is the heart-felt drama of how his "whole youth was sharper than cleats." His family was close, but the stress was too much. Ghostface gives us the key to his understanding— more emcees need to release their guard and depict the pain and struggle that shaped their character today.

The album is also graced by the presence of Method Man, U-God, Street, Masta Killa, Inspectah Deck, The Delphonics and the Force MD's. Ghostface catches four tracks solo and Raekwon made onto nine of the others but this album holds a distinct personality from Raekwon's.

The Wu-Tang trademark obsession with movie samples continues with bits from recent films Carlito's Way and Usual Suspects.

The album shows a bit of artistic maturity as Ghostface continues the transition from criminal hustler to industry hustler and his growth could make you "Marvel." A (Chris Maher)

COURTESY DENNIS KEELEY

The Counting Crows release a fresher, leaner album that may well stand the test of time.

CHUCK BRODSKY
Letters in the Dirt
Red House Records

Letters in the Dirt is music for sitting at home in your red union suit, reading a book and pretending you have rural culture (oxymoron?) and the rustic charm of an antique. There are numerous references to old baseball players, occasionally cheesy rhymes and made-to-sing-along verses — all accompanied by great guitar-picking and a few stranger instruments. In case you doubt his authenticity, Brodsky's singing is a bit Bob Dylanish (the folk singer secret handshake) but without the stalled engine vibrato.

The stand-out songs are "The Ballad of Eddie Klepp," "Letters in the Dirt" and "Bill and Annie." The first two are about black baseball players and racism, and the last is a twist on unrequited love. In these songs, Brodsky demonstrates the appealing storytelling of the folk singer while (amazingly) avoiding narrative predictability.

Brodsky does occasionally slip into hokey rhythms, like in the annoying song "No More Mr. Nice Guy." While the singing is intended to be ironic, the relentless chorus of, you guessed it, "No more Mr. Nice Guy" quickly becomes the most irritating sound you've heard since your alarm clock.

These slips are infrequent and overall Chuck Brodsky accomplishes what he humbly sets out to do in Letters in the Dirt. He strums some chords, tells stories and jokes, and maybe makes you think once in a while. B (Panagiotis Gianopoulos)

LINDA PERRY
In Flight
Interscope Records

Linda Perry possesses an unrenowned quality of a pervasive voice. In her debut solo album, In Flight, Perry succeeds by focusing on the failures of her life.

Many of her songs, unlike the bygone characteristics of her former band, Four Non Blondes, capture the most quintessential characteristics of a woman confused and looking for structure.

Her lyrics, although backed by an array of instruments, are not only simple, but hardly deter from a typical rhyming scheme. She negatively tends to focus on her bibulous habits, those of the drink and drug. What pulls Perry out of the hole of self pity though, is her unwavering quality to metamorphoses her voice to fit any scheme, any emotion.

It seems to be in her best interest to sing a note slightly off key, slightly too high, slightly different. Yet, this is where Perry finds reward.

"In My Dreams," the first track off the album, is the epitome of an Annie Lennox-wannabe deep throated vocals and a loud, exigent sound. "Freeway," which is one of the more mellow and bespoken tracks, interestingly incorporates musical sound effects to back up the singers wailing.

Regardless, the album delves within all realms of the music world. Some tracks are heavily endowed with instruments, while others rely on the uniqueness of Perry's talent to push it through to the end. Yet, despite all of its oddities, Perry would undoubtedly be an interesting addition to any alternative music lovers collection. B- (Christina Poletto)

continued from page 6

Turn to TRAX, page 7

Spectrum: literary culture on campus

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

Every spring, for the last 30 years, the University of Massachusetts' literary and fine arts magazine, Spectrum has published students' work.

"We've been here for a long time, but people don't know about us," said Sarah Gillis, the magazine's managing editor.

The magazine publishes poetry, prose, artwork and photography by Five College students and faculty. The submissions, which are reviewed anonymously by individual prose, poetry and art/photography staffs, are chosen based on quality, content and space. Last year, Spectrum received about 150 poetry submissions.

"We have a variety of people and try to print as many people as possible," Gillis said.

Part of the magazine's commitment to the fine arts carries over to their monthly poetry and prose readings.

"It's a fairly new idea for Spectrum. We hope it draws a lot of people for the reading and the art gallery," said publicity director, Laura McDonald.

Tonight, Spectrum begins the first in a monthly series of readings to be held in the Student Union Visual and Performing Art Space (formerly the Student Union Art Gallery).

The reading gives students a chance to read their poetry in an informal setting. Gillis said no experience was necessary.

"I think it'll be a fairly informal atmosphere," she said. Seven people are slated to read tonight.

"This gives artists a chance to share their work," Gillis said. "The poetry readings are a regular opportunity to gather and share ideas."

Gillis expects that about 20 to 30 people will attend the event. Refreshments will be served following the readings.

The magazine has held poetry readings in the past, but Gillis says this particular event is special.

"Because it's in an art gallery, you're also supporting the visual arts," she said.

An indirect beneficiary of the poetry reading is the art gallery.

"The gallery benefits because our reading will attract new groups of people," Gillis said. "They want to do different things in that space, so this will help them."

Spectrum is a registered student organization (RSO) that is supported by the SGA and a grant from the UMass Arts Council. The magazine is staffed completely by volunteers.

"The volunteers are all very enthusiastic," said McDonald. "They hope the rest of the university finds Spectrum a useful outlet to express their creative side."

Tonight's reading will start at 7:30 p.m. Anyone interested in reading or more information can contact the Spectrum office at 406E Student Union or 545-2240. Deadline for all submissions is Feb. 12. The next poetry and prose reading is on Dec. 11.

COURTESY DANNY CUNCH

Blind Melon: New collection leaves behind a historic legacy in the wake of Shannon Hoon's death.

ELIZABETH BROWN/ COLLEGIAN

I heard a rumor...

The UMass Theatre Guild presentation of Neil Simon's farce Rumors opens tonight at Bowker Auditorium. The show will continue through Saturday; all performances begin at 8 p.m.

Where punk trades its politics for fun

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

While most bands in the hardcore/punk circle are concerned with making their fans think, be it about politics or life, Weston just wants their fans to have fun, which should result in an exciting night at Pearl St. on Thursday.

Although many consider Weston to be a punk band, they are more reminiscent of the Monkees than the Sex Pistols. Sure Weston sing about girls, and getting girls, and not getting girls, and something else that's related to girls but they have so much fun doing it one can't help but come back for more.

Weston's most recent album Got Beat Up may have continued their own brand of pop, but, unlike their previous efforts, the record comes closest to reproducing their live sound.

The song "New Shirt" off Got Beat Up shows the band's honesty and their tongue-in-cheek humor that makes Weston so loveable. On the song, Weston attributed a girl's love to the new shirt they got. Silly? Maybe, but who hasn't bought an article of clothing with the sole purpose to impress a crush?

Wasted Time from Long Island opens with a pop-punk sound remarkably similar to that band that was on MTV a couple of months ago— the one everyone has forgotten about — Green Something.

Local boys Hallraker open up with their interesting take on hardcore — get their early and give these guys a chance, you're in for a nice surprise.

So forget about your problems for a night and have some fun with Weston.

Weston, Wasted Time and Hallraker play Pearl Street in Northampton. The show starts at 7:30. Call the club at 584-8777 for more information.

COURTESY BJ PAPAS

Weston: the punk rock answer to the Monkees.

Collegian Graphics

take Kaplan and get into the right school.
MCAT
• Highly trained, expert teachers who know the tests inside and out.
• Personalized, computerized study plans, tailored to your individual needs.
• Proven methods, guaranteed to raise your score.
Class starts November 23!!
the leader in test prep
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

Prove to your hair it's attached to a brain.
Together, you and your hair are a work of beauty. Nourish your hair with over 50 Nexxus solutions, and your hair will thank your head. Feed your head. NEXXUS
Regency Hairstylist
"We take your hair seriously"
Downtown Amherst
253-9526

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE DISCOUNT OIL
Northampton / Holyoke
584-4112 • 535-1888
SAME DAY DELIVERY

The Magic Lantern
THE BEST IN ADULT ENTERTAINMENT
Amateur Night
Wednesday, Nov 20th 8:30pm
Come See The Top Female Amateurs From New England Compete For $500 Cash
Runner Up Prizes
Free Admission With Ad.
Interested Contestants Call 283-9275
Giveaways & Audience Participation
Only 30 Minutes from the UMass Campus: Rte. 9 east, to Rte. 181 south, to Rte. 20 west for 1.5 miles
Open 6 days - Closed Sundays 12 pm to 1 am Boston Rd. - Rte. 20 - Palmer, MA (413) 283-9275

TOC Bar & Grill
PromoNight 9-12
FREE T-SHIRTS
FREE GLASSWARE
TO BREW... Boston, MA HARPOON BREWERY Since 1987 & TO SERVE!
MUNCHIE SPECIAL 4-7 MON-FRI
FREE POPCORN
11TH FLOOR CAMPUS CENTER
HOURS: MON-FRI, 4:00 - 12:30
SAT, 3:00 - 12:30

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Women's Issues

Wednesday, November 20, 1996

Classism on campus examined

Michelle Hillman
Collegian Staff

Yesterday afternoon approximately 150 women met from representative areas of campus in the Student Union ballroom in a reception entitled "Current Issues for Women On-Campus," sponsored by the Faculty Senate Council on the Status of Women. The women crossed race, class and economic lines to discuss issues of childcare, working conditions, graduate student concerns and sexual harassment on campus.

"We want this to be a forum for you, we're really interested in the ideas of action we can take in the future," said Ann Ferguson, director of the women's studies program, on the event.

"We'd like to serve as a clearing house for helping other organizations that deal with women's issues," Ferguson said.

Rosemary Riley, the new president of the University Staff Association (USA/MTA), nervously addressed problems of classified workers that exist on this campus.

"Classism has become more visible on this campus than ever seen." As an example Riley stated the document that University staff members reluctantly signed in order to secure pay raises that requires them to wear photo I.D badges.

"This is the most visible, but not the only form of classism that exists on this campus," Riley said. She continued that it is "the classified workers that make this University run. We deserve appreciation, safe working conditions and opportunities for advancement."

Riley then challenged the Chancellor and the women in the room to begin taking action against class discrimination at the University.

"We can only change the environment of this campus if we all work together," Riley said.

Charlotte Coates, the second woman president of the AFSCME (Food Services Union) in 33 years, addressed issues concerning University Food Services, reflecting on the Summer of 1995.

"Three women in a two week period had heart attacks on the job. That year four women had heart attacks on the job." It was the summer from hell, every day I fought a union battle, said Ferguson.

As president of the AFSCME for six months, Ferguson said "everyday is a golden opportunity to make things better and work together. We need to identify what the issues are and work together to make it better."

Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts, and the former Director of Women's Studies program, Lee Edwards addressed the reason for forming the council.

"We had a hope a that people could talk to us across class lines," Edwards said. "Staff and student issues could all be represented under the rubric of women's issues."

Edwards pointed out the advancements of women in the University administration, but said more could be done.

"One of the things that has changed over time as you look at the upper levels of administration is that they contain more women by far than there ever used to be," Edwards said.

"It is not enough, but it is something," Edwards said. She also briefly commented on the "current backing away from affirmative action," by saying "how can we respond so that we don't lose momentum? We don't intend to back away," Edwards said.

Deepika Marya, president of the Graduate Student Senate, described by Ferguson as an "advocate for women graduate students, trying to work on advocacy from graduate student perspective," discussed the difficulties of addressing issues at a university level.

"We are a direct result of capitalism. Most of us come from middle class backgrounds," Marya said. "Eighty-five percent of women in the world will not be in higher education.

"How we deal with issues is going to be quite different," she said. "We have everybody's interest in mind, but interests are different."

Marya concluded saying "while we celebrate occasions like this, let us remember our privilege of being at a university." Following the speakers a question and answer period ensued. One woman from the crowd questioned the number of women on the faculty stating that 29 percent of the women are faculty, 20 percent are tenured and 46 percent are tenured track faculty.

Provost of the University of Massachusetts, Patricia Crosson said, "the composition changes slowly over time. Numbers are going in a positive direction, but they are going slowly. The truth is it will take much time to change this, there is nothing we can do about it in the short run."

Other questions included the reason of the division between professional staff and classified staff, childcare for new mothers, concerns of low income students and minority and faculty harassment as well as sexual harassment.

Crosson replied to harassment questions by stating "it has been a commitment on the part of the Chancellor to improve the way in which we handle sexual harassment on this campus."

We're requesting "an advocate for sexual harassment on campus. We have advocates for other crimes on this campus, but not harassment," Marya said.

COURTNEY SMITH / COLLEGIAN

De-Centralizing Sex

Judith Plaskow, a visiting professor of religious studies at Smith College presented a talk Monday evening on "De- Centering Sex: Toward a Theology of Sexuality." The lecture was held at the Mount Holyoke Five College Women's Studies Research Center.

"Barbie Doll"

This girlchild was born as usual and presented dolls that did pee-pee
and miniature GE stoves and irons
and wee lipsticks the color of cherry candy.
Then in the magic of puberty, a classmate said:
You have a great big nose and fat legs.

She was healthy, tested intelligent,
possessed strong arms and back,
abundant sexual drive and manual dexterity.
She went to and fro apologizing.
Everyone saw a fat nose on thick legs.

She was advised to play coy,
exhorted to come on hearty,
exercise, diet, smile and wheedle.
Her good nature wore out
like a fan belt.
So she cut off her nose and her legs
and offered them up.

In the casket displayed on satin
she lay
with the undertaker's cosmetics painted on,
a turned-up putty nose,
dressed in a pink and white
nightie.
Doesn't she look pretty? everyone said.
Consummation at last.
To every woman a happy ending.

-Marge Piercy

Land-Grant universities have a Vision for 2000

By Heather Moreland
Collegion Correspondent

Carol Wallace, Director of the Everywoman's Center opened the Eighth Annual reception held by the Faculty Senate Council on the Status of Women with an optimistic smile and much enthusiasm.

According to Wallace the purpose of the Faculty Senate Council on the Status of Women is to "represent and advocate for all women."

The council, established in 1973, deals with recruitment, promotion and salaries, administration of undergraduate and graduate students, and carries 23 members, according to Wallace.

"Vision 2000," a council's current project is run in conjunction with the University of Massachusetts, University of Connecticut, University of Maine, University of Rhode Island and the University of Vermont.

The "Vision 2000" project consists of nine recommendations calling for full and equitable participation of women in education and administration of campus issues, Wallace said.

Recommendations include fostering accountability, action plans on research results, implement diversity initiatives, end sexual harassment and violence against women, promote family-friendly policies, support women's center, end gender bias, encourage women's academic and career development and correct inequities in hiring, promotion, tenure, compensation, and working conditions for women employees.

The "Vision" was inspired by the "New Agenda," published in 1988 as a part of the American Council on Education/Macmillan Series for Higher Education. The ACE published one chapter from a book entitled Educating the Majority: Women Challenge Tradition in Higher Education. The "New Agenda" is a call for action by college campuses to address women in the University, according to the "Vision 2000 Preamble."

Frustrated by lack of progress, faculty, staff and students came together in 1995 from six New England Land-Grant universities to "network, share concerns and form the New England Council of Land-Grant University Women, according to the preamble."

"Vision 2000" outlines problems with universities that have not advanced with the growing number of undergraduate women. The draft of "Vision 2000" serves to eliminate women's underepresentation in areas such as curriculum, classroom, leadership roles and reform system that perpetuates violence against women by remaining silent.

The nine recommendations outlined in the "Vision 2000" where strategic planning and a re-engineering process provides the leaders the opportunity to be creative, innovative, thoughtful and specific in reallocating moneys to groups who have historically been marginalized and underrepresented," according to the preamble.

Programs that came into being to solve problems of gender inequity are generally understaffed in relation to their mandates. They exist to provide encouragement, information, and technical assistance to others, but are not in position to exercise sole responsibility for institutional change.

"Vision 2000" will realign responsibility and authority for gender equity, by fostering accountability in all departments through monitoring and evaluating equity efforts. Upon completion, "Vision 2000" will be presented to the New England Land Grant Council of Presidents for endorsement and implementation.

ELIZABETH BROWN / COLLEGIAN

Charlotte Coates, first female president of AFSCME in 20 years, spoke yesterday at the Faculty Senate Council on the Status of Women.

Why radical feminisits forgot to laugh

Bethany R. Levrault

It's a scenario we are all familiar with — the raging feminist, decked out in her bra-burning attire, dressed to kill anything that resembles a male. Try to talk to her, and she won't acquiese. Try to joke with her, and the consequences might be unpleasant, perhaps severe. Feminists just cannot laugh at themselves. They have no sense of humor, and insist on walking about with a perpetual scowl, complaining about disadvantages that are really quite mild. After all, women don't face that much discrimination!

I wonder how may people share in the ideology described above. It's common for the word "feminist" to usually evoke this man-hating, stereotyped realm in many people's minds. We've been taught to believe that anyone involved in women's rights or women's issues is nothing but a complaining, whiney, stoic, stereotyped version of your typical male-basher, and that anyone decidedly "down-to- earth" would never take part in something as negative as "feminism."

Feminism has gotten such a bad rap that it's not uncommon to hear someone say, "Well, I'm into women's rights, but I wouldn't call myself a feminist." It seems that people are just adament about being labeled with the word. Moreover, jokes about these supposedly abaundant "raging feminists" abound.

Consider the words of my biology professor. While involved in a small mishap in class involving a broken overhead projector, the professor decided to engage in a few jokes in order to fill the time. After a few series of jokes, meant merely as time-filling, harmless meanderings through the halls of humor, he then uttered something like, "Now this one isn't politically correct, so don't yell at me. How many feminists does it take to change a light bulb? Answer: That is NOT funny!"

I almost couldn't believe it. I noticed a few uncomfortable glances among the women around me, and as for myself, I felt nothing but annoyed. The thing was, I just couldn't pinpoint what annoyed me about the joke. I kept telling myself throughout the next few days that I should just relax and accept humor for what it is. After all, it was in fact a joke, nothing more, and to complain about it... well, wouldn't that make me out to be a stoic "feminist" with no sense of humor? Wouldn't it be making a big deal out of nothing? I could accept the fact that the professor was merely trying to fill time, and therefore might not have been thinking clearly when he made the joke, so I brushed the thoughts the joke invoked in me aside, laughed a little, and sat back to listen to the lecture.

Picking up a copy of the Collegian the week after the scenario in biology, I was suprised to discover the same joke, reprinted on the comics page of the newspaper, apparantly as a "Night Editor" joke of the day. Again, I felt annoyed, but automatically told myself to stop worrying and just to take the joke for what it was, a harmless thing. But the annoyed feeling didn't stop.

But what is wrong with this joke? Isn't it possible to just take it for what it's worth: a joke? The problem is not the joke itself, but what it implies. Simply put, a joke such as this is potentially harmful in that it implies that fighting for women's rights involves the inability to laugh at oneself. And this, in turn, implies that fighting for women's rights is something that only a "raging feminist," a person considered to be negative, would ever do.

Okay, like I've said above, I'll accept the fact that jokes are jokes, and humor sometimes goes above and beyond what's outrightly funny and makes jokes out of things not normally considered humorous. However, how funny would the joke have been, for example, if it involved another social group, such as African-Americans, Hispanics or people of Jewish origin? I doubt the joke would have been perceived as something to be made light of in that case. But when the joke is made about "feminists," it's automatically something that one has to laugh at, or else be considered a person with no sense of humor.

The fact is, feminism is downgraded and not taken seriously, and that is why jokes such as these abound. Part of the problem is that there is really no precise definition of the word, and that leaves much open to interpretation. So people mistakenly believe that women's rights are a negative, whiney type of thing. In the process, the idea that women really have nothing to worry about as far as discrimination by sex gets reinforced, and along with it, the idea of women as not having to face any disadvantages.

The irony of all this is, by complaining about what a joke such as this implies, I am implicity providing weight to the whole meaning of the joke. I am, in effect, labeling myself as a whiney, complaining feminist with no sense of humor. However, if I don't complain about the joke, I'm left with an uncomfortable feeling the joke just really isn't funny, yet find myself laughing at it in the face of social pressure all the same.

It's just another dimension in the double standard that women must face everyday. What does the double standard have to do with this joke? When a joke such as this one is made, there are two possible responses: to laugh, or not to laugh. A woman who laughs at this is implicity laughing at herself, at her own misfortunes. She's making light of the disadvantages women face simply because they are women. A woman who doesn't laugh is automatically labeled as a "radical feminist," and with this name comes all sorts of negative connotations about her. You just cannot fight for your own rights and still be considered a positive, happy person with a great sense of humor.

To everyone making jokes at the expense of others, fine. Don't stop doing it — in fact, say whatever you want. I would never be an advocator of censorship of any kind, and that's not saying that I'm taking the politically-correct view. I just don't believe in stopping people from saying what they really want to say. You don't have to tiptoe around and watch what you say in order to respect other people... unless, of course, you don't.

Bethany R. Levrault is a UMass student.

Office harassment: alternative to rape?

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

Sexual harassment, unequal pay, discrimination — these are just some of the problems facing women who enter the job market.

"I think the biggest problem was that women were not initially in decision making roles," says University of Massachusetts School of Management Professor Bob Marx. "So the woman's perspective is not always heard equally loudly. I think initially women were put in a no-win situation to be meek and subservient that did not allow their point to be made. It was very hard for women 10 years ago to do [the job] right."

Since 1987, women have accounted for nearly 44.8 percent of the labor force. And despite their growing numbers in the job market, the problems haven't gone away.

"I think because of economic reasons, there is much more of a backlash. The talk about reverse discrimination has been dormant and now it's coming back," said School of Management Professor Marta Calas.

Sexual harassment is probably the issue that receives the most attention. According to Caryl Rivers, author of "Sexual Harassment: The Executive's Alternative to Rape," published in the June 1978 issue of Mother Jones, sexual harassment complaints filed with human rights agencies range from being pinched or touched to having sexual favors linked to job promotions.

The problem with sexual harassment is that it is hard to define and even harder to prove. Part of the problem arises when sexual innuendos or jokes become offensive. However, Rivers writes, "it clearly becomes harassment when a man uses his position of authority at work to demand sexual favors from a woman employee."

Because of the attention on sexual harassment, generated by the Clarence Thomas hearing, companies have began writing sexual harassment policies and have begun implementing programs to educate people on the issue. Unfortunately, according to Calas, this doesn't mean that sexual harassment has disappeared from the workplace.

"In a way, you can say that probably blatant sexual harassment doesn't appear that often," Calas said. "But if you look at specific actions that are going on, what has blatant sexual harassment transformed into? It's more covert."

Other problems in the workplace are less obvious. Women and other minorities are often left out of traditional social activities, such as lunches or golfing trips. The exclusion may not necessarily be intentional, Marx said.

"The old boys network has been around for so long that they don't realize that these things exclude women and people of color," Marx said.

Some of those issues include the unequal pay rates for men and women. Traditionally, men have received more wages than women, even when doing the same work.

The Equal Pay Act of 1963 guaranteed equal pay for equal work. The numbers tell a different story. According to U.S. Department of Labor Women's Bureau, in 1987 the average woman earned only 65 cents for every dollar earned by a man. However, things are changing and more and more women are securing positions in middle management.

"I think now there are enough women in enough positions of power so women have more mentors," Marx said.

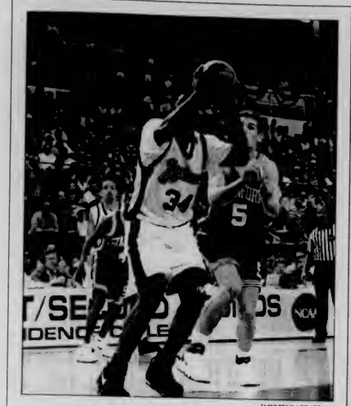
According to Calas, while women climbing the corporate ladder may have obstacles to face, women stuck at the bottom in the traditionally low paying jobs are also caught.

"It is important to pay attention to the women who are at the bottom of the organization," Calas said. "It's not [those] only getting to the top, there are also those who are stuck in low paying jobs."

■ NFL

continued from page 12

blamed mainly on the Patriots coaches.



The game against the Broncos is the perfect example. Patriots runners ran only nine times on the day, a pathetic number, even if they were playing from behind most of the game.

To effectively run the ball, the Patriots need to run the ball. Giving Martin the chance to carry lets him get in the groove and helps the offensive linemen get in the mindset. Giving up so early because of a lack of success will continue to lead to a lack of success and will turn the Patriots, who had the same problem in 1994, into the Dolphins of the last decade.

The number of runs against the Broncos was the fewest in Patriots history. What makes it particularly sad is that Martin, like Barry Sanders, needs a lot of carries to get going.

When Marion Butts was getting more carries two years ago than Martin is now, we know there's a problem.

Jacob W. Michaels is a Collegian columnist.

EMILY REILY / COLLEGIAN

They're baaack!

Senior tri-captain Tyrone Weeks and the Massachusetts men's hoop squad will make their first home appearance in the special Collegian season preview, coming Dec. 5.

■ Juden

continued from page 12

until you actually get here," Juden said. "I played in supposedly one of the top high school leagues around, and then to come here, it was two steps faster than that.

"Sometimes you are not ready for that, and when I came in here, I was just 18. We've got guys coming in here at 20- years-old now, geez, some of the freshman are older than me right now."

The transition to the Division I level was difficult, and Juden only played in three games his freshman season. But he put the work into his complete game, and that number jumped to 32 games in his sophomore season. Oddly enough, he scored his first collegiate point (an assist) versus Merrimack last Nov. 3 in a 4-3 win.

He was voted the team's Most Improved Player in '95-'96, signalling the good, steady development of his game over the past two years. If it is mental or physical skills, the upward progression has to continue, and Juden is doing that as we speak.

"Last year, the coach wanted me to be more defensive minded," Juden said. "I came in as a pretty offensive forward, and I didn't have to play too much defense in high school. So, I wasn't really used to that, so last year was my year to build my defense. Now, I am taking my offense and defense and making myself a solid two-way player."

Mallen has seen the improvement, and is rewarding him with the playing time.

"I think the thing to look at Dan Juden is that he did not play many games his freshman year," Mallen said. "He really had to earn his stripes last year, and he learned how to play defense. Coming into this year, some of his offense is starting to develop, and he has earned his wings.

"If he keeps the way he is going right now, then he could be one of the better forwards of the league towards the end of this year, or next year."

This season will be a big one for Juden, as he not only has to think about the here and now, but also the transition from a junior scorer to senior leader. After the graduation of front-liners Bonneau, Norris and Perry, he and juniors like Fawcett, and defensemen Brad Norton and Mike Gaffney, will have to step up into the role of leaders on the team.

"I am going to have to establish myself in this league as a player to build confidence in myself," Juden said. "Also, to build confidence in my team that will lead them to look at me as an example, a role model for next year's team. So, I can help the team, and I want to go out there everyday and lead by example.

"The seniors are working real hard this year, and they are going to have big shoes to fill next year. If I keep working hard, and do what I'm doing, along with the rest of the junior class, we should do alright next year."

As for now, the team will be looking to roll on the Merrimack win to higher, more tangible, ground. So far, losing to tough teams like Boston University and the University of New Hampshire has been rough. But to Juden, if UMass plays like they did in the third period of their 5-4 OT loss to UNH every night, no one could beat them.

"We have a great team, we just need to find a way to win, which we are starting to," Juden said. "We just have to remember how hard it is in Hockey East to get a win. You have to earn a win every night, and you just can't show up and expect to win. We have to constantly be up for three periods, and if we don't we are selling ourselves short."

COLLEGIAN GRAPHICS

PUTTING IT ALL TOGETHER

CHECK OUT A GREAT CLASS!

GOTTA BE A PEER EDUCATOR

Peer Health Educators...
...learn about cool stuff
...teach workshops in the residence halls and Greek area.
...give out condoms and other goodies at the Campus Center and special events.
...make new friends.
...MAKE A DIFFERENCE!

PEER HEALTH EDUCATION
PUBLIC HEALTH 213/214 or EDUCATION 213/214
6 Credits - 2 Semester Commitment Required
For permission of the instructor call the Division of Health Education 577-5181.
Class will meet on Wednesdays from 2:00 - 4:30pm
Priority is given to those who meet with the instructor before November 22nd.

U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Weekend Special
Noon Friday to Monday AM - Starting at $59.95
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
549-RENT
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

Tonight
Retro Night
Music of the 70's and 80's
Weekly Drink Specials
16oz. Red Dog Drafts 1.50
16oz. Captain Morgan & Coke 2.00
NEW HOURS
1/2 Price Appetizers & Nachos
3-5 pm wed-sat 7-11pm
No Cover Charge
THE PUB

FAMOUS FOR 2 BURGS 2 BUCKS
I always get Fish n' Chips at Pete's
PETE'S DRIVE-IN ROUTE 9 HADLEY, MA YEAR 'ROUND
http://www.javanet/~mrburger/

Go Ahead, Card Me.
OKEMO 1996-97 COLLEGE V.I.P CARD
Talk about your great deal...the Okemo College VIP Card. For just $25, your first lift ticket (Mon.-Fri.) is FREE, then ski or ride for 1/2 price on weekdays and get $10 off on weekends and holidays for the rest of the season. Snickers, Mountain Dew and HMV Record Stores are throwing in special deals, too! So c'mon up to Okemo - it never felt so good to get carded.
OKEMO
Okemo InfoLine: (802) 228-4041 • 24-Hour Snow Line: (802) 228-5222 • http://www.okemo.com
New! College Season Pass just $449 - Ski or Ride everyday

TRAVEL SMART!
One Way Roundtrip
LONDON FROM NY, BOSTON or DC
$154 $249
FROM NEW YORK
PARIS $224 $427
ROME $259 $489
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA $235 $446
Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Earn/passes available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
342 Madison Ave. NY NY 10173
212-986-8420*
800-272-9676
*in NYC

Thank You.
All of us at Zanna thank you for making our 25th Anniversary Celebration so much fun.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

7pm, Nov. 22nd at the MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Division 1 Hockey East
UMass Hockey
VS
ARMY Hockey
Pick up your tickets at:
Curry Hicks Cage
'TIX' in the Student Union
Hockey Table in the Campus Center
At the Game
Be a Part of the Action

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Mullins Center Hockey League is looking for experienced hockey players and/or experienced teams to join in the Spring. If interested, contact Harold at 545-2690

Hometown High— Do you remember applying to college? Would you like to help high school students learn more about the University and the admissions process at UMASS Amherst? The Undergraduate Admission Office is looking for Undergraduate students to return to their hometown high school during winter break and represent the Admissions Office to prospective University applicants. Volunteers will be required to attend one training session, and to schedule an appointment with their high school guidance office to visit the school while you are at home during winter session. Training sessions will be on Wednesday Nov 20th or Thursday Nov 21st from 6:00pm-8:00pm in the Campus Center. Volunteers are only required to attend one session. If you have any questions, please contact Rich Toomey or Shelby Gile at 545-3043, please leave your name, number, and the name of your high school

APARTMENT FOR RENT

The Boulders 2 bedroom, newly renovated, on-site appliances, on bus line. $740.00 Heat and hot water included. 256-0812

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 Chevy Nova 4dr Sedan, AC, auto, runs and looks great $1,350.00 or B/O Call 546-0708

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

EMPLOYMENT

Mullins Center seeks 20-30 reliable people to work event staff. Availability during Intersession preferred. Apply in-person: Mullins Center 2nd Floor by Nov 26

Babysitter/Helper in Amherst Thanksgiving Day, December holidays and Intersession. Non-smoking, car. $5.00/hr. 253-0660 8am- 5pm

MAKE MONEY
$1000's Possible Reading books part-time at home. Toll-free (600)898-3778 ext R-1732 for listings.

Snowboard Coaches part-time at private school with ski hill. Decent pay, experience preferred. Call Jack Shea 413-774-7411

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available. Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

ENTERTAINMENT

Sax! Drugs! Rock 'n Roll! Now that I have your attention...Having a party? You need a DJ! Call Eileen @ 253-8588. Reging Disco, Funk, Cheezy 80's music - whatever! No techno, the st gives me a headache! Call me!

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area. (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

3 Pair Doc Morten's: 1 black boot, 2 pr shoes, Size 8 Must Sell!! Call 546-1451

MAC Centris 610 8MB RAM 80MB HD Full page monitor (gray scale) External fax modem Ethernet card. Call Farnao 549-3927 Price negotiable

Set of 4 Rims 14" white w/black & chrome BO 546-6485. Ask for Dan

FOR SALE

New York Knick Tickets for sale Vs: Seattle, San Antonio, Indiana (888)602-0774 (pager)

HOUSE FOR RENT

Secluded Riverfront Home N. Green River ARTISTS INN Residence Living or Studio Space Avail. Immed. Part-Furnished 14x24' $350/mo or 20x24' $375/mo + % util., sec. dep., references, some pets ok, gas heat, wash/dry, snow rmvl, kitchen cathedral ceiling, fireplace, balcony. East Colrain. 20 min/GFLD. 40 min/UMass 624-3928

Amherst Belchertown line 4 Bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area Available now 548-4270

INSTRUCTION

Boxing Three private 1/2 hour lessons $69.95 Call 732-8817 In Amherst Tues & Thurs Eve

LOST

Lost Key Uptown Saturday night Reward if found Call 253-0506

MUSICIANS

Attention Bands Lava Lounge ICP Productions looking for UMass bands to perform at our club Call Joe at 587-9898 or Mal at 584-7111

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed! $35 800-778-9503 Doctor Approved

PERSONALS

HEY YOU! Come and see RUMORS Wed.-Sat., the 20th-23rd, 8pm @ Bowker. Bloody lovely! Tell your friends.

To All Collegian Staff-
The weather's here, wish you were beautiful.
Jacob

ROOM FOR RENT

Sunderland 1BR in 2BR Apt $315.00 + utilities Must find someone before Thanksgiving for Spring term or Jan 1. 665-4394

Seeking roommate for 4 bdrm apt in Northampton $300+ Call Karla 585-8629

ROOM WANTED

Need 1 Bedroom Apartment sublet for 1/1/97 thru 8/97 Call Dave (413)783-7098

SERVICES

Typing: Rates by page, semester or package (413)467-2452

SERVICES

COMPUTER CONSULTING Just say NO! to computer problems! Chris Amshey, Consultant, UMass Alum 532-7039

Psychic Readings Your home or mine, free newsletter. Please call Sandy (413)467-3739

GORILLAGRAMS Flowers, Birthdays, Balloons etc. Send the crazy gorillas. We'll go anywhere, anytime! Restaurants, classrooms, dorms. Student Rates available! Call 256-0287

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info.

Angel Chat - Winging your way with Angelic answers to your questions. Call 1-800-539-3930

CAR NEED REPAIR? Let me come to you! Student Rates 665-4790

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

Take over our lease 1/97. Large sunny 2 bedroom apt. On bus route. Heat/Hot Water. Free Gym. Tha Boulders. $740. 256-8984

TRAVEL

SS Cruise Ships Hiring $$
Travel the Exotic places. Save $$$! Seasonal/Permanent. No experience necessary. Travel/Employment Directory. Free Info! Act now! HTTP:\\WWW Tropical Destinations.com Brett @ Tropical Destinations.com (413)525-6487

Bahamas, Ft. Lauderdale, Orlando 11 days! Cruise whenever. Must sell! $450 Includes Two!!! Call 6-8271 Ask for Moises (MO)

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, FL Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project DEEP @ (800)282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

Wanted Tutor For Auto Cad Realease13 Will Pay call Rob at 546-0272

Fund Raiser- Motivated groups needed to earn $500.00+ promoting AT&T Discover card and retail cards. Since 1969 we've helped thousands of groups raise the money they need. Call Gina at (800)592-2121 ext. 110 Free CD to qualified callers

PRICE ✧ THURSDAYS

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day

All others
40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

L	A	G	S		D	A	V	I	S		E	D	O	M
O	L	E	O		E	V	O	K	E		B	O	N	A
L	A	R	D		F	I	L	E	R		O	V	E	R
L	I	M	I	T	E	D			G	O	N	E	R	S
			U	R	N		C	H	E	R	I
T	E	A	M	E	D		H	A	S	T	E	N	E	D
E	S	P		S	E	T	I	N		S	O	A	R
A	T	E		S	R	A		O	O	P		B	S	A
S	E	R	F			P	A	I	N	E		L	E	W
E	S	S	E	N	C	E	S		L	A	P	E	L	S
			L	E	A	D	S		O	R	R
G	A	L	L	O	N			B	O	L	I	V	I	A
O	L	I	O		C	R	E	A	K		D	O	O	M
S	L	E	W		A	B	I	D	E		E	T	T	A
H	I	S	S		N	I	N	E	R		S	E	A	N

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Courts
5. First public appearance
10. Low-down, informally
14. London's Admiralty, e.g.
15. Wed on the sly
16. Seabird
17. Position
18. Three troy grains
19. Lingerie trim
20. Ballerina's pointer
21. Spy Hari
22. Author Joseph
24. Weave
26. Brazilian soccer great
27. Mel the Giant
28. Jean Harlow's last film
32. Voice a view
35. Interlaced
36. Metric component
37. Duct opening
38. Said "moo"
39. Skid row resident
40. Noah's craft
41. Used a miter box
42. Inch
43. Eased
45. Calender abbr.
46. Otner actor Alan
47. Moisture
51. Excite
54. Cameraman's maneuvers
55. African worm
56. Beowulf's beverage
57. Gal pursued by Brutus
59. Bonded servant
60. Pennsylvania's third-largest city
61. Rent again
62. Contribute to the poker pot
63. Auction bidding signals
64. Exploits
65. Singing Mama

DOWN
1. Detritus
2. Celestial hunter
3. Singing group
4. Elle, in Manhattan
5. Pour out
6. Please greatly
7. Adriatic wind
8. ___ tree
9. Tied up
10. Fuel for newfangled wood stoves
11. Thermometer type
12. ___ In Love With Amy
13. Look intently
21. Pipsqueak
23. Vivacity
25. They ___ Believe Me
26. Laid concrete
28. Scattered seeds
29. Garfield's friend
30. Past
31. At the acme
32. Ellipsoid
33. Father, in France
34. Writing fluids
35. Impressed
36. Rent recipient
39. Architect Christopher
41. Good Housekeeping reward
42. Cold
44. Post-vacation presentation
45. Beliefs
47. Fluttered
48. Actress Verdugo
49. Classifies
50. Fireproof coffers
51. Govt. agents
52. Long lunch?
53. ___ On Eriebbe
54. Accumulation
58. Actor Majors
59. Bagitive part

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Stay on task this week. Diversions will be tempting, but you need to stay focused. Later, there will be time for an adventure with the whole family. Open your heart to something (or someone) unusual. You could gain a richer outlook on life.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
Although you might feel caught in a rut, you're able to accomplish some things by force of habit. Use this strength to free yourself to dream of other things. The more you look for, the more you'll find. Plan a romantic getaway for the weekend

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
Although your stress level is high, now is not the time to make demands. You could come across the wrong way. Catch up on small tasks to free yourself to enjoy a relaxing weekend. An outdoor excursion is just the thing to recharge your batteries.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
This is a good week to refurbish your exercise program. Focus on your health and you'll enjoy the results for years to come. It may be time to sit down with a partner and discuss your plans for the future.

LEO
July 23–August 23
A desk full of busy work will keep you occupied for most of the week. Be ready for an interesting weekend. Some fun in the sun might be in order. Take a special friend along and be ready for anything—you never know what could be just around the corner! Enjoy!

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
You're a super shopper this week, with bargains coming from every direction. Check out your obligations for the next week or so before you splurge—you need to keep the budget balanced. Cover all your bases before accepting another responsibility.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23
Working together with another person brings out the best in you for this week. You might almost be able to anticipate each other's ideas. That's good. Making them come true, however, is another matter. Be practical, as well as creative

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
Don't focus on the weaknesses of a group you're involved in. Just pull your weight, and focus on the task at hand—slow and steady wins the race. Stick with the basics in other areas this week—extravagance is unnecessary and detrimental.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21
Catch up on your social obligations before midweek. You'll feel better, and so will your friends. Be sure you have all the information before giving a situation up as hopeless. You could be missing some important facts. Read the directions.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20
Your generous streak is showing. Before you rush out to the mall, think about the people you know. One might need a little extra something, and you could be just the person to give it to them. You don't have to be lavish, just thoughtful.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18
Someone who ordinarily grates on your nerves could have a gem of advice for you, if you're able to hear it. Be open to innovations, even if they're replacing your old favorites. It might be time for a change. A loved one brings you a special piece of news.

PISCES
February 19–March 20
Bring together an unusual group of people for a social gathering. You'll have fun, and you might gain a new insight into an old problem. A romantic relationship gains momentum. Stoke the fires with a special event just for the two of you.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

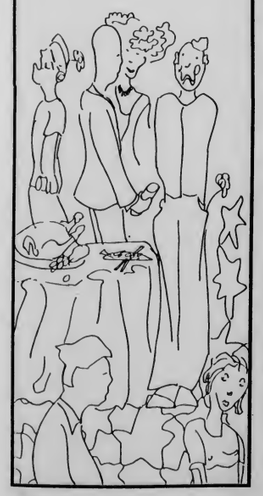
Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom

Did know that the famous Last Supper of Jesus Christ and the Disciples was actually their Jewish celebration of Passover?

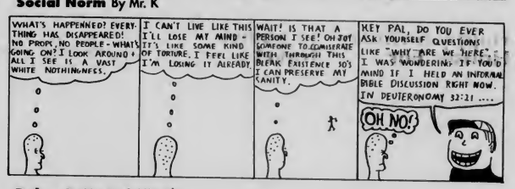


And that Jesus had three brothers, Myron, Herm and, of course, Vincenzo.....

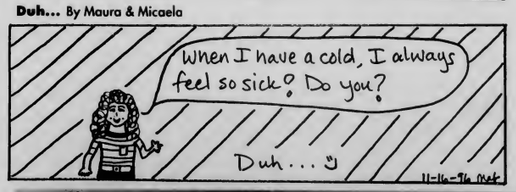
who was adopted but ..... refused to use the last name "Christ." Vinnie preffered Alleghese..... which was the name of the manufacturer of his favorite hammer.

Imagine what it was like for Vinnie at a party:

" Hi, ...so, Jesus was your brother? What was it like? Did he do his own dishes?"



"Blessed he who does his own dishes, for he shall inherit paper plates."



University² By Frank Cho

Social Norm By Mr. K

Duh... By Maura & Micaela

Quote of the Day

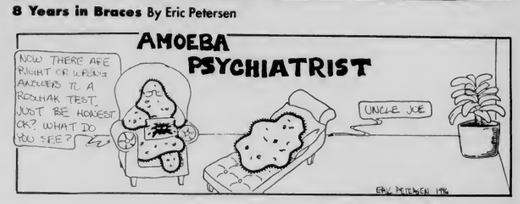
"I'm not too particular about what I put up there."

–Overheard

Bad Joke of the Day

Did you hear about the guy who chopped up three heads of cabbage?

He was charged with cole-slaughter in the first degree.



Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

Prospective dates first had to give a full presentation to Debbie Wexler's parents.

Today's Staff

Mike Burke
Night Editor

Lisa Oliveri
Copy Editor

Elizabeth Brown
Photo Technician

Marc Dionne
Production Supervisor

Kelvin Torres
Mark McGrath
Production

Dining Commons Menu

Menu unavailable. Please refer to this guide to help you decide where to eat.

1 First, go get some dice (6 sided, preferably).

2 Find one you like, and roll it.

If you roll:

- Go to Franklin D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Berkshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Hampshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Worcester D.C. for dinner.
- Get Pizza for dinner!
- Roll again.

Sports

Juden brings skills, leadership to UMass hockey

Junior center improves in Hockey East as Minutemen attempt to climb ranks

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

In the game of hockey, some of its intangibles are how much you want to put into the game, and consequently, what you want to get out if it. Different than individual sports, the effort you put into the game has to center on team first, and individual last.

Junior forward Dan Juden of the Massachusetts hockey team (2-6, 2-6 in Hockey East) is a true fan of the game of hockey. The comradely of hockey is one of the intangibles he enjoys most about the game. In his mind, he can not describe his love for the game, and the only way you can feel it is to get out there and do it.

"Everything, you get out there and skate around by yourself and you feel... free," Juden said. "You're going so fast, it's all the skill you have to have, it's the strength you need... I can't describe it, its almost beyond words.

"I guess it's the whole involvement in such a great game, it's like an addiction. It's in your blood, whether you finish playing, or you watch it or coach it. I couldn't sit here and tell you one specific thing."

Even if he does not think he can express the intangible, he does. What is definitely tangible is the quality of his game for the Minutemen this season, and he is right behind the scoring leaders, seniors Rob Bonneau and Warren Norris, with 7 points (3 goals and 4 assists).

Last Saturday night, coach Joe Mallen switched around his lines, moving Juden and fellow junior Chris Fawcett up to the No. 1 line with senior Tom Perry. UMass came out with a key 6-5 win over Merrimack, ending positively an eight- game HE slate to open the season. All the junior center wants to do is help his team in anyway possible, and he has.

"I'm trying to do the best I can for the team, obviously it is not that great of a start beine 2-6, but that win [Saturday night's 6-5 over Merrimack] helped us a lot in building our confidence up," Juden said. "It was good to end our Hockey East schedule for now on a positive note, because for a good stretch now we won't have a conference game, and it was nice to get a win."

For Mallen, one of the intangibles of his team this year is the effect of his underclassmen.

"Before this year, I had a pretty good idea as to what the capabilities of our senior's are, and it was really to be up to our juniors, sophomores and maybe our freshmen to propel us," Mallen said. "[Juden] has been a junior that has contributed in the first eight games, and his contribution has definitely helped our team."

Juden was five years old when he started playing hockey, and credits being the hockey player he is now to his parents, Dan and Diane. They were the ones who took Juden to his games — his father helping him in the game and his mother helping him to "stay sane."

The Gloucester native lettered in three sports at Governor Dummer Academy, and participated in Hockey Night in the Boston All-Star Tournament in 1993. You have to believe that former Bruin great Phil Esposito was there that night, because Juden was chosen in the sixth round of the 1994 NHL Entry Draft by the incomparable GM of the Tampa Bay Lightning.

Coming to UMass was a big jump for him, and he had to get used to the higher level of play.

"It was a big jump from high school, and you don't realize it

Turn to JUDEN, page 9

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

Junior forward Dan Juden continues to improve along with the UMass hockey program.

Brown says sorry; Dawg Pound turns to Buffalo for fun

Pop quiz: Who's a bigger embarrassment to humankind; San Francisco Mayor Willie Brown or San Francisco quarterback Elvis Grbac?

If you picked the former, give yourself a pat on the back.

And if you don't know why he's an embarrassment, it's basically because while Brown was in Paris a week ago, he called Grbac an "embarrassment to humankind" after the QB threw two interceptions in the 49ers' loss to rival Dallas.

Brown later apologized, saying he didn't realize Grbac had been unprepared because he was worrying about his young son who is suffering from spina bifida.

Whether Grbac's son has a disease or not though, Brown was way out of line. No matter how popular the National Football League may be, or how much money is involved, in the end it is just a game.

Players in the league willingly give up their privacy in order to gain money and fame by playing. However, that doesn't give fans the right to belittle them as people or for anyone to call them an "embarrassment." Football players are still humans, with normal worries and problems, and they make human mistakes.

JACOB W. MICHAELS on the NFL

The fact that it was a mayor — supposedly a position of authority and integrity — makes Brown's comments all the more out of line. Hopefully, Grbac will pay him back by leaving San Francisco, only to return to haunt them by beating them in future Super Bowls.

• A year and a half ago, Art Modell was generally considered one of the better owners in the NFL. He seemed to care about the game, generally put a good product on the field, was pleasant to talk to, and didn't interfere like Jerry Jones and Al Davis.

That all changed the moment Modell announced he was moving the Cleveland Browns to Baltimore, and leaving the great Cleveland fans and the "Dawg Pound" behind. He suddenly became one of the most hated owners of all time.

Bills owner Ralph Wilson, on the other hand, has generally been well thought of. With his actions last Sunday, though, Wilson may have taken a step toward replacing Modell as a loved owner, as he showed how much he cared about the game, its traditions and its fans.

Wilson invited the "Dawg Pound" to a Bills game against old Cleveland rivals, the Cincinnati Bengals. And with the help of the boisterous fans, the Bills won 31-17.

There are a lot of similarities between the two blue-collar cities, and Cleveland fans could choose worse teams to switch their allegiance to until they get the Browns back.

The Bills consistently put a very good product on the field. After four straight AFC Championships — a remarkable feat often overlooked due to their four straight Super Bowl losses — the Bills finally missed the playoffs in 1994.

But despite almost everyone's hopes, the Bills would not go away for more than one season. Last year, with some great off-season acquisitions, the Bills bounced back, surprising everyone by winning the AFC East once again.

This year, people were ready for the Bills. That's why they got excited when, despite their 5-3 record at the time, people saw them struggling. Two losses in three weeks (to Miami and New England) put the spotlight on an offense that was truly offensive. It seemed like the Bills — especially QB Jim Kelly — were finally showing their age, and that it was mostly luck that had their record as good as it was at this point.

But then came the return of the K-Gun, the terror of the early '90s. In the last three games, against Washington, Philadelphia and Cincinnati, the Bills have scored 93 points, for a 31-point average.

And with Denver's humiliation of New England on Sunday, guess who's back in first place in the AFC East? That's right: Buffalo.

• Despite their recent wins, the New England Patriots have a growing problem. The emergence of QB Drew Bledsoe seems to have come at the expense of the running game.

It isn't the fault of Curtis Martin, last year's Rookie of the Year, however. The lack of a running game can be

Turn to NFL, page 9

Williams is the new Man in charge for Boston's nine

Wanted: One major league manager with World Series experience to guide the most maligned franchise in baseball history to the promised territory of October action.

Must be patient with scrutinizing media and skeptical fans. Must be able to instruct young talent. Must win.

Enter Jimy Williams. All he's missing is an "M."

The Red Sox officially ended their search for a manager yesterday, hiring the former Atlanta Braves third base coach and Blue Jays head man. Williams brings a wealth of experience to the Fenway dugout from his winning Toronto teams of the '80s and the undisputed team of the '90s.

FRED HURLBRINK, JR on Baseball

Williams is a class act who is widely known as a top- notch instructor and one of the foremost baseball minds in the senior circuit.

Boston GM Dan (Who needs Roger Clemens?) Duquette has found a guy that will please the fans and the organization, and should keep the players happy. But, will Williams be able to win with the slow-pitch softball team that Duquette has on the field right now?

A keg at every base would probably get Jose Canseco to stay in the Hub.

Williams is a guy who knows how to win, obviously. He was an integral part of baseball's latest dynasty, helping the Braves to four World Series appearances and one title. He took over for Bobby Cox in Toronto in 1986, and in the ensuing campaign he led the Blue birds to 96 wins.

Toronto, however, is not the media circus that Boston is. Williams' biggest test will be figuring out what kind of team he has, and exactly how he's going to win. And, he's going to have a heckuva time doing that under the hot lamp that is Red Sox fandome.

The signing of Williams gives the Red Sox some time to stall on all the other decisions that they need to make soon. Like, when they are going to sign the Rocket to the contract he deserves. Who do ya' keep: John Valentin or Tim Naehring? How do you replace Canseco, if he doesn't come back? What do you do about the defense? What do you do about Wil (where am I goin', coach) Cordero or Reggie Jefferson? What the heck is wrong with Aaron Sele?

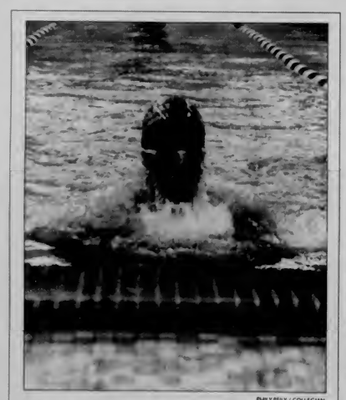
More good news for Sox fans: Albert Belle has been signed... by the White variety of Sox.

Sorry. I know, that was cruel. But, the signing of baseball's poster boy for media relations could be considered good news for the Sox fans in Beantown.

Although terms of the deal were not disclosed at the press conference yesterday, Belle's deal was reportedly worth a cool $50 million over five years, a $2.5 million signing bonus and an option for a sixth year. That's enough dough to bake Cecil Fielder a month's worth of cookies.

So, why is that good news for Boston followers?

Jerry Reinsdorf — owner of the Chicago Bulls and White Sox — already has to pay Frank Thomas, Michael Jordan, Scottie Pippen and Dennis (Color Me Bad!) Rodman. With the addition of Belle, Reinsdorf will hardly have enough money to pay for a small Porsche, this week.



That strain on Reinsdorf's pocket could pave the way for the Red Sox' expedition to find pitching in the Windy City. The Duke is a fan of both Wilson Alvarez and Alex Fernandez, two live arms with a lot of years left in them.

Either hurler would be a tremendous asset to a staff of arms that is shaky at best. Between Sele and Tom Gordon, new pitching coach Joe Kerrigan will probably see the best big league curveballs in the last ten years. He will also bear witness to some of the worst benders, and misplaced fastballs in recent memory. Can you say Jeff Russell?

Sign the Rocket and one of the two Chicago workhorses, bank on young gun Jeff Suppan in the third slot and Tim Wakefield eating up innings as the fourth starter, and you have the makings of a solid set of starters. Let the Rocket go, drop the ball on the White Sox tandem and all of a sudden a rock is your number one.

Good news abounds. Let's see if the Sox can work with it.

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr. is a Collegian columnist.

EMILY BERLY / COLLEGIAN

Splish, splash...

As coach Russ Yarworth waits for his water polo team's trip to San Diego, his men's swimming and diving teams are off to a strong start.

Colorado avalanches whole league

No cute little sayings, no sweet little nothings to start this column. Yo, are you ready for this?

• Bryan Smolinski should still be in a Boston Bruins uniform. Can I say that? Thank you.

This past weekend, the ex-Gah-dentie made his third stop in as many seasons, being traded by Pittsburgh to the New York Islanders for defenseman Darius Kasparaitis and rookie center Andreas Johansson. Caught in a contract squabble with the Penguins, Smolinski was playing for Detroit (the minor league team) instead of the team the Bruins had traded him to before last season.

Jorma Kansanen on the NHL

I wouldn't play for the Pens either, at this point.

The Penguins are awful, and their 5-12-1 record as of press time is truly academic of their team-wide futility. But that is besides the point. I am not lamenting over picking in the preseason them for first in the Northeast Division. No, you can't make me. I won't do it. Uh-uh.

OK, let's do it.

Why are they awful? One reason: coach Eddie Johnston. This guy has the coaching style of Cowboy Bob, and his depth of hockey perception is as good as Helen Keller. Believe me, that is a compliment to Keller. The Pens are not lacking in star power, with Jagr-Lemieux-Francis, but what they are lacking is a coach that will bust some heads in the name of fundamental hockey.

In one of their earlier games against the N.Y. Rangers, on a power play, mind you, they had three players behind their own net. Otherwise said, it would be having Lari Ketner set up a alley-oop for Ross Burns. It doesn't work, and I must say the Ketner-Burns combo has a better chance of working. The Pens gave up a short-handed goal because of that ineptness, and lost that game big. They have not done much better since, losing big again to the Rangers last weekend, 8-3. Even worse, at home.

Well, the wanna-be Black-and-Golders (we do have a better record than them) did pick up a tough presence in Kasparaitis, but that is not going to help. Johnston has got to go, while Smolinski was not helping them at all. His 64 points last year for Pittsburgh would not aid them that much, but it would for the Bruins.

Who did we get for Smolinski? Shawn McEachern.

And he doesn't score too well for us when he plays for the Ottawa Senators. Another player that should still be in a Bruins uniform. One or the other, it doesn't matter to me.

• Oh damn. The Calgary Flames sent Chris O'Sullivan to the minors.

Bleed me a river.

I do not have too much to say about an ex-Boston University Terrier, only that it really pains me (insert sarcastic tone) to see some of last year's team members doing so well in the NHL this year.

I guess that is what you get for running up the score on UMass last year in the Hockey East quarterfinals, eh?

What comes around, goes around, boys.

Oh, where art thou, Jay Pandolfo? Oh, woe is me...

And speaking of woe, the next installment in BU bashing comes from the "instant karma is going to get you (and knock you right in the head)" department. Has Mike Grier recovered yet from his spanking by the hands of the Bruins' Kyle McLaren the other week? Hey, the Edmonton Oilers might have won the battle, but we won the, uh, fight! Yeah, the fight. I'm pathetic.

• I had a young boy walk up to me the other day (really, no, but work with me), and he asked, "Gee, Jorma, is the Colorado Avalanche really that good?"

I said, "Yes, and if you wish real hard there, son, the Bruins might suck enough, for long enough, so we can get the kind of players they have through the Entry Draft!"

Once again, the 'Lanche are the class of the NHL, leading the Pacific Division and the league with 30 points. They are truly the top, not the tap, of the Rockies, and every other orographic formation on this round world.

This team would beat three-quarters of the national squads out there. Led by the top two scorers in the league, Joe Sakic (9 goals, 24 assists) and Peter Forsberg (11 goals 21 assists), and the NHL's top scoring defenseman in Sandis Ozolinsh, it will be tough for any team to beat them now.

The cornerstones of this franchise were taken through the Entry Draft, or were traded to them via the draft. Sakic, Valeri Kamensky, Adam Deadmarsh and Adam Foote were drafted by Colorado (aka Quebec), while Forsberg and Mike Ricci were draft picks coming through the trade with Philadelphia for then-Nordique Eric Lindros. It's a shame Boston can't get players like that, we just draft players like Rob Cimetta and Dmitri Kvartalnov.

But before I get too ahead of myself, did I see that Hartford was up 4-1 on Colorado in the third period last Saturday? But before dogs and cats could sleep with each other, they pulled back to tie it up at 4-4, and avoided ultimate humiliation. Whew! I hate it when they do that.

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 55 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Thursday, November 21, 1996

Not a pretty girl...

Grrl-rocker Ani Di Franco packed 'em into Smith's John M. Greene Hall on Tuesday night (see Arts & Living, page 6)

On the air

This season, each Massachusetts men's basketball team covered by ESPN will be seen on UVC 19 (see Sports, page 16).

WORLD

Spain seeking justice in Argentine incidents

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The government gave information on 248 Spaniards who disappeared during the Argentine dictatorship to a judge on Wednesday, in hopes that numerous Argentine military officials will stand trial in Spain.

National Court Judge Baltasar Garzon is investigating the role played by 97 military officials in the kidnapping, torture and murder of Spaniards in Argentina during the 1976-83 military rule. While Spain is expected to relay Garzon's extradition requests to Argentina, chances that the 97 military officials actually will appear in court here are next to none. In 1990, Argentina pardoned high-ranking officers, including the dictatorship's leader, former Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla.

Lawyers for relatives of those who disappeared argue that Spanish law allows the prosecution of genocide no matter where it is committed and regardless of the nationality of those accused. More than 340 survivors and relatives have given written or verbal testimony in the proceedings that began Sept. 12. Besides holding hearings in Madrid, Garzon plans to collect testimony in Argentina.

NATION

Wis. man settles big in landmark gay case

EAU CLAIRE, Wis. (AP) — Because he is gay, Jamie Nabozny was regularly taunted on and beaten up in school, subjected to a mock rape and kicked in the belly so many times he needed surgery.

On Wednesday, Nabozny, now 21, accepted a $900,000 settlement, ending the first federal trial of a school district for not protecting a gay student from harassment.

The settlement was announced one day after a jury found that three school administrators in Ashland violated Nabozny's rights by failing to protect him from years of gay-bashing. The jury had been scheduled to begin considering how much to award him in damages Wednesday.

The verdict marked the first time school officials have ever been held liable for anti-gay violence against a student, said Peg Byron, public education director for the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, a gay-rights organization that represented Nabozny. "I think this will send a very clear message to school districts," Nabozny said. "It is time it's stopped."

Nabozny said the gay-bashing started when he entered Ashland Middle School in 1988 and continued until he dropped out of Ashland High School as a junior in 1993.

He said it ranged from name-calling to being shoved, beaten, spat on and even having his head pushed in a urinal and being urinated upon.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 25	HIGH: 40 LOW: 25	HIGH: 45 LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds.....page 8
Comics.....page 9
Crossword.....page 8
Editorial.....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports.....page 10

ALANA community frustrated by advising, representation woes

UMass at a crossroads — the state of academic advising: a Massachusetts Daily Collegian special report

Day One: Faculty reactions to advising
Faculty says departmental advising is strong; student apathy is a real problem; administration is also criticized

Day Two: Collegian study points to advising problems
Students express frustration and confusion with the advising process

Day Three: The proactive University?
Students, administration, critique programs aimed at making UMass more accesible.

Day Four: Cultural organizations and advising
Students of color strive to find a familiar face and guidance at a predominately white University

Day Five: UMass 2000
Will the future forget the undergraduate? What do the next five years hold for UMass and its students?

Editor's Note: this article is fourth in a five part special report on the state of academic advising at the University of Massachusetts. The report was compiled by the Collegian news department.

Special Report Collegian News

With funding for higher education already strained, students of color are feeling the squeeze disproportionately at the University of Massachusetts.

Funding for the three ALANA academic support programs, Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), and United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC), have become a major issue among students of color on this campus.

Advising plays a key role for ALANA students. These support centers offer ALANA students more than just academic advising. They help make the adjustment to UMass easier by assisting students of color who feel alienated on a white-dominated campus.

In the fall of 1995, there was a total of 2,511 ALANA students out of a total 17,559 undergraduates. The percentage of white undergraduates was an enormous 82.3 percent, while Asians numbered only 5.9 percent, African- American 3.9 percent, Latinos 3.8 percent and Native Americans a minute .3 percent.

The number of faculty of color is also an undiverse statistic, with 86.7 percent being white, 4.9 percent Asian, 3.7 percent African-American, 3.2 percent Latino, and .4 percent Native American.

While the 1992 ALANA Agreements have yet to be fulfilled, many say that the lack of ALANA students and faculty is an embarrassment to the UMass administration.

"If the administration is so worried about retention of ALANA students, they should fund CCEBMS properly and put its money where its mouth is," said Desiree Joseph, a senior CCEBMS student majoring in family and community services.

CCEBMS was founded in 1967 as an academic support program, primarily to oversee the admissions, development and graduation of ALANA students.

Five full time advisors must split the enormous load of 900 CCEBMS students.

"There are only five full time advisors, and each of us have over 150 students to advise on a whole range of issues from financial aid to housing problems. The student to advisor ratio is way too high. We need more funding to get more advisors," said CCEBMS advisor Sid Ferreira.

Many ALANA students say they know exactly what is needed to improve these programs, and they are irritated by what they see as the apathetic attitude of the administration.

"CCEBMS needs more funding and deserves more respect," said CCEBMS student Melissa McPherson. "With the funding they can provide more help for their students by getting more advisors, computers, tutors, and other aids for CCEBMS students.

"CCEBMS also needs to be respected by all University faculty

Turn to ADVISING, page 3

To pass the time...

JENNIFER BJTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Andrew Jones, a sophomore communications major, practiced his skateboarding moves on the steps of the Fine Arts Center yesterday afternoon.

SGA proposal to shed light on Orchard Hill, Sylvan trail

By Raghuram Vadarevu
Collegian Staff

With the growing concern about the safety of women on college campuses, the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate passed a motion last night that requests campus administration to place lights and call boxes on the trail that stretches from Orchard Hill Residential Area to Sylvan Residential Area.

The trail known as the "rape trail" by many students is considered dangerous for women to walk at night because there are no lights or call boxes, said Sen. Bill Ramsey (Commuter Area), who co-sponsored the motion.

"We both feel that regardless of what happens [with the trail issue] students are not going to stop using it," said Sen. Jennifer Casasanto (SW-John Adams), who sponsored the motion with Ramsey. "Therefore, the University is directly responsible for students on the trail and is obligated to take a measures to improve the safety."

Tony Cardullo, head security supervisor for UMass Escort Service said in a telephone interview that the SGA proposal is a great idea to make the campus a safer place.

Cardullo said that the walking escorts use Thatcher Way or the Orchard Hill path and are forbidden from using the trail. He added that the security staff patrols the trail every night in pairs of two — which ensures the safety of the security staff.

According to the Ramsey, the motion will also be forwarded to the vice chancellor's committee on safety. The committee, according to Attorney General David Heyes, is made up of the vice chancellors, campus police and four students, and focuses on safety issues on campus.

"By pursuing the motion we [the Senate] are generating issues for the vice chancellor's committee on safety [to address]," Ramsey said.

The chair of the Women's Issues

Turn to PROPOSAL, page 2

Marching band plays charity rally

Flint donates undisclosed amount at COMEC fundraising event

By Frank Campailla
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Minuteman Marching Band provided the sounds and cheers for the annual Commonwealth of Massachusetts Employees Campaign (COMEC) rally yesterday outside the Campus Center.

The event, part of "Caring and Sharing Day," was designed in hopes of boasting support for local charitable organizations within the UMass community.

Men's basketball coach James "Bruiser" Flint, along with representatives from local charities, encouraged students and others to give their support to those in need.

Flint called on the crowd to not only contribute and help COMEC reach its fundraising goal of $190,000 and beyond. Presently $182,000 has been raised.

"It is important for the whole University to get involved and try to help out as much as we can," Flint said. "It shows our concern."

Flint presented his donation, an undisclosed amount, to the director of the Minuteman Marching Band and master of ceremonies, George Parks.

COMEC supports a variety of local charitable agencies. Representatives from these organizations turned out for the event to speak on the importance of their work.

"Last year there were over 57,000 instances where people were helped by United Way agencies," said Kimbell Howes, director of the United Way Hampshire County Chapter. "We have a wonderful group of over 2,000 volunteers year round.

Andre Juarez, a representative from Jesse's House, a homeless shelter that deals with families and community groups in Hampshire County, called on the crowd to put faith in people who receive aid from charities.

"Often we are bombarded with pleas for help that we get so desensitized to it that we lose sight of what it means," Juarez said.

He explained how Jesse's House has helped homeless people and domestic abuse victims make their lives better.

"Some of those people are now graduate students at Mount Holyoke College, they are walking among you here at UMass and have become popular contributing members of society," Juarez said. "That would not have happened without some unknown person, a nameless person, one of us, reaching into our pockets and contributing."

Tom Rich, a UMass employee, spoke on behalf of the National Education for Assistance Dog Services, and UMass alumni Nancy Gilbert talked about her involvement with the Hampshire County Visiting Nurse's Association and Home Care.

UMass student Richard Slingluff said he thought the rally was effective at attracting attention.

"It's a great thing," he said. "It's the best way to get people to know about it."

Feminist research history explored in comprehensive Reinharz lecture

By Michelle Hillman
Collegian Staff

The Women's Graduate Minor Research Lecture Series hosted Shulamit Reinharz, Ph.D yesterday in the Campus Center. Reinharz spoke about feminist research methods in a lecture entitled "Feminist Research Methods: Past, Present and Future."

Reinharz discussed the early problem women had accessing higher education. "I define the 19th century from this perspective as a period in which the women's struggle was getting access to higher education," Reinharz said.

JENNIFER BJTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Comparing the women's struggle for higher education to the women's suffrage movement, Reinharz said the struggle for education "was as cruel, as full of biological arguments preventing women from higher education" as the suffrage movement.

Reinharz illustrated the difficulty women had getting into faculty positions by circulating a photo of a Maldon Hospital picture where all the men looked exactly alike. Women attending the talk guessed the picture was taken in 1904, when in actuality it was from 1963.

"They're all white, smiling and wearing suits. It is a wonderful illustration of conformity," Reinharz said. The picture was described as a product of women's access to higher education and exclusion.

A result of women getting into the academy "torturously and slowly," Reinharz encountered a world which was free of mentors.

"I didn't study women's studies," she said. "I thought that was strange."

It was not until 1969 that the first Women's Studies course was offered in the United States, prompting Reinharz to comment "we should remember how new the struggle is."

In graduate school Reinharz found several dilemmas also present while doing research for Columbia Bureau of Applied Social Research. "I still found survey research put things into boxes that didn't fit," she said.

Turn to HISTORY, page 3

JENNIFER BJTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Volunteers carried a banner for the COMEC "Caring and Sharing Day" campaign yesterday.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Thursday, Nov. 21

Club — Signing Coffee Hour sponsored by UMass HANDS at 7 p.m. in the Bluewall. Any questions, call the office at 545–1952 or stop by the office in room 306 of the Student Union.

Film — The UMass Dept. of Germanic Languages and Literatures and its German Club are sponsoring a Heinrich Boll Film Festival in Thompson 106, starting at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free; popcorn and soda will be provided. For more information, call 545–2350.

Meeting — S.H.A.R.E., Students Helping Area Reach–Out Efforts is having a general meeting from 7–8 p.m. in Campus Center room 804–08. New members are welcome.

Meeting — The Math Club will meet at 7 p.m. in LGRT 1521D. A film, "Donald Duck in Mathmagic Land" and then a game of pool in the Student Union. All math majors are invited to attend.

Performance — Mission Improvable, a comedy improv troupe, will perform at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 172. Admission is free.

Poetry Reading — An evening of original poetry will be held at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Art Gallery. All are encouraged to read original works and to have them published. Sign up for the reading at the Art Gallery or contact Maria at 253–6674 for further information.

Charity — To help Oxfam America, MASSPIRG and Dining Services are encouraging students to skip a dinner. Proceeds from the meal will be donated to help the hungry.

Health — U.H.S. Health Education will be sponsoring activities to help you quit smoking cigarettes and chewing tobacco. Nancy Grossman, Lic. Ac., will give an info session and demonstration on how acupuncture can help with tobacco addiction in Campus Center room 905 from 2– 3 p.m. Tama Chambers, founder of the Center for Clinical Hypnosis and Behavioral Science will give an info session and demonstration on how hypnosis can help you quit in Campus Center room 805–09 from 3–5 p.m. A tobacco cessation support group will be held in Campus Center room 801 from 7–8 p.m. For further information, call the Health Education Division at 577–5181.

Friday, Nov. 22

Performance — Mission Improvable, a comedy improv troupe, will perform at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 168. Admission is free.

Religious — "Thanksgiving" Shabbat services with a free meal at 6 p.m. at Chabad House, 30 N. Hadley Rd., Amherst. Free and open to the public and for more information, call 549–4094.

Community — An event sponsored by MASSPIRG to educate the campus community about homlessness by sleeping outside. Students raise money by getting pledges for hours sleeping out. For more information, contact Melanie Undem, MASS Student PIRG Organizer, at 545–0199.

Notices

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584– 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Fall Library Workshops — UMass reference librarians are offering a series of workshops. November sessions will include demonstrations of databases and Web sites in Literature with Literature Specialist Liz Fitzpatrick (Nov. 18, from 1–2 p.m.), and the Internet (Nov. 21, from 9:30–11 a.m.) with Internet Resources Librarian Emily Hurn. All workshops will be in the Library Instruction Room, main floor, Du Bois Library. All are welcome, although sign up is required for the Internet sessions. Please call 545–6892 to register.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Tues., Dec. 3 from 5:30–7 p.m. in CC room 165–169.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Literature — MOTHERTONGUE, the multilingual student publication by the dept. of Comparative Literature, is currently seeking submissions for the spring '97 publication. We will accept original poetry, short stories, one–acts, international photographs, and art work created by multilingual students. Please submit a copy in English to the Comparative Literature Dept. in 203 South College. Rough drafts are acceptable.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m., in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Religious — The Alliance Church of the Pioneer Valley offers rides to students to attend the 10 a.m. service in Amherst. Drivers arrive at the Knowlton and Prince bus stops at 9:45. Please call Mark to confirm, or for other stops, at 253–0361.

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

UMass spirit...
The UMass Color Guard performed in front of the parking garage yesterday for the COMEC campaign.

■ proposal

continued from page 1

committee, Sen. Stacey Shackford (Cen.–At–Large), said that it is important to address the safety needs of women when they walk on campus.

"If the University is going to create an atmosphere where women feel that their safety is in jeopardy whenever they walk across campus that the University has the responsibility to create the most safe campus possible," Shackford said.

Snowed in and bored out of our minds.

Collegian

STUDENT SPEAKER
UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT

Is there something you would like to say before graduating? If so, you are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as Student Commencement Speaker.

Who is Eligible:	Graduating Amherst campus seniors (Class of 1997).
Subject Matter:	Substance should concern higher education and be relevant to the University and your experience(s) here.
Format:	Submit up to three word-processed or typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of 3-5 minutes speaking time.
Selection Process:	Authors' names will be deleted (by a non-voting staff person) after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the proposals. 3-5 individuals will be invited to "audition" before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.
Deadline:	Wednesday, February 12, 1997, 4:30 p.m.
Submit Proposals To:	Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 305 Whitmore (545-3464).

Scott's LIQUORS
OPEN: Mon.- Sat. 9a.m.-11 p.m. Tel: 549-2692.

Shop Scott's & Save Lotts! THANK YOU FOR YOUR PATRONAGE

Moosehead 12 pack bottles $6.99 +dep.
Harpoon 6-packs, All Flavors $4.99 +dep.
Coors Extra Gold 30 packs $11.99 +dep.
Old English 22oz Flavored Brews .95¢ +dep.
Sam Adams 24 12oz bottles $18.99 +dep.
Busch & Busch Light 30-packs $11.79 +dep.
Red Dog & Ice House 12 pack bottles $6.99 +dep.

Check Out Our Spectacular 2wk Wine Sale!

Captain Morgan 1.75 Liter $16.49
Popov Vodka 1.75 Liter $10.99
Jagermeister 750ml $14.49
Bacardi Limon 750 ml $8.99
Seagram's Gin 1.75 Liter $15.99

Open Sunday Now "Till '97" I (12-5)

Check Out Our Other Great In Store Specials
Tele-Check for your personal check
6 University Drive at Newmarket Center, Amherst

ATTENTION: SKIERS AND SNOWBOARDERS
THE UMASS SKI CLUB ANNOUNCES ITS

LAST MEETING

OF THE SEMESTER

THIS SUNDAY !!
7 PM - CAMPUS CENTER

UMASS SKI CLUB
ALL WELCOME - ALL SERVED

YOUR LAST CHANCE TO SAVE BIG $ ON MEMBERSHIPS AND ...
QUEBEC CITY
CANADA
LODGING, LIFTS & TRANSPORTATION
DEC 6-8th

LOOK !! NOW ONLY $120!
545-3437

■ advising

continued from page 1

and staff. There are many noted faculty and staff that do not even know what CCEBMS stands for, or better yet know even what it is."

Other ALANA academic support programs such as BCP, founded in 1974, also voiced concerns over the amount of funding for their program.

"We have over 500 students to advise and we only have three and a half advisors. The lack of resources and funding is a problem," said Manuela Littlefield, an advisor at BCP. Despite the low number of ALANA students and advisors, many feel that the programs provide a unique service to the ALANA community while battling the burden of inadequate funding.

"BCP has many opportunities for ALANA students, ones you will not find anywhere else on this campus," said Ainex Baez, a BCP junior and biology major.

The UALRC, another advising center founded in 1990, has over 560 students with only three advisors.

"We are like a second family to our students, we take into consideration personal situations when advising," Director Lucy Nguyen said.

The inadequate funding is not limited to CCEBMS and BCP. It is also persists in the UALRC, said UALRC student Lucy Kwon.

"UALRC needs more money to get more advisors to cater to all the different Asian groups on campus," she said. "The advisors they have now are Chinese, Japanese, and Vietnamese.

"Even though most student on academic probation are Korean, they still cannot afford to get a Korean advisor with they funds they have now. They have an excellent tutorial system which I found very helpful."

Many students have lost confidence in the administration's ability to address the concerns of ALANA students by not funding these programs as they should.

"I think it's such a sham that these organizations exist without the proper funding to adequately achieve its purpose," said Viraphong Douangmany, a junior UALRC student. "As a Laotian, it is difficult to maintain a positive attitude when there are not any moral or structural support, people that will understand my needs and where I am coming from.

"UALRC needs advisors that can properly respond to Southeast Asian students needs. I think that it is obscene that our own faculty, in this day and age, will question multiculturalism. It is a disgrace to UMass."

As ALANA students remain frustrated, they recognize the importance of these support programs.

"As students of color it is essential that we have solid support structures," said Black Student Union President Khernchrist Lacoste. "When funds are not allocated to these advising centers we are placed in a hole with no means of escape."

Many ALANA students find it disrespectful that this funding problem is not at the top of the administrations agenda.

"If this school can have money for teams like hockey, water polo, lacrosse, horseback riding, then they can invest more money into really leveling our 'playing field,'" said Student Government Association ALANA Caucus Sen. Laura Lopez. "When talking about these sports teams the money is considered an 'investment' but when our cultural support centers ask for more funding, the money is then considered a 'hand–out'...

"Are we not worth the investment? CCEBMS, BCP, and UALRC are extremely underfunded. No wonder, Chancellor Scott, our retention rate is so low."

With all this said, the question still remains, is the administration doing its best to combat the problems of funding for these centers? The ALANA community has expressed impatience in waiting for the administration to make changes. There has been plenty of talk and now students say it seems time for action.

Sunanda Ghosh is a Collegian staff member.

■ history

continued from page 1

A big mistake of the history of development of feminist research methods, according to Reinharz, was they "began to develop qualitative research as the only way to do things."

She continued by saying "some feminist consider qualitative research to be 'it.'"

"We cannot answer all questions this way," Reinharz added. "People in women's studies have to create a critique and then think of alternatives.

As an alternative to these limiting research methods, Reinharz suggested using what she called "experiential" research.

"To truly understand something you have to experience conditions of phenomenon," she said. "If you are subject to fate, you have a deeper higher understanding. Research methods have to be understood as working through dilemmas.

"Feminist research methods can be applied to any discipline. I'm working with pre–meds right now. Every single discipline is utilized.

"I don't think there is a unique feminist research method. The fact that there is not a unique method is empowering, all methods are used by feminists," Reinharz said.

Reinharz suggested that in order for research methods to be effective "there has to be a partnership between feminism and research. Social change comes from first understanding systems of power and developing critiques on them."

Attention Collegian Comic Artists
Save your babies!!!

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441

Featuring, "Sam Adams Lager" $16.99

M.G.D. bots. $9.99 case
So. Comfort $7.49 750ml.
Milwaukee's Best +Light $9.99 30/pk. cans
"Winter Micro"Bonanza!
Harpoon -Winter Warmer, -Pete's -Winter Brew
Shipyard -Longfellow Winter Ale
Saranac -Season's Best, Red Hook- Winter Ale
Sam Adams -Winter Lager, Cranberry + Old Fezziwig Ale.
Mix/Match "two" 6/PKs... $10.95
* Russell's $9.95 12/pk Bonanza Continues Also! *
Bacardi Limon $8.99 750ml.
Vodka 80° $8.99 1.75 liter

All Beers Plus Deposit OPEN 9:00AM - 11:00PM VISA/MASTERCARD •Delivery Available•

There are College Boards and there are college boards.
We give extra credit with ours.

50%* off Stratton's lift tickets.
College Blast Week: 1/5-1/17/96 - Lifts & Lodging $40
Simply present your valid college I.D. and receive on early season, late season or midweek lift ticket for only $22 – that's a full 50% off – or a weekend/holiday lift ticket for $5 less than your non-matriculating friends. Just think of all of the educational things you'll be able to do with your savings.
•58 million snowmaking expansion
•New England's only six-passenger high-speed chairlift
•New "Stratton Unplugged" Mountain Adventure Parks
You're in college. Do something smart. Do Stratton.
http://www.stratton.com 1-800-STRATTON
STRATTON
Vermont's Mountain Resort
* All with valid college I.D.; College Blast Week: 2, 3 or 4 br condo; rates based on maximum occupancy per unit. rates are per person, per day; 4 day minimum, midweek only

Rwandan Hutus flee homeward

By Chris Tomlinson
Associated Press

SAKE, Zaire — A thousand Rwandan Hutus broke free from retreating Hutu militiamen in eastern Zaire to begin their long trek home yesterday, and tens of thousands more also were on the move.

The U.N. World Food Program said 100,000 refugees were heading from Bukavu at the south end of Lake Kivu north toward Masisi, scene of reported fighting yesterday between Hutu militias and Rwandan-backed Zairian rebels.

Refugees in Sake, halfway between Masisi and the border town of Goma, said they slipped away from the militiamen during the fighting.

In Goma on Wednesday, Zairian rebels fired a burst of anti-aircraft fire toward a U.S. reconnaissance plane as it flew over thousands of rebel supporters.

The Navy P-3 Orion maritime patrol aircraft was too high to be hit, the Pentagon said. The aircraft was on a routine mission in support of an advance U.S. force that may intervene to aid returning Rwandan refugees.

Until the refugees began their surprise exodus Friday, international aid agencies complained they had no way of knowing where the refugees had gone when they fled the more than 40 camps in eastern Zaire to escape fighting between rebels and the Zairian army.

Rwandan officials insisted Tuesday that an international intervention force was no longer necessary because hundreds of thousands of refugees had returned from their 2 1/2-year exile in Zaire.

But U.N. agencies report several hundred thousand Rwandan refugees remain in eastern Zaire.

Military officials from nations offering to join the 10,000- to 12,000-member multinational force plan to meet Friday in Stuttgart, Germany, to decide the mission's fate. The United States has promised about 1,000 logistics specialists and $140 million to help the refugees.

The refugees who escaped from Masisi had left Katale camp north of Goma more than two weeks ago. The aid group Doctors Without Borders planned to truck them to the border with Rwanda, 15 miles east. From there, they will likely have to walk home.

In Goma, 10,000 people attended the rally in support of the rebels, who have routed the Zairian army from the eastern Kivu provinces and have pledged to overthrow President Mobutu Sese Seko. Rebel commander Andre Kassasse urged the crowd to organize self-defense units and to tell rebel forces if they saw Zairian troops or their Rwandan Hutu militia allies.

The militias, largely responsible for the massacre of more than 500,000 people in Rwanda in 1994, fled refugee camps in front of the rebel onslaught, freeing hundreds of thousands of Hutu refugees to head back to Rwanda.

Rebel leader Laurent Kabila had been expected to speak at the rally in Goma, but did not appear.

Gingrich to return for 2nd term as House speaker, pledges GOP "obligation" to cooperate with Clinton

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Chosen by Republicans for a second term as House speaker, Newt Gingrich said yesterday the GOP Congress has an "absolute moral obligation" to work with President Clinton and leave the campaign wars behind.

In a speech following his selection, Gingrich looked ahead to an "Implementation Congress" on issues such as balancing the budget, cutting taxes, attacking drugs and improving the health care system.

"We bear the unusual burden of reaching out to a Democratic president and saying, together, we can find common ground," said Gingrich, whose formal election as speaker is slated for Jan. 7, 1997, when the 105th Congress officially convenes.

Across the Capitol complex, Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota expressed a similar hope for cooperation.

In his first extended remarks since the presidential and congressional elections, Daschle said, "There really is perhaps an historic opportunity for Democrats and Republicans to work together. And our choice is really this: We can legislate or we can recriminate."

President Clinton, too, has indicated a willingness to work with Republicans. "We're in this boat together, and we have to paddle it together," he said shortly after the voters had returned both him and the GOP Congress to power.

Gingrich's remarks were more subdued and less combative than two years ago.

Then, he had led his party to a House majority for the first time in 40 years, and stood ready to lead them through an exhaustive effort to pass the conservative "Contract With America."

Now, the 53-year-old Georgian finds himself under lingering investigation by the ethics committee, and the run-up to his selection by the party caucus was marked by sniping from critics on both the left and the right.

On a personal note, Gingrich remarked to fellow Republicans that his father had died of cancer only a few hours earlier in the day, and on his mother's birthday. "That makes it hard," he said. Despite the changes — and a searing campaign in which dozens of Democrats depicted him as a symbol of extremism — he won by acclamation Wednesday and claimed a triumph for himself and other Republicans.

In the congressional elections, he said, "When it was all over, the American people, for the first time in 68 years, decided to reaffirm a Republican direction of the U.S. House of Representatives."

Aside from Gingrich, Republicans ratified the re-election of their entire top leadership team, including Texans Dick Armey as majority leader and Tom DeLay as whip; and John Boehner of Ohio as head of the caucus, the senior non-Southerner in the hierarchy. In his remarks, Armey echoed Gingrich's refrain of working with Clinton. "If you govern as you campaigned you will find little difference between our positions," he said. "because you campaigned on our message."

Despite Gingrich's re-election, critics claimed success in a broadest reshaping of the leadership structure. Gingrich will disband an advisory group that functioned much like an inner Cabinet, reviewing each major decision. Groups of moderates and conservatives won the right to choose their own representatives to an expanded leadership group, and committee chairmen are expected to have more latitude than they enjoyed in the past two years. With Gingrich under investigation, Armey will have the responsibility for selecting the new members of the ethics committee.

New York
Boston
Two Great Umass Campus Locations

Munchies Store
at Southwest
Hampden Dining Commons
Hours; M-F 8 am to 8:30 pm
Sat. & Sun. 12:30 pm to 7:30 pm

Peter Pan Office
Next to the Umass Travel Agency
in the Umass Campus Center
Tel. 256-0431 or 545-2006

Tickets must be purchased in person
Buses stop in front of Visa Area Campus Center
For Complete Schedule and Fare Information Call 1-800-
Look us up on the Worldwide Web http://www.peterpantravel.com

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey Brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sumirah Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgen Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtsmanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmed Marketing Manager
Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Mayerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Call me a bad doctor

Bob Dunn

A few weeks ago, Massachusetts became the first state in the union to offer people a 1-800 number they could call to receive information about physicians.

The information provided is confined to the professional arena only. The service will be able to tell you the doctor's specialties, the procedures that they are qualified to perform, awards received and probably most importantly, malpractice information.

When the program was put into effect consumer groups lauded it as a great idea, while doctor's groups chided it as misleading and unfair. Doctors' reps' main beef seemed to be the malpractice information. In fact, a physician was being interviewed on CNN the day the program started and his comment on the malpractice information was that just because a doctor has multiple malpractice suits against them (pending or not), it doesn't tell the whole story.

Yeah, and the guy with 37 speeding tickets isn't a bad driver, he's just unlucky.

The health care industry is a service industry and as such it should be open to the same sort of scrutiny that other service industries are subject to. If you call the Better Business Bureau for example, you can ask for information on a specific business, how long they've been in operation, how many complaints have been logged in against them, etc. What's the problem with doing the same for the medical industry?

If you're about to do business with an auto dealer with a history of overcharging people, cracking odometers and selling Dusters with BMW plates glued on, you'd want to know that, right? Well, with one well-placed phone call you could be completely informed about the various skullduggery being conducted at your expense all as a consumer service. At the same time if with one well-placed phone call you could find out that the specialist you were planning on seeing not only graduated third in their class at Harvard but also has a nasty habit of accidentally removing functioning limbs, that probably seems like a good idea as well, right?

I can see some of the doctors' point on this, though. We live in a litigious society and frivolous lawsuits are everywhere, I mean, the first time a McDonald's dared to serve one of their products above room temperature they got taken for a couple million. Also, many things can go wrong in a hospital setting. Charts can be misplaced, names can be misspelled, computers can go down, etc. not everything that goes wrong is necessarily a doctor's fault. However, most people you talk to don't have a pleasant experience at a hospital and then go and file a malpractice suit.

People have the right to know this information. Some malpractice suits might be frivolous, but the likelihood decreases when multiple suits start piling up. The excuses just start running out.

"Um, oh yeah, well um, Mr. Johnson's gall bladder just sort of um, fell out when we were removing his appendix. That's where that malpractice suit started."

All that's being done is arming people with information. If a particular doctor you're inquiring about has a couple of malpractice suits under their belt, that's something people ought to know before going in. Once speaking to the doctor you can ask, quite plainly, "What's up with this?" If you heard from eight of your friends that "Dick's Olde TV and Bait Shoppe" will rip you off unless you're careful and ask the right questions, you'd go in making sure you had an adequate working knowledge of grub worms and A/V cables.

No one is giving out private information about the doctors involved. You can't call for example and hear, "Oh yes, Dr. Smith graduated at the head of his class, hates green beans and has a leather fetish." All of the information is pertinent, useful and sometimes absolutely necessary.

With all the information out there pertaining to things that don't really matter in the long run (there's an 800 number you can call for information on Cool-Whip for crying out loud), I think a number that people can call for information on a person who quite possibly may have your life in their hands can only help. Doctors need to realize that even though they're sometimes overworked and forced to comply to an increasingly burdensome system, the public is going to hold them up to a higher standard and information is the yardstick we do it with.

Bob Dunn is a Collegian columnist.

About Saturday night...

Miranda Pirnell

A strange thing happened to me on Saturday night. I woke up to the sound of rain. Now... that in itself wasn't all that strange. I mean there's no law that says it can't rain on a Saturday night. What was strange and frankly downright concerning was that I was on the 23rd floor of a hotel in Boston and it sounded like the rain was coming from the 24th floor.

My parents, who were visiting from Australia, and I had had a huge day of retail therapy in Kittery, Maine and fell into bed exhausted at about 10 p.m. It was about 1:15 a.m. when we heard the first drops fall. My father stumbled out of bed, investigated the noise and assuming that the guests above us had a thing about late night showers, crawled back into bed. My mother, however, was not convinced. She paced around the room, pressing her ear to various walls in the joint before giving up and returning to bed.

By this time I was wide awake and less than impressed. It was now 1:30 a.m., I was tired and grumpy and sounds vaguely reminiscent of a Sydney thunder storm were playing out above my head. Worse still, they seemed to be getting louder. My mum was starting to panic, and I had visions of eight hours worth of shopping being ruined by a giant cascade of water which would no doubt fall from the ceiling the minute we managed to get back to sleep.

With preservation of our new purchases our utmost priority, my dad rang the front desk. "Hello, I'm in room 2316 and I think a pipe may have burst on the floor above us... well we can hear water running down inside the walls and it seems to be getting worse... you'll send an engineer up right away, great, thanks a lot."

The water had become louder by this stage, and if you didn't know any better you would have sworn there was a waterfall right outside our door. Sensing the serious nature of the situation, my parents decided it was time to abandon the pajamas in favor of something a little more presentable. I, however, have always fancied myself in my blue-and- white striped, satin P.J.s, and in some vain hope that the engineer might be a hunk, refused to get changed. I did brush my hair though.

About 20 minutes had passed since my dad had rung the desk and puddles of water were starting to rise up from under the carpet. I pulled on my waterproof boots, bought in anticipation of a harsh Amherst winter, and braced myself for the fact that evacuation was on the cards. Unfortunately when we had walked in the door that afternoon, we had simply thrown the 20 odd bags we had collected on the floor. So here we were, at some unspeakable hour of the morning, frantically stuffing the day's shopping into already bursting suitcases.

The temperature in the room was now about 80 and the windows had completely fogged up. Guessing that it must be hot water which was leaking, and with the engineer nowhere in sight, my father once again rang the desk and requested that we be moved to another room. "I'm sorry, Mr Purnell, there are no available rooms in the hotel. The engineer will be up shortly, I'm sure there's no cause for alarm." Actually there was. Water was now running down the walls and pouring out of the air-conditioning vent and the light fitting in the bathroom. The carpet in certain areas was more than an inch under water.

It was about 2 a.m. when the engineer showed up. He waded in through the water, which was now creeping out the door and into the hall, put his ear to the wall and asked if the water was hot. Judging by the temperature in the room, we told him it was. "Oh Jesus," he cried and fled the room. This didn't exactly inspire confidence in us. So my dad ventured down to the front desk to rant and rave, while my mum and I attempted to drag our suitcases through the flood waters and into the hall. As we were doing this the engineer returned (and he wasn't cute in case you were wondering) with two hotel suits, who looked at the rising damp, shook their heads, giggled a little and left, muttering something about having to walk.

It was around now that all of this started to become really funny to us. My dad came back and told us we were being moved to another hotel, and the engineer showed up once more to tell us the problem was fixed. It might well have been, but water was still pouring into the room. "Don't worry," he said, "it's only a small hole. If it had been a big hole the entire wall would have blown out and killed you in your beds." This was just what we wanted to hear at 3 a.m.

Anyway, in the end it all worked out fine. We got to the Sheraton at about 3:30 a.m., stayed in the Presidential suite no less and swanned out in the morning leaving the account for our previous, water-logged hotel to take care of. As we walked down to grab some breakfast, we passed the hotel. Looking up to the 23rd floor, it was easy to spot our old room. It was the one where the water stained concrete, which stretched all the way to the ground floor, began. We took a photo and had a good laugh. It could have been a lot worse. We could have been killed in our beds.

Miranda Purnell is a Collegian columnist.

EDITORIAL POLICY

☆ The Editorial/Opinion page welcomes columns, letters and cartoons from UMass and the rest of the Five College Area.
☆ Letters and columns must be typed and double spaced, with the writer's name, local address and phone number attached. This information is subject to verification prior to publication.
☆ Anonymous submissions will not be printed.
☆ The editorial staff reserves the right to edit letters and columns for grammar, clarity and length.
☆ Any submission that is requested to be left unedited will not be considered for publication.
☆ Submissions become the property of the Collegian and will not be returned.
☆ The Editorial staff is not required to print all submitted material.
☆ Letters should be no longer than 450 words and columns should be about 70 typed lines.
☆ Submissions should be sent to the Editorial Desk, c/o Mark McGrath, 113 Campus Center, UMass Amherst, MA, 01003.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Jersey sure

Evan Young

Everywhere I go around here, people are always ripping on New Jersey. So, since I am from New Jersey, better known as "The Best State in the Union," I feel like I should do a little bit of defending of the place I call home.

First of all, the best drivers in the country come from New Jersey. Every time I get behind someone who isn't even going the speed limit, the places are always either from Massachusetts or Florida. People who don't go at least as fast at the law allows deserve to be tailgated, then passed, then cut off and given the finger. You see, the ability to cut other drivers off skillfully comes from years of going around New Jersey circles, thus making us better drivers, thus making us better people too. And for anyone out there who might still doubt that we own the road, a fact: New Jersey was the first state to have both protected left turns at lights and the left/U-turn-off ramp.

Hey, all you Bruce Springsteen listening Massholes, guess what? The Boss is from New Jersey. Some other musical talents from New Jersey: Bon Jovi (they were cool in the '80s, so don't knock them), Redman and Booker T. and the MG's.

Sports fans, anyone? Oral Hershesier came from Jersey, Cherry Hill to be exact. Heavyweight boxer Bruce Sheldon is also from Atlantic City. For any runners out there (especially sprinters), Carl Lewis, perhaps the greatest Olympic performer in human history hails from Willingboro, and Dennis Mitchell, a great runner in his own right, comes from Edgewood. And as if these athletes weren't enough, Superfly Snuka (West Collingswood Heights) and Bam Bam Bigelow (Asbury Park) of former WWF fame are both from New Jersey.

Moving on to some miscellaneous entertainment categories, the Die Hard man himself, Bruce Willis is from New Jersey. Danny DeVito is from Asbury Park, the same place where Clerks (a good movie) was filmed. Halloween, one of the best of the old-school horror movies, was set in Haddonfield, and Camp Crystal Lake of Friday the Thirteenth fame, while a fictitious camp, was set in Mount Laurel.

How about some historical stuff? Walt Whitman, one of the greatest American poets, was from Camden — the same place where the first Campbell's Soup company opened up. Thomas Edison did most of his ground-breaking work in his lab in Menlo Park. The first hot air balloon took flight over Deptford. George Washington crossed the Delaware River from New Jersey, and the Statue of Liberty on Ellis Island is actually a part of New Jersey. The first intercollegiate football game ever played was between Rutgers and Princeton in New Brunswick.

Still think it's the Armpit of the Country? You'd have to be a liberty-hating communist.

Anyone ever eat Salt Water Taffy? That was invented in Atlantic City, just one of the many cities and towns on the beautiful New Jersey coastline. And yes, the Jersey Shore is one of the nicest stretches of coastline I've ever seen, and I've been to beaches in North Carolina, along Florida's coast, Massachusetts (if you can call a bunch of big rocks near the ocean a beach) and in California. Even the California sun doesn't hold a candle to the Jersey Coast — the sand out there is more like gravel.

As I'm sure real produce lovers will tell you, the Garden State grows the best tomatoes that money can buy during the summer. While this may sound like my own opinion, it is a fact that the acidic nature of much of New Jersey's soil lends itself to bigger, juicer and better tomatoes. New Jersey is America's fifth leading tomato-growing state.

Now, I think many people who are not familiar with my state easily make jokes about the pollution, the refineries, the crowdedness, etc. But South Jersey, where I am from, is in my opinion the best place to live that I've ever seen. Out of the 48 mainland states, I've seen 33 of them, and none of them offer the unique mix of culture that South Jersey does. Anyone out there ever been to Texas? The Nothing Is Here State? It simply doesn't offer as much. Let me explain.

My home town, Haddon Township, is only about six miles away from center city Philadelphia. One of two of the world's only privately owned and operated high-speed railroads is a five minute walk from my house, and services the South Philadelphia and South Jersey areas. All of the benefits of the big city are at most 15 minutes away, while all of the benefits of a quiet suburban life are at my fingertips. I can walk to two different shopping centers from my house, which include grocery stores, pizza and cheesteak places, drug stores, movie theaters and more. Anything you either want or need in a mall I can walk to from my front door. But at the same time, the aforementioned Jersey shore is less than an hour away by car. With the exception of the solace that miles and miles of deserts or corn fields can give, everything I need is at most an hour away.

So, New Jersey is simply the best place on Earth to live. People from New Jersey are the best human beings around, and if you don't agree, just ask them.

Evan Young is a Collegian columnist.

Whatever happened to Baby Jane?

C. Taylor Conner

Hey, Jane.

Yeah, you. Henry's kid. Peter's sister, Ted's wife. Listen up, cookie. Got a question for you — what the hell happened when you tied the knot with that media megalomaniac, that Turner loon?

I may be alone in this opinion, but this marriage may have done for your activist credibility what Barbarella did for the advancement of science fiction. Maybe we should have seen it coming with the likes of Stanley and Iris and Old Gringo.

But, come on, Janey. As if colorization and an increasingly obnoxious pro-censorship stance weren't enough, your sig other has been accused of either pulling the plug on or delaying three major projects, all of which were produced by Turner-owned studios. It is plausible, however, that since we only really see you in public at Atlanta Braves games, that the only news you receive is the scoreboard results.

Maybe he lets you watch a little CNN, but just to fortify his already gargantuan ego, I'm sure.

Let's pretend the newly crowned Jesse Helms of the media realm hasn't flitted you in on his recent exploits. First, he indefinitely delayed the release of Crash, the story of a white South African transplant who becomes a rock star... you didn't buy that, did you, Jane? Just testing.

In actuality, the film, helmed by a man who has previously made movies about twin gynecologists with scary tools and Jeff Goldblum drooling caustic white goo, is about folks who get off watching wretched car wrecks — In other words, mild David Cronenberg.

Your boy toy, however, did not see it this way, nor was he particularly fond of first-time director Anjelica Huston's adaptation of the controversial work, "Bastard Out of Carolina." His TNT won't touch it. Neither will Fine Line Features, which — quelle surprise, mealome — he owns as well.

Are you starting to get the picture, sister of Easy Rider star? This cat's got so much green, God owes him five bucks and a couple of stock options. And, increasingly, he has less tolerance than a 15-year-old girl having her first Zima. Bad combo.

Remember back in the day, Jane? You were the Anti- Vietnam war and No Nukes celebrity poster girl. These days, you keep clap-trapped as your partner won't air a pro-Anita Hill movie as scheduled on TNT because he fears tickling off Clarence Thomas before a vital Supreme Court hearing on FCC regulations.

Whatever happened to the ardent feminist who would have taken Thomas and his carbonated pubes and stuck them where the Arlen Specter don't shine. Whatever happened to Baby Jane?

You grew up, I guess, but not for the best. Yes, if you still love the craft of filmmaking, and above all, artistic expression, you will put an end to your husband's loopy antics. Start him drinking again — he was much more fun as the devil-may-care boozehound who just bought and sailed all his days.

If you can't manage that, start organizing friends to rally once more. Do you want to see Showgirls, which may well evolve into the Barbarella of the '90s (whatever that — shudder — means), taken off the shelves as Ted probably would?

Well, I wouldn't mind it either, but that's not the point. It's all about what you have to stand up for as an actress, an artist and the offspring of a man who played Abe Lincoln (whatever that means — just think First Amendment, stars and stripes, Bill Murray in Stripes, etc.)

I implore you to make sure that this boon doesn't start essentially trying to v-chip movie theaters or televisions while the parents are home.

I implore you to return to form and get your guns out, Janie.

C. Taylor Conner is a Collegian columnist.

VISIONS OF DOLLARS & OSCARS DANCE IN STUDIO'S HEADS

ADAM LEVINE

For anyone who hasn't been outside in awhile, the fall season is here. With the falling leaves and frigid cold upon us, Hollywood is preparing for its final attack over the multi-plexes throughout the country. For those left ill from this past summer's stale blockbusters, winter is the time to go out to the theater and see the industry attempt to redeem itself.

During this point of the year, the film studios release some of their most intense and dramatic pictures, making this the most ideal time for movie-going. With the year-ending close ahead and Oscar nominations right around the corner, the industry wants these latest contenders to be fresh in the Academy's mind.

It's no surprise that when in the midst of summer reruns, Hollywood tries to lure the innocent viewer to the theater, where one can be dazzled with high speed suspense and riveting special effects. Often a nice matinee is the best means of beating the heat while in a refreshing air conditioned movie theater. Summer is no doubt a huge moneymaking season for Hollywood, often containing the highest-grossing film of the year. The summer blockbusters, regardless of how entertaining they are, never seem to do well come Oscar time. This is why the fall film list needs to pick up the slack and adhere to the more serious side of the American public.

This code is not always successful for the industry, who for the past two years has had a weaker showing in the awards area. Last year's Braveheart came out in early May and still managed to pick up all the major victories in March during the Academy Awards. Forrest Gump in

Turn to VISIONS page 11

BARRAGE OF WINTER RELEASES!

WITH MORE NEW MOVIES RELEASED THAN EVER BEFORE, EXPECT TO BE SNOWED IN AT YOUR LOCAL THEATER

The snap of cold in the air signals something beyond the impending approach of winter, the Holiday Movie Season is coming quicker than you can say "Don't Cry for Me, Lourdes Ciccone." Traditionally the season for studios to release their big Oscar hopefuls, the holidays also offer families a peaceful alternative to all those uncomfortable silences around the dinner table regarding your latest genital piercings.

The People vs. Larry Flynt
Exactly how often does Milos Forman get his act together and make a movie? Well, seeing as how his last one was 1989's Valmont, this critically acclaimed director of One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest seems due for a new one. The content seems a bit askew this time though. Tackling the true-story of "Hustler" publisher Larry Flynt and his First Amendment woes, Forman and executive producer Oliver Stone cast Woody Harrelson as the eponymous sleazester and Courtney Love as his H.I.V.-positive wife. Dec. 20

The Crucible
Arthur Miller get makeover, and Salem Witch Trials have never been sexier or full of screaming Oscar nominees. Mischievous imp and previous Academy Award nominee Winona Ryder accuses previous Academy Award nominee Joan Allen of witchcraft and all hell breaks loose... Academy Award winner Daniel Day-Lewis plays Allen's husband, John Proctor, who tries to calm the hysteria of the McCarthy... oops, I mean the witchcraft trials. Nov. 27

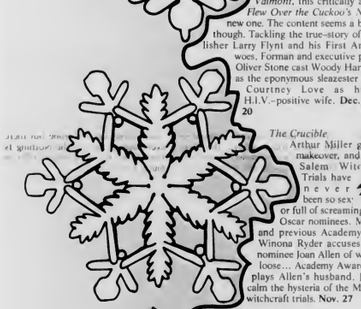
Ghosts of Mississippi
Rob Riener directs this star-studded period piece about the trial of Byron De La Beckwith, the man who shot and killed Medgar Evers in 1963. Alec Baldwin plays the attorney with Whoopi Goldberg as Evers' widow. Fargo's William H. Macy is on board as well as James Woods with a performance as Beckwith that is already full of Oscar buzz. Dec. 20

Marvin's Room
Former First Wife Diane Keaton takes the role of the angelic aunt to troubled youth Leonardo DiCaprio, who happens to have a penchant for setting things aflame. Scott McPherson's play has finally been translated to the big screen, but will it still be considered a black comedy? Accent hounds Meryl Streep, as DiCaprio's mother with a few problems of her own, and Robert DeNiro join the cast. Dec. 18

The Evening Star
And you thought it was over when Debra Winger died... This Terms of Endearment sequel brings back Shirley McClane as Aurora, this time playing the guardian to her troubled grandchildren, one of whom played by Juliette Lewis. Jack Nicholson returns with a cameo in his previous role, but Bill Paxton is served up as the fresh meat for McClane's love interest. Dec. 25

Hamlet
Kenneth Branagh's newest looks be the most lush Hamlet ever, but how are we supposed to believe that Hamlet is depressed with so many opulent sets and costumes surrounding him? Rounding out the Love Boat-like cast of thousands are Julie Christie as Gertrude, Derek Jacobi as Clausius and Kate Winslet as Ophelia. Amidst the masses of innocent by-standers are Robin Williams, Billy Crystal, Charlton Heston and Jack Lemmon. Dec. 25

Mars Attacks!
Doesn't the title explain it all? Quite possible the only movie with more stars that Branagh's Hamlet — what seems to be Tim Burton's zany response to this summer's Independence Day. Jack Nicholson plays multiple roles, one of which is the president, with Glenn Close as his wife, Annette Bening, Danny DeVito, Pierce Brosnan, Michael J. Fox, Tom Jones, Sarah Jessica Parker, Rod Steiger and Natalie Portman defend the Earth from the hordes of little green men. Dec. 13



The English Patient
This sweeping romance, filled with lust and betrayal at a Tuscan villa in WWII, is carrying big buzz in terms of the Academy Awards. Kristen Scott-Thomas (Four Weddings and a Funeral), Juliette Binoche, Ralph Fiennes and Willem Dafoe star in this adaptation of Michael Ondaatje's award- winning novel.

Shine
A smash hit with both audiences and critics on the film-festival circuit, the trials and tribulations of concert pianist David Helfgott, who suffered from mental illness. The span of the pianist's life is covered with Jefferey Rush as Helfgott, Lynn Redgrave and Armin Mueller-Stahl. Nov. 22

Jerry Maguire
Writer-director Cameron Crowe (Say Anything, Singles) returns with the unusual story of a sports agent who hits rock bottom. Tom Cruise is the eponymous character who loses all his clients, his fiancee and his friends. Dec. 13

In Love and War
Hemingway fans-duck for

Turn to MOVIES page 11

Layout & Design by Josh Sylvester & Jeremy Brothers

COURTESY DAVID JAMES

Hello Gorgeous! Barbara Streisand looks into that mirror we've been hearing so much about.

Streisand's Mirror: more sentimental sap than comedy

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

THE MIRROR HAS TWO FACES
Directed by Barbara Streisand with Barbara Streisand, Jeff Bridges, Pierce Brosnan
Playing at Hampshire Six Theatres

Is Barbara Streisand old? That's the main question that we have to ask ourselves when we look at The Mirror Has Two Faces. I mean, she's not young, no matter how flawlessly she lights herself (I know, I know... it's become trite to crack at how perfect she looks whenever she directs herself).

But Barbara's latest film seems to be more subjective than her topic here, namely beauty and what it means to be beautiful, ever could be. The film throws Streisand's Rose, a wiseacre professor of Medieval Romance at Columbia, together with Jeff Bridges' Gregory, a stodgy mathematics professor at the same institution.

The conflict comes with the baggage that both these characters are bringing into a sexless marriage. Rose has problems with her self-esteem that stem from her beautiful, yet domineering, mother and sister (Lauren Bacall and Mimi Rogers, respectively.) Unfortunately, Streisand doesn't seem to care whether Rose appears to have problems with self-esteem. Sure, she eats her hidden snacks whenever she gets upset, and she's always eating hamburgers, but she always looks like "Barbara-with-an-exclamation-point."

She seems to go beyond any character she could ever hope to play, or even any actress, becoming more of a concept. Even when she's supposed to look frumpy, she doesn't. The shame in Streisand's performance is that if she took half a chance to look as horrible as this character is supposed to feel, then she would not only keep some of her credibility, but she might allow her audience to believe the metamorphosis she goes through by the end of the movie.

Early in the film, at her sister's wedding to "XXXX" (Pierce Brosnan), she looks at herself in the mirror, wearing her shocking-pink bridesmaid's gown and remarks how much she looks like a middle-aged Barbie doll. After a painful montage of Rose working out and giving up meat, we see her a changed woman: she's now wearing tight, low-cut dresses. She's gotten a dye-job and a perm. But she's still "Barbara!" Only now she looks like a slutty Barbie doll.

More enjoyable is Jeff Bridges' performance, with his quaint ideas that a sexless marriage to Rose will work. He stumbles and spits out his coffee on cue and does a generally good job of looking goofy. He seems to understand that he's only there because someone needs to hold "Barbara!" when the camera starts spinning around their embraces, signalling that all's well, the sex is going to be great and these people have lost all their feelings of inadequacy without visiting a shrink. This is not surprising, since the best one in New York, Dr. Lowenstein, was already played by Barbara in The Prince of Tides.

Enjoyable in their smaller roles are Lauren Bacall and George Segal, as George's friend, an anthropology professor at Columbia. Who's trying to kid who with casting Bacall as Streisand's mother, I'm still not sure. A compliment to Streisand, perhaps? Either way, Bacall is at her best when she's the vain, acerbic woman who made Rose the basket-case that she is. But when the

Turn to MIRROR, page 11

Mirror mirror on the wall Fashion tips for TV stars

Let's face it. Television is the trend-setter when it comes to many of today's hottest looks. Everyone from Tori Spelling and David Schwimmer to Jennifer Aniston and George Clooney are seen every week wearing only the hippest clothing. What many don't realize is that in the television business, people are paid to make the stars look good. Most of what is worn on the tube by these actors and actresses aren't owned by them. It is all just part of their wardrobe.

Lauren Lobik

What happens when there is no one to watch over them and these celebrities are made to fend for themselves in that fashion jungle out there? Some hit it big while others continue to strike out time and time again.

Who are the top three best dressed tube stars? Tori Spelling is definitely one of them. Oddly enough, what she wears on "Beverly Hills 90210" is actually what she wears off the set. Throughout the shows success, Spelling has definitely become one of the most sought after fashion icons. From her wide variety of slinky, spaghetti-strap sundresses to her navel revealing hip-huggers, her look just screams retro.

Jennifer Aniston appears second on the list. Not unlike Spelling, she too wears the same clothing on and off the set. More than once, Aniston has been spotted around town, sporting a body-hugging dress along with her famous hair cut pulled back in a clip. She's sure to be making many friends in this ensemble.

Let's not forget about the men on primetime. George Clooney seems to out shine all the others. Seeing him in anything besides doctor scrubs would be a plus, but when dressing is left up to him, Clooney is a hit. Comfortable seems to be the look he is trying to achieve and he looks absolutely dazzling doing it. His I-don't-really-care style is best when he adorns himself in a casual wool suit on top of a cotton T-shirt and sweater vest. OK, maybe this "Miami Vice" look went out years ago, but Clooney could wear a trash bag and still look sexy.

Not everyone on television dresses well. Fran Drescher of "The Nanny" is one of them. Not only does she appear tacky on her sitcom, but pass her on the street and a double take will naturally occur. This month's issue of "Details" contains a photo of Drescher wearing a dark blue, denim mini-skirt and a black velour body suit. The ensemble is garnished with black stockings and black work boots. Just thinking about wearing this could make someone sick. That says it all!

Antonio Sabato, Jr. is the man on this list. He is an extremely handsome man, but this boy can't dress. All that needs to be said about this guy is he was caught wearing overalls. Overalls on a man is a total turn-off.

Lastly, there is Brooke Shields. The girl is looking great on her new show "Suddenly Susan," but that is where it all ends. Take Shields out from in front of the camera and she's lost. In a recent snapshot of her and Andre Agassi, she was wearing red and purple flowered palazzo pants with a matching purple halter top. Come on now, Brooke. What in the world possessed her to wear those pants in public? Hopefully Andre had nothing to do with it.

Ultimately, who's to say what looks good and what doesn't? If they think they look great, more power to them. After all, they don't have to look at themselves all day, we do. If only they knew what their admirers were thinking.

Lauren Lobik is a Collegian columnist.

SURF TO OUR BEACH!
WWW.UMASS.EDU/RSO/COLEGIAN

Sold-out Smith show ignited by DiFranco

By Jamie Sinsheimer
Collegian Staff

Ani DiFranco
John M. Greene Hall
Nov 19th

NORTHAMPTON- Waiting outside in the bitter cold, hundreds of Ani Difranco fans began to get impatient. Inside, behind the huge metal doors of John M. Greene hall, Difranco soundchecked preparing for the sold out show. Slated to begin at 8 p.m. anticipation was on a steady rise when the doors finally opened at 7:30 p.m.

Utter chaos arose when the herd was allowed inside, pushing, tugging, yelling, outright screaming all set the scene for the beginning of the evening. As the almost entirely female crowd stampeded for the seats closest to the front, people were left trampled and dusty almost as if the were out fighting a war.

Unaware of what might happen next, the lights went out and a man walked on stage. Adorn in a floral print dress, he welcomed the crowd and introduced DiFranco's opening act, Dan Byrne. Byrne, a young man armed with an acoustic guitar opened the show most possibly the only way he knew how: by using humor.

Performing only five or six songs, Byrne's music ranged from speaking about dead rock stars such as Kurt Cobain to one particular song about "chick singers." The latter of the two songs ignighted the crowd, as they laughed along and clapped while he mention such singers as Suzanne Vega, Michelle Shocked and Ani Difranco herself.

As Byrne sang his last song, the side door creaked open on stage and Difranco and her band filed out. Sara Lee, her bassist, took the drums, while DiFranco and Andy Stochansky, her percussionist, sang back-up and danced a waltz together.

Following the surprise appearance by DiFranco, the stage cleared and the lights went up. After about a half-hour intermission, the auditorium went completely dark and the only noise audible was some muffled record playing in the background amid the screams of the young crowd.

As Difranco's shadow made its way on the dark stage, the background recordings grew louder and louder until the noise level in the building practically reached its limit. Suddenly the lights flashed on and there stood DiFranco, guitar in hand, dancing wildly to an upbeat version of her song "Fire Door."

As she finished singing her first song the crowd calmed down a bit so they could hear their "Goddess" speak. Thanking the crowd for attending, DiFranco sang a few new songs and then broke into an impressive version of "Napoleon," off of her most recent release, 1996's Dilate. Changing guitars throughout the show, in between songs, she sang with fervor and passion in her voice for the majority of the show.

Singing mediocre versions of old favorites such as "Worthy," "Letter To A John," "Face up and Sing," "The Diner" and audience classic "Untouchable Face," it was hard not to notice that something was missing from her performance.

In past concerts, DiFranco's interaction with her fans was humorous and personal. She used to tell stories of her life, or of past shows, silly tidbits reflective of what she had experienced. This show was different, it felt as though she wasn't giving it her all and therefore she wasn't having as much fun with it as she usually does.

Each aspect of her music was portrayed at the show including a mixture of spoken word, hip-hop, and folky rhythmic guitar. Improvising a bit, "Every State Line," one of her spoken word pieces was done with full instrumentals in the background.

DiFranco returned to the stage for two encores. The first time around was a fierce rendition of "Shameless," a song about coveting another man's wife. Then she returned for the second encore with a beautifully moving version of "32 Flavors," in which the crowd stood in awe with lighters flickering listening to their heroine play the last song of the evening before they headed home to eagerly await the next time they get to see her perform.

COURTESY THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Goddess Ani DiFranco plays for a full house at Smith's John M. Greene Hall on Tuesday.

Thomas's new book explores marriage, love and self-discovery

By Jayna S. Stafford
Collegian Correspondent

ABIGAIL THOMAS
An Actual Life
Algonquin Books of Chapel Hill

An Actual Life is the story of a young woman who is catapulted into a collage of adult responsibilities. Her odyssey through this new world is filled with self-doubt, alienation and a constant yearning for acceptance.

As Virginia, the main character of Abigail Thomas's new book, recalls the words of her former college roommate, "He nailed you on the 14th day of a 28-day cycle? Brace yourself. You might easily be pregnant," her fears have already come true. The time is the early 1960s and Virginia is now at the end of her formal education, a new mother and a "shot-gun quick" wife.

Virginia and her husband Buddy, who have sprung fully- developed out of a short story in Thomas's first book, Getting Over Tom, are ambling toward nothing during a lengthy summer in a small New Jersey town. Far away from her beloved ocean home of Wellfleet, Mass., Virginia struggles to understand her often sullen new husband.

Remembering her mother's tears on her wedding day, Virginia thinks, "Now I know what she was crying about. Marriage is just awful." An amusing and eccentric group of characters cheer up an otherwise almost depressing account of the disappointing first months of a young woman's marriage.

Buddy's aunt Dot is an amusing meddler, and very likely the reason the new marriage continues to ramble along. Buddy's ex-girlfriend, Irene, with her terrible secret, Buddy's best friend Chick — now married to Irene — and the flatulent beast, Old Dog all aid in the humorous tone of the novel, while also adding to Virginia's feelings of alienation and her desperate attempts to understand herself and her relationship to those around her.

While many of her disputes with Buddy undoubtedly arise from their

Turn to ABAGAIL page 11

IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
20 Center St Northampton

ALL AGES
ALL THE TIME

thursday, nov. 21 • 10 pm • $5
rustic OVERTONES
SKA funksters from Portland, Maine

friday, november 22 • 10 pm
victor wooten
bela fleck bassist sunk in the funk • $10

saturday, november 23 • 7 pm
JOHNNY copeland
Texas roadhouse blues • $14.50

saturday, november 23 • 10 pm
DARLAHOOD & OSTRICH FARM heavy psychedelartarian rock trios • $5

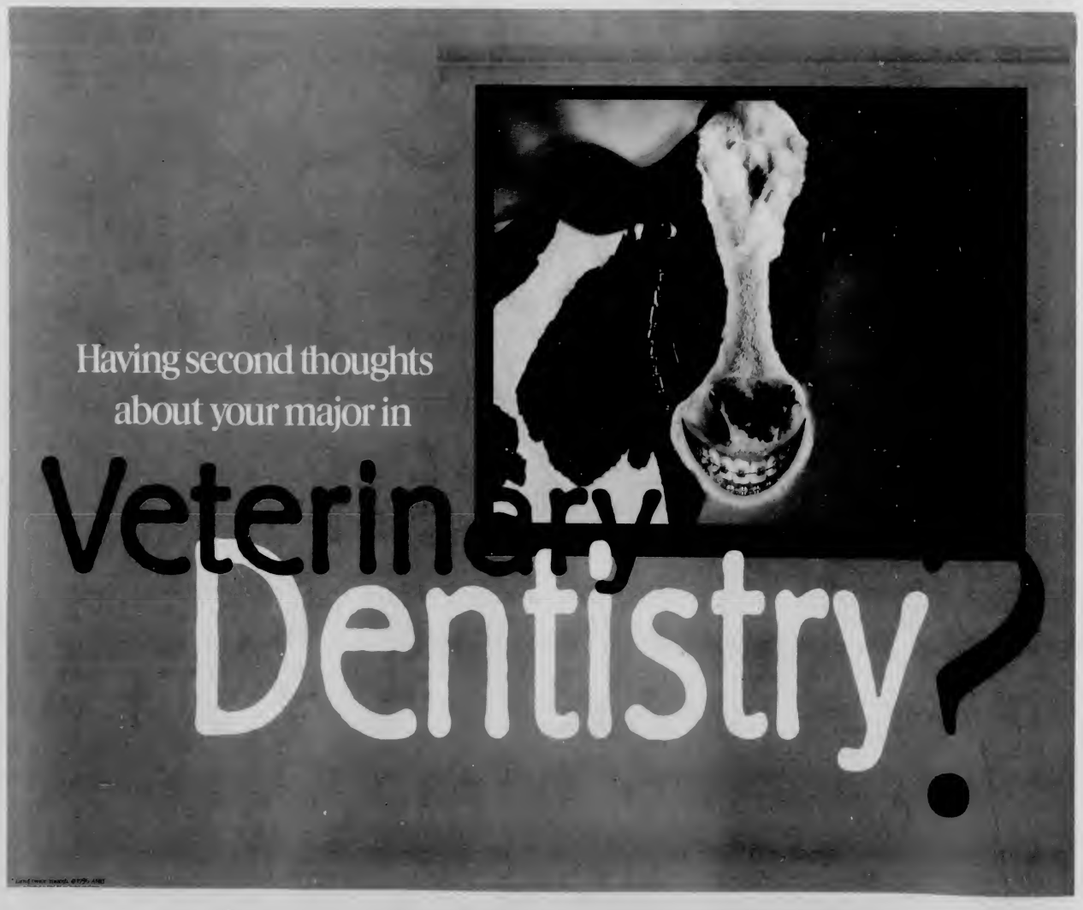
monday, december 2 • 7 pm
JiM CARROLL
Spoken word from Basketball Diarist

tuesday, december 3 • 10 pm
JOHN FAHEY AND THURSTON MOORE
at sonic youth • $10

wednesday, december 4 • 10 pm
strangefolk
AND DAN BERN
great grooves & renegade folk • $6

thursday, december 5 • 10 pm
SCHLEIGHO & E.D.O.
ignore your finals, come out & dance • $5



Robyn Hitchcock CANCELLED!!

MUSIC SEVEN NIGHTS A WEEK
Coming: The Nields, Madeleine Peyroux, Marshall Crenshaw, Chris Whitley, Boiled in Lead, Cecil Payne

TICKETS: At the door. For the Record in Amherst. at the Northampton Box Office or call 586-8686 to charge by phone.

You must have very positive ID to drink.

24-hour Concert info:
413.584.0610

You've got a lot to grin about when you use AT&T or an AT&T Universal MasterCard®. Like an AT&T True Rewards® Member Benefit Card. Just flash it and:

- Sam Goody/Musicland gives you a 15% discount on CDs and cassettes.
- "TCBY"® Treats gives you a freebie after you buy two.
- BLOCKBUSTER VIDEO® makes your third movie free when you rent two.*
- Amtrak lets your companion travel for 25% off.

But True Rewards is just one part of our special college package. Here are some more:

AT&T True Reach® Savings · AT&T WorldNet® Service · AT&T Universal MasterCard®

To sign up for the AT&T True Rewards® Program, call
1 800 654-0471

AT&T
Your True Choice

http://www.att.com/college

McLean and Coleman preach their Gospel

Jazz/Blues Weekly

BY JOSHUA BOYD

Back yonder in the early 1960s, there was a musical movement sweeping over the young musicians of America and England. The Animals were one of the more popular names in this movement, the Blues Revival.

Writers like John Lomax and son Alan, who had gone down to the segregation-era South to interview and record old blues singers like Son House, Sam Chatmon and others, and record labels, like Yazoo, who issued the tapes, exposed white, suburban youth to a gloomier side of life, and more gutsy music than they were used to. Many of the men who lived the blues lives these kids were fascinated with, like Robert Johnson, were, and still are, legends.

A major trio on the folk-blues circuit emulating the Blues Revival was that of "Spider" John Koerner, Dave "Snaker"Ray and Tony "Little Sun" Glover. This trio from around Milwaukee recorded the music they loved — the blues. Blues, Rags and Hollers, the product of their first 1963 session, recently re-issued on Red House Records with unreleased tracks, features just what the title says.

Koerner's nasal voice and flashy acoustic guitar playing are featured best on Leadbelly's "Hangman," the ancestor to Led Zeppelin's "Gallows Pole." Ray's lower, stronger vocals calmly shout out his original "Snaker's Here," with his own 12-string acoustic accompaniment. Glover, not heard much on the disc, does however get a heartfelt solo spot on "Sun's Wail."

COURTESY AUSTIN TREVETT

Ornette Coleman

In jazz releases, Rashied Ali, one time John Coltrane drummer, is featured on a release of an October 1994 performance, along with the Myra Melford Trio, called The October Revolution (Evidence). This is a performance in memoriam of Bill Dixon, who put together the 1964 jazz conference bearing the same name as the disc in relation to a new type of jazz that was "yet to be named."

The music on October Revolution is free, but not always chaotic — just mostly. Ali, with Joe McPhee on tenor sax and flugelhorn, Borah Bergman on piano and Wilber Morris on bass take jazz into many areas on "For Bill Dixon Parts I & II." Sometimes their performance is loudly random, but near the middle of the 40-plus minute first part, they get more melodic and tightly knit. Melford's piano playing on "The Death of Danny Love," is just stupendous.

Blue Note Records has dropped an abundant number of re- releases in record stores recently. The Horace Silver Quintet's 1962 album, The Tokyo Blues, a sort of "book of memories" about the group's trip to Japan in the early part of that year is a set of five terrific performances. "Sayonara Blues," floats on a nice vamp, with Silver providing an epic solo. Sax player Junior Cook shows a beautiful, melodic solo on the title track, while trumpeter Blue Mitchell makes himself known all around the album. The rhythm section of Gene Taylor (bass) and John Harris, Jr. (drums) provides a mostly relaxed feel to Silver's tribute to the country and the people of Japan.

Home Cookin', the 1959 Blue Note album from "The Incredible" Jimmy Smith is good, if not "incredible." Smith was a pioneer in soul-jazz, which has influenced Lou Donaldson, Medeski, Martin and Wood and scores of others. Soul-jazz is what's right here, with a little blues for good measure, as the opener is a mellow take on the classic "C.C. Rider," with a deep-toned solo by guitarist Kenny Burrell. Sax player Percy France lags behind on the first few songs he plays on, but catches up with the simmering band on Smith's "Gracie." "Motorin' Along" truly moves, with a steaming solo by Burrell — the real star of this disc.

Ornette Coleman on trumpet joined alto sax player Jackie McLean on the latter's 1967 recording, New And Old Gospel (Blue Note). McLean's opening suite, "Lifeline," follows life in four parts. He opens the first part, "Offering," with a great solo. "Midway," the second part, is a balladic send-off into maturity. The third part, "Vernzone," dedicated to McLean's then-teenage son Vern, features stately drumming by Billy Higgins, and the "Inevitable End" closes the suite with dramatic, sad wails from trumpet and sax. Scotty Holt on bass, and Lamont Johnson on piano, with Higgins present great interplay on the closer, "Strange As It Seems." Coleman's "Old Gospel" is truly uplifting.

Josh Boyd is a Collegian columnist

COURTESY CORI WELLS BRAUN

Myra Melford

Over ~500~ Microbrews

Spirit Haus

Specialty Beverage Center

FULL REDEMPTION CENTER

Attention Grad Students: Take 10% off Regularly Priced Fine Wines

MICROBREWS

Middlesex Brewing Co. (Brown Ale, Oatmeal Stout, Raspberry Wheat)	$4.99/six
Harpoon I.P.A. 12-packs	$8.99
Post Road (Pale Ale, Lager)	$4.99/btl. $17.99/case
New Amsterdam (Amber, Black + Tan, Ale, Blonde, I.P.A.)	$4.99/six

BEER SPECIALS

Michelob (Regular+ Light) 12 pack Bottles	$7.99
Molson Golden + Ice 12-pack cans	$7.99
Rolling Rock 12 pack Bottles	$7.99
Bass Ale 12 pack Bottles	$11.99
Cider Jack Hard Cider	$4.99/six

SPECIALS

Early Times Bourbon	$5.99/750ml
Absolut	$11.99/750ml
Tanqueray	$12.99/750ml
Goslings Black Seal Rum	$11.99/750ml

DISCOVER VISA MasterCard

Micro-Brewed Beer Kegs in Stock

Wine Coolers · Ice · Mixers Mini Kegs · Beer Glasses

Rt. 9 East College Street • 253-5384

one mile east of Amherst Center on Rt. 9E

CAMPUS ACTIVITIES AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PRESENTS

Weekly Program Series:

Something Every Friday

featuring

Singer/Songwriter

Barbara Kessler

1995 WINNER ARTIST OF THE YEAR NEW FOLK AWARD

Bluewall Cafe

November 22, 1996

8:00 pm, Free

This series made possible by a Grant from Auxiliary Services and the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and

DAILY COLLEGIAN

"Moll Flanders" • • • Immediately Following

For more information check out our website: http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/calendar.htm

CHEAP ENTERTAINMENT.

NEW MOVIES

Available November 22nd!

INDEPENDENCE DAY Fox SRP 19.95 FREE!

FATHER OF THE BRIDE: PART II © Touchstone Pictures SRP 19.95 NEW! 12.99 SAVE $6

MR. HOLLAND'S OPUS © Hollywood Pictures SRP 19.95

THE NUTTY PROFESSOR MCA/Universal SRP 22.98 NEW! 14.99 SAVE $7

GET SHORTY MGM/UA SRP 19.95 NEW! 11.99 SAVE $8

GRUMPIER OLD MEN Warner SRP 19.95 NEW! 12.99 SAVE $6

Savings based on Suggested Retail Price (SRP)

NEW MUSIC

BUSH Razorblade Suitcase NEW! 11.99

BABYFACE The Day

SNOOP DOGGY DOGG Tha Doggfather 11.99 EA. OR 6.99 CASSETTE

THE ARTIST Emancipation 3-CD SET NEW! 24.99

THE MIRROR HAS TWO FACES/Soundtrack 12.99

SPACE JAM Soundtrack

NEW BOOKS

THE ROAD LESS TRAVELED AND BEYOND M. Scott Peck, M.D. Simon & Schuster HC List 23.00 NEW! 14.95 35% OFF

ALIAS GRACE Margaret Atwood Doubleday HC List 24.95 NEW! 16.99 35% OFF

THE FALLEN MAN Tony Hillerman HarperCollins HC List 24.00 NEW! 15.00 35% OFF

35% OFF ALL NEW YORK TIMES HARDCOVER BESTSELLERS

NEW GAMES & HARDWARE

NFL 97 Sega Saturn NEW! 49.99

SEGA SATURN

SONIC 3D BLAST Sega Saturn NEW! 44.99

SATURN CORE SYSTEM Includes Saturn 32-bit gaming system,non-slot and ALV cable. 199.99

Sale ends November 28, 1996. Quantities limited. Selection varies by store.

MUSIC • SOFTWARE MOVIES • BOOKS

MEDIA PLAY

Hampshire Mall, Hadley, (413) 582-0410•Newington Commons Plaza, Newington, (860) 594-7272

Stateline Plaza, Enfield, (860) 253-4777•Crossroads Buckland Hills, Manchester, (860) 648-5871

STORE HOURS ENFIELD: MON-SAT: 9AM-10PM, SUN: 10AM-7PM

MANCHESTER: SUN: 10AM-8PM, MON-THURS: 10AM-10PM, FRI & SAT: 10AM-11PM,

ALL OTHER STORES: MON-SAT: 10AM-10PM, SUN: 10AM-6PM

Bosstones prepare to tear up Noho (again)

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

The Mighty Mighty Bosstones have accomplished what very few bands have been able to do in the '90s — achieve success without the help of MTV or a lot of commercial radio airplay. The reason for their success can be attributed to one thing — their live shows.

Led by frontman extraordanaire Dickey Barrett, the Mighty Mighty Bosstones raid Pearl Street for two shows this weekend on Saturday and Sunday night. The Bosstones combine a hardcore metal sound with a horn section that will have you skanking, stage diving and enjoying yourself all night.

The Bosstones first emerged on the boston scene rising out of the ashes of the defunct hardcore band, Impact Unit. Crowding a horn section as well as a regular band on tiny stages, the Bosstones proceeded to burn every club and bar they played to the ground.

COURTESY MERCURY RECORDS

The Mighty Mighty Bosstones bring more noise and other disturbances to Pearl St. this weekend.

"We wanted to have fun and do our own thing. We didn't want to join the real world," Dickey Barrett once said.

The Bosstones debuted with Devils Night Out on Taang Records. The album featured classics like "Bartenders Song" and "Little Bit Ugly," which were hits with the ska and punk scenes alike. The Bosstones followed that up with the classic More Noise and Other Disturbances, also on Taang Records. With their non-stop touring and endless shows, they rivaled New York's Murphy's Law as one of the best live bands.

The success of the Bosstones could not escape the eyes of the major labels for long and they were signed to Mercury Records in the early '90s. Their major label debut, Don't Know How To Party, featured the hit song "Someday I Suppose," which helped the Bosstones gain popularity outside of the punk scene. That was followed by the EP Ska-Core The Devil and More, which featured the Bosstones returning to their roots with Minor Threat, SSD, Angry Somoans covers as well as a Bob Marley tune.

Question The Answers, the Bosstones latest album, was also their most successful commercial release. The success of that album led them to an opening spot on Lollapalooza and a cameo in the hit movie, Clueless, which has propelled the Bosstones to a huge following featuring more than just punks and rude boys.

Don't worry — the Bosstones have not let the success get to their heads. The Bosstones still rage at every show. Watching the Bosstones is like watching rabid dogs in a cage — you can't wait to join in on the fun.

Hepcat, a more traditional sounding ska band from California, will open up both nights. Although Hepcat come from a more rock-steady background than the Bosstones, they will keep you skanking to their mellower sound. Strictly for the real rudeboys.

Opening up for the Bosstones on Saturday night will be California's Sensefield. Coming out of Reason To Believe, Sensefield emerged from their hardcore roots to present us with a mellower, more beautiful sound. After three releases on Revelation Records, they have been signed to a major label. Their latest album, Buildings, combines melody and spiritual and insightful lyrics providing a sense of urgency making this one of the best albums released this year.

On Sunday night the Royal Crowns will also be playing. The Crowns, who are on the Bosstones own Big Rig label, play a rockabilly sound with punk influences. Fans of The New Bomb Turks and The Reverend Horton Heat should enjoy these guys.

The Mighty Mighty Bosstones, Hepcat, Sensefield and The Royal Crowns are playing Pearl Street on Sat., Nov. 23 and Sun., Nov. 24. The Sat. show is 18+ and the Sun. show is all ages. Call 584-7771 for more information.

COURTESY LAURA CROSTA

Revelation Records alums Sense Field return to the Valley behind excellent new album.

You'll be "Thankful" with your savings from our Low, Low Prices!!

LIQUORS 44

Don't Drink and Drive

Coors & Coors Light 30 PACK CASE 30-12 OZ. CANS	SALE 15.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.75 FINAL COST	$11.74 + DEP.
Miller GENUINE DRAFT REGULAR & LIGHT CASE 24-12 OZ. BAR BOTTLES		$9.99 + DEP.
BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT 30 PACK CASE 30-12 OZ. CANS		$11.79 + DEP.
MICHELOB REGULAR & LIGHT CASE OF 2-12 PK. BOTTLE		$13.99 + DEP.
SAM ADAMS WINTER LAGER AND ALL FLAVORS	6 PK. BOTTLES	$4.99 + DEP.
HARPOON IPA & MIXED PACK 12 PK. BOTTLE		$8.99 + DEP.
Heineken & AMSTEL Light 12 PK. BOTTLE		$9.99 + DEP.
BERKSHIRE BREWING 64 OZ. GROWLERS		$3.99 + DEP.
GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY REGULAR & LIGHT CASE OF 2-12 PK. CANS		$7.29 + DEP.
O'DOUL'S NON-ALCOHOLIC 12 PACK CAN		$6.49 + DEP.
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, LITE, ICEHOUSE, RED DOG, MICHELOB, MICH LT., MICH AMBER BOX		$39.99 + DEP.

WINE OF THE MONTH

TALUS CABERNET SAUVIGNON, CHARDONNAY, ZINFANDEL 750 ML	$6.49
FRANZIA 5 LT BAG IN A BOX CHABLIS, BLUSH, WHT GRENACHE, CHENIN BLANC, FRENCH COLOMBARD, CHILLABLE RED, RHINE	$6.99
CONCHA Y TORO ALL FLAVORS 1.5 LT	$5.99
KENDALL-JACKSON VINTNERS CHARDONNAY 750 ML	$9.49
BERINGER WHITE ZINFANDEL 750 ML	$3.99
E. & J GALLO RESERVE WHITE ZINFANDEL, SAUV. BLANC, WHITE GRENACHE, J. RIESLING, CLASSIC BURGUNDY 1.5 LT.	$5.99
CORBETT CANYON CHARDONNAY, MERLOT, CABERNET SAUVIGNON 1.5 LT.	$6.99
MARTINI & ROSSI ASTI SPUMANTE 750 ML	SALE 7.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST $5.99
FREIXENET CORDON NEGRO BRUT 750 ML	SALE 5.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -1.50 FINAL COST $4.49
COLUMBIA CREST MERLOT 750 ML	$9.49
CHATEAU STE MICHELLE GEWURZTRAMINER 750 ML	$4.99

SMIRNOFF VODKA 1.75L		$13.99
BACARDI RUM LIGHT & DARK 1.75L	SALE 13.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST	$10.99
CANADIAN MIST 1.75L	SALE 10.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -4.00 FINAL COST	$6.99
ABSOLUT VODKA 750 ML		$10.99
SOUTHERN COMFORT 1.75L	SALE 14.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST	$12.99
DEWARS WHITE LABEL SCOTCH 1.75L		$26.49
Seagram's 7 1.75L	SALE 12.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST	$9.49
Karrucia 750 ML	SALE 12.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST	$9.99
The GLENLIVET SINGLE MALT SCOTCH 750 ML		$19.99
TANQUERAY GIN 750 ML		$12.49
BAILEYS IRISH CREAM REGULAR & LIGHT 750 ML		$14.49

We Accept Cans and Bottles for Redemption

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA

HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555

SALE PRICES THURS. 11/21/96 THRU WEDS. 12/4/96

NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS

MICHAEL'S BILLIARDS

Valley's Best! 1996

$5/Hr Everyday Unlimited Players!

8

• 60" Big Screen T.V.
• 8-9 ft. Tables
• Live Entertainment Every Fri. & Sat.
• All Sporting Events
• Every Thursday Night $5 Cash 8-Ball Tournament 7:30 pm

10A Belchertown Road Amherst, MA 01002

This Saturday November 23 - "FLOATER CLOWN" 256-8284

Thursday-Friday-Saturday Drink Specials

Red Dog 16oz. Drafts 1.50

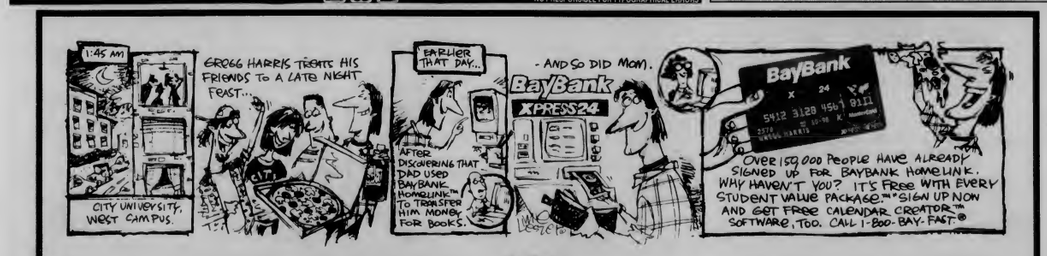
RED DOG

Captain Morgan & Coke 2.00

Weekly Specials

Appetizer & Nachos 1/2 Price

New Hours



3 - 5 pm Wed-Sat 7-11pm

Beat The Cover Get in before 10 PM and No Cover

THE PUB

Dance Music by Pure D.J. Bob Paulin

15 East Pleasant Street

BayBank

Member FDIC

A BankBoston Company

Visit our Web site at www.BayBank.com

* Banking transactions are free. Optional Bill Payment feature costs $3.50 per month, waived for the first three months. Free Calendar Creator software offer through December 31 or while supplies last.

Winter paves way to ice climbing adventures

Alfresco News with Liz Anderson

As we approach the cold season, snow is the white stuff floating in the air, not fluffy white dandelion seeds or acorn helicopters. Winter is on its way and in many parts of New England it is already here. According to the Farmer's Almanac, within the first few weeks of December all of New England will experience above-normal snowfall. Don't let your heart become bittersweet as you prepare for the long hard winter ahead — instead get pumped up by learning the logistics of ice climbing.

Scaling steep waterfalls, gullies and shutes has become one of the most popular winter sports throughout New England's mountainous nooks and crannies. Due to decades of technology, ice climbing has been transformed from what once was considered a sport for the certifiably nuts to a safe and highly respected winter pastime. The mountains of New England contain a vast number of quickly accessible frozen waterfalls and gully climbs that can now be climbed with the same confidence as any summer rock climb.

However ice climbing is not quite as simple as a summer rock climb — not only does it require agile skill, but it also requires a passion for Mother Nature's extreme elements. The solid wall that you have set out to climb is no longer full of finger fitting cervices, but is a slippery facade full of footprints that the weather can change over night. It is a sport where physical and mental preparedness are paramount, the slightest slip or break in concentration can lead to injury or worse.

Learn the complexities of this challenging sport in an ice climbing clinic sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Outing Club (UMOC). Led by expert climber Carsten Braun, the UMOC ice climbing clinic will begin with an orientation about safety and equipment during the first weeks of December. The orientation will demonstrate the correct use of ice picks and hammers, nylon rope and foundation tools, cramptons and plastic steel toe boots, as well as techniques in maintaining comfortable body temperature in frigid weather.

"The beauty about going ice climbing with UMOC is that you don't have to worry about gear," Braun said. "The Outing Club has everything."

The climbing clinic will take a break over winter vacation, and start again in February with a series of beginner climbs throughout the Pioneer Valley and New Hampshire's White Mountains.

Due to its excellent sections for beginner ice climbers, the Mount Sugarloaf Reservation of the Pioneer Valley is frequented by the UMOC ice climbing clinic. The summit of Mount Sugarloaf reaches 761 feet and consists of numerous climbs between 80 to 100 feet.

Once you have mastered ice climbing's fundamental maneuvers on the mountain ridges of the Pioneer Valley, the UMOC ice climbing clinic will take you to the White Mountain's challenging Huntington Ravine. With its 1,500 feet of elevation, Huntington Ravine is the ice climbing Mecca of New England. However the ravine is not to be taken lightly, and is a victim to an exposed alpine setting, extreme changes in weather, windslab conditions and objective dangers from cornices.

Water forms ice in New England each year regardless of snowfall, and by mid-winter most mountains have areas that are in good shape for ice climbing. The amount and type of precipitation, wind velocity, temperature, freeze/thaw cycles, elevation and the direction toward which the climb faces are all factors which effect the condition of a climb.

To be a competent climber takes a significant amount of mountaineering experience, research, intuition and a healthy dose of common sense. The best way to gain this knowledge is to simply put in your time in the mountains with an experienced partner.

"The objective of the UMOC ice climbing clinic is for the participants to learn how to ice climb the right way and how to reduce risks," Braun said. "We focus on having fun and being safe!"

For more information about the UMOC ice climbing clinic, call the Outing Club at 545-3131.

Liz Anderson is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY UMASS THEATER DEPARTMENT

UMass undergraduates appear in adaption of classic Greek play, Antigone.

Film companies give the gift of movie web pages

With the holidays just around the corner, it's time for the box office to release its next set of big money makers that are not quite good enough for the summer.

All the major companies have web sites like Paramount (www.paramount.com), MGM (mgmua.com), Universal (www.mca.com) and the list continues. Each site has promotional pages for the company's latest releases.

Occasionally the site dedicated to a new film is better than the actual movie — seems to be the case with trailers these days, too.

Star Trek: First Contact at firstcontact.msn.com

Paramount has established a fun little page dedicated for all those trekkers out there. At this site you can go where no one else has gone in cyberspace.

This is a wholly interactive site that does not promote the movie by giving away the plot like most other sites.

When users log in, they enter as Starfleet cadets. After choosing what sex and species they want to be, users are left to tour the new Enterprise-E from the movie. Sit in the captain's chair, work in sick bay or command engineering — the whole ship is yours. Plus, users can interact with other "cadets."

The site is basically an online role playing adventure.

However, to take full advantage of all the cool frills on this site, users must have Netscape Navigator 3.0 or Microsoft Internet Explorer 3.0 — both with the Shockwave plug in. After fooling around on this site, I hope the movie is as good as this on-line promotion. A

Daylight at www.mca.com/universal_pictures/daylight/

Unlike Paramount's site for the new Star Trek, Universal's site for their holiday blockbuster action thriller, "Daylight," is rather bland and boring, but that's expected since disaster movies usually are never good.

The first page of the site shows an image from the movie, and provides a plot summary. Users can view stills, download trailers, read about the cast, director and more about the great plot. The only redeeming value of the site is a game.

The game allows the user to enter the roll of an EMT whose job is to save people from drowning as the tunnel fills with water. However, to play the game, users must have the latest Shockwave plug in.

If this site is any indication of how good the movie is, then I think I'll find something else to do with my time on Dec. 6. D

Mars Attacks

at www.marsattacks.com

This web site seems as campy as the movie. However, it takes web site marketing of movies a step above most with frills that other sites don't provide.

Sure the site has the standard fare like plot summaries and bios of the actors and director, but it also sports such things as Windows 95 desktop themes and screen savers. Although the site itself may not hold users captivated, the free off line software probably will. B

Before you head out to catch the latest films, cruise their sites because there seems to be a correlation between a good movie and a good promotional web site.

Matthew Wurtzel is a Collegian columnist.

Play makes UMass history

Antigone acted solely by undergrads

Tonight's performance of Antigone will make University of Massachusetts history because, for the first time, it is completely in the hands of UMass undergraduate students. The play opens tonight at 8 p.m. at Hampden Theater.

The modernized production of the classic play will be presented by the Residential Arts program.

In this version, the Greek tragedy is transformed by playwright Jean Anouilh to take place during the Nazi occupation of Paris in 1942.

The story depicts a young woman's decisions — she must choose between her loyalty to her family and her loyalty to the state.

Anouilh gives to this modern interpretation a personal look of the young woman who weighs feelings of personal commitment and social conformity. Her destiny hangs before her as she is forced to make an important decision concerning the future of her family.

UMass looks forward to a new tradition as Residential Arts presents their first annual student-run production. This project of Residential Arts, a program of the Fine Arts Center, broadens the possibilities for the UMass Theater, Department. Antigone will be performed at Hampden Theater, Nov. 21- 23 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $4 for Five College Students and $6 for the general public. Hampden Theater is located in the Southwest Residential Area. Parking available in the Horseshoe.

— Julia Casson

Thank You.

All of us at Zanna thank you for making our 25th Anniversary Celebration so much fun.

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Go Ahead, Card Me.

Talk about your great deal...the Okemo College VIP Card. For just $25, your first lift ticket (Mon.–Fri.) is FREE, then ski or ride for 1/2 price on weekdays and get $10 off on weekends and holidays for the rest of the season. Snickers, Mountain Dew and HMV Record Stores are throwing in special deals, too! So c'mon up to Okemo - it never felt so good to get carded.

Okemo InfoLine: (802) 228-4041 • 24-Hour Snow Line: (802) 228-5222 • http://www.okemo.com

New College Season Pass or VIP Silver Ride available

Holiday periods are 12/25/96-1/1/97, 1/17-19/97, 2/17-21/97. For the season pass, present your college I.D. and proof of full-time student status at the Okemo Main Administrative Office.
*The prices of the College Card and Season Pass include Vermont 5% sales tax.

4 SEASONS
RTE. 9 HADLEY 584-8174
Monday- Saturday 9:00am-11:00pm
Not Responsible for typos
Visa, Mastercard & Discover accepted

DISCOUNT LIQUORS
BEER • WINE • KEGS • ICE • CIGARS

NEW! BEER DISPLAY AREA ... WE NOW STOCK OVER 100% MORE ICE COLD MICROS & IMPORTS!

SAM ADAMS 24-12 oz. bott. $18.99 + dep.	HARPOON 24-12 oz. "Loose" $17.99 + dep.	SARANAC 24-12 oz. bott. $17.49 + dep.	BECKS 24-12 oz. bott. $18.99 + dep.	LABATT'S 24-12 oz. bott. $14.99 + dep.	FOSTERS 24-12 oz. bott. $15.99 + dep.
BUSCH & LT. "30 pks." $11.99 + dep.	ICEHOUSE 24-12 oz. bott. $12.99 + dep.	BUD DRY 24-12 oz. bott. $9.99 + dep.	M.G.D. & LT. 24-12 oz. bott. $9.99 + dep.	MILWAUKEE'S BEST "30 pks." $10.49 + dep.	J.W. DUNDEE HONEY BROWN 24-12 oz. bott. $14.99 + dep.
SEAGRAM'S V.O. $16.99 1.75l	CANADIAN MIST $12.49 1.75l	SEAGRAM'S 7 $12.99 1.75l	SOUTHERN COMFORT $15.99 1.75l	BACARDI RUM $14.99 1.75l	BOMBAY GIN $22.99 1.75l
BEEFEATER GIN $20.99 1.75l	JACK DANIELS $23.99 1.75l	CROWN ROYAL $35.99 1.75l	JOSE CUERVO $21.49 1.75l	4 SEASONS VODKA $8.99 1.75l	GORDON'S VODKA $10.99 1.75l
M. CHAPOUTIER "COTES DU RHONE" $6.99 750 ml	R. MONDAVI WOODBRIDGE CAB. & CHARD $10.99 1.5L	GLENN ELLEN CHARD. & CAB. SAUV. $7.99 1.5L	CARLO ROSSI WINES $6.99 4.0L	UMASS BASKETBALL! RANKED #1 AT 4 SEASONS ... GOBBLE UP THESE SAVINGS UNTIL DEC. 4TH '96
VICHON MERLOT & CHARD. $7.69 .750 ML	R. MONDAVI COASTAL CHARD. $7.99 .750 ML	WATERBROOK CHARD. $7.99 .750 ML	FRANZIA $6.99 5.0L

KEG OF THE WEEK!
BUD LT. $38.99 + DEP.

"KEGS"
BUD ICE, MICHELOB, BUD, RED DOG, ICEHOUSE, MICHELOB LT, LOWENBRAU DK., MICHELOB DK., LITE, LITE ICE ... $39.99 +DEP.

NATURAL LT., NATURAL ICE $34.99 + DEP.

MICRO KEGS
SAM ADAMS $89.99
OREGON $89.99 PLUS
SARANAC $89.99 MANY
J.W. DUNDEE $69.99 MORE

ICE
10 LBS. $1.29
50 LBS. $5.99
100 LBS. $9.99

■ visions

continued from page 5

1994 managed to do quite the same despite the fact that it was released in June. Not since Steven Spielberg's masterpiece, Schindler's List, has a fall movie won for best picture.

Although Independence Day and Twister may have cornered the market in the fields of visual and special effects, there have been few truly strong performances yet worthy of an Oscar. With already some triumphant fall releases and a whole slew on the way, 1996 will most likely be the year the fall films take their well deserved title back from their summer enemies.

Hollywood has already released some brilliant achievements this season. The casts of Sleepers and Michael Collins will definitely be considered for the Academy's nominations in February. We have yet to see what films like The English Patient, The Crucible, The People Vs. Larry Flynt and Ghosts of Mississippi have to offer. Each of these upcoming new movies feature either previously nominated actors or directors who seem to be receiving more than favorable press.

Another perfect example of the fall movie strategy is Alan Parker's hopeful comeback from the disappointing Road to Wellville. His new film, Evita, stars consistently entertaining Madonna and heartthrob Antonio Banderas. What will most likely add some needed class to this film version of the Broadway hit musical is supporting role by Brazil star, Jonathan Pryce. Based on the media hype alone and the fact that Parker knows he needs to remind the world that he is an established director, there is no doubt that Evita will be a sure nominee.

Another big moneymaker for the studios is producing holiday films. Although very few Christmas movies have ever done well in the awards area, they definitely have the ability to cash in on the festive season. Holiday films are always a sure bet for blockbuster status and this year's 101 Dalmatians and Jingle all the Way should be no different.

This season, apart from Stallone's new Daybreak, don't expect to many rollercoaster rides. If one is in the mood for heartwarming romance and sophisticated drama, then this season's films are for you.

Adam Levine is a Collegian columnist.

■ Abagail

continued from page 7

complex story of two people who have wedded too soon and too young, Virginia places the brunt of the blame for their dilapidated marriage on Irene. It seems that everything Irene is, Virginia is not. To Buddy, in his highest compliment, Irene is a "pisser." She burps loudly, tells crass jokes and most painfully of all for Virginia, Irene has years of history with Buddy. All of these memories of long days at the shore and hysterical misadventure suck away Virginia's hope for a happy marriage. The more she gets to know Buddy through his friends, the more she realizes the two are virtually strangers.

Raised by a minister and a woman in love with the written word, Virginia is unable to cavort with the others over cans of beer or under clouds of marijuana. She doesn't want to belong to the stuffy and poetic world of her mother, but she can't allow herself to join the cruder, more elemental world of her husband and his friends. Thomas has given Virginia a voice so distinctive in her naivete that her observations of her discomfort and the inability to successfully transplant herself are understandably given with brutal honesty.

All of Virginia's quiet superstitions ("If you say something and somebody sneezes right after, that means it is underlined for truth") and her childlike way of muddling through the world leave the reader with the feeling that one has just discovered a younger sister in need of help of a window into the fears and petty jealousies of junior high school.

Chronologically, the reader follows Virginia's journey for only a short time, but her narration of slightly more distant memories and her hopes for the future give the novel the feeling a substantial amount of time has passed. As the novel concludes, the reader is left with the feeling that Virginia has matured and whatever the outcome of her current situation or her marriage, she will persevere. B

■ mirror

continued from page 6

mother/daughter bonding begins watch out; it might be pretty, but it's still sentimental pap. Segal gets the few good one-liners in the film as the philandering old man, as he quips about a former flame, "I once gave a girl A Farewell to Arms — she thought it was a diet book."

As a director, Streisand seems to be hoping that if The Mirror has Two Faces doesn't do well in the theaters, then maybe Columbia University or New York City might pick it up as a video tour guide. Irritatingly frequent shots, albeit beautiful, of the campus and Central Park bookend every scene. D+

■ movies

continued from page 5

cover... Richard Attenborough's story of Hemingway's injuries during WWI features the unrealistically clean-cut Chris O'Donnell as Papa and Sandra Bullock as the nurse who brought him back to life and inspired the Catherine Barkley character in A Farewell to Arms. Dec. 18 (limited release)

One Fine Day

Romance and cellular phones are passed out at the door when George Clooney and Michelle Pfeiffer play single parents whose lives are thrown together when their children miss their field trip. Dec. 20

Portrait of a Lady

Jane Campion's follow-up film to her award-winning The Piano, this Henry James adaptation, a success at Cannes, is described most kindly as expressionistic. Nicole Kidman is the lady, with John Malkovich and Barbara Hershey supporting. Dec. 27

My Fellow Americans

Jack Lemmon and James Garner play Grumpy Old Presidents. Politically opposed former Commander-in-Chiefs who go on the lam when they are framed by the current president, Dan Aykroyd. Dec. 20

I'm Not Rappaport

Herb Gardner's play is yet another given the screen treatment this season, with Gardner directing. Ossie Davis and Walter Mattheau play sparring curmudgeons on New York City park benches. Dec. 26.

101 Dalmatians

Glenn Close seems to be stealing the show away from the multitude of puppies that she steals away from owners Jeff Daniels and Joely Richards. Unlike the cartoon which the film is based upon, none of the animals speak. Nov. 22

Beavis and Butt-Head Do America

Creator Mike Judge directs the big screen feature release of his two idiots. Their TV is stolen, so they hit the road; in their search they get caught up in international intrigue. Voices include Robert Stack, Cloris Leachman and what may or may not be Bruce Willis and Demi Moore. Dec. 20

The Preacher's Wife

Penny Marshall directs this remake of the "kkk" film with Whitney Houston as the wife, Courtney B. Vance as the preacher and Denzel Washington as the angel sent from above to help them through their troubled marriage. Dec. 13

Michael

John Travolta plays a less-than-angelic cherub who pulls a matchmaking deal for seraphim specialist Andie MacDowell and tabloid reporter William Hurt. From Nora Ephron (Sleepless in Seattle). Dec. 27

Everyone Says I Love You

Woody Allen's umpteenth film features Goldie Hawn, Julia Roberts, Drew Barrymore and Alan Alda among others (including himself). The plot deals with what seems like typical Allen territory: the state of marriages in New York. The twist? It's a musical! Dec. 25

Evita

Speaking of musicals, there probably hasn't been a musical hyped this much for over 20 years. Madonna takes the helm as Eva Peron with Jonathan Pryce and Antonio Banderas backing her up. Alan Parker (The Commiments) directs. Dec. 25

Jingle All the Way

Parents who have ever tried to get that perfect toy for their beloved tot will sympathize with this Arnold Schwarzenegger comedy. Joining Arnie in his quest for a TurboMan doll is Sinbad. Phil Hartman punches in a delightfully smug role as the next door neighbor. Nov. 22

Daylight

Sylvester Stallone in a '90s disaster film... Die Hard in a tunnel. Sly brings himself back to familiar action territory when a tunnel is seals innocent commuters in. Dec. 6

Jeremy Brothers is a Collegian staff member.

COURTESY CLIVE COOTE

Cruella DeVil (Glenn Close), a drag queen's dream, looks to steal the show away from the puppies in 101 Dalmatians

HTTP://WWW.UMASS.EDU/RSO/COLEGIAN...IT'S WHERE IT'S AT.

R.A.D.
A Self Defense Course for Women

The RAD instructors, wish to extend to you an invitation in joining us for this intensive 12 hour program. The class focuses on options, awareness, prevention, risk reduction, and physical defense moves.

If you would like to join us remember the following:
- 12 hour commitment (must attend full course)
- $25.00 fee
- 16 students per class maximum (first come, first serve basis)
- class dates: 12/2, 12/4, 12/9, 12/11

If you would like to join us there will be an open registration at Dickinson Hall Lobby: 11/25, 11/26 - 11:30 - 1:30 each day. For registration you will need your $25.00 fee and your current UMass student and/or staff I.D. Sorry, no phone-ins and no waiting list.

HOPE TO SEE YOU THERE!

357 MAGNUM. 9MM HANDGUN. AK-47. AND AN UZI SUB-MACHINE GUN.
THE MIGHTY MIGHTY BOSSTONES
SEE THE SHOW, HEAR THE MUSIC, READ THE ARTICLES IN THE COLLEGIAN. SEE THE ARTS AND LIVING SECTION FOR CONCERT PREVIEW, AND IN THE NEAR FUTURE, REVIEW.

Don't Let The Marshall Catch You Going Anywhere Else!
Marshall
STEINBECK
COLLISION REPAIR & AUTO BODY
53 S. Prospect St. Amherst Center
- Imports and other unibody vehicles are our speciality.
- Users of Sikkens paint products
- Accepted by all insurance companies for collision repair or glass repair.

256-8157 256-1385 Shop Reg # RS1212

Hand Poured Hand Scented
Heritage Candle Co.
236 N. Pleasant Street, Amherst
256-4749
open 7 days
50% off 10 oz. Jar with any 10oz. or 26oz. jar purchase

7pm, Nov. 22nd at the MULLINS CENTER University of Massachusetts Amherst
Division 1 Hockey East
UMass Hockey
VS
ARMY Hockey
Pick up your tickets at:
- Curry Hicks Cage
- 'TIX' in the Student Union
- Hockey Table in the Campus Center
- At the Game
Be a Part of the Action

You're fun, outgoing and have great interpersonal skills. You believe that work and play can go together. And you have the natural, American style that defines Abercrombie & Fitch. Fit this description? Then maybe you should be working at Abercrombie over the holidays.

If you're heading back home for the holidays and want to have fun (and get great discounts!), you can be a Brand Representative at Abercrombie & Fitch while you're hanging out during break. Just stop by an Abercrombie store near you and fill out an application when you're home for Thanksgiving.

Check out our Boston or nationwide store locations on the Internet:

www.abercrombie.com

Abercrombie & Fitch

TRAVEL SMART!
One Way Roundtrip
LONDON FROM NY, BOSTON or DC
$154 $249
FROM NEW YORK
PARIS
$224 $427
ROME
$259 $489
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA
$235 $446
Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurailpasses available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. INT'L student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
342 Madison Ave., NY, NY 10173
212-986-8420*
800-272-9676
*in NYC

Louisville hoop placed on probation

By Chris Duncan
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Louisville's basketball team was placed on probation for two years yesterday but will remain eligible to appear on television and play in the postseason.

The school, a traditional basketball power, was cited by the NCAA for 10 violations concerning recruiting, extra benefits and preferential treatment. It was spared more severe penalties because of its internal investigation.

Louisville coach Denny Crum, clenching a rolled-up program in his trademark sideline habit, was relieved over the lenient verdict.

"I'm proud of our program," he said. "It's impossible to control everything. Nobody wants to be on probation, but I feel good about this outcome and I feel good about the process." The school sent a 31-page report to the NCAA in February that uncovered nine of the 10 violations.

"This case is an indication that presidents are taking some control," said David Swank, chairman of the NCAA Infractions Committee. "You're still going to get violations, but when the university finds out about it and takes the steps the University of Louisville did, it's an indication of a real commitment to compliance. This was a model response."

Louisville president John Shumaker said he is concerned about the probation tarnishing the school's image.

"This is a warning signal to us, but I take comfort in the fact the NCAA recognized that we did everything we could to conduct a hard-nosed investigation and make sure we took the corrective action to make sure this doesn't happen again," he said.

The announcement ended a 1 1/2-year ordeal that started with a report by The Courier-Journal surrounding phone calls made to a Louisville recruit by Thompson.

The NCAA accepted various penalties that the university had imposed against itself.

The case arose from questions concerning former player Samaki Walker's use of two cars during the summer and fall of 1995. It eventually included improper contacts with recruits made by former volunteer strength coach Jimmy Thompson and improper phone calls and contacts made by former assistant coach Larry Gay.

The university was ordered to:

-implement an educational program on NCAA legislation.

-send its men's basketball staff to an NCAA regional compliance seminar.

-recertify the school's athletics policies.

-see that players complete car registration forms at the start of the school year.

Hoyas unhappy with polls, ready to play

By Joseph White
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Beware John Thompson and Georgetown. No one is giving them much of a chance.

"Everybody's ready to bury us," Thompson said as his team prepared for Saturday's season opener at Cleveland State. "So our big motto is 'It's personal now.' We want everybody to know that we can still play a little bit of basketball here."

With the departure of Allen Iverson — the No. 1 overall pick by the Philadelphia 76ers and the first player under Thompson to leave early for the NBA — the Hoyas have fallen from national championship contention last season to projected also-rans in their own conference.

Georgetown finished 29-8 after making the NCAA tournament quarterfinals in March, but fell completely out the Top 25 in this month's preseason poll. One publication picked them to finish eighth in the Big East; that particular clipping has been posted in the locker room.

"We think eventually — not now — but eventually we can have a pretty good ball club," Thompson said. "I think if we are eighth, then there are some pretty good players in the Big East." Iverson will be difficult enough to replace, but the Hoyas also lost graduating seniors and top 30 NBA draftees Jerome Williams and Othella Harrington. Iverson, Williams and Harrington accounted for 57 percent of the team's points and 44 percent of its rebounds last year.

"Everybody talks to us about Allen leaving," Thompson said. "Allen is a talent that you don't replace. He's an exceptional person. Our biggest concern is not the backcourt; our biggest concern is the frontline."

The backcourt appears secure because Iverson's partner, Big East tournament MVP Victor Page, proved to be one of the conference's most exciting freshman last year. The team's leading returning scorer, Page is ready to take on more of the offensive load. "My role is to play hard defense ... score more points, get the team settled and just control the flow," said Page, who averaged 12.5 points last season. "There's a lot of pressure, but I've been through it before."

A bevy of freshmen and sophomores are vying with Page for playing time in the backcourt. The most promising prospect in the Hoyas' two exhibition games was Ed Sheffey, who scored 25 points and made all of his 11 free throws against an Army team from Fort Hood in Texas.

Sheffey, sophomore Joe Touomou and all of Thompson's guards have speed, so the high-octane, high-pressure game will continue despite Iverson's departure.

"Allen redefined speed, so (sophomore guard) Dean (Berry) looks fast this year," Thompson said. "That's what I told Dean. When Allen was here, it didn't look like he was fast. When Allen's gone, you look fast."

Up front, wide body Jahidi White (6-foot-9, 290 pounds) needs to assert himself, yet stay out of foul trouble. Sophomore Jameel Watkins (6-10, 244) also has bulk and defensive specialist Boubacar Aw is solid.

But no amount of points from anybody can be a substitute for Iverson's attitude, and Thompson thinks that will be the toughest thing to recapture.

"Allen's ego is what we'll miss more than anything," Thompson said. "If Allen messed up, you still knew that Allen thought on the next play that he was still going to make it. ... That's what you have to create. We have to create that amount of respect."

Cy Young Smoltz re–signs with Braves

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

ATLANTA — John Smoltz knew all along that he wanted to stay in Atlanta. When the Braves offered him a $31 million, four-year contract — a record deal for a pitcher — the decision was easy. The best rotation in baseball will be intact for at least another season after the NL Cy Young Award winner re-signed with the Braves on Wednesday.

"This organization has shown me the ultimate in signing me to this contract," Smoltz said during a news conference at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. "There were some teams that obviously made it clear they wanted my services. But my main goal as an athlete has always been to stay in one organization as long as I possibly can. I want to play my entire career here." At least four teams, led by the Cleveland Indians, showed serious interest in Smoltz. The Indians reportedly discussed a $30 million, four-year contract, but there was no further need for discussion when the Braves came up with a higher offer.

"We wanted to be patient but we also wanted to do the right thing," Smoltz said. "This, in my mind, is definitely the right thing, to carry forth the tradition that we started here." Smoltz, 29, led the majors with 24 wins and 276 strikeouts, along with a 2.94 ERA. He added four more wins in the postseason before the Braves were beaten by the New York Yankees in the World Series.

His $7.75 million average is second in baseball behind the $11 million average in the deal Albert Belle and the White Sox agreed to Tuesday.

The breakdown for Smoltz's contract: $7 million in 1997, $7.75 million the next two years and $8.5 million in 2000. The club also has an option for 2001 at $8 million.

"He showed last year how very important he is to the fortunes of our club," Braves general manager John Schuerholz said. "We're absolutely delighted to have John Smoltz back as a member of our organization."

Smoltz worried that the Braves, knowing his desire to stay in Atlanta, would offer a deal at less-than-market value. But his agent, Lonnie Cooper, said Schuerholz made clear from the start of the negotiations that he was willing to spend to keep his pitching staff together.

Pitching has been the dominant factor in Atlanta's success this decade: five division titles, four NL pennants and one World Series title.

Atlanta can now turn its attention toward long-term deals for Greg Maddux, who won the Cy Young Award from 1992-95, and 1991 winner Tom Glavine, the other key members of the rotation who are under contract through 1997. The Braves also have Denny Neagle, acquired in a midseason trade with Pittsburgh.

"I think we have needs before doing long-term contracts for anyone in particular," Braves president Stan Kasten said. "Whatever needs arise, we'll take care of, and along the way we'll also continue to make decisions. You can't pay 25 guys at these levels, but we'll do the best we can."

The previous high contract for a pitcher was $6.5 million in David Cone's $19.5 million, three-year deal with the Yankees. In total dollars, the previous high was the $28 million, five-year contract signed by Maddux in 1993.

In addition to his base salary, Smoltz would get a $250,000 bonus if he wins two Cy Young Awards during the deal.

Baltimore, Toronto and the New York Yankees also had serious discussions with Smoltz's agents, but Cleveland showed the most interest after losing Belle to the White Sox.

"It was always known that they thought highly of me," Smoltz said. "At the same, I think Atlanta showed the ultimate concern."

Although he is coming off the best year of his career, Smoltz feels like he is just entering his prime.

Teen golf sensation Kuehne goes pro

By Ron Sirak
Associated Press

As teen-age golf sensations, Kelli Kuehne and Tiger Woods talked about playing together in a pro tournament. That became a reality yesterday when Kuehne said she was leaving the amateur ranks to play for pay.

Kuehne, who won her second consecutive U.S. Women's Amateur championship this year, will make her pro debut at the JCPenney Classic next month and her partner in the male-female better-ball event will be Woods.

"As of this morning, I received an invitation to play the JCPenney," the 19-year-old Kuehne said by phone from her parents' home in McKinney, Texas. "And I have plans of asking Tiger to be my partner."

With both players represented by super-agent International Management Group and with their long friendship it is unlikely Woods will turn down that invitation.

"We were always kidding around as younger kids that we were going to play together," Kuehne said.

And while Kuehne (pronounced KEY-nee) gets immediate gratification on that childhood dream, she will have to wait to get into full swing as a professional.

It's too late to go to qualifying school for the 1997 LPGA season, so the most events Kuehne can play on tour next year is the four sponsor exemptions she is allowed plus the U.S. Open, if she qualifies for it.

"I might also play in some mini-tour events and possibly go abroad and play," said Kuehne, who for now will try to remain a student at the University of Texas.

Unlike Woods, Kuehne has yet to sign any lucrative endorsement deals, she said.

"I have no idea what my value will be in the marketplace," Kuehne said. "I don't play golf for money. I've been playing for 9 1/2 years and I've always played golf for the love of the game." Kuehne said she knew she could compete on the professional level after playing with Annika Sorenstam and Karrie Webb in the U.S. Open this year.

"That was two really great days for me," she said. "I realized that if I'm on my game I can play on the tour with the great players."

There is not much more for Kuehne to accomplish on the amateur level. In addition to winning her second straight U.S. Women's Amateur this year, she also won the British Ladies Amateur championship, becoming only the fourth golfer to win both in the same year.

Kuehne also won the 1994 U.S. Girls Juniors championship and since losing in the semifinals of the 1993 Girls Juniors has won 28 consecutive matches in national and international competition. "I always felt I would know when it was time for me to move on to the next level of competition," Kuehne said. "I personally feel that my game is ready to go to the next level," she said. Kuehne, whose brother Trip lost the 1994 U.S. Amateur finals to Woods, has played against the pros in two U.S. Opens and two Dinah Shore Classics without any success.

"Up to this point I have yet to make a cut in a professional event," she said.

Then again, Woods had little success against the pros as an amateur then won two of his first seven events on tour.

"Kelli offers the woman's sports world a lot in her attitude and in her game," University of Texas women's golf coach Susan Watkins said after Kuehne announced she was turning pro.

"She and Tiger have been friends for a long time and the market is right for her. She will represent the sport very well," Watkins said.

"She's very confident," Watkins said, referring to an attitude that is sometimes perceived as cocky. "She reminds me a lot of Chris Evert, very confident, very enthusiastic and getting ready to represent not only women's golf but women's sports as a whole."

Run Away! BUT DON'T FORGET YOUR COPY OF THE COLLEGIAN.

Pearl Street Nightclub
Live Music & Dance Club
EVERY MONDAY
INTERNATIONAL NIGHT
FEATURING WORLD BEAT, SOCA, CALYPSO, ASIAN, INDIAN & LATIN MUSIC
Sponsored by Amherst Cafe
EVERY WEDNESDAY
IT'S A DREAM ALL NIGHT RAVE NIGHTS
WED. DEC. 4TH... One OF DEE-LITE
WED. DEC. 11TH... SPAWN, LAZER LIGHT SHOW
WEDNESDAY NOV. 27
HIGH SCHOOL TEEN NIGHT 7:30PM-11:30PM
EVERY THURSDAY
THE AREA'S BIGGEST
HIGH ENERGY Dance Party
Hosted by Adam Wright of Today's 99.3
EVERY FRIDAY 9-2am
FREE BEFORE 10:00
RETRO NIGHT
MUSIC FROM THE 70's, 80's & 90's
EVERY SATURDAY
ALL NEW!!! Welcome to...
CLUB HOUSE
HOSTED BY DEM JONES
GIVEAWAYS, FREE DINNER PASSES, THE HOTTEST & LATEST CLUB MUSIC
WIN TWO MONTH-PASS TO NIGHTBIRDS FITNESS CLUB
THIS WEEK LIVE
Thurs. Nov. 21 @ 7:30 pm
WESTON
THE MARSHES/HALLBAKER/HOWITZER/WASTED TIME
Fri. Nov. 22 @ 8:30 pm
WHMP PRESENTS
DEBBIE DAVIES
DRIVING BLIND
Sat. Nov. 23 @ 9:00 pm
THE BLACK REBELS
CD Release party - Downstairs
Sat. Nov. 23 @ 7:00 pm
THE MIGHTY MIGHTY BOSSTONES
HERCAT/SENSE FIELD
Sun. Nov. 24 @ 8:00 pm
THE MIGHTY MIGHTY BOSSTONES
HERCAT/THE ROYAL CROWNS
Mon. Dec. 2 @ 8:00 pm
WHMP SNOW SHOW
THE LEMONHEADS
SUPERDRAG/GOLDFINGER/GEGGYTAH
COMING TO PEARL STREET
Fri. Nov. 29 21+ ANGRY JOHNNY & THE KILLBILLIES
Sat. Nov. 30 ALL AGES SICK OF IT ALL
Wed. Dec. 4 21+ BATTLEFIELD BAND
Fri. Dec. 6 ALL AGES MURPHY'S LAW
Sat. Dec. 7 18+ MAX CREEK
Thurs. Dec. 12 ALL AGES ORANGE 9MM
Fri. Dec. 13 ALL AGES HATE BREED
Sat. Dec. 14 18+ SLIP KNOT
Advance tickets available at the Northampton Box office
For The Record in Amherst, About Music in Greenfield, T-Submarine at U. Mass, Fitzgerald Records in Westfield
10 PEARL STREET, NORTHAMPTON
http://users.crocnet.valley.com/pearl-street
413-584-7771

Roger B. Talbot Licensed Massage Therapist
Deep Muscle Therapy
Reduce Stress...Tension...
Nervousness...Improve Muscle Tone...
Circulation...Relaxation...
Swedish & Sports Massage
MEMBER AMTA
Call For Appointment
598-8416
1-800-929-8416

Texas Graduate School of International Management
1 yr International MBA
Texas, Costa Rica, Europe
Semester starting
Jan. 13, 1997
Fax (512) 338-8005

R&P Liquors
• Weekly Specials on Regular Beers
• Fine Wines
• Largest Selection of Micro Brews in S. Amherst
• Fridge Rentals
209 West St. • South Amherst
Minutes from Mill Valley, The Brooks, & The Residence

EXERCISE!? ARE YOU NUTS?
PLAY HARD!
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB AMHERST 256-6446

THE FINEST SINCE 1976
Handmade diamond engagement rings & featuring ideal cut
Lazare Diamonds®
Setting the standard for ...BRILLIANCE™
Gifts from glass to gold.
silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324

CHECK OUT A GREAT CLASS!
GOTTA BE A PEER EDUCATOR
Peer Health Educators...
...learn about cool stuff
...teach workshops in the residence halls and Greek area.
...give out condoms and other goodies at the Campus Center and special events.
...make new friends.
...MAKE A DIFFERENCE!
PEER HEALTH EDUCATION
PUBLIC HEALTH 213/214 or EDUCATION 213/214
6 Credits - 2 Semester Commitment Required
For permission of the instructor call the Division of Health Education 577-5181.
Class will meet on Wednesdays from 2:00 - 4:30pm
Priority is given to those who meet with the instructor before November 22nd.

■ football

continued from page 16

sured in Columbus by whether or not you beat the Wolverines, something the Buckeyes have had amazingly little success doing the last few years. They should win this year, having already clinched the Rose and playing at home, but someone had the audacity (yes, I know what it means, wise-guys) to post Ohio St. as 17 point favorites. Hello? Earth to Vegas! Michigan may not be what they once were this year, but they have too much pride to roll over and die against a team that they hate so much. Michigan can salvage a sub-par season with a win over the Buckeyes. Don't expect it to happen, but don't expect a Michigan spanking either.

Friends of the Program "Inside Tip" pick of the week... (1-1)

Yes, Michigan choked, but I'm not deterred. This week, I'm all about Kansas, a three-point favorite at Missouri. The Jayhawks still have some pride and a few players, neither of which Mizzou possesses. Look for the Jayhawks to cover without too much of a problem.

Booty Schwag of the Week Award...

It's getting towards the end of the semester, and the end is near for the schwag. We must love the schwag, tell the schwag we need it, make sure the schwag feels safe and warm.

Excuse me, I have something in my eye...

This is the last Booty Schwag of the Week award, because after Thanksgiving I will announce the Booty Schwag of the Year award.

So who takes home the schwag? Ah, what the hell, I'll give it to Alabama. Choking against Mississippi St. on Saturday night is just not the way to get into the Alliance.

But you know, it really wasn't that big of a deal. Jackie Sherrill has built a little program in Starkville, and Alabama's not going to win the SEC anyway.

I have to give props to everyone in college football for playing reasonably well the last couple weekends. The schwag feels neglected when teams play well, so if you have it in you're heart, forgive the schwag. It's been a long year.

Tonight's Game...

TCU vs. SMU. Once again, a crap game. I really don't know what to say about Thursday night football anymore. So I'll leave this alone. It's just too late in the year to pick on anyone.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist.

■ basketball

continued from page 16

they would play their college ball together, rejected both Arizona and scandal-ridden UCLA, instead committing to Stanford.

• A serious shake-up on the college hoop scene occurred on Friday night, when defending national champ Kentucky fell to a brash young Clemson squad.

Clemson, which jumped up eight spots in this week's AP poll (while Kentucky fell five), has started to get some respect from national sportswriters.

Is it respect, though?

According to recent rumors, Clemson, who got up to 24 first place votes in some Atlantic Coast Conference polls, only rose in the polls because writers and broadcasters are sick of hearing Tigers' coach Rick Barnes complain.

The coach, in his short ACC tenure, has already had a major run-in with North Carolina coach Dean Smith (some of you may recall the mid-80's feud between Villanova's Rollie Massimino and Pitt's Paul Evans). Now, Barnes wants more respect.

Apparently, the ACC media got sick of the Rick Barnes–as–Bob Huggins act, and they decided to perform a little prank. They gave Clemson a ton of votes, and the Tigers ended up high in the conference preseason polls.

But now they have defeated the mighty Wildcats of the Bluegrass state, earning a spot among the AP top 12.

So who's the joke on now?

• Louisville coach Denny Crum has said he will reverse his decision to do away with the position of ball–boy.

Crum, who introduced the volunteer position when he became coach of the Cardinals 25 years ago, said that he will keep the spots instead of cutting the role because of a girl.

A few weeks back, Crum said that he would rather not have any ball boys than have a 10–year–old Louisville girl help wipe the floor.

This drew criticism from the American Civil Liberties Union, who helped the girl, a longtime Louisville fan, and her family against Crum.

Casey Kane is a Collegian columnist.

The Dream's OK, no "Shaqitis" here

By Joan Thompson
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Although Hakeem Olajuwon's heartbeat was back to normal yesterday, the Houston Rockets' center remained hospitalized as doctors performed further tests.

Olajuwon developed an irregular heartbeat after drinking a glass of cold water at halftime Tuesday night.

He was given medication to try to stabilize his heart, but when that was not successful, doctors used a defibrillator yesterday to shock his heart back to normal, said Dr. Bruce Moseley, a team physician.

Moseley said Olajuwon, 33, could be released from The Methodist Hospital within the next day or so, depending on test results. Team officials expected Olajuwon to be sidelined for five to seven days.

The abnormal rhythm, or arrhythmia, appears similar to the irregular heartbeat he had in 1991, Moseley said.

"It resolved and he did well, and we hope it's going to do the same thing this time," Moseley said.

Doctors were optimistic further tests would show no problems. They do not believe the reoccurrence stems from any degeneration or abnormality of the heart.

"Barring unusual findings in further tests, we hope and expect that this will resolve and that he will go on and do very well," Moseley said.

Moseley described the superstar center in "reasonably good" spirits yesterday.

"He was feeling a whole lot better now that his rhythm was back to normal," said Moseley, describing the irregularity as a "disconcerting feeling."

Moseley said it was not known when Olajuwon would return to the court, but that doctors would have a better idea Thursday. "We don't want him to feel like we're rushing him back," Moseley said. "We're going to take all the usual precautions, if anything, err on the side of being conservative because this isn't anything to fool around with."

He also said that doctors could not rule out that it might not occur again. He said it's not really known why such arrhythmia occurs, and that there is no medicine to control the heartbeat. "Generally once it goes back to normal rhythm, it's back," said Moseley, who at times reminded reporters that he is an orthopedic surgeon and that heart specialists were treating Olajuwon. "Generally, you can just get back and going again. But the main thing is you do it gradually."

At one point as Moseley discussed Olajuwon's condition after the Rockets' practice, Charles Barkley played at reporter, taking a microphone to question the doctor.

Barkley jokingly wondered if Olajuwon's problem had anything to do with "Shaqitis," because the Rockets would soon face the Los Angeles Lakers and Shaquille O'Neal.

"Is there something you could give him for that?" Barkley asked. "Ain't there some type of pill for Shaqitis?"

Olajuwon had scored 10 points and five rebounds before halftime in the Rockets' 122-93 victory Tuesday over the Timberwolves. His past medical conditions have included anemia at the end of the 1994-95 championship season, as well as hospitalization for a blood clot in his left leg before the 1990-91 season. The clot was dissolved by blood thinners.

Save The People You Call Up To 44%.

For long-distance calls. Savings based on a 3-min. AT&T operator-dialed interstate call.

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Chinese Food Kai Chi Delivering Sunday-Thursday to 2am, Friday and Saturday to 3am

Hometown High— Do you remember applying to college? Would you like to help high school students learn more about the University and the admissions process at UMASS Amherst? The Undergraduate Admissions Office is looking for Undergraduate students to return to their hometown high school during winter break and represent the Admissions Office to prospective University applicants. Volunteers will be required to attend one training session and to schedule an appointment with their high school guidance office to visit the school while you are at home during Winter-session. Training sessions will be on Wednesday Nov. 20th or Thursday Nov. 21st from 6:00pm-8:00pm in the Campus Center. Volunteers are only required to attend one session. If you have any questions, please contact Rich Toomey or Shelby Gill at 545-3043. Please leave your name, number, and the name of your high school.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take Over Lease 1/97. One bedroom uptown apt. Great Location, Amherst Center. Call 253-4781

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 Chevy Nova 4dr Sedan, AC, auto, runs and looks great. $1350.00 or B/O Call 546-0708

1986 Oldsmobile Delta 88 Great car, low price- $500. Call Chris 549-0564

EMPLOYMENT

Campaign Jobs for the Environment: Part-time jobs now, full- time over break. Earn $50-$75/day. $250-$400/week. Fun, casual atmosphere. Work with MASSPIRG to stop pollution. Learn a lot. Call Terri 256-6434

Mullins Center seeks 20-30 reliable people to work event staff. Availability during Intersession preferred. Apply in person Mullins Center 2nd Floor by Nov. 26

Babysitter/Helper in Amherst Thanksgiving Day, December holidays and Intersession. Non-smoking, car. $6.00/hr. 253-0660 9am -9pm

Snowboard Coaches part-time at private school with ski hill. Decent pay, experience preferred. Call Jack Shea 413-774-7411

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info. call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

ENTERTAINMENT

Sex! Drugs! Rock 'n Roll! Now that I have your attention, Having a party? You need a DJ! Call Eileen @ 253-6588. Raging Disco, Funk, Cheezy 80's music - whatever! No techno, tha st gives me a headache! Call me!

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses. Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

TREK 800 Green Mtn Bike. Bought $425.00/Sell $200. Stave 6-1996

29 Gal Fishtank- Light, Heater, Filter, Gravel & Decorations Incl $100. Call Amy 546-0706

3 Pair Doc Marten's: 1 black boot, 2 pr. shoes, Size 8. Must Sell! Call 546-1451

MAC Centris 610 8MB RAM 80MB HD Full page monitor (gray scale). External fax modem. Ethernet card. Call Fernao 549-3927. Price negotiable.

Set of 4 Rims 14" white w/black & chrome. BO 546-6485. Ask for Dan

New York Knick Tickets for sale. Vs. Seattle, San Antonio, Indiana (888)602-0774 (pager)

Color Printer- Panasonic KX-P2123 Color 24-pin Dot Matrix. Great dorm printer, free cable & stand. 546-6963

HOUSE FOR RENT

Secluded Riverfront Home N. Green River ARTISTS INN Residence Living or Studio Space Avail. Immed Part-Furnished 14x24' $350/mo or 20x24' $375/mo + ½ util., sec. dep., references, some pets ok, gas heat, wash/dry, snow rmvl, kitchen cathedral ceiling, fireplace, balcony. East Colrain. 20 min/GFLD, 40 min/UMass 624-3928

Amherst Belchertown line 4 Bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area. Available now 548-4270

INSTRUCTION

Boxing Three private 1/2 hour lessons $69.95. Call 732-8817. In Amherst Tues. & Thurs. Eve.

LOST

LOST- Black Wallet containing Mass. licensa bearing the name John Rinaldo. $30 reward—if found please call John @ 546-0571

Lost Key Uptown Saturday night. Reward if found. Call 253-0506

MUSICIANS

Attention Bands Lava Lounge ICP Productions looking for UMass bands to perform at our club. Call Joe at 562-9898 or Mail at 584-7111

MISCELLANEOUS

Know Your Rights Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Sunderland 1BR in 2BR Apt. $315.00 + utilities. Must find someone before Thanksgiving for Spring term or Jan. 1. 665-4394

Seeking roommate for 4 bdrm apt in Northampton. $300+. Call Karla 585-8629

SERVICES

Typing: Rates by page, semester or package. (413)467-2452

COMPUTER CONSULTING Just say NO! to computer problems! Chris Amshey, Consultant, UMass Alum. 532-2039

Psychic Readings Your home or mine, free newsletter. Piaasa call Sandy (413)467-3729

GORILLAGRAMS Flowers, Birthdays, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorillas. We'll go anywhere, anytime! Restaurants, classrooms, dorms. Student Rates available! Call 256-0287

PERSONALS

To All Collegian Staff-
The weather's hara,
wish you wera beautiful
Jacob

ROOMATE WANTED

Looking for a Female to share an apartment in South Amharst on the bus route. Call 253-6405. Available Winteressision and/or Spring

On-Campus Housing Available for Intersession. $250 Call Karen (508) 682-9213, Kathy (617) 479-7636

Female Students: On campus living Room and board. Starting at $2000/semester. Singles available. Immediate occupancy for Spring Semester. Call Karen 508-682-9213, Kathy 617-479-7636

Sunderland 1BR in 2BR Apt. $315.00 + utilities. Must find someone before Thanksgiving for Spring term or Jan. 1. 665-4394

Seeking roommate for 4 bdrm apt in Northampton. $300+. Call Karla 585-8629

SERVICES

Typing: Rates by page, semester or package. (413)467-2452

COMPUTER CONSULTING Just say NO! to computer problems! Chris Amshey, Consultant, UMass Alum. 532-2039

Psychic Readings Your home or mine, free newsletter. Piaasa call Sandy (413)467-3729

GORILLAGRAMS Flowers, Birthdays, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorillas. We'll go anywhere, anytime! Restaurants, classrooms, dorms. Student Rates available! Call 256-0287

PERSONALS

ELYSE Hope you are having a great week! You are almost done! Alpha Chi love, Your Big Sis

PEANUT We've come a long way in the past year. Thank you for being there for me. I could never really express the love I feel for you. HAPPY ANNIVERSARY. Love, Chestnut

HEY YOU! Come and see RUMORS Wed.-Sat., the 20th-23rd, 8pm @ Bowker. Bloody lovely! Tell your friends

SERVICES

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info.

Angel Chat - Winging your way with Angelic answers to your questions. Call 1-800-539-3930

CAR NEED REPAIR? Let ma come to you! Student Rates. 665-4790

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnent? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistence. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break America's Premier Student Travel Co! Party in Cancun & Nassau From $299!!! Find out how to go for free & Earn Extra Cash!!! Call 1-800-798-1509

SPRING BREAK TRIPS Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida. Best Prices. Best Parties. GROUP DISCOUNTS. Space is limited. For free brochure CALL TODAY 1-800-959-4Sun

SPRING BREAK AND ALL OTHER TRAVEL SPECIAL RATES FOR STUDENTS. INSIDE NJ CALL 201-533-0300 OUTSIDE NJ CALL 1-800-899-4988

Killington Ski House needs housemates $500.00 for entire season. 549-8924

SERVICES

SS Cruise Ships Hiring $$ Travel free. Exotic places. Save $$$! Seasonal/Permanent. No experience necessary. Travel/Employment Directory. Free Info! Act now! HTTP://WWW.Tropical-Destinations.com. Brett @ Tropical-Destinations.com (413)525-6487

Bahamas, Ft. Lauderdale, Orlando 11 days! Cruise whenever. Must sell! $450. Includes Two!!! Call 6-6271. Ask for Moises (MO)

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, FL. Earn 2 credits! March 16-22. Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm. Herter 227. Call Project DEEP @ (800)282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

Wanted- Tutor for AUTO CAD Release13. Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employments", call Caroline at 546-5265 for more info. Identity confidential upon request.

Mattress Wanted QUEEN Call Eugenie 545-3768

WANTED

Desperate for Bibliographic meterial and I'm not even failing the course. Must-have rigorous booklist- textbooks, workbooks, problems for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education). Will pay above $150/negotiable. Call at all times except Mon. and Tues. Don't worry, I am correct. (413)549-1271

THURSDAYS

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day

All others
40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals, this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

W	O	D	S		D	E	B	U	T		P	O	O	P
A	R	C	H		E	L	O	P	E		E	R	N	E
S	I	T	E		C	A	R	A	T		L	A	C	E
T	O	E		M	A	T	A		H	E	L	L	E	R
E	N	T	W	I	N	E		P	E	L	E
		O	T	T		S	A	R	A	T	O	G	A
O	P	I	N	E		W	O	V	E	N		D	O	T
V	E	N	T		L	O	W	E	D		W	I	N	O
A	R	K		S	A	W	E	D		C	R	E	E	P
L	E	S	S	E	N	E	D		T	U	E
		L	A	D	D		W	E	T	N	E	S	S
T	H	R	I	L	L		P	A	N	S		L	O	A
M	E	A	D		O	L	I	V	E		S	E	R	F
E	R	I	E		R	E	L	E	T		A	N	T	E
N	O	D	S		D	E	E	D	S		C	A	S	S

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Exile island
5. Raceway gait
9. Falstaff's quaff
12. Score
13. Delhi money
15. Retired for the night
16. Paul Hogan, e.g.
18. Be an omen of
19. Opponent of AES
20. On the safe side
21. Tier
23. Competed
24. -fruiti
25. Crazy
28. Poet Teasdale
29. Network founded in 1926
32. Adjudicate anew
33. Basis of a tabloid suit
34. Before king
35. Wrong
36. Answer, as reporters' questions
37. Leave it be!
38. Caddie's item
39. Annoy
40. Kind of penny
41. Bald eagle's kin
42. Actress Jackson
43. Highball need
44. Crosshatches
46. Word with six or dish
47. Garb
49. Burnoose or kimono
50. Oceangoing initials
53. ___ Loves Mary (Reagan film)
54. Obstacles
57. Very old
58. Sudden rush
59. Dart
60. Managed
61. Oliver or Rex
62. Emulates Hon Coles

DOWN

1. Mild expletive
2. Stentorian
3. Vulgar
4. "___-Wien" (1920 song)
5. County seat of Kerry
6. Served as king
7. Sheriff Andy Taylor's son
8. Type of towel or wagon
9. Hates
10. Pollux's mother
11. Genesis locale
14. Guaranteed
15. Blind as ___ (2 wds.)
17. Drizzly
22. Final entry in some lists (2 wds.)
23. Run the gamut
24. Schedule
25. Very angry
26. More modern
27. Bolster
28. Colander's cousin
30. Lisa Jamdyce's house
31. Lika e quidnunc
33. Mortgages
36. Stratocasters, e.g.
37. "Queen Mary," for one
39. Poker holding
40. Potter's apparatus
43. Like a duck's feet
45. Watermelon eater's discard
46. Author Mary Mapes ___
47. Opened
48. Forum frock
49. Unique
50. USC's rival
51. Bypass
52. JFK landers
55. "___ Gang" (Phillip Roth)
56. Frequently, to Keats

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Continue to explore a topic you are unfamiliar with. You may discover a hidden talent. Hurry home after work. It's time to put your efforts into a project at home. You will enjoy it more than you realize!

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
Finish paying your bills for the month. A new savings plan may be a good idea. Too much impulse buying will not help your current situation. Friends surprise you after dinner—kick back and enjoy their company and conversation!

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
Don't get into a trivial argument with your mate early in the week. You'll soon regret it. Try not to say something you don't really mean. Your sense of humor will come in very handy. Keep things light!

CANCER
June 22–July 22
Clean out your closets and your garage. It will leave you feeling refreshed and ready for a new project. Don't be afraid to throw things away! A close friend reveals a dark secret. Don't be quick to judge.

LEO
July 23–August 23
There are a few minor glitches to overcome, but for the most part you're in for a wonderful week! For example, something you really want won't be in the first place you look. Don't give up easily.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
You'll enjoy spending time at home this week, even if it's doing housework. A phone call from an old friend will give you a new perspective. It may be time to rearrange some priorities.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23
Some newly acquired skills will finally be put to use this week. Now is the time to think of others first. Your mate may need your help. Be generous with kind words and compliments. Someone may need them more than you think.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
Be very careful in who you share information with. A secret is likely to be revealed if you allow it. Stay alert and be careful! Someone may not be as sincere as they appear.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21
New information you acquire this week could solve a problem. If you need to take a risk, do it early in the week. Now is a good time to discuss options with a business partner. Do it in a relaxed atmosphere, such as over dinner.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20
Money is a prime consideration this week. If you don't act wisely, you could be in for a real fall. You may be accused of being a workaholic. Reassure loved ones that your busy phase will be over soon.

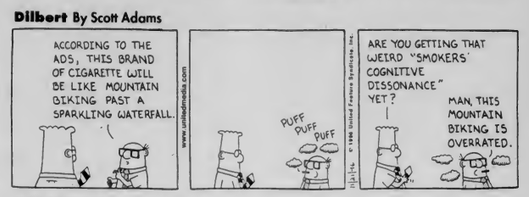
AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18
You are exceptionally creative today, so write your ideas down. Start a new project that will solve an old dilemma. One of your ideas could even bring you fame and fortune. Concentrate on environmental issues.

PISCES
February 19–March 20
Get as many obligations as possible out of the way this week. That includes the paperwork you've been avoiding. If you don't take care of it soon, it will backfire on you.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabbie By Kevin Fagan



Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Jeff Duran By Snug, the Joiner

Leoid By Roger & Salem Salloom

Lowell and I were walking down the street and I thought this girl was waving at me but she was actually fanning her face from the heat.
I almost said, "Hi."
I'm a jerk.
I told Lowell, "We're losers. We have nothing going on in our lives."
Lowell said, "Yeah, we're losers."
Then I said, "Actually, I'm not a loser, Lowell, but you are."
I said, "Really, Lowell, you can't be a loser. It's virtually impossible because you have a beautiful new mountain bike."
Lowell said, "Thanks, Leold, I forgot I had the bike."
I said, "Yeah, no problem... .....loser."

Collegian Graphics

University² By Frank Cho

Generation X By Chris Lehman

Baxter...Beware the Dog Who Thinks! By Brant G. Henne

Dots By Blip-CHOP

Close to Home By John McPherson

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Morris, but to prevent office visits from dragging on, the HMO requires that I answer only 'yes' or 'no' questions."

Quote of the Day

"When ignorance reigns, life is lost."

–Zach De La Rocha

Thoughts of the Day

Why isn't phonetic spelled the way it sounds?

If you tied buttered toast to the back of a cat and dropped it from a height, what would happen?

Today's Staff

Chris Conner
Night Editor

Laura Stock
Copy Editor

Jennifer Jutras
Photo Technician

Bart Simpson
Production Supervisor

Joylyn Lombard
Dan Bodah
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH	DINNER
Midwest Fat Plate Rice with Fat Sauce Whale Blubber Surprise Slaughterhouse Lard Pie	Liposuction Souffle Catgut Pasta with Garlic Lard Sauce, garnished with Kitty Litter

Hampshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Fresh Croissants and Brie Assorted Tropical Fruit Strawberry Frappes Caviar & Ritz Crackers	Welsh Wabbit in Wine Spinach Pasta w/Sundried Tomatoes & Pine Nuts

Worcester

LUNCH	DINNER
Eggs and Spam Eggs, Bacon, & Spam Eggs, Sausage, Baked Beans, & Spam	Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, Baked Beans, Spam, and Spam

Berkshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Undercooked Organic Chick Peas Mushy Rice Scorched Tofu Pyramids	Baked Cloves of Garlic Wheat Berries with Almond Butter Paste Organic Whole Wheat

Sports

UVC to broadcast hoops

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

Five days and counting.

That's right, in less than a week, the Massachusetts men's basketball team kicks off the regular season with a trip to the Maui Invitational to face host Chaminade in the first round.

Of course, it will be broadcast on ESPN, so if you live in the dorms, you're out in the cold right? Wrong. Gone are the days when UMass took to the road forcing students who live on campus to scamper around town trying to find a friend or restaurant with a big screen T.V. and a cable box. Thanks to the Union Video Center (UVC), all Minutemen games that will air on ESPN or ESPN2 during the course of the regular season and Atlantic 10 Tournament will air on UVC 19 during the first and second semesters.

Before and after the Nov. 25 game against Chaminade, the Dec. 4 match against Georgetown, and the Dec. 10 match up against Fresno State, UVC will air its own pre and post- game shows hosted by WMUA's Patrick Sheeran. UVC is also working on adding an additional five games to be aired next semester.

UVC first aired UMass basketball from ESPN feed during last year's game against Temple then followed up coverage with games against Virginia Tech and Temple in the A-10 Tournament. However, while the network allowed the broadcast free of charge, it cost $800 to rent the satellite needed to downlink the feed.

"After we aired our first game last year, the student response was great," UVC president Willie Sanchez said. "Even if our publicity hadn't been great because of the short amount of time we had, the word spread quickly, because once people started seeing it on Channel 19, they started calling each other and afterwards, people were looking forward to when we could do it again.

"We not only got great feedback from the students, but we also got department calling us looking to be sponsors for future games."

Sponsors for this year's Minutemen broadcasts include The University Store, HSCN, University Food Services, and The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Last year, Sanchez worked with ESPN college basketball program director Dave Brown to secure the feed. However, this year, Sanchez and UVC wanted to find a more cost- effective way to air the games.

"Housing came to us this year and told us that they had the [satellite] dishes, that they could help us," Sanchez said.

In the agreement between the two groups it was decided that UVC will make the arrangement with ESPN for the feed, while HSCN will provide the satellite dishes, thus side- stepping the $800 per-game cost.

"Now we are trying to ambush the students to let the students know that we are airing the games," Sanchez said. "Hopefully they'll see it the first couple of times, people will know that if a game is on ESPN, we'll have it."

Sanchez also felt that this could be a stepping off point to getting ESPN on HSCN.

"Students have to voice their demand if this is something they want," Sanchez said. "We're not afraid to lose [the games] as a UVC show, if they get ESPN obviously we won't be able to carry those games anymore, but we can still work on A-10 games and other network games. My goal is to get basketball games on campus using UVC as the primary source."

In addition, broadcasting basketball games has given UVC more opportunities for students to become involved.

"Usually a crew for any other event has six to eight people," Sanchez said. "But for basketball, we have been able to get 10-15 people that we need for logging, floor directing, technical directing and everyone plays a great part."

Nov. 25 – UMass at Chaminade 2 p.m.
Dec. 4 – UMass vs. Georgetown 7:30 p.m.
Dec. 10 – UMass vs. Fresno State 7:30 p.m.
Dec. 14 – at Wake Forest 8:30 p.m.
Jan. 30 – at George Washington 7:30 p.m.
Feb. 8 – at Rhode Island 12 p.m.
Feb. 25 – at St. Joseph's 9:30 p.m.

THANG VO \ COLLEGIAN

Carmelo Travieso and the men's basketball team will be seen on UVC 19 this year.

JORMA KANGANEN \ COLLEGIAN

Stuck in the middle with UConn
The Massachusetts women's soccer team travels to Storrs for a Sweet Sixteen match against UConn at 1 p.m. on Sunday.

Holtz departs in time; schwag season winding down

Hi, everybody, it's me. Psyched for the weekend? It starts tonight, you know.

I guess we start this week in South Bend, where Lou Holtz stepped down as coach of the vaunted Notre Dame football program. Lou leaves behind an impressive record, bringing the program back to prominence after the ill-fated Gerry Faust regime.

And you know what? They're better off without him.

I say that because I think ND needs new blood. Let's face it. Lou didn't get the blue-chip recruits like he used to, and eight years without a national championship is like 80 years without a national championship in South Bend. By leaving now, Holtz assures that the history books will be kinder to him, and he can pursue other interests, even the NFL if he likes.

People have to realize the pressure a Notre Dame coach endures, and Lou Holtz put pressure on himself like no other man. So Lou, good luck and God bless. Take a cruise, a trip cross-country, whatever, and let a younger, less-frazzled coach deal with all the grief.

Since last week's column was about disappointments, I figure I have to give equal space to the surprises of 1996. This was somewhat of a funky year in the college ranks. A lot of big-time programs bit it big-time, and some up and coming teams kept it up when nobody, including yours truly, thought they were done. So, without further ado, your Top 10 surprises of the year.

1 Ohio St. (10-0) They lost Bobby Hoying, Eddie George and Terry Glenn, and they're still going to Pasadena. John Cooper may finally get credit for being a good coach.

2. Arizona St. (10-0) All right, all right, I'll give it up for the Sun Devils. I still think their win over Nebraska was lucky, but they've mowed through the PAC-10, and are headed for the Rose Bowl for the first time in 10 years.

3. BYU. (11-1) We all freaked out when they beat Texas A&M in August to start the year. Looking back, they really shouldn't have had that much trouble. Props to Steve Sarkisian, a great quarterback in a great system.

4. Northwestern (9-2) They were supposed to be a fluke! Oh well, shows you how much I know. Two straight years of sneaking up on people is unheard of. Mmm- hm Gary Barnett. Don't take the ND job. Stay with your kids, build a future. Please?

5. Virginia Tech (8-1) Another program that's sneaking up on people. Quietly becoming the class of the Big East, and probably headed to the Orange Bowl.

6. Army (9-1) Had to know that loss to Syracuse was coming, but a great story nonetheless. Even if you're a passing college football fan, you have to watch the Army – Navy game, especially this year.

7. LSU (7-2) Gerry DiNardo is starting to build the Tigers back up to prominence.

8. West Virginia (8-2) Hey, they choked against Miami and Syracuse, but they still rebounded from a shaky past two seasons.

9. North Texas (5-6) Just kidding.

10. Southern Miss. (8-3) Conference USA football is still a joke, but it might not be for long if the Golden Eagles and teams like Houston and Louisville step it up.

You're Finally Here and I'm a Mess...

For all the success Ohio St. has had this year, it doesn't mean squat if they don't beat Michigan Saturday. Last year Ohio St. went down to Ann Arbor thinking Rose Bowl and left thinking Citrus Bowl, courtesy of a little choke-job. Seasons are mea-

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 13

Volleyball serves up Blue and Red

While inclement weather put a hold on last week's intramural championship games, this week Mother Nature cooperated and the contests finally took place.

Out on the fields

• Ending the outdoor season in flag football, Pi Kapp. Alpha advanced to the final round beating the Bomb Squad 38-6 while CurlyG Cradle Rock advanced beating Franchise 18-12 it overtime. The final game was hard fought when Pike pulled out to win the championship game 29-27.

• In the women's soccer finals, The Vixen Women took home the honors beating the Bushwackers with a 4-3 victory. In the men's competition, Delta Chi A topped Delirium in a 7-6 shoot out victory.

• On the softball diamond, the Porkadelics garnered the title due to a forfeit.

Taking it indoors

• Inside, the Boyden Main Gym has been shaking with activity. While intramural volleyball is winding down its season preparing for playoffs after Thanksgiving, the Holiday Basketball Tournament is in full swing.

• There will be clinics for paid basketball officials. Each official must attend both of the mandatory two-part meetings. Part I: Dec. 3 –4 or Jan. 28 from 6–7:30 p.m. and Part II: Jan. 29–30 or Jan. 31.

Introducing the UMass Blue Team

The UMass men's club volleyball team officially changed their names from A and B to Red and Blue.

The Blue Team, though young and inexperienced, is rich with talent. Captain Jim Blanchette looks to lead his team to a successful season. The current roster incudes: setters Sean Daly and Chin Liu; middle hitters Alex Schmitz, Paolo Piscelli and Johnny Carranza; outside hitters Inul Olmez, Jaret Baltev, Adam Kalinowski, Patrick Callahan, and L.J. Weslowski; and defensive specialist Kha Le.

The Blue Team travels to Nazarene College in Quincy to compete in the Nazarene invitational. In Red Team action, the squad is off to Princeton, N.J. for the Princeton Invite.

It's sow time!

The UMass Ski Club is holding its last general meeting of the semester this Sunday night at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. All students who attend are eligible for discounts on membership and the December trip to Quebec. Space is still available but running out fast.

Sports Briefs was compiled by Collegian staff member Chris Stamm. All submissions to Sports Briefs can be faxed to the Collegian at 545-1592 or dropped off at 113 Campus Center Basement by 12 p.m. each Wednesday.

BC crises continue; ACLU targets Crum

The mushroom cloud of problems covering the Boston College campus in the wake of the gambling scandal atomic bomb has spread to the men's basketball offices in Conte Forum.

Just a week after 13 Eagle football players were suspended from the team because of alleged gambling incidents, a pair of BC hoop recruits were told they would not be admitted to the school due to academic reasons.

Jon DePina and Elton Tyler, both Boston-area products, were told that their grades were not sufficient for BC admission standards, regardless of the fact that they both have met the minimum standards that are required by the NCAA.

As a result of this, an incensed BC coach Jim O'Brien has let his dissatisfaction with the admissions department known. O'Brien has said that if the recruits are not granted a place in the Boston College class of 2001, he will consider leaving the venerable institution.

Meanwhile, top Massachusetts recruit Mike Bradley, out of Worcester's Burncoat High School, who gave a verbal commitment to BC last spring, has said that he will withhold his letter of intent if his fellow recruits are not admitted.

The fallout continues as Florida schoolboy Adam Allenspach has also said that he will think twice about travelling to Chestnut Hill in the wake of the recent football and now hoop controversies.

All is not well at the Heights, and O'Brien couldn't be more upset. While he talks the talk, the truth remains that he has it pretty good there. Odds are he'll remain in the maroon and gold.

• More recruiting flotsam and jetsam in the wake of controversy: UCLA has been sent scrambling looking for recruits for next year.

Baron Davis, who pointed the violation spotlight on former Bruin coach Jim Harrick (the whole car thing), has said that in the wake of Harrick's firing/resignation he will wait until the spring signing period to officially ink his intent to play ball.

In the meantime, Kansas City, Kan. product Earl Watson will also wait, and possibly look to ply his trade elsewhere.

For now, though, the Bruins have to worry about playing. Last night, they started their season against the team that knocked them out of the post-season picture three years ago. Although it's not the same Tulsa team, the games mean something now and every one is important.

• While on the subject of possibly looking elsewhere to play ball, Syracuse's next superstar may not be Syracuse's for much longer.

Winfred Walton, who was ruled academically ineligible after recording a 280-point improvement on his SATs, is pondering the possibility of transferring.

The prized recruit has talked to fellow Michigan hoopster Terrance Roberson about possibly moving out west to don a Fresno State uniform.

Considering that Jerry Tarkanian is the Bulldog's coach, there shouldn't be any trouble with admitting a marginal academic student to the program.

• In bluechip news, California big-man Chris Burgess has signed a national letter of intent.

Rated by some as the nation's best prospect, and easily the nation's top schoolboy center, Burgess had narrowed his choices down to Duke and Brigham Young. Opting for hoop tradition, Burgess announced that he would play his collegiate days in Durham, alongside other top prospect Shane Battier.

• Also in the world of commitment, Myron Anthony, the top bluechipper out of Florida, has announced his intent to play for Kentucky next season.

• The Collins twins, Jason and Jarron, who decided long ago that

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 13

Student ticket pick-up is TODAY at the Curry Hicks cage starting at 7 a.m.
Men's basketball vs. Fresno State and Wyoming
Hockey vs. Providence

Lines cannot form before 6:30 a.m. If they do, a lottery system will be used to distribute tickets.

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 56 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Friday, November 22, 1996

Resistance is futile

Jean-Luc Picard and the rest of the Enterprise crew embark on their latest adventure. Check out our review (see Arts & Living, page 5).

Let the games begin

Crystal Carroll and the UMass women's basketball team will open their season Sunday at home against Ohio State (see Sports, page 10).

WORLD

Palestinian officer accused of beating

HEBRON, West Bank (AP) — A Palestinian police officer and his pregnant wife accused Israeli troops yesterday of barging into their home and beating the woman unconscious.

The couple said Israeli police accompanied by an army intelligence officer arrived at their home in Hebron on Tuesday morning and accused them of keeping weapons in the house illegally. "We don't have weapons. We have licensed weapons from the Palestinian Authority, but we keep them in the office," said Issa Abu-Mayyaleh, 37. "My wife was in the bedroom. I asked the officer... to allow her to get dressed before they entered. He pushed me back."

His wife Itaaf, 30, said a female Israeli officer pulled her by the hair into the children's bedroom, closed the door and "forced me to take off my clothes, everything. She then started to beat me with her hands and the butt of her gun."

NATION

Flu epidemic rising; CDC predicts increase

ATLANTA (AP) — Flu has struck in 15 states in the last two months and outbreaks are expected to get worse in December, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said yesterday.

While the government doesn't have a count of victims yet, most of the outbreaks involved one person or just a few people, said Nancy Ardent of the CDC's National Center for Infectious Diseases. "Even though it's past November, people who have not gotten their vaccines can and should," Ms. Arden said.

The vaccine protects against both flu strains that have people feeling miserable this year — Type A-Wuhan and Type B.

Wuhan can kill. If elderly people or the chronically ill get that strain, they are more likely to get pneumonia or other life-threatening illnesses. Outbreaks in at least four of the 15 states are blamed on Wuhan.

Flu contributes to the deaths of about 20,000 people a year in the United States. The CDC recommends vaccinations for people 65 and older, people in nursing homes, children with asthma and anyone with a chronic illness.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 30	HIGH: 52 LOW: 29	HIGH: 51 LOW: 28

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics .....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 10

Advising obstacles, inequalities question UMass' future growth

UMass at a crossroads — the state of academic advising: a Massachusetts Daily Collegian special report

Day One: Faculty reactions to advising
Faculty says departmental advising is strong; student apathy is a real problem; administration is also criticized

Day Two: Collegian study points to advising problems
Students express frustration and confusion with the advising process

Day Three: The proactive University?
Students, administration, critique programs aimed at making UMass more accessible.

Day Four: Cultural organizations and advising
Students of color strive to find a familiar face and guidance at a predominately white University

Day Five: UMass 2000
Will the future forget the undergraduate? What do the next five years hold for UMass and its students?

Editor's Note: this article is the fifth in a five part special report on the state of academic advising at the University of Massachusetts. The report was compiled by the Collegian news department.

The future of the University of Massachusetts is in a perpetual state of strategic flux. Administrators, University Trustees, politicians and student leaders constantly debate over the University's priorities as UMass prepares to enter the 21st century.

In order to come to fruition, University priorities depend upon finances. And within the operating budget of UMass, a very limited amount of money is distributed throughout the campus. Financial resources at this campus have always been highly contested, but now more than ever, monetary requests are filing into the Whitmore Administration Building.

A major priority of the University, according to students, faculty and administration, is undergraduate advising.

However, according to the Collegian's research, many students are unsatisfied with their advising, while others have not even spoken with an advisor before.

What is being done to solve the problems of advising? Will advising receive the financial resources necessary to meet the needs of all students? What do the present problems of advising really mean?

Where is the Money?

The prominent result of the ongoing planning for the University is Chancellor David K. Scott's Strategic Action Plan. Scott's plan designs a financial framework which will be enacted over the next five years (Fiscal Years 1997- 2001).

According to Scott's Strategic Action document, $500,000 has been appropriated for "Advising and Retention," designed to provide students with the resources they need to navigate UMass.

This $500,000 is part of the expenditures section of Strategic Action, which consists of $46.5 million.

"Advising and Retention" is one of nine priorities which falls under the Major Initiatives section of the document, which appropriates $7 million.

Larger appropriations have been given to six of the other initiatives, one of the six being "Steps toward the Land Grant–AAU [American Association of Universities] Model ($900,000)."

A potential problem for students is that the Strategic Action plan gives more money to a future plan ("Steps toward the Land Grant-AAU Model") while it seemingly overlooks the present problems in advising.

A great deal of attention is being paid to the preparation of the University for acceptance into the American Association of Universities (AAU).

As an AAU member, UMass has a chance to receive more funds for research due to the AAU's political clout in Washington.

Should the possibility of gaining acceptance to the AAU take precedence over the need for advising and retention of present undergraduate students?

"The Advising Center needs more

Turn to FUTURE, page 3

COURTNEY SMITH / COLLEGIAN

High in the Sky
Cape Stoneworks of Brewster inspected the Old Chapel's tower yesterday afternoon in preparation for restoring the tower's walls which haven't been grouted since 1941.

Feuerstein lectures on business

Malden Mills owner details relationship of work and religion

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Aaron Feuerstein spoke Wednesday evening at the Mullins Center as part of The Nirenburg Lecture on Business Leadership.

By Bryan Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

The trust between employer and employee is what insures the success of a company, said Aaron Feuerstein in a lecture held at the Mullins Center Wednesday night.

Feuerstein, President and CEO of the Malden Mills textile factory which burned down last year, spoke about the responsibility of a company to its community and employees. He also discussed the role his upbringing as an Orthodox Jew played in the development of his business ethics.

"The idea that you can't serve the worker and the shareholder simultaneously is really foreign to me," Feuerstein said to an audience of 2,500 people.

The event was Sponsored by Hillel House and the School of Management as part of The Nirenberg Lecture on Business Leadership.

On Dec. 11 of last year, one week before his 70th birthday, three of the 10 buildings that make up Malden Mills textile factories were destroyed by fire. Feuerstein decided to rebuild the 90-year-old factories and guarantee his workers three months' pay — which added up to nearly $20 million.

"The fire was horrible. It was a globe of fire surrounded by black smoke rising up to heaven," Feuerstein said.

Instead of feeling sorry for himself, Feuerstein explained that he was determined to think creatively about how to save his business. He came to his decision to rebuild almost immediately.

Feuerstein cited the heroics of his security workers, who, in conjunction with fire fighters, successfully evacuated the three buildings and saved a fourth building from burning down. Several people were critically injured, but all are long off the critical list and some are even back to work now, he said.

The fourth building was operational within 10 days of the fire. Upon entering the building, a worker said to Feuerstein, "We will pay you back tenfold for what you have done."

Feuerstein said that nearly all of his workers are back on the job — at a state-of-the-art environmentally-sound textile factory has been built in place of the old, and production and sales of his product has increased.

"If the worker out on the floor wants you to win, you will win," he said.

Feuerstein said that treating his workers correctly is more of an investment than an act of charity. He also stressed manufacturing a creative product instead of a commodity. He said that paying workers substandard wages and offering no benefits decreases the quality of the product and eventually hurts the company.

Feuerstein said it is the responsibility of America's big businesses to rejuvenate the inner-cities and protect the environment. He was critical of companies that were successful and left Lawrence for cheaper labor in the south or overseas. He described Lawrence as "one of the worst ghettoes in New England.".

"Unless the business world helps the inner cities to survive, we will lose the major cities in the U.S., and once that happens the U.S. will become a second class economic power," Feuerstein said.

He added that he would have had great difficulty in his course of action if his firm had been a publicly held firm.

"There is an alliance between corporate CEO's and Wall Street," he said. This alliance results in the value of stocks increasing when large layoffs occur at companies. He believes that once shareholders share his philosophy of benevolence, profits will increase on all sides.

Feuerstein also spoke on the role of the consumer in supporting ethical business practices. He combined the facts of

Turn to SPEECH page 3

U.S. freezes reconnaissance flights over embattled Zaire

By Susanne M. Schafer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States suspended reconnaissance flights over eastern Zaire after Zairian rebels fired on one of the planes, the Pentagon said yesterday.

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon told reporters that the overflights by P-3 Orion reconnaissance aircraft, which were being used to assess the number of refugees in the region, could resume. "I would expect flights to resume, but we don't know for certain," Bacon said.

Zairian rebels fired a burst of antiaircraft fire at one of the Navy planes Wednesday when it flew over a rally of thousands of rebel supporters in eastern Zaire.

The plane, flying at 19,000 feet, was too high to be hit. It was over a crowd of about 10,000 people gathered in Goma, the capital of northern Kivu province, now under rebel control.

Bacon said the crew members reported "bullets exploding way below the plane," but that the type of guns used wasn't clear. Two P-3s have been conducting their missions out of Entebbe, Unganda. The spokesman said 365 U.S. military personnel were now in place in central Africa, even though a formal decision has not yet been made on moving forward with a multinational relief operation to assist refugees.

That number is nearly half the 800 troops the United States has said it is willing to contribute to such an effort.

There are 160 in Entebbe, 10 in Kigali, Rwanda, and 195 in Mombassa, Kenya, Bacon said. Some 45 U.S. aircraft are standing by in Europe and Africa to assist in the multinational aid mission should one be mounted, he added.

Representatives of some two dozen nations were expected to meet Friday in Stuttgart, Germany, to discuss the potential role of the military — if any — in a relief effort to be led by Canada. The force was approved by the U.N. Security Council last week, but decisions to move ahead were put off as some 500,000 refugees began returning to their homes in Rwanda on their own.

CIA–bred spy indicted by Feds Nicholson gets quick indictment

Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Career CIA officer Harold J. Nicholson was indicted yesterday on a charge of selling national defense information to the Russians since 1994 for more than $180,000. The one-count indictment, returned by a federal grand jury in suburban Alexandria, Va., charged the 46-year-old former CIA station chief with conspiracy to commit espionage. The charge carries a top penalty of life in prison without parole.

U.S. Attorney Helen Fahey said the investigation has not turned up information necessary to seek a death penalty. A death penalty can be sought if someone is killed as a result of espionage. CIA Director John Deutch has said U.S. officials know of no deaths or arrests as a result of Nicholson's alleged treachery, although he said Nicholson is believed to have given Moscow the identities and future assignments of up to two years' worth of CIA recruits.

The government also moved to forfeit, if Nicholson is convicted, any direct or indirect proceeds of his spying. A court document alleged that this includes: $180,000 in cash, a Chevrolet Lumina Sports van and a Toshiba portable computer.

The quick indictment was something of a surprise. Usually, the government takes all the time allotted to it after an arrest in major spy cases to continue its investigation before bringing formal charges.

But Washington attorney Plato Cacheris, who defended the CIA's most damaging turncoat, Aldrich Ames, said there are advantages to the government from a quick indictment.

"They don't have to show their hand at the preliminary hearing" which was scheduled for next Monday, Cacheris said. "We learned a good deal about what the government had at the preliminary hearing in the Ames case."

Ames plead guilty in 1994 and is serving life without parole. The government said he sold secrets to Moscow over nearly nine years for $2.7 million and blamed him for the deaths of 10 Western agents and the compromise of dozens of operations.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Friday, Nov. 22

Gala — The Haitian Student Association and Casa Dominica present the 3rd Annual Haitian–Dominican Cultural Gala from 7 p.m.–2 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Admission is $6/ID, $8/general public.

Performance — Mission Improvable, a student comedy improv troupe, will perform at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 168. Admission is free.

Religious Services — "Thanksgiving" Shabbat services with a free meal at 6 p.m. at Chabad House, 30 N. Hadley Rd., Amherst. Free and open to the public and for more information, call 549–4094.

Religious Services — Services will be held at Hillel House at 6 p.m. with dinner to follow at 7:15 p.m. in the Hillel Kosher Dining Room.

Sleep Out — An event sponsored by MassPIRG to educate the campus community about homlessness by sleeping outside. Students raise money by getting pledges for hours sleeping out. For more information, contact Melanie Undem, Mass Student PIRG Organizer, at 545–0199.

Saturday, Nov. 23

Audition — An open audition for anyone interested in participating in the Spring Fashion Show will be held at noon. For more information, contact Bibi at 546–3970.

Craft Fair — St. Patrick's Christmas Craft Fair will be held from 9 a.m.–4 p.m. The fair will be held on School St. in Hadley.

Dance — Club Spin at the Bluewall from 9 p.m.–1 a.m. General admission before 10:30 is $3, after, $5. Special discount for AASA members. Bring a canned good and get $1 off admission. Sponsored by the Asian American Students Association. For more information, call 545–0189.

Fair — The First Congregational Church is sponsoring its annual Cranberry Fair from 10 a.m.–4 p.m. The church is located at the corner of Main St. and Churchill St. in Amherst.

Religious Services — Morning Services begin at 10 a.m. at Hillel House, followed by a free lunch. Please call to confirm.

Sunday, Nov. 24

Meeting — The UMass Ski Club is holding its last general meeting at 7 p.m. in Campus Center. Discounts for membership and Dec. Quebec trip if you attend this meeting. For more information. call 545–3437.

Meeting — The Hindu Students Organization is holding its first general meeting at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center. Room number will be available at the info desk. For questions, call 548–9097.

Notices

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584–8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance. Newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Tues., Dec. 3 from 5:30–7 p.m. in CC room 165–169.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Lincln. All conversations are confidential.

Literature — mOthertongue the multilingual student publication by the dept. of Comparative Literature, is currently seeking submissions for the spring '97 publication. We will accept original poetry, short stories, one–acts, international photographs and art work created by multilingual students. Please submit a copy in English to the Comparative Literature Dept. in 203 South College. Rough drafts are acceptable.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in photo, layout, copy, and marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae, and R&B dancers for next semesters annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546–2714 for audition information.

Theatre — UMass Theatre guild presents Rumors, a comedy by Neil Simon. Wed. Nov. 20–Sat. Nov. 25 in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tickets are $4/students, $6 for everyone else and are available at the door and the FAC Box Office.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for people who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and to be sent a volunteer application, please call (413) 733–2251.

Elsie Sez:

Read the Collegian and I'll let you milk me, big boy!

R.A.D.

A Self Defense Course for Women

The RAD instructors, wish to extend to you an invitation in joining us for this intensive 12 hour program. The class focuses on options, awareness, prevention, risk reduction, and physical defense moves.

If you would like to join us remember the following:
- 12 hour commitment (must attend full course)
- $25.00 fee
- 16 students per class maximum (first come, first serve basis)
- class dates: 12/2, 12/4, 12/9, 12/11

If you would like to join us there will be an open registration at Dickinson Hall Lobby: 11/25, 11/26 - 11:30 - 1:30 each day. For registration you will need your $25.00 fee and your current UMass student and/or staff I.D. Sorry, no phone-ins and no waiting list.

HOPE TO SEE YOU THERE!

Campus Police Log

Accident — Personal Injury
Nov. 19
The accelerator pedal became stuck on a vehicle inside the Campus Center Garage on level 5. The operator was unable to stop the vehicle which crashed into the wall of the garage. A passenger complained of possible back injury, but declined medical attention.

Accident — Property Damage
Nov. 18
There was a two–vehicle accident in parking lot 25. No one was injured.

Annoying Behavior
Nov. 18
There was a domestic dispute in McNamara Residence Hall.
Nov. 19
An individual from Kennedy Residence Hall reported that a beer bottle was thrown at his room door. The offender was identified and the matter was resolved.

Assault & Battery
Nov. 18
An altercation between two individuals in Prince Residence Hall resulted in issuing an emergency restraining order.
Nov. 20
There was a physical altercation between two roommates in Cashin Residence Hall in which one individual was struck with a poolstick. A judge issued an emergency restraining order.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering
Nov. 18
An apartment storage area in Lincoln Apartments was broken into. A vacuum cleaner and cleaning supplies were stolen.
Nov. 19
A vehicle in parking lot 11 was broken into; a stereo was stolen.
There was an attempted break into a vehicle in parking lot 11.

Disturbance
Nov. 20
There was a report of a fight in progress on Massachusetts Avenue. The matter was resolved.

Drug Law Offenses
Nov. 19
Omar O. Gayle, 20, of 256 Sunset Ave., Amherst, was arrested for possession of a Class D substance.

Health/Safety Hazard
Nov. 19
There was a small trash can fire outside of Mahar Auditorium.

Larceny
Nov. 19
An individual from Mary Lyon Residence Hall reported a stolen wallet.
Nov. 20
An individual from Flint Laboratory reported that her purse was stolen.

Vandalism
Nov. 18
Derogatory graffiti was written in the stairwell on the 16th floor of Coolidge Residence Hall.
A vehicle at North Village Apartments was damaged.
Nov. 19
A vehicle in parking lot 44 was broken into; a CD player was stolen.
A tail light was smashed on a vehicle in parking lot 80.
Nov. 20
A vehicle in parking lot 44 was damaged.
Graffiti was written in a stairwell near the lobby area of Chadbourne Residence Hall.

There will be a meeting for current* Women's Issues writers and interested writers on Monday, Nov. 25 at the Collegian in the Campus Center basement at 6:30 p.m. There will be pizza, so bring your ideas and your appetite! If you cannot come please contact Michelle Hillman *at 545-1762.

UPC & DVP presents:

An evening of spoken word with

HENRY ROLLINS

Books and cds sold at lecture. Discounted Prices!!

PUBLIC INSOMNIAC NO. 1 TOUR

Monday, Dec. 2, 1996
Fine Arts Center
UMASS, Amherst
Doors open: 6:30pm
Show starts: 7:00pm

Tickets:
UMASS students-$4 w/valid I.D.
General Public-$10

Tickets available at Fine Arts Center Box Office

Contact:
DVP-545-0046
UPC-545-2892
or Fine Arts Center Box Office-545-2511
for more info!

CAMPUS ACTIVITIES AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PRESENTS

Weekly Program Series:

Something Every Friday

featuring

Singer/Songwriter

Barbara Kessler

1995 WINNER ARTIST OF THE YEAR NEW FOLK AWARD

Bluewall Cafe

November 22, 1996
8:00 pm, Free

This series made possible by a Grant from Auxiliary Services and the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and

DAILY COLLEGIAN

"Moll Flanders" • • • Immediately Following

For more information check out our website: http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/calendar.htm

Photo Essay by Courtney Smith

Smith College students and faculty came together yesterday in a circle of hands around campus, to stand up against "bigotry, intolerance and oppression". The 12:30 gathering was the result of a collaborative effort of eight students, and the action of hundreds of participants.

■ future

continued from page 1

money before it can really become better," said Associate Dean/Interim Director of the University Advising Center (UAC) Elizabeth Petroff.

Also, according to Petroff, the Administration said that Advising will be a high priority, yet it has not been given as much money as seven other UMass initiatives.

"An answer as to why advising and retention has not been placed higher on the appropriation list is because Scott does not list advising as one of the "indicators which are typical of the scope and quality of institutions that belong to the AAU" in the Strategic Acion document. Because it is not on that list of criteria, it is possible that the importance of advising has been overlooked and underrated.

Advising: the Key to Retention

"Good advising leads to high retention," said Chair of the Department of Spanish and Portuguese Christina Gonzalez.

The University Advising Center (UAC) advises undergraduates and pre–majors and students in academic danger. They help these students find majors; yet Petroff said that the center needs more resources before it can meet the needs of more students.

One group that is presently in trouble, according to Petroff, is first–generation American, low income students.

Without better advising, the retention of these students will continue to be low.

"With more money, the UAC could afford to pay or give incentives to professors," said Petroff.

Yet, the money does not exist, and therefore the University will continue to lose these low–income, minority students.

The issue becomes problematic as the University places so much importance on multiculturalism and ethnic diversity, yet, as the Collegian has indicated, UMass does not properly fund a program which is vital to minority retention.

Also, funding for the three ALANA (Asian, Latino, African and Native American) academic support groups, Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) and the United Asia Resource Learning Center (UALRC) is inadequate, according to many students of color.

"If the Administration is so worried about retention of ALANA students, they should fund CCEMBS properly and put their money where their mouth is," said Desiree Joseph, a senior CCEMBS student.

"With more money, CCEMBS can provide more help for their students by getting more advisors, computers, tutors, and other aid for CCEMBS students," said Melissa McPherson.

Yet, the funds are not being made available to increase the retention of ALANA students.

However, UMass is using $200,000 for a program which grants scholarships to valedictorians and salutatorians of Massachusetts high schools who wish to come to UMass.

It will be interesting to see how many of these scholarships are awarded to students of color and low income students.

The University could have pursued this $200,000 grant (from Senator Stan Rosenberg and the Board of Higher Education) for retention. According to the press release, "The program is designed to provide incentive funding to promote priorities of the Board of Higher Education and the Commonwealth. These include enhancing academic programs of strength through technology, improving student retention..."

The Office of Student Affairs could have proposed to use this $200,000 for retention, and specifically the retention of minority students.

Yet instead, the money will be used to bring students into the school, who may not be retained because of a lack of proper advising.

UMass 2000

Advising, of course, is not a issue which effects only students of color at UMass. The fact that CCEBMS, BCP and UALRC has been denied funding has implications on the University's concern for the entire student body.

As the University looks forward to the next century, visions of a open and accessible institution are still in doubt.

Without advising being made a component of the tenure process; without expansion of the UAC; without increased funding for ALANA advising centers and a aggressive campaign to retain all students, many assert that the University will move forward beyond the year 2000 and leave 17,000 undergraduates behind.

Michael Elliott, Jonathan Liberty and Raghuram Vadarevu are Collegian staff members.

Sunanda Ghosh contributed to this special report.

■ speech

continued from page 1

increased sales of his product with the 10,000 letters of support he has received from consumers and is able to conclude that consumers have approved of and rewarded his decision to rebuild.

At the conclusion of his address Feurestein thanked Hillel for inviting him and "representing the continuity and vitality of the Jewish vision." He discussed his admiration for Rabbi Hillel, the sage who spoke of love and companion over 2,000 years ago.

Feurestein said the God of Rabbi Hillel is the same as the God of UMass, and that the God of Lawrence is the same as the God of Wall Street.

During a question and answer session, Feuerstein said that he feels in some cases it is necessary to lay off workers. Layoffs that are a deliberate violation of employer–employee trust are the kind of which he disapproves.

He also responded to an audience member who claimed he was promoting capitalism and not initiating real change by turning the factory over to his workers.

"I have seen the fruits of Communism in China and in eastern Europe, and the results are horrifying," Feurestein replied.

Chancellor David K. Scott began the evening with a few remarks. Scott spoke about the "need for institutions to become more caring and compassionate," and commented that Universities should follow Feuerstein's example in the 21st century.

Scott introduced UMass alumnus Charles Nirenberg, whom the lecture series is named after. Nirenberg, the son of Jewish immigrants, graduated from the School of Management in 1946 and eventually founded the Dairy Mart convenience store chain.

When speaking about Feurestein, Nirenberg quoted a Jewish proverb, "If I am not for myself who will be? But if I am only for myself, then who am I?"

Earlier in the evening about 40 people, including Nirenberg and Scott, met at the Hillel House for a dinner in Feuerstein's honor. Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, the Executive Director of the Hillel House said, "The dinner was so wonderful it was hard to pick up and head over to the event."

Perlmutter, who moderated the question and answer period, said he noticed that Feurestein had not brought any notes with him onto the podium.

At the conclusion of the evening, Dr. Thomas O'Brien, the Dean of SOM, presented Feuerstein with a menorah as a token of appreciation. O'Brien compares Feurestein to the symbol of light when he says "our students, our hope, you have offered a light to guide their way to the future."

CHECK OUT A GREAT CLASS!

Peer Health Educators...
...learn about cool stuff
...teach workshops in the residence halls and Greek area.
...give out condoms and other goodies at the Campus Center and special events.
...make new friends.
...MAKE A DIFFERENCE!

PEER HEALTH EDUCATION
PUBLIC HEALTH 213/214 or EDUCATION 213/214
6 Credits - 2 Semester Commitment Required
For permission of the instructor call the Division of Health Education 577-5181.
Class will meet on Wednesdays from 2:00 -4:30pm
Priority is given to those who meet with the instructor before November 22nd.

facials • waxing • manicures & pedicures

Shear Bliss
Full Service Holistic Salon
479 West St., Amherst

✱ Natural hair color & perms Botanical Facials! ✱

253-2322

pure flower & plant essences used in every service

Bucci

HAIRCUTS always $10.

25 n. pleasant st. amherst 256.0733
145 main st. northampton 586.0155

We Deliver
Kai Chi
To UMass
Chinese-American Cuisine Restaurant & Bar
Mt. Farms Mall, Rt. 9 Hadley • 586-3774
Open Sun-Thurs 12-11 pm
Fri-Sat 12-3 am

Enjoy HALF PRICE APPETIZERS
9 pm - Close • 7 Days a Week
Many Selections!
Example: Pu Pu (for 2) Reg. $11.95 Now $5.99
No other promos apply • EAT IN ONLY

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief — Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager — G. Tony Morse Production Manager — Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Valdan Advertising Production Manager — Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Cuzimz Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Stmheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renée LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Passing a different kind of test

Marigold Pascual

For some, getting tested for HIV holds a negative connotation. When I decided to get tested, people asked me, "Why are you getting that done?" They had the attitude that getting tested is a bad thing, for it implies that you are involved in behavior often frowned upon by society. But HIV and the threat of AIDS is such a reality that I think everyone should get tested. Why did I decide to get tested? The answer is quite simple, really: I thought it was the responsible thing to do.

I went to get tested this past summer with one of my best friends. Although I had wanted to do it for a while, I was scared to go by myself. My best friend wanted to get tested too, so on the spur of the moment one day, we decided to go.

We looked in the phone book for various clinics that might offer testing. Planned Parenthood was the most obvious, but when we called, the receptionist told us they were booked solid through the month. After a few more phone calls, we found a walk–in clinic in the city that did HIV testing daily.

Pulling up to the clinic, we noticed it was a multi–purpose health facility. There was a dentist's office, a chiropractor, optometrist, as well as the STD clinic. We walked in, and it was pretty busy. The receptionist asked us what we were there for and gave us a series of forms to fill out, as well as a waiver form. There was even a box on one of the forms that asked if they could contact you at home or send you stuff. As we weren't really interested in getting a weekly flyer from the STD clinic, we checked the box so they wouldn't send us stuff at home.

Then we had to wait— for about a half an hour, which was really nerve–racking because there were a lot of people there and it was so quiet. Finally, we got called in, though we went one at a time. My friend went in first, and me after.

I met this really nice counselor who made me feel at ease. He gave me background on the HIV test and what he was going to do. First though, I had to answer a series of questions detailing parts of my history that might play a role in the test results; it seemed more like a survey to me. And man, did some of those questions go in–depth.

"To the best of your knowledge, have you ever had a blood transfusion?"

"How many partners have you had in the last six months? Did you know each one well?"

"Have you ever had unprotected sex, and if so, why?"

"Have you ever had sex under the influence of drugs and/or alcohol?"

"Have you ever used intravenous drugs?"

I think I have a problem with the questions mainly because my counselor was so nice. I had told him that I was here with my friend — the person in before me. He thought it was great that we went together — sort of like a support system. Then he went on to tell me about the test; he was going to draw two vials of blood from my arm which they would test. The test was not anonymous and they would be using our names instead of a set of numbers. The results would be ready in two weeks and we had to pick them up in person; we would not be able to get them over the phone. This was to ensure that we were fully educated on HIV. He also told me that there was a 60–90 day window period that the test would not cover, those days being the days before you actually got the test done.

Then he went to draw my blood. I don't know about you, but I'm not too psyched to have a big, fat needle shoved into my veins. But it was no problem at all — piece of cake.

The worst part was the wait. Two weeks may not sound like a long time, but It is. Especially when you get to think. Boy, is that a bad idea. I started thinking about what it would be like if I was HIV positive. Would my life be over? Would I give up? What would I tell my family and friends? And the thing is, I didn't think about it constantly, but it was there; this nagging little voice at the back of my head. I was almost afraid to get my results. We didn't go back to get the results for three and a half weeks.

My friend came to pick me up and my mom asked us where we were going. "Out shopping." I don't think that either of our parents were ready to acknowledge the fact that their babies had grown up. So begins another road trip to the clinic.

Both of us were tense. We knew that the chances we had HIV were slim, but there was still that chance. So, walking in, we were both nervous. In the waiting room we were sitting across from this really solemn looking guy. He got called in before us. Not 10 minutes later he emerged from the office with a positively beatific smile and a few strands of condoms. We hoped he shoved them in his pocket before he walked out on the street. No time to worry about that though, we were up next.

Like the first time, my friend was called in first. We exchanged messages of luck, and she went in. Shortly after, she emerged and gave me the thumbs up sign. Okay, now it's my go.

I walked in the office and sat down across from the counselor; it was a different guy from before. And this guy thought I was really stupid. He went through the results of all the tests they performed (HIV negative! Yes!) and it was like this huge weight was lifted from me. I felt so incredibly good.

The counselor went on to explain that the HIV test I had just taken had a window period and what that meant.

"That means that there's a 60 to 90 day period that the test won't cover."

"Okay."

"So the 60 to 90 days prior to the day you took the test will not register in this one."

"Uh huh."

"That means that if you go out the night before and have unprotected sex, then you go to get tested the next day, that test won't cover that night. You'd have to come back in three months to be sure."

"Right. Got it."

"So if you keep on going out and have unprotected sex, you'd have to keep on getting tested and still may not know for sure."

"Gotcha. Thanks."

I guess he was confident I understood after all that, for he started to close it up. He wished me luck and told me to take care but not before he offered me…

"Condoms?"

"No thank you."

"The price is right, they're free."

"I'm all set, thank you."

"You sure?"

"Yup, thanks. Ba–bye."

And I beat it outta there. Walking back to my friend I was feeling good. Okay, so the counselor thought I was dumb, but who cares? I was HIV negative. We both felt like a million bucks. Really happy, sort of giddy, laughing at ourselves for being so worried.

I felt so good that I walked out of the clinic and started to say "Yes, I'm so glad that…" but I trailed off because across the street were a car load of hotties. "… that I have no cavities! Yesss! I have no cavities!"

We got in the car, rolled down the windows, cranked up the tunes, and sang really loudly. And just so we didn't make liars out of ourselves, we decided that we would go shopping. We even got ice cream. It was a really good day.

Marigold Pascual is a UMass student.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

'Tis the season

Nicole Cournoyer

Yes, it's that time of year again.

•When the thought of getting out of a nice, warm, cozy bed and trudging across campus in zero degree weather just to sit in an overheated classroom with a bunch of people who want to be there just about as much as you do does not tickle you pink. Just think, it'll be snowing soon and you'll get to march through slush to class. Won't that be fun? Put on your rubbers and bundle up, kids. Winter is coming.

•When the entire campus is coughing, sneezing, sniffling and blowing its collective nose because of some mutant communal disease that one kid probably brought back from home, unknowingly unleashing a ruthless predator among us that will hunt each of us down at least once before spring. Except, of course, for that annoying jerk who "never gets sick." Oh yeah? Well, you can take your invincible perfect health and…

•When the prospect of real food in less than a week is all you can think about. Turkeys have become the main characters in an overwhelming majority of your dreams, and you begin to have nightmares of going home and discovering your mom has hired UMass Dining Services to cater Thanksgiving this year because she doesn't feel like cooking. Please Mom… I'll pay you.

•When the amount of work you have to do relative to the time you have to do it in is remarkably large, and you can't remember how you got to November so quickly without having gotten anything done. The number of pages you have to catch up on reading tallies up to somewhere in the thousands and the number of papers you have to write in the next three weeks has made it into the double digits. Your mind suddenly stops and a voice inside your head says with horror and disbelief, "Holy Hell." This is decision–making time. To study or not to study? That is the question. Whether 'tis nobler to trek to the library, spend thy weekends with thy nose in thy books and attempt to salvage thy plummeting grade, or to sayest to school, "I carest not for thee," and to go about thy revelling without a care for thy future.

•When my birthday creeps up on me once again, and I realize that I have been on this earth for more years than I feel or act like I have.

•When it's so cold, even the prospect of walking to Hobart no longer appeals to you, and you wish it would snow so it looked like winter instead of just feeling like it.

•When thoughts of winter break come dancing through your head and you begin to make resolutions about how much stuff you're going to accomplish between semesters. But this year, I have a plan! I'm not going to end up sleeping too much, eating too much and watching too much T.V. No sir, not me.

•When the idea of Christmas shopping crosses your mind (if you celebrate it, that is), but you tell yourself you've got plenty of time. In the back of your head, you know Christmas Eve is going to be spent frantically running around to every mall you know, racking your brain to figure out what in God's name to get your Dad.

•When you try to rotate your clean clothes in such a way that you won't have to waste money on another load of laundry before the semester ends. How can I possibly make five pairs of socks last two and a half weeks?

•When you realize as you pre–register that your time left at this University is rapidly diminishing and you still have absolutely no plan for what you're going to do after you graduate. Panic sets in momentarily and then you decide to continue doing what you've been doing for the last two and a half years — not thinking about it and enjoying your time here while it lasts. Yeah, OK. Miss Laid Back. Remember that decision when you're sitting on a vent somewhere for warmth, eating out of a garbage can, dreaming of chicken pucks and dorm life.

•When your tolerance for things like empty soap dispensers in the bathrooms, hair in your brownie at the D.C., or an out–of–order sign on a vending machine has reached a record low and the slightest inconvenience that can even remotely be traced back to the University's inadequacies could be the straw that breaks the camel's back. Tense? Irritable? Not me. Just don't breathe so loud, would you please?

•When the inspiration for good, informative columns stops visiting you in your dreams and in the shower and you're writing lists of random thoughts that skip awkwardly across your brain an hour before your deadline.

But all is not lost. I know you understand. It's just that time of year.

Nicole Cournoyer is a Collegian columnist.

The joys of winter

Tara MK Connelly

I really enjoy living in New England, mostly because of the seasons. I like looking out my window and seeing leaves go from tight red buds to lush green canopies and then to dazzling orange and yellow masterpieces — however it's their last stage that signals my least favorite season, winter, and even though it's only November, I already hate it.

Now don't get me wrong, snow is nice — some snow is nice. But when you get to the 10–inch mark (ie. Cleveland), I think Mother Nature is just being a bit excessive. Right now she has seen fit to tempt our dreams of a white Christmas with a few magical flurries, a snowflake or two to remind you buy your snow shovels early and stock up on hot cocoa mix. Man has seen fit to herald the upcoming winter by barraging us with decorations and incessant carols right after Halloween.

As a total side track — I really do feel pity for all those sales people forced to work under such harsh conditions. I think commissions were created to pacify angry sales clerks driven to madness by corporate giants wanting to shove Christmas down their throats and who bought too many copies of Andy Williams' caroling foray — but that's another column.

ANYWAY, winter is just sneaking up too fast. And to be honest there really wasn't much of a segue into it. One minute I was happily crunching through leaves in a T–shirt and the next thing I know I have to scrape ice off my windows. What happened to a gradual adjustment? A slow even coldness that lets your body get used to blistering winds and sub–zero temperatures. I literally went from jeans and a shirt to long underwear, two pairs of socks, a shirt, another shirt, a sweater and a coat. I look like a toddler in a snow suit. I no longer walk, I waddle, and forget running to the bathroom — I have to add on another 15 minutes.

Luckily I live in a place that has "free heat." So with the thermostat cranked to 80 degrees, I can maintain the illusion of warmer weather. Aptly nicknamed "the rainforest," my apartment is either ice cold or steamy hot. Mold grows freely on any type of produce left unattended on the counter, bread has a shelf life of negative two and pretty much everything is prone to a quick and mysterious decaying process. One minute a cantaloupe is rock hard, the next day your finger goes through the outer layer and fruit flies are throwing a party.

But, heat is good, good to keep you warm, bad to keep you wet. What do I mean? Dry heat has a nasty habit of sucking all essential moisture from your body. Your hair gets brittle and dull and your skin, your skin becomes scaly, dry and itchy. You slather yourself in Vaseline Intensive Care and wake up feeling like the Sahara. So you get more moisturizer and pretty soon you're slipping off the chair when you go to sit down because a) it's so hot inside you're wearing shorts and b) you overcompensated for moisture loss. You are also prone to drinking a lot more liquids which of course becomes another problem as soon as you leave the Congo delta and hit cold air (see clothing).

Winter is also a great time for colds, you would think that colds should exist in the summer because then you just drip. When it's winter, you tend to drip, freeze, drip, form layers, and then thaw into one huge runny mess. Mush like the formation of ice rinks, your face freezes and thaws keeping you in a constant state of irritation. So you end up wiping with whatever is on hand (usually your sleeve — be honest) and then having a nice gift to give to the dry cleaning lady come spring.

I think my least favorite winter sights are all those bar– going people who wear next to nothing in mid–December because well, they're "going inside in a few minutes." Health Services would get a lot less cold patients if they handed out a "How to Survive Winter For Idiots" guide. Take so and so with three friends who see it fitting to wait 20 minutes in line outside Delano's with a tiny half–shirt and mini–skirt. Comfy and cosy in your 10 layers of clothes you walk — ah, waddle by, to overhear Buffy say, "Omigod! Like I can't believe I got pneumonia! Like, I'm hardly never sick, I wonder why I'm like, so diseased prone."

Like I dunno sweatheart, maybe you should buy a brain with that winter coat.

Tara MK Connelly is a Collegian columnist.

Seaver for President

Luke Meredith

I think Mike Seaver should be the next President of the United States of America.

That's right, sweetness. You remember Mike, right? The eldest son of the Camden Mike was the coolest brother at Dewey High before his stint at Alf Landon Community College as a theater major. What does Mike do now? Well, I don't know. The show ended, right?

And since Mike doesn't have a job, (a cheesy show on UPN does not count), he'd be perfect to run America. I think anyone who watched the recent presidential campaign will agree that he couldn't be worse than the guys who just ran for the office.

Why is Mike my nominee for president? Simple. For one, nobody dressed better than Mike Seaver. Ripped jeans, turtlenecks and the classic brown leather bomber jacket would revolutionize America's wardrobe. Second, he's campaign tested, having almost won the student body presidency of Dewey High back in the late '80s. And lastly, can you imagine girlfriend Kate as First Lady? Gives new meaning to the term "de–briefing." You know what I'm saying?

Mike would also put together a solid Cabinet. Think of the candidates.

For Secretary of State, Boner!

We could even give Boner a hypothetical national security threat. Hey Boner, what would you do if Iran attacked Iraq?

"Iran away! Ha, Ha, Ha. Seriously, I think I'd make Iran apologize, and then we could get these two guys together at the food court in the mall and talk it out over a Burrito Supreme at Taco Bell. Nobody can resist peace when they're at the Bell."

What about NAFTA, Sec. Boner?

"I never watch it. I think the NBA is much more exciting. And besides, one of the Babotz twins is a cheerleader with the Nets. She is smoking!"

Okay, maybe Boner might be a bad choice. But what about Eddie, for chairman of the Campaign Reform Coalition?

Say, Eddie, do you think Ross Perot should have been in the presidential debates?

"No way, man. Ross is a buzzkill, 'cause his infomercials cut into Skin–a–Max. Shut that dude up!"

OK. I like Cinemax "After Dark" as much as anyone, but Eddie would embezzle the committee's funds. I think he even still owes Mike that $20.

How's about Principal DeWitt for Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Bosnia policy, Mr. DeWitt?

"If this Mr. Bosnia skipped class, your darn right we should go over there are whip some butt. I bet Seaver's behind this."

Whoa, Mr. DeWitt. Maybe Dewey High is just fine for now.

Stinky for Vice President?

"Well, I don't know. What do you think, Ben?"

Alright, Ben for VP.

"I missed that meeting, because I was taught at home by my Mom, and we never covered geography. I couldn't find the U.N."

Oy. Let's talk about Mike for president. Surely a man who can woo both Kate and Julie the babysitter can run America.

"I accept the nomination of the Booty Party, and will do my best to steer America back to the people. And the chicks."

But I sense trouble with the campaign. Say Mike, isn't It true you were fired from World of Burgers for stealing from the register?

"Wait, I can explain. There was this hot girl, right, and she screwed up the register, so I took the blame for her."

But didn't you lie to Maggie and Jason so you could keep your new car?

"Yeah, but did you see the car? It rocked, dude."

Didn't you once have an affair with the babysitter, which you also kept hidden from your parents?

"I was in love, for crying out loud! I was going to marry that girl."

Yeah right, Mike.

Finally, didn't you cheat on a history test by writing the answers on your sneakers? How are we to trust you?

"But I never looked at my shoes once, and I got an A."

Sure you did, Mr. Seaver.

And finally, didn't you routinely make fun of your sister, Carol. How are we to know you would look out for the best interests of women?

"I look out for women all the time. Why do you think I'm always at the mall?"

C'est la vie, Mr. Seaver. I know you'd make a great leader, but I doubt you could survive the press conference.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist.

Arts & Living

New Trek boldly goes into next generation

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Borg Queen meets Picard in Star Trek: First Contact.

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

STAR TREK: FIRST CONTACT
Directed by Jonathan Frakes with Patrick Stewart, Brent Spiner, Michael Dorn
Playing at Hampshire Six Theaters

According to theory, the Star Trek franchise is now due for a good movie. Crossing through the currents of pop culture trivia, amidst the rumors that Mikey from the Life cereal commercials died and the Six Degrees of Kevin Bacon game, it is believed that every other "Star Trek" film, the even numbered ones to be precise, is a really good one.

Does this hold true for Star Trek: First Contact, since it breaks away from the original 1960's "Star Trek" series entirely? In a word, yes. If only because, for the first time, the crew from "Star Trek: The Next Generation" is completely on their own (those who are keeping score will remember, the last film, Star Trek: Generations, for all intents and purposes, phased out the last of the original relics, William Shatner's Captain Kirk).

The film begins not too long after the destruction of the "Enterprise–D," which occurred at the end of Star Trek: Generations with the introduction of the "Enterprise–E," the new ship which is supposedly bigger and better than anything else Starfleet has to offer. When we hear that the Star Trek franchise has gone through five ships, the idea of the Enterprise becomes slightly dated. Gene Roddenberry's brand of science fiction strangely becomes part of some kind of tradition.

Fortunately, the cosmology of the Star Trek universe seems anything but short of ideas, and First Contact seems to better itself by using one of the most successful villainous races ever to come out of any of the series, the Borg. They are mutations of flesh and metal hell–bent on "assimilating" anything and everything that comes into their path, with a fictional character who had been left untouched through the history of Star Trek, Zephram Cochran, the Minnesotan in Star Trek lore who develops warp drive technology and makes "first contact" with an alien race for the first time.

What the film succeeds in doing is picking up on and playing with storylines left untouched after "Star Trek: The Next Generation" went off the air, namely the fact that Jean– Luc Picard (Patrick Stewart) was once "assimilated" by the Borg, with enough clarity for those viewers who aren't die hard fans and don't know who "Locutus" is.

Also admirable is the film's attempt to develop the history of the Borg with the introduction of an individual among the collective: a queen played by Alicia Kriges with erotic terror.

But the film doesn't go by completely unscathed. There is a light, playful mood that seemed to take over the original Star Trek's latter films. Almost as if a compelling story wouldn't be enough to occupy us for two hours, humorous scenes and storylines are thrown in and clash with the dire Borg storyline.

Redeeming itself and setting itself apart from the previous films, First Contact picks up on another trait: the pompous literary allusions that burden so much science–fiction today. In comparing Jean–Luc Picard's relentless obsession with the Borg to Ahab's interests in Moby Dick, Alfre Woodard has a dandy of a retort to Patrick Stewart's dramatic recital of a quote from Melville's epic. Woodard plays an Earth woman from the mid 21st century who gets mixed up with the Enterprise when they go back in time.

Dramatic readings aside, Stewart delivers a high–caliber performance similar to those which earned him praise as Picard on the series. One of the film's major assets comes as it continues to explore the ramifications of Picard's abduction which took place years before the series even ended.

The film packs in enough excitement and thrills so that it works beyond the fact that it's a Star Trek movie, but does it have to? As a franchise, they seem to be some of the most lovingly made films, and First Contact is no exception. B+

On living an SXE lifestyle: Believe in who you are

Keepin' it real with Adam Dlugacz

I'm writing this article to clear up my opinion on straight edge so that people will understand where I'm coming from. I think choosing a SXE lifestyle can be a wonderful and rewarding way to live. I do not feel that it is the only lifestyle or even the best one for everybody. We all have to make our own decisions and only a person can truly decide what's best for him or her.

"It's not about drinking and doing drugs, it's about doing what's right for you. Do drugs and smoke crack if you want; fuckin' do it and don't let anyone tell you different," said Toby Dalsgaard, lead singer of Cornerstone.

Having said that, I do have a problem with the fact that certain people feel that they are better then others because they are SXE. I've met a lot of people, straight and not, and I've met jerks and liars, as well as honorable and truthful people from both categories. It's not what you are, it's who you are.

I also resent the group mentality that is prevalent among certain aspects of SXE. I feel that for some people it is a form of elitism — a big club if you will. You have a lot of peer support and it gives you an easy target if you feel that someone has wronged you. It's no different then any other clique in society. I thought hardcore was supposed to be about expanding your mind and accepting people who are different, not persecuting them because they choose to live differently from you. Just think about it.

"SXE is a personal decision, it's not a movement, it's a lifestyle. Everyone has their own lifestyle, some people like to drink, some don't; it's a choice for you. It makes me different. I don't like these kids that get into SXE to alienate other people, it's just another form of racism. It's not about what you eat, drink, or smoke, it's what is in your heart," said Toby Morse, lead singer of H2O.

I'm not saying don't advertise the fact that you're SXE or try to hide it, that's fine. Just think about why you are SXE and remember that everyone is different and just because a decision is right for you doesn't make it right for everyone else. Believe in who you are with all your heart — just don't enforce it on others.

Remember, there are bigger problems then who's SXE and who isn't (yes, I know that some SXE bands sing about more than that) to deal with. We've all heard the argument for SXE — let's move on and deal with other problems in today's society.

Sick Of It All will be playing Pearl Street on November 30th with Ensign and Line Of Fire.

Murphy's Law will be playing Pearl Street on December 6th with Fastbreak.

New York's Maximum Penalty just put out a new album on IJT records.

My personal playlist this week — Cro–Mags' Age Of Quarrel, Silent Majority's Distant 2nd 7–inch, De La Soul's Stakes Is High, Muddfoot's 7–inch, Lifetime–Boy's No Good 7–inch, Anti–Compilation, Quicksand's Manic Compression, Stillsuit's Green Spock Ears, Smashing Pumpkins' Pisces Iscariot and Swiz' No Punches Pulled.

Adam Dlugacz is a Collegian columnist.

Beatles' Anthology 3 bodes of "The End"

By John Hendrickson
Collegian Correspondent

The Beatles
Anthology 3
Apple

With the close of the 1960s came the end of the decade's most celebrated and deified cultural force — the Beatles. Much like the times they embodied, the break up of the Fab Four ended in disillusionment and bitterness. Professional and personal jealousies, as well as the pressures and expectations of fame, eventually destroyed the band. And now the most fabled split in rock history is laid out in the form of Anthology 3, the final installment of the Anthology series.

The first two Anthologies documented the music of Beatles from their rockabilly roots in Liverpool through their rise to worldwide dominance up through the studio innovation which resulted in 1967's Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. Anthology 3 picks up where 2 left off and traces the development of their final three studio albums — The Beatles (a.k.a. the "White Album"), Get Back (which posthumously evolved into Let It Be) and Abbey Road, their 1969 swan–song.

Disc one of the two CD set is devoted entirely to the recording of 1968's "White Album." Largely consisting of solo demos and rough studio run–throughs, it is obvious already that the Beatles were essentially becoming solo artists who only used the band as a vehicle for their own songs. However, considering the quality of the material at hand, that was not necessarily such a bad thing. Stripped– down home recordings of John Lennon's "Glass Onion" and George Harrison's "While My Guitar Gently Weeps" arguably top the final released product, and these sessions provided some fascinating blueprints for the following year's Abbey Road.

It is not to say that the Beatles aren't represented as a functioning unit, though. Refreshingly loose live versions of "Hey Jude" and "Sexy Sadie" highlight the side, as does a stark "I'm So Tired" and an early, ska–tinged take on "Ob– La–Di, Ob–La–Da." Their sense of humor is evident in their between–song chatter and in such absurdities as "Los Paranoias" and Lennon's bizarre "What's The New Mary Jane."

However, the highlight of the "White Album" sessions presented here is a run–through of Paul McCartney's "Helter Skelter." Far removed from the frenetic, Manson–inspiring album cut, this version is a slow, bluesy jam built on pure tension. When the song finally explodes with a blood– curdling scream, it's enthralling. Hard to believe Paul would wind up making a career based on schlock after hearing this semi–psychotic gem.

Unfortunately, Disc Two isn't quite as consistent as the "White Album" out–takes of Disc One. The rot had already set into this Apple, and it was beginning to show. By the Get Back/Let It Be sessions, both Harrison and Ringo Starr had already quit the band, only to be lured back in. John had new girlfriend Yoko Ono at his side at all times (much to the others' annoyance) and the presence of a camera crew documenting the sessions for a movie only added to the tension.

Most of the material from this period is, quite frankly, boring. Nothing here really surpasses or adds to the officially released versions —most of it suffers by comparison. Even a medley of 50s rockabilly classics sound completely flaccid when compared to the earlier tributes available on 1994's Live At The BBC retrospective.

That is not to say that there aren't highlights, though. Loud, sloppy versions of "I've Got A Feeling" and "Get Back" recall some of the enthusiasm of the past and their cover of Buddy Holly's "Mailman, Bring Me No More Blues" is unnerving. Sung by John, the sound of one dead legend doing an imitation of another is disturbing, to say the least.

By the summer of 1969, realizing that the end was near, the Beatles decided to patch up their personal differences for one last hurrah — Abbey Road. Paul's demo of Badfinger's "Come And Get It" and John's vocal on "Come Together" are both fairly engaging, but it is George who clearly steals the show here.

From the unfettered demo of "Something" to "Old Brown Shoe" and the vicious "I Me Mine," these final sessions saw the emergence of the "Quiet Beatle" as a top–notch songwriter. Fortunately for him, he wouldn't be standing in the Lennon/McCartney shadow for much longer.

Anthology 3 fittingly concludes with "The End." Although there aren't any jazzed–up Lennon demos being pushed as "reunion" songs on this installment of the Anthology series, the Beatles are far from over. The group was recently named the best–selling artist of 1996, with over 20 million albums sold in the last 12 months alone. Damn. It is fairly safe to say that so long as there is tape in the vaults, we will be treated to many more compilations of the rarities, curiosities and atrocities which make up the remainder of the Beatles' fascinating recording legacy. And that is most definitely not something to complain about.

rcp presents
going away party
saturday november 23rd
10:00 pm in the lava lounge

The Magic Lantern
THE BEST IN ADULT ENTERTAINMENT

Amateur Night
Wednesday, Nov. 27
8:30pm
Come See The Top Female Amateurs From New England Compete For $500 Cash
Runner Up Prizes
Free Admission With Ad.
Interested Contestants Call 283-9275
Giveaways & Audience Participation
Only 30 Minutes from the UMass Campus: Rte. 9 east, to Rte. 181 south, to Rte. 20 west for 1.5 miles
Open 6 days Closed Sundays 12 pm to 1 am Boston Rd Rte. 20 Palmer, MA (413) 283-9275

Glenn Close: she knows evil inside out

By Michael Warren
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Glenn Close knows evil. You don't become "The Most Hated Woman in America," as a tabloid tagged her after her unforgettable role in Fatal Attraction without some deep insights into the dark side.

So when it came time to take on Cruella De Vil, that puppy-snatching, fur-coveting, monstrously manipulative villain of Disney's live-action version of its 1961 animated classic, 101 Dalmatians, she knew there was no turning back.

"I was really determined that Cruella be as bad as possible," says the veteran stage and screen actress, who spent four months with a team of makeup artists and costume designers shaping the very icon of evil. "I hope Cruella is the character that people love to hate."

Cat's eyes and joker's mouths were considered and tossed aside before filming began, even as Cruella's wardrobe became more and more outrageous, her furs a study in endangered animalia. Close ultimately realized what she suspected all along — it's Cruella's inner character that makes her so terrifying. With a soul so dark, she didn't need frightful makeup.

After all, what kind of a woman would skin puppies just to wear their spots and cackle delightedly while saying, "I love the smell of near-extinction!"

"I know! She's horrible!" said Close, cringing at her own creation during an interview.

"I think Cruella basically has no redeeming human characteristics. Except she does have a sense of humor, albeit wicked," Close says. "She's a GREAT character. She's gleeful in her evilness, and there's something very engaging about that."

At 49, Close has played a range of great characters, from sensible mother figures in The World According to Garp, The Big Chill and The Natural and Sarah, Plain and Tall, to more troubled matriarchs in Something About Amelia and Hamlet.

She's had Tony-Award winning turns on Broadway in "Death and the Maiden," "The Real Thing" and "Sunset Boulevard," and she's also done award-winning work on television, most recently as a lesbian colonel battling the Army's "don't ask, don't tell" policy in "Serving in Silence: The Margarethe Cammermeyer Story." But her darker roles remain the most memorable. Her Marquise de Merteuil in Dangerous Liaisons was a master of seduction and betrayal.

But doesn't she worry that 101 Dalmatians might open her up to whole new realms of infamy, frightening small children and making dog owners grip their leashes more tightly whenever she passes by?

"No, I don't. I hope not, I don't really look much like her," she laughs with a glance at her svelte 5-foot-4 figure and short, boyish blond hair.

Besides, hating Cruella is good for the soul, she says. "I think it's fun to hate somebody and deplore their behavior and then get a kick out of it. It's in the tradition of all the great villains," Close says.

"I've lived with animals my whole life and I've raised my child surrounded by animals, because I think we have a lot to learn from them. I think they teach you kindness and a lot about love." That empathy came in handy on a set where filming had to follow the rhythms of 230 rapidly growing Dalmatians. According to director Stephen Herek, Close was no Norma Desmond when it came time for her scenes.

"If you have a name like D-E-V-I-L, you have to live up to it," Herek says — and that means giving the devil her due. "She was an incredible sport. Once it became clear that the vat of molasses was the way the animals were going to deal with Cruella, she almost became joyful that she was going to do it. She never complained. Ever."

A stunt double went into the sticky mess, but Close did all the rest, surging out of the muck and gasping for air. Actually, that was the easy part — since this was no cartoon, the slapstick had to have consequences, and that meant Cruella had to spend the rest of the movie as a walking vision in slime.

COURTESY DISNEY ENTERPRISES

Glenn Close plays the malicious Cruella DeVil in 101 Dalmatians.

Bass master rides the Ironhorse tonight

By Joshua Boyd
Collegian Staff

The virtuoso bass player Victor Wooten (most well-known in his position as the bassist for the Flecktones, virtuoso banjoist Bela Fleck's band of genius) will bring his long years of training and professional playing to the Iron Horse tonight. All student bass players should be in attendance there, for it should be quite a show to raise eyebrows.

It is no kidding (and no surprise) that Wooten has played bass professionally since he was 6–years–old. He was born in Idaho, but grew up in Newport News, Virginia, sharing that hometown with jazz drummer Billy Drummond and modern bluesman Robert Cray. Surrounded by four other brothers, all of whom sang and played some sort of instrument, he was in a very supportive environment for his training. Wooten, at the age of six, was the bassist for the family group The Wootens, who opened up for soul/funk acts like Curtis Mayfield and War in the early '70s.

The small–time band stayed alive through their only album in the mid–'80s and then split ways, some of them going on to play with Whitney Houston and The Steve Miller Band.

In 1988, Wooten moved to Nashville, his current home, and in a year met Fleck, banjo player for The New Grass Revival, and was hired quickly to do a jazz set with Fleck for a local show. Wooten's brother Roy (with the stage name of "Future Man") played synth–drums creating a set–up no one had ever seen before — banjo, electric bass, synth drums and keyboards, with Howard Levy in that last position until 1992. Bela Fleck & The Flecktones were born.

Fleck & The Flecktones have had more praise from critics and fellow musicians than they could ever possibly dream. Wooten's bass–playing has long been as much a featured part of the band's live show as leader Fleck's has been.

All this praise has given Wooten the motivation to put together his debut, no–frills (i.e, no overdubs, no backing band) album, called A Show Of Hands this year. Wooten looks at this "solo bass — nothing else" format as an "overview" of his playing and his life in general. "I may get more specific on the next album," he states in a press release.

The citing of Bootsy Collins as one of his major bass influences (which also includes Stanley Clarke and Motown session–man James Jamerson) will help attendees of tonight's show figure out why he loves doing backflips while playing his bass among other showman moves.

As Wooten has given his fans one, I'm sure they will lovingly reciprocate with A Show Of Hands tonight.

Victor Wooten will play tonight at the Iron Horse at 10 p.m. Tickets will be sold for $10 and $12 at the door, starting at 9:45 p.m. Call the club at 584–0610 for more details.

COURTESY WARNER BROS. RECORDS

Bass virtuoso Victor Wooten performs at Iron Horse.

RESCHEDULING OF FINAL EXAMS ON OFFICIAL SNOW DAYS

FALL 1996

In order to reschedule final examinations in case of snow, two alternate exam periods have been devised. They are 6:30pm and 8:45 pm each exam day. The use of alternative periods in the event of closings is outlined below. In addition, the academic calender includes Monday, December 23, as an official snow day in the event that the University is closed December 21. This policy goes into effect ONLY if the University is officially closed. The snow day "hot line" is 545-3630. If the University is open, all exams are expected to take place as scheduled. Each faculty member should inform his or her class of the planned time and location of the rescheduled final exam in the event of a snow day. All rescheduled exams will be held in the same location as the published in the final exam schedule.

If the University is closed until 11:00am
8:00am.....rescheduled to 6:30 pm same day
10:30am.....rescheduled to 8:45pm same day.
1:30 pm.....same as originally scheduled
4:00pm.....same as originally scheduled
If the University is closed all day but open in the evening:
8:00am.....rescheduled to 6:30pm same day
10:30am.....rescheduled to 8:45pm same day
1:30pm.....rescheduled to 6:30pm next exam day
4:00pm.....rescheduled to 8:45pm next exam day
except:
1:30pm Dec. 21.....rescheduled to 8:00am Dec. 23
4:00pm Dec. 21.....rescheduled to 10:30am Dec. 23
If the University is closed all afternoon and all evening:
8:00am .....held as originally scheduled
10:30am.....held as originally scheduled
1:30pm.....rescheduled to 6:30pm next exam day
4:00pm.....rescheduled to 8:45pm next exam day
except:
1:30pm Dec. 21.....rescheduled to 8:00am Dec. 23
4:00pm Dec 21.....rescheduled to 10:30am Dec 23
If the University is closed all day and all evening:
8:00am.....rescheduled to 6:30pm the next exam day
10:30am.....rescheduled to 8:45pm the next exam day
1:30pm.....rescheduled to 6:30pm exam day after next
4:00pm.....rescheduled to 8:45pm exam day after next
except:
1:30pm Dec. 20.....rescheduled to 8:00am Dec. 23
4:00pm Dec. 20.....rescheduled to 10:30am Dec. 23
8:00am Dec. 21.....rescheduled to 8:00am Dec. 23
10:30am Dec. 21.....rescheduled to 10:30am Dec. 23
1:30pm Dec. 21.....rescheduled to 1:30pm Dec. 23
4:00pm Dec. 21.....rescheduled to 4:00pm Dec. 23

PARKING SNOW POLICY

The Amherst Campus Parking Snow Policy affects overnight parking (1:00am to 7:00am) and parking during a snow emergency closing period.

OVERNIGHT PARKING (1:00AM TO 7:00AM)
PARKING ALLOWED

Lot24	Lot62	Lot25 (north of roadway to E lot only)
Lot27	Lot63	Lot32 (west of Lincoln Ave. only)
Lot30	Lot65	Lot43 including Thatcher way (except at meters)
Lot41	Purple Lots	Lot46 (except at meters)
Lot42	Yellow Lots
Lot52

PARKING LOTS ALLOWED - ONLY WITH APPROPRIATE PERMIT

Lot21	Lot50	North Village
Lot29	Lot54	Lincoln Apts.
Lot47		Any posted reserved space

PARKING NOT ALLOWED

Lot26	Lot64	Lot25 (south of roadway to E lot)
Lot31	Lot66	Lot32 (east of Lincoln Ave. only)
Lot33	Lot67	Lot45 (except by special permit only)
Lot34	Lot68	any campus roadway (including Southwest horseshoe)
Lot40	Lot71	any parking meter

SNOW EMERGENCY PARKING - - ESSENTIAL PERSONNEL:
During a snow emergency closing period, essential personnel who report to work may only park in the following areas:
Lot21 (west of Southwest)
Lot25 (west of Physical Plant and north of roadway to E lot only)
Lot31 (north of Engineering and Lederle Graduate Research Center)
Lot32 and 34 (south of Whitmore and SOM)
Lot62 (south of Morrill Science)

SUGGESTIONS/IDEAS FOR PARKING "SMART" ON A SNOW DAY:
1. Use the UMASS bus service.
2. Car pool rides whenever possible.
3. Walk if possible.
4. Have someone drop you off.
5. If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to either Lot 25 or E Lot (both west of Physical Plant). During snow conditions, it is not possible to guarantee normal lot capacity will be available.
6. If you receive a parking ticket and believe it was improperly issued, you may appeal it at the Ticket Processing Office within 21 days from date issued.

EMERGENCY CLOSING POLICY
AMHERST CAMPUS

Closing Options *	Delayed Opening Until 11:00 am	Closed All Day	Closed During Day	Cancellation of Evening Activities
Watch or Listen...	Starting at 8:00 am	Starting at 6:00 am	When decided.	Starting at 2:00 pm
When	STAY TUNED TO YOUR RADIO FOR ADDITIONAL INFORMATION
To	Amherst (WFCR /AM&FM, WHMP, WTTT) Bradleyboro (WTSA) Greenfield (WHAI, WRSI) (WGAM) Hartford (WTIC /AM/FM) Northampton (WHMP) Orange (WCAT) Pittsfield (WBEC) Springfield (WAYK /WHCC /WHMP, WHAI, WNEC, WSQB-TV, WWLP-TV) Ware (WARE) Worcester (WTAG) Campus Dorms (WSCN) (See alphabetical listing below for frequency numbers)
What will be affected	Classes Day Care Offices Activities Textbook Annex TOC Restaurant/Lounge Hastings University Store Murphy Store Continuing Education Bluewall Patch Snack Bars at Physical Plant Worthington and Hampden
What won't be affected (Designated ESSENTIAL PERSONNEL will report to work.)	Dining Commons Health Services Hotel Police/Security Coffee Shop Physical Plant Conference Services University Operator
	Other areas as pre-designated (consult your Department Head)
Athletics, Fine Arts, and Mullins Center	Athletic, Fine Arts and Mullins Center events will take place as scheduled unless a reportable announcement is made on local radio stations.
	Athletics information: Sports information Hot Line 545-2439 Fine Arts information: 545-2811/ 545-2100 or 545-0460 Mullins Center information: 545-3001
Bus Service	Buses will run unless announced separately on local radio stations Call 545-1833 for recorded message
Library Academic Calendar and intersession	Same as University
Exam period	Delayed Opening Until 11:00 am	The Library will make every effort to open Call Library Hours Hot Line 545-0414
Sat/Sun/holiday	Listen to Radio or call Library Hours Hot Line 545-0414
Information	Call Emergency Closing Hot Line 545-3630 or watch Housing Service Cable Network (HSCN)

* If there is no named line, the information applies for each station

AM				FM
WHAI	730	WHMP	1400	WHCN	93.1	WHYN	93.1
WHDT	1680	WHYN	880	WBEC	103.3	WHAI-2	94.7
WRSI	1420	WHAI	1340	WFCR	88.5	WHMP	99.5
WBEC	1400	WTAG	580	WFLY	92.1	WRSI	100.1
WCAT	1550	WTIC	1080	WHAI	99.3	WRSI-2	101.3
WGAM	1220	WTSA	1450	WNCN	103.5	WUSS	96.1
WHAI	1340	WTTT	1430	WHMP	99.5	WTIC	96.5
						WTJU	96.7

WGGB-TV Channel 40 WWLP-TV Channel 22

Golly, Mr. Wilson—I just love bein' a gas pumpin'! Five bucks an hour, free cigarettes and all the fumes I can sniff. Am I ever glad I quit my job at the Collegian!

WOW'S TATTOO STUDIO
17 Roxbury St., Suite #3
Downtown Keene, N.H.
(603) 352-4422
Fine Tattoos and Body Jewelry
- Licensed by State Of N.H.-

amc THEATRES
$2.50 ($4.50 TWI-LITE) SHOW DAILY
LIMITED TO SEATING
• Denotes SPECIAL ENGAGEMENT
MT. FARMS 4 — MT. FARMS MALL • ROUTE 9 HADLEY — 584-9153
Call Theatre For Showtimes
SPACE JAM* PG
ROMEO & JULIET PG13
MICHAEL COLLINS R
HAMPSHIRE 6 — HAMPSHIRE MALL • ROUTE 9 HADLEY — 584-7550
Call Theatre For Showtimes
SLEEPERS R
THE MIRROR HAS TWO FACES* PG
STAR TREK: FIRST CONTACT* PG13
RANSOM R
JINGLE ALL THE WAY* PG

Thursday-Friday-Saturday
Drink Specials
Red Dog 16oz. Drafts 1.50
Captain Morgan & Coke 2.00
Weekly Specials
Appetizer & Nachos 1/2 Price
New Hours
3 - 5 pm Wed-Sat 7-11pm
Beat The Cover
Get in before 10 PM and No Cover
Dance Music by DJ Bob Paulin
THE PUB
15 East Pleasant Street

Men's swim faces Storm, looks to stay undefeated

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team treads down to New York to defend its undefeated record (2–0) against St. John's University.

The latest victims for Massachusetts have been Vermont, which UMass caught hook, line and sinker (132–80), and Boston University, which UMass barely beat out in Beantown (152–139). UMass prevailed thanks to freshman Billy Hunter.

"The kids swam tough. That's all I can ask. We've got even a bigger challenge this weekend, though. St. John's is a very good team," Yarworth said. "Billy won't be in the meet this weekend, neither will [Rich] Slingluff. They're going to be competing in a club match for water polo to keep them in shape for NCAAs," Yarworth said.

Now the Minutemen are getting in gear for their third straight dual competition. Even though UMass has only swum in two meets so far and they've been hampered by injuries and players who are on the Final Four–bound water polo team, signs of last year's Atlantic 10 Championship team are coming back in full force.

"They have the potential to become Atlantic 10 champions again, but we're not at full strength, especially with Hunter and Slingluff out. So it's going to be tough," Yarworth said.

Even though swimmers and divers like Sean Anderson and Ed Hefferon have been consistent factors in the pool, especially against Boston University, St. John's is not a team to take lightly. The Red Storm poses a definite challenge.

"They're good, not spectacular, but with the shape we're in right now, it makes them look much tougher," Yarworth said.

Other notables who didn't make the front pages after Saturday's meet versus BU were junior Matt Davey and junior Kerry Hueston. Both swimmers didn't compete last year for health and academic reasons, but performed well in in Saturday's competition, and played integral roles in the relay race that won the meet.

As stated before, when it all comes down to crunch time, dual meets are not that important, but that won't keep the men's swimming and diving team from giving St. John's all it's got.

"We'll do our best, that's all I can ask," Yarworth said.

■ Horn

continued frompage 10

man's Horace Grant, while the garbage buckets picked up by Cedric Ceballos mirror the garbage treys picked up by Nick Anderson and Dennis Scott off low–post double teams.
In other words, tattoo or no tattoo, Del "Don't call me Frank Drebin" Harris will be shown the door by the real muscle of the West, George Karl's formidable Seattle boys, in the Conference Finals.
Meanwhile in the Big Appple, with aging Patrick Ewing flanked by up–and–comer Allan Houston and veteran Larry Johnson, as well as being the beneficiary of fiery off–the– pine play by hothead ex–starter John Starks and alleged hothead John Wallace, lucky guy coach Jeff Van Gundy just may have a shot at dethroning the Chicago...
Stop yourself right here. Add the prefix "hit" to the end of the last (would–be) word of the above paragraph, and you have my take on the Knicks' chances against Mr. Jordan and crew. Once New York meets up with the Phil Jackson show in the playoffs, the 'Bockers will surely, but by no means quietly, go the way of "Cop Rock" and "Space: Above and Beyond."
• While we're on the topic of "above and beyond," how about the opportunity Green Bay gave to "below and not–so– far" receiver Andre Rison, whose total catches for the last two seasons have rendered the former Pro Bowler a tad humbler.
While his re–emergence may not equal the NFL surprise of the year, lil' Ty Detmer of the Eagles, the drama unfolding as the Cheeseheads look for a quality Robert Brooks replacement keeps mounting by the moment.
The air of mystery surrounding the fate of the Packers, NFC heir apparent, was most recently deepened by their loss to the oncoming train that is the Cowboys. Could the Troy/Michael/Emmitt combo have an explosive third and final act to their troubled season?
The grittily resurgent Redskins sure hope not.
However, while teams like the Falcons, Saints and Jets may have been down–and–out for the count for what seems like aeons, most divisions still have a good number of clubs in the hunt.
Late season surges by the Seahawks, Cardinals and — of course — Lions could prove the spoilers for potential burnouts like the Colts, Vikings and — of course — Lions. You may have just noticed that Detroit appeared twice in the last sentence. There is a method to the madness — while Wayne Fontes may see the light of day in the postseason, he and his ensemble tend to get so mercilessly stomped by teams of higher caliber, they are their own spoiler.
Chris Conner is a Collegian columnist.

■ Women's Soccer

continued frompage 10

is exactly what we want. What a great opportunity for these players, especially for the senior class, and I hope they take it for all that it is worth."

UMass will have to play differently than last year's NCAA 3–0 loss to UConn. That game followed one of the team's best wins in the past four years against Hartford, a 2–1 OT win, with one of their worst in Storrs.

There are no Calipari–isms for Rudy about this team having no chance against UConn. His role model was former Central Florida basketball coach Torchy Clark, that university's biggest loss next to Rudy himself in 1988.

"Well, you know last year we came off a really great game against Hartford," Rudy said. "I thought we had a great week of practice, and we went down there and it fooled us completely that our team was so lacking in confidence in that game. It was a Jekyll and Hyde.

"This year I find it totally different. We are beat up to hell, and came from game where I can't say we played pretty, I can't say we played brilliantly, but we brilliantly won a game. My feeling is our confidence level is much higher, but I don't know if we can do this twice in a row."

■ Volleyball

continued frompage 10

The win would not just have strengthened Massachusetts' position in the A–10 standings, but also would have defined the entire season: rounding out a week that included a win over previously unbeaten Rhode Island. A string of conquests as such would have signified the official peak of the Minutewomen's season, and proved them worthy of their postseason birth.

Massachusetts' focus must shift now to proving itself. The Minutewomen beat Virginia Tech and George Washington in their previous meetings this season, both of which took place at the Curry Hicks Cage.

The challenge comes in beating these teams on the road, in games that mean little to the them. There will be little letdown by the opposition, because these games measure the pride and actual standing of their seasons. For these teams this weekend against Massachusetts is the postseason.

The Minutewomen look forward to spending their Thanksgiving weekend in Kingston, R.I., matching up against the elite of the conference, struggling for an NCAA tournament berth.

■ Women's Hoop

continued frompage 10

pre– season contests. On Nov. 6 Athletes in Action, a religious organization that fields a basketball team, schooled the Minutewomen 83–55. Freshman guard Alisorr MacFarland scored 11 points, and senior forward Crystal Carroll added 10 points and 10 rebounds in the loss.

Nov. 12 saw Dinamo, a Russian select team, come to the Mullins Center and put on a clinic, scoring 52 points in the second half and spanking the Minutewomen 73–54. Carroll led UMass with 16 points, and led her team to a 25–21 lead they could not hold.

O'Brien's crew kicks it into high gear next week. They travel to Fairfield next Tuesday, and then head down to Storrs, Conn. to face perrennial powerhouse Connecticut in the Hartford Courant Connecticut Classic. UConn is currently ranked No. 5, and pending the results of next Saturday's tussle with the Huskies, the Minutewomen will either face Nevada–LasVegas or Virginia Commonwealth in the second round of the four–team tournament.

Minutewomen Notes: Joanie O'Brien has inked three recruits for the 1997–1998 season. Nicky Valliere, a 5–foot– 8 guard from Adams, Kara Trent, a 5–foot–9 guard from Sandwich and Kathy Coyner, a 5–foot–5 point guard from Belpre, Ohio have signed NCAA letters of intent to play for the Minutewomen.

■ Hockey

ence game of the season.

"This is [Army's] only game of the weekend," Mallen said. "That enables them to really focus in on this game as opposed to us having to think about two games."

Vermont will not be quite as easy, as the Minutemen will face a hostile sold–out Gutterson Fieldhouse crowd of 4,035 in a Sunday matinee.

The Catamount's top line of Eric Perrin, Martin St. Louis and J.C. Ruid is possibly the best in the nation. Both Perrin and St. Louis are first–team All–Americans and prime candidates for the Hobey Baker trophy. UVM has another All–American in Tim Thomas, its stellar senior netminder. Thomas formed the backbone of a UVM team that went to the final four last year, losing on a highly– disputed goal against Colorado College in the second overtime of its semifinal.

Sunday will also mark UMass' fifth game this month against a team currently ranked in the top six in the nation (Including two games against No. 2 Boston University and two against No. 6 New Hampshire).

A win against UVM will help the UMass program in terms of national respectability, but right now it needs to not overlook Army, and win that game because bussing up to Burlington after a loss likely will not translate into a stellar effort against a legitimate national championship contender in a hostile environment.

Attention Hoop Fans!

Check out the Collegian's complete preview to UMass men's basketball on Dec. 5. The special issue will feature player profiles and other features. Look for it where you pick up the Collegian.

UMass

DAILY COLLEGIAN
The Massachusetts
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

Coming Soon!!
to a Collegian Newsstand near you!
The Collegian's in-depth season preview of UMass Mens Basketball.
Catch the magazine December 5th.

• A SPECIAL PUBLICATION OF •
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
'96
UMass basketball

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take Over Lease 1/97 One bedroom, uptown apt Great location, Amherst Center Call 253-4781

AUTO FOR SALE

1986 Oldsmobile Delta 88 Great car, low price $500 Call Chris 549-0564

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING BREAK '97! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica and Florida! EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH! Call (800)700-0790

SUMMER CAMP! CO-ED Sleepaway! Many COUNSELOR POSITIONS AVAILABLE! We need role models, sensitive, caring and skilled staff members FOR THE BEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE! in NE Pennsylvania's Pocono Mts call (800)61-WANDA or E-mail towanda@intercamp.com or visit our Web S i t e http://www.intercamp.com/towanda for information, application and to schedule an interview This is a great camp and an awesome experience Camp Towanda, Honesdale, PA

Campaign Jobs for the Environment Part-time jobs now, full- time over break Earn $50-$75/day $250-$400/week Fun casual atmosphere Work with MASSPIRG to stop pollution. Learn alot Call Teri 256-6434

Mullins Center seeks 20-30 reliable people to work event staff. Availability during Intersession preferred. Apply in person Mullins Center 2nd Floor by Nov. 26

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S Korea No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

ENTERTAINMENT

Sax! Drugs! Rock 'n Roll! Now that I have your attention...Having a party? You need a DJ! Call Eileen @ 253-8589 Raging Disco, Funk, Cheezy 80's music - whatever! No techno, the st gives me a headache! Call me!

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals Waterfront houses, Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

TREK 800 Green Mtn. Bike. Bought $425.00/Sell $200 Steve 8-1996.

FOR SALE

3 Pair Doc Martens: 1 black boot, 2 pr. shoes. Size 8 Must Sell!! Call 546-1451

MAC Centris 610 8MB RAM 80MB HD. Full page monitor (gray scale). External fax modem. Ethernet card. Call Ferneo 549-3927 Price negotiable.

Set of 4 Rims 14" white w/black & chrome B/O 546-6485 Ask for Dan

New York Knick Tickets for sale. Vs Seattle, San Antonio, Indiana (888)602-0774 (pager)

HOUSE FOR RENT

Secluded Riverfront Home N Green River ARTISTS INN Residence Living or Studio Space Avail Immed. Part-Furnished 14x24' $350/mo or 20x24' $375/mo + % util. sec. dep., references, some pets ok, gas heat, wash/dry, snow mvl, kitchen cathedral ceiling, fireplace, balcony. East Colrain, 20 mi/GFLD. 40 mi/UMass 624-3928

Amherst Belchertown line - 4 bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area. Available now 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

Boxing Three private 1/2 hour lessons $89.95. Call 732-8617. In Amherst Tues. & Thurs. Eve

LOST

Lost 11-15-96 Woman's Gold Wrist Watch, Citizen. Contact at 5-1015 Thanks

LOST-Black Wallet containing Mass license bearing the name John Rinaldo. $30 reward—if found please call John @ 546-0571.

Lost Key Uptowns Saturday night. Reward if found. Call 253-0506

MISCELLANEOUS

Car Ride to Dutchess County, New York State. Wanted during Thanksgiving holiday We will share gas cost. Call Vikram at 546-3653

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed. $35 800-776-9503. Doctor Approved.

PERSONALS

PATT/MACK STAFF!! To our wonderful RA's and CDA, thank you for all the hard work you do- you folks are amazing!! Love, James, Angela and Lee

HEY YOU! Come and see RUMORS Wed. Sat., the 20th-23rd, 8pm, @ Bowker. Bloody lovely! Tell your friends.

To All Collegian Staff-
The weather's here,
wish you were beautiful.
-Jacob

ROOM FOR RENT

Subleasa my room for the Spring Semester. Really close to campus! 549-5920

Looking for a Female to share an apartment in South Amherst on the bus route Call 253-6405 Available Wintersession end/or Spring

Sunderland 1BR in 2BR Apt $315.00 + utilities. Must find someone before Thanksgiving for Spring term or Jan 1. 665-4394

SERVICES

COMPUTER CONSULTING Just say NO! to computer problems! Chris Amshey, Consultent, UMass Alum. 532-2039

Psychic Readings Your home or mine, free newsletter Please call Sandy (413)467-3739

GORILLAGRAMS Flowers, Birthdays, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorillas. We'll go anywhere, anytime! Restaurants, classrooms, dorms Student Rates available! Call 256-0287

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info.

Angel Chat - Winging your way with Angelic answers to your questions Call 1-800-539-3930

SERVICES

CAR NEED REPAIR? Let me come to you! Student Rates 665-4780

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistence 549-1906

TRAVEL

Killington Ski House needs housemates $600.00 for entire season 549-8924

$$ Cruise Ships Hiring $$ Travel free Exotic places Save $$$! Seasonal/Permanent. No experience necessary Travel/Employment Directory Free Info! Act now! HTTP \\WWW Tropical-Destinations.com Brett @ Tropical-Destinations.com (413)525-6487

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, FL Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/26 7pm Herter 227 Call Project DEEP @ (800)282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

SERVICES

Wanted- Tutor for AUTO CAD Realease13 Will pay. Call Rob at 548-0272

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment", call Caroline at 546-5269 for more info Identity confidential upon request

Mattress Wanted QUEEN Call Eugene 545-3768.

Desperate for Bibliographic material and I'm not even taking the course Must have rigorous booklist- textbooks, workbooks, problems for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education). Will pay above $150/negotiable. Call at all times except Mon. and Tues Don't worry, I am correct. (413)549-1271

THURSDAYS

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

E	L	B	A		T	R	O	T				A	L	E
G	O	A	L		R	U	P	E	E		A	B	E	D
A	U	S	T	R	A	L	I	A	N		B	O	D	E
D	D	E		A	L	E	E		S	E	A	M	A	N
			V	I	E	D		T	U	T	T	I
I	N	S	A	N	E		S	A	R	A		N	B	C
R	E	T	R	Y		L	I	B	E	L		A	L	A
A	W	R	Y		F	I	E	L	D		S	T	E	T
T	E	E		P	E	E	V	E		W	H	E	A	T
E	R	N		A	N	N	E		W	H	I	S	K	Y
		G	R	I	D	S		D	E	E	P
A	T	T	I	R	E		R	O	B	E		U	S	S
J	O	H	N		R	O	A	D	B	L	O	C	K	S
A	G	E	D		S	U	R	G	E		F	L	I	T
R	A	N			R	E	E	D		T	A	P	S

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Free from a habit
5. TV's "21 ___ Street"
9. Onassis, for one
14. Fixed charge
15. Latin abbr. (2 wds.)
16. Country on the Red Sea
17. Singer Burl
18. The King of Babalu
19. Watered silk
20. Tepees
22. Abra
24. Diamond or Shanghai
25. Generic addressee
27. Wind dr.
28. Assemble for action
29. Bertha bone or breaker
32. "It Must Be Him" singer
34. Sheltered side
36. Shortening
38. Speak cheekily
40. LuPone or LaBelle
44. Goes on horseback
46. Tyro
48. Shankar's guitar
49. Partial' prefix
51. American, to a Brit
52. Not pos.
54. Whisper's antonym
56. More, to Duran
57. Hautboy mouthpiece
60. Summer, in Arles
62. Women's
64. Esposito teammate
65. "Boot" country
67. Salt quantity
71. Elizabeth II's wear
73. Actor James
75. Scarlett's home
76. Camera introduced in 1888
77. Scandinavian capital
78. Collar type
79. Monoskis
80. Son of Noah
81. Plants seeds

DOWN

1. Judicial decree
2. Watersprout spot
3. Egyptian deity
4. Abodes for birds
5. The head Clampett
6. Shoshonesns
7. Cads
8. Conducts (a trade)
9. Exercise rooms
10. Olden car
11. Author Zola
12. Strange
13. Prepared to propose
21. Command to a dog
23. Du Pont Co.'s home base
26. Sound like a heavy smoker
28. Substantial
29. Pu takes of outdoor exercise
30. Turkish regiment
31. Wide
33. Allergic reaction
35. Conservationist gp.
37. Chan portreyer Warner
39. Time, Next Year
41. Cubs or Bears
42. Bluefin or bonito
43. Annoys a little
45. Zinzite or limonite, e.g.
47. Stream of song
50. Peeper protector
53. ___ lost!
55. Something to button or zip
57. Uses a cradle
58. Actor Flynn
59. Destroy slowly
61. Mexican treats
63. Nibbles
65. Pressman's needs
66. Where Bill met Hillary
68. Defense group: abbr
69. Raven's kin
70. Painter Hofmann
72. Gum lump
74. ___ de guerre

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20

Continue to explore a topic you are unfamiliar with. You may discover a hidden talent. Hurry home after work. It's time to put your efforts into a project at home. You will enjoy it more than you realize!

TAURUS
April 21–May 21

Finish paying your bills for the month. A new savings plan may be a good idea. Too much impulse buying will not help your current situation. Friends surprise you after dinner—kick back and enjoy their company and conversation!

GEMINI
May 22–June 21

Don't get into a trivial argument with your mate early in the week. You'll soon regret it. Try not to say something you don't really mean. Your sense of humor will come in very handy. Keep things light!

CANCER
June 22–July 22

Clean out your closets and your garage. It will leave you feeling refreshed and ready for a new project. Don't be afraid to throw things away! A close friend reveals a dark secret. Don't be quick to judge.

LEO
July 23–August 23

There are a few minor glitches to overcome, but for the most part you're in for a wonderful week! For example, something you really want won't be in the first place you look. Don't give up easily.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22

You'll enjoy spending time at home this week, even if it's doing housework. A phone call from an old friend will give you a new perspective. It may be time to rearrange some priorities.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23

Some newly acquired skills will finally be put to use this week. Now is the time to think of others first. Your mate may need your help. Be generous with kind words and compliments. Someone may need them more than you think.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22

Be very careful in who you share information with. A secret is likely to be revealed if you allow it. Stay alert and be careful! Someone may not be as sincere as they appear.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21

New information you acquire this week could solve a problem. If you need to take a risk, do it early in the week. Now is a good time to discuss options with a business partner. Do it in a relaxed atmosphere, such as over dinner.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20

Money is a prime consideration this week. If you don't act wisely, you could be in for a real fall. You may be accused of being a workaholic. Reassure loved ones that your busy phase will be over soon.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18

You are exceptionally creative today, so write your ideas down. Start a new project that will solve an old dilemma. One of your ideas could even bring you fame and fortune. Concentrate on environmental issues.

PISCES
February 19–March 20

Get as many obligations as possible out of the way this week. That includes the paperwork you've been avoiding. If you don't take care of it soon, it will backfire on you.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

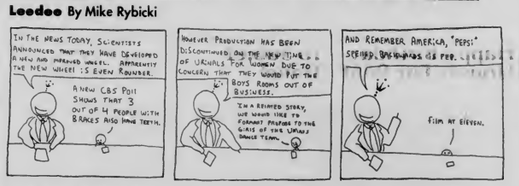
Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown By Judd Winick

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

Do you see that dirty little spot down there?

That is where the insurance industry and health care providers meet.



Some other people meet there, too.

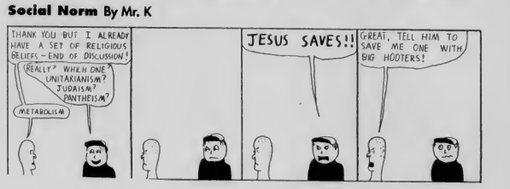
It certainly is a dirty little spot.

University² By Frank Cho

Loodoo By Mike Rybicki

One Shot By Hot Tub

Eight Years in Braces By Eric Petersen



Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Social Norm By Mr. K

Close to Home By John McPherson

Carol makes a last-ditch effort to keep the kids from missing the bus.

Today's Staff

Laura "Wood" Stock
Night Editor

Mark "Don't Use My Name" McGrath
Copy Editor

Courtney "Mistress of Photo" Smith
Photo Technician

Chris "Dozen Roses" Brown
Production Supervisor

Matt "Red Meat" McCarthy
Dan "Cop-Lover" Bodah
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Dining Commons Special
Once-in-a-Lifetime
Gourmet French Meal

Arrive early for tonight's special Candlelit Froggy Feast—starting at 5 p.m. in a Dining Commons near you. Don't miss out on this culinary extravaganza!

Quote of the Day

"Whew! That was a close one. I was almost "Gone With the Schwinn"

–Kermit

Collegian Graphics Joke of the Day

Q: Why did the kangaroo cross the road?

A: Because it was holding the chicken's ears.

Sports

UMass faces rival UConn in NCAA showdown

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

Erin Lynch and the UMass women's soccer team face rival UConn in NCAA Tournament action Sunday at 1 p.m. in Storrs, Conn.

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

When you think about it, Cinderella never had it this bad.

This Sunday afternoon at 1 p.m. in Storrs, Conn., the Massachusetts women's soccer team will be looking to crash Connecticut's NCAA ball in a Sweet Sixteen showdown.

It is a perennial postseason fixture now, as the road to the top almost always leads through Amherst or Storrs.

UMass assistant coach Chris Chamides does not believe in fairy–tale wins, but he does believe in his team.

"What I do believe in, is that the players now know what it takes to beat teams like this, teams that are in the higher echelon of the country," he said. "I think they proved it to themselves this past Sunday against Harvard [2–1 win], and now they know what it takes."

This Northeast Region rivalry now will reach its 18th year, with the record now standing at a 14–13–5 mark in favor of UMass.

For all intents and purposes, though, the outsider can easily assume that all–time record is the only thing in favor for the No. 16 Minutewomen (16–4–1).

On the surface, that outsider would say do not have a chance against the No. 4 Huskies (21–2). In every team category, UConn is ahead of UMass.

The Huskies have six players on their squad that have broken the 30–point barrier, led by senior forward Kerry Connors (20 goals, 18 assists, 58 points). The Minutewomen have the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year in freshman forward Emma Kurowski, but she would only place sixth on UConn's scoring list with 29 points (11g, 7a). UConn's junior Jana Carabino is one point ahead of Kurowski, but she comes off the bench.

In the midfield, the twins from Huntington, N.Y., Jennifer (7g, 23 a, 37pts) and Margaret Tietjen (13g, 16a, 42 pts) have begun to assert their presence in the Northeast Region, and the nation, in only their sophomore seasons. Senior midfielders Amy Powell and Julie Magid have been a steady presence in their four years for UMass. But their combined career stats only beat the latter Tietjen's 1996 season stats by one point (15g, 27a, 43 pts).

But numbers can not tell the tale, and statistics do not win games.

There is no way UMass can go toe–to–toe with UConn, they are too offensively dangerous of a team. The Minutewomen have to view last Oct. 19th's game as a 1–0 game, as Carabino's goal to make the final 2–0 score was with 6:38 left in regulation. UMass did have five or six quality scoring opportunities, as Powell hit crossbar late in the first half, and senior Tina Lightning launched a rocket over the net early in the second half.

Since the midseason loss of all–time leading scorer Rebecca Myers, UMass has had to adopt a more conservative offensive strategy, using the bunker defense against their tougher opponents. The team has had time to become comfortable with the defensive bunker formation since that time, playing under it and winning with it.

"We're going to have to play some defense," Rudy said. "My hope is we won't have to play too much, and if we do have to, absorb it well. The key part of this game is to keep this game close... early.

"But I like the personality of our people. I think they are very upbeat. I think another key thing is how well we come out and connect with our front people, and if we can connect after playing defense, and then we can add other people moving forward."

Chamides knows that both teams are very familiar with each other over the past seasons, and what will be the difference is not the numbers game, but the mind game.

"What you saw then [against Harvard] was our technical ability, which has been there all year long," Chanides said. "The specific tactical changes we will make for this game won't be too much of a surprise for anyone. The main thing is the ability to play with heart, 11 players for 90 minutes.

"There is a whole different sense of belief in this team right now. There is a certain touch of destiny, and there is a excitement in each player, which

Turn to Women's Soccer, page 7

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

Erica Iverson, who scored the winning goal in UMass' NCAA opening round win over Harvard, will be a key part of the UMass defense against UConn Sunday.

Women's hoop to open season Sunday

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team tips it off for real Sunday when it entertains the Ohio State Buckeyes at the William D. Mullins Center at 2 p.m.

The Minutewomen have only played the Buckeyes twice, and are 0–2. Ohio State came into the Curry Hicks Cage in 1992 and squashed UMass 81–48. In 1993, the Minutewomen travelled to Columbus and were soundly thumped, 97–66.

Like the Minutewomen, Ohio State made it to the NCAA tournament last season, beating Memphis 97–75 in the first round before losing to eventual champion Tennessee 97–65.

UMass comes into the 1996–97 campaign with high expectations. The Minutewomen made it to the big dance last season, losing to the Michigan State Spartans 60–57, in overtime, in the first round of the NCAA tournament as the No. 8 seed out of the East.

"By achieving [an NCAA tournament bid], expectations are high," Massachusetts coach Joanie O'Brien said. "But I like the pressure. Success breeds success, and we want everyone to know we're for real."

The Minutewomen come into Sunday's contest banged up. Senior co–captain Beth Kuzmeski and junior guard Tez Kraft will be sidelined for the next three weeks with injuries. Kuzmeski, UMass's leading three–point shooter, suffered a stress fracture to her left foot. Kraft, who battled injuries for much of last year, fractured her right tibia.

Ohio St. has a tough task ahead of them Sunday. The Minutewomen have won 15 straight games at home, including a perfect 12–0 mark last season at the Mullins Center. Among those victories was a 65–56 win over then– No. 8 Stanford in the home opener.

UMass has looked rough around the edges in two

Turn to Women's Hoop, page 7

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Freshman Alison MacFarland has made an immediate impact on the UMass women's basketball team. The Minutewomen tip–off the regular season Sunday at 2 p.m.

UM set to battle Army; tackle challenge at UVM

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team (2–0) finally gets a break from Hockey East play, after opening its season with eight straight league contests.

The team will not receive a break altogether though.

UMass heads north up 1–89 Sunday to battle No. 4 Vermont, arguably the top team in the East. Before that affair, the Minutemen will host Army tonight at the William D. Mullins Center at 7 p.m.

"We need to stay focused and get ready to play against Army on Friday night," UMass coach Joe Mallen said. "We need to take these games [this weekend] individually, one game at a time. It's important for us to have a good performance at home against Army before we go up to Vermont."

It is arguably tough for Army to compete in hockey when its coach is not allowed to recruit Canadians by federal law, but the team makes do.

The Minutemen can ill–afford to overlook the Cadets, needing at least one win out of this weekend. Army heads to Amherst at 5–6, with Division I wins at Minnesota–Duluth and at home against Mankato State. The mark is slightly deceiving though, as it includes a pair of wins over Mt. Allison, a university, and New Brunswick, along with an 8–0 drubbing of tiny St. Michael's College in Colchester, Vt.

Last Saturday, the Cadets gave UMass–Lowell a good scare in West Point, dropping a 4–3 decision after battling back from a 3–0 deficit.

UMass has had its way with Army since the reinstatement of the program, winning all three meetings between the teams, including last year's 6–2 season–opening win at Tate Rink. Rob Bonneau had a pair of power play goals in the contest, just two of the school–record five that the team's umbrella formation produced.

Coach Rob Riley's team has but one player in double digits after 11 games. Bill Morrison has four goals and seven assists for 11 points. Leif Hansen leads the squad with seven goals, while Daryl Chamberlain mans the Cadet cage, posting a 3.84 goals against average.

Scheduling is something that Army will have on its side this weekend, as UMass prepares for bar none its biggest non–confer–

Turn to Hockey, page 7

Volleyball on road for tourney tune–up

By J.R. Adams
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts volleyball has taken a large step towards achieving its goal for the season — winning the Atlantic 10 tournament — by qualifying for it.

Now the Minutewomen will take a weekend to tune–up against some quality conference opponents.

The Minutewomen square off against Virginia Tech and George Washington on a road trip through the southern reaches of the A–10 this weekend. Massachusetts is 10–2 in its last twelve matches, including wins in their last three.

The victories over Dayton and Xavier this past weekend took the pressure off the Minutewomen to win any of the matches this weekend. To qualify for the postseason, wins in two of their last four regular season matches were imperative, and they locked it up early by taking the first two in the win column.

This weekend's competition against the formidable teams from down south can prove to be a warm up for the Minutewomen, who are anticipating a first round match–up with regular season conference champion and tournament host Rhode Island.

Massachusetts' last few opponents include a few too many sub–.500 cellar dwellers to really be proud of, and the bulk of those 10 wins out of the last 12 matches include some teams that have been expecting to be spending their Thanksgiving breaks at home.

Virginia Tech and George Washington represent those teams that had a right to make a bid for the tournament but came up just a little short of the promised land, having been squeezed out of the last spot on the dance card by Massachusetts.

The Minutewomen rose to the occasion through the adversity of losing their top scorer at midseason, and losing a crucial match against Temple at a key juncture of the season, a match that would have vaulted the youth–driven Minutewomen into third place over the Owls.

Turn to Volleyball, page 7

Finally, Philly fans have Sixers back; Knicks are sitting pretty, Lakers aren't

Around the Horn
with Chris Conner

Attention, Philadelphia sports fans.

Bring back Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes, Teddy Pendergrass and Patti LaBelle to sing the sweet sounds of Philly athletics.

First the Flyers bullied anew with the arrival of the Eric Lindros–led Legion of Doom, then the Eagles found new wings under hawk–eyed coach Ray Rhodes.

Now the Sixers are back with a vengeance.

After years of languishing in postseason limbo, the rejuvenated squad now boasts a respectable 4–6 record through Wednesday. To most teams, this would be a fair–to– middlin' start, but for a club that's managed to lose more games than the previous campaign in seven consecutive years, it's buttery butter.

The biggest surprise so far — in what was expected to be the NBA equivalent of Thunderdome, three stars have entered the CoreStates Spectrum, but none have left in body bags. Jeff Hornacek–slugging second–year swingman Jerry Stackhouse, problem child (or, with all due respect to Shawn Kemp, infant–child) forward Derrick Coleman and rookie sensation point guard (although his assist stats scream two–guard, not one) Allen Iverson are lighting it up thus far.

And they say the neon lights are bright on Broadway — check out Broad Street.

• But speaking of Broadway, those Knicks are truly living up to all the free agent frenzy they indulged in this past summer. The Lakers are not.

Here's why: Shaq basically never left Orlando.

If you combine Niek Van Exel's handle and playground acrobatics to the slash–and–drive oriented game of Eddie Jones, you end up with... Anfernee Hardaway. I'd rather just have one Penny in my pocket, thank you.

In addition, Eldon Campbell is nothing more than a poor

Turn to Horn, page 7

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 57 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Monday, November 25, 1996

How sweet it wasn't

Keeper Danielle Dion and the UMass women's soccer team were bounced from the NCAAs yesterday, losing to UConn 2–0 (See Sports Weekend, page 10).

La vie Bohème

The Pulitzer prize winning musical Rent premiered in Boston this past week. See what we thought about the show (see Arts & Living, page 6).

UM police, officials stunned by new rash of vending vandalism

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

This semester's rash of vending machine vandalism and break–ins has been called the "worst ever" by University of Massachusetts police and officials and could result in a substantial loss of student activity funds.

"By far, I think this has been one of the worst semesters we've seen in terms of vending machines," said John Luippold, UMass chief of police.

Since September, a total of 25 vending machines have either been vandalized or broken into. Eight of the damaged machines are located in academic buildings, while 17 have been damaged in residence halls.

Occasions of vandalism have included breaking the glass or tipping the machine over. In many cases, this destruction of property is done with the intent of stealing the machine's contents. Machines containing food, rather than soda, have been the main targets.

Instances of breaking and entering with the intent of stealing the cash in the machine have police most concerned.

"I do think until this past weekend the damage that has occurred have been attempts to get at the contents inside," Luippold said. "But this past weekend, the stolen cash has raised concern that one individual or a small group may be working these machines."

Specifically, Luippold was referring to two counts of breaking and entering vending machines in Hills House and Lewis Residence Hall on Nov. 16 which occurred only an half hour apart. Cash boxes were stolen from both machines.

The targeting of vending machines has been widespread across campus. The only residence halls to be hit twice are Emerson, in which breaking and entering occurred only three days apart in September and Pierpont, vandalized twice in October.

Academic buildings such as Bartlett Hall and Herter Hall have had two machines vandalized. Otherwise, the eight incidents in academic buildings have been in different locations.

The crime rate regarding vending machines has also remained steady over the past two months. While September had only three counts, October had 12 and November currently has 10.

Bernard Wilkes, senior associate director of the Campus Center, oversees the placement and maintenance of vending machines for Auxiliary Services.

According to Wilkes, vandalized machines pose more of a problem for students than simply not being able to purchase a candy bar. The loss of revenue from machines could hurt student funds.

"Seventy–five percent of all commissions goes to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Office for student funding and program supports of cultural enrichment events," Wilkes said. The remaining 25 percent goes to general maintenance and repair of the machines and office expenses.

That 75 percent of commissions generates an average of $400,000 a year for the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Office — all of which is designated to be money for

Turn to VENDING, page 2

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT/ COLLEGIAN

Bike, run, bike!
Dan Coady, 22, history major and president of the UMass Bicycle Racing Club proudly represented UMass yesterday in the Palmer Cyclocross race which is part of the New England Cyclocross series.

Fri. sleepout fights homelessness

MassPIRG, community groups camp out in freezing weather

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

On Friday night, students hoping to raise awareness about homelessness in Amherst slept outside by the campus pond lawn in front of the Student Union Building for the final event in MassPIRG's Hunger and Homelessness "Make a Difference Week."

About 30 students participated in the sleep–out, raising $400 dollars, according to event organizers.

All funds raised will be donated to the National Campaign to End Hunger and Homelessness and the Food Bank of Western Mass.

Participants asked friends, family and faculty members to sponsor them for each hour spent outside.

A number of members from Circle K, Habitat for Humanity and Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity participated in the sleepout.

"Being out here is for a good cause. Homelessness is definitely something that we have to work on," said first–year student and Alpha Sigma Pi brother Walter Mediros.

Last year's sleep–out took place in front of Butterfield residence hall, where participants went without sleeping bags to rest in cardboard boxes. However, this year's participants were bundled up in their sleeping bags.

"We can't really think about or compare what homeless people go through because we have our sleeping bags," Mediros said.

Another Alpha Sigma Pi brother, Dave Paraigis, said he knew the money that was raised at the event was going to help homeless people who really want help.

"I know exactly where the money we raise is going. Unlike people who give money to beggars on the street, they never know where that money is going. It could go to another bottle of alcohol," he said.

"We decided to hold the sleep–out in front of the Student Union because it was more visible to students walking by. They could see us setting up during the day and see us sitting here at night," student Melanie Undem said.

"This event draws in participation and raises awareness from the Amherst Community, the students on campus as well as the different campus groups," said campaign coordinator Amanprit Kandola.

Non–participating community seemed to take notice of the campers' efforts as they passed by. "Hey, I respect you guys, it's freezing out here," a student walking by at 2 a.m. said.

Guess? targeted in new union's efforts

By Alison Crawford
Collegian Correspondant

Sandra Flores' day working as a seamstress in a sweatshop that supplies Guess? with its clothing starts at 8 a.m. She punches out at 4 p.m., but does not go home. Instead she stays, without overtime pay, until 10 p.m., making designer shirts for the Guess? owners, the Marciano brothers.

Last Thursday, Flores and Enrique Mejia, a spokesperson for UNITE!, the fledgling union for sweatshop laborers, came to the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union Building to speak to members of the University of Massachusetts Student Labor Action Committee.

Mejia and Flores are traveling to college campuses across the country to rally support for their movement against oppresive working conditions.

"There is something special about this generation, and we are asking your help," Mejia said.

Mejia translated for Flores, who is an immigrant from El Salvador. Flores settled in Los Angeles, and has been employed in the Guess? sweatshop for the past five years.

"Most of the sweatshops are located in Los Angeles or New York," Mejia said. "In L.A. there are between 20 and 80 shops, and 4000 to 5000 workers depending on the year and what [the designers] are going to make. Guess? doesn't make their own clothes — 80 percent of Guess? clothes are made in the U.S. and mostly in the L.A. area.

"The Marciano brothers who own Guess? are not responsible for these workers. There is no contract (with Guess?); everything is sub–contracted.

The brothers pay the laborers by the piece of clothing produced; when totaled it amounts to about $1.60 an hour, according to Mejia.

"Another worker, Enrique, who had been traveling with us, saw a blouse that he had made in L.A.," Mejia said. "He was shocked to see that it cost $58, when he had only been paid $1.40 for making it."

The sweatshops producing the Guess? clothing have been found by the U.S. Department of Labor to be in serious violation of labor laws, according to Mejia.

"Nothing has been done about it," he said. "Guess? was at the top of the list [of labor law offenders] in August

Turn to FLORES, page 3

Haitian/Dominican evening a culture–crossing success

By Gregory Casimir
Collegian Staff

On Friday, the Haitian Student Association (HASA) and Casa Dominicana held the third annual Haitian Dominicano Cultural Gala in the Student Union Ballroom.

Hasa/Casa is a joint cultural event put on both of these RSOs that celebrates both Haitian and Dominican cultures.

Frantz Bien–Aime, the president of HASA, welcomed everyone to the night's event in the spirit of unity and peace.

"The joint cultural event has allowed both Haitian and Dominican students to share and celebrate our cultures with the different communities at the university," Bien–Aime said. "The second reason is to deal with the countless misunderstandings and animosities between our two nations."

Aida Baez, the chairperson for Casa Dominicana, opened up with a similar message.

"This gala brings the true meaning of multiculturalism to the university, and is an example of what humanity and brotherhood is about," she said.

The evening began with a delicious buffet that consisted of a variety of traditional foods from both Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

After the food was served, the festivities started with a poetry reading that featured poems by Kenny Lacoste, the president of the Black Student Union, and a dramatic rendition by Negres Kreyol of a poem written by Natasha Belitaire.

The guest speaker of the night was Yvon Lamour, a Haitian teacher from Cambridge Rindge Latin High School. Lamour expressed his feelings that the night's event was a step in the right direction towards consolidating unity between Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

"The spirit of the night should continue past this gala," she said. "You should form committees between you and work on the other problems that encompass all areas of Haitian and Dominican life."

The next part of the program included to inspiring poems read by Jaime Flores, known as "Shaggy," which dealt with the Hasa/Casa theme of brotherhood, and a need for both groups to understand their common African origins.

The entertainment portion of the evening commenced with a performance by Cayena, the Dominican

Turn to GALA, page 3

WORLD

Ailing Mother Teresa's heart troubles continue

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Mother Teresa suffered a recurrence of the heart problems that put her in the hospital three days ago and has developed trouble breathing, doctors said Sunday.

The 86–year–old nun was well enough, however, to eat a breakfast of bread and porridge and a lunch of chicken stew and fruit salad. Doctors said she was in near–stable condition after they resumed an intravenous drip for heart medication.

Mother Teresa has been on oxygen in the intensive care unit since being taken to Woodlands Nursing Home on Friday complaining of chest pains. Doctors say she has an irregular heartbeat and trouble with the left ventricle of her heart - the heart's main pumping chamber.

Encouraged by the progress she had been making, doctors briefly stopped her intravenous drip Saturday night, hospital medical director Sudipto Kumar Sen said.

But Mother Teresa developed breathing difficulties, and doctors resumed the drips after detecting a recurrence of her problems with her left ventricle, Sen said.

NATION

Three children thrown from building in N.Y.

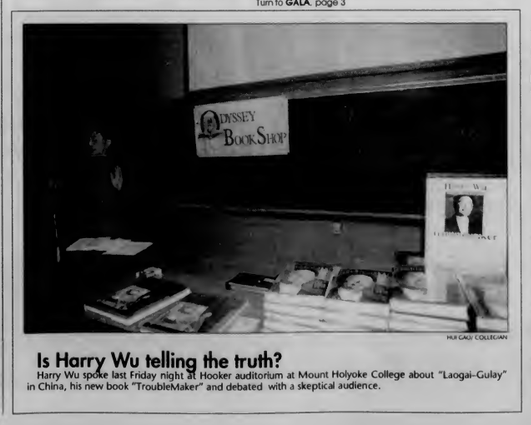
NEW YORK (AP) — A woman threw her three children off the roof of her 14–story housing project yesterday, killing one of them, then jumped to her death, police said.

Chicqua Roveal, 23, threw 7–year–old twins Andre and Andrea and 2–year–old Shando off the roof of the building in the Bronx, then jumped herself, said police spokesman Doram Tamari.

Roveal died at the scene and Andre was pronounced dead at a hospital. The other children, badly injured, were hospitalized. The woman "had been distraught for some time," Tamari said, but he did not know why. Police did not find any suicide note. Neighbors also said they did not know why Roveal jumped, but one said she had been having problems with her mother, who was recently released from jail.

"Her mother used to go back and forth to jail," neighbor Darryl Johnson said. "She raised herself and her kids. She always used to tell us her mother was never there for her."

A law–enforcement source, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed that Roveal's mother was released from prison last month. The woman was not in the building at the time of the deaths. Johnson said Roveal was a good mother.



"Her kids were always dressed nice and everything," he said. "So nobody knows why she did that."

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Tue	Wed
HIGH: 35 LOW: 30	HIGH: 35 LOW: 25	HIGH: 35 LOW: 20

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics.....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 10

HUI GAO/ COLLEGIAN

Is Harry Wu telling the truth?
Harry Wu spoke last Friday night at Hooker auditorium at Mount Holyoke College about "Laogai–Gulay" in China, his new book "TroubleMaker" and debated with a skeptical audience.

Actor Harrelson, eight others band in attempt to save redwood lands

By Mark Evans
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A weekend protest by anti–logging activists snarled traffic on the Golden Gate Bridge for hours and left many people angry, inconvenienced and asking: What's the point? "It doesn't do a nickel's worth of good," said 80–year–old Scott Warwick, whose morning walk across the bridge was blocked by authorities.

Nine protesters, including actor Woody Harrelson, virtually shut down the bridge for five hours Saturday after scaling towers and hanging banners to urge government protection of the redwood grove in Northern California's Headwaters Forest.

The government is negotiating with timber groups to preserve 7,500 acres of the forest for $380 million but environmentalists say the deal doesn't go far enough — they want 60,000 acres protected from logging.

The demonstrators were booked and released on charges of trespassing and causing a public nuisance. They face fines of up to $10,000.

Tourists who endured a miles–long traffic backup shouted obscenities at the protesters dangling from rock–climbing gear. Many sympathized with the cause but disagreed with the method. "Why not the Internet?" asked architect Michael Luke. "Why don't they use graffiti, post brochures in the neighborhoods where people can see their concerns every day? This kind of protest is outdated. It doesn't work."

Protest organizer Jim Ace disagreed, saying the demonstration sent a clear message that something needs to be done to protect the trees.

"It's something that's done only when the chips are down and you have to play your trump card," he said Sunday. "I think it was a huge success and we'll see this in the next week."

Other protesters have been arrested in recent, less–publicized incidents over the redwoods. And while organizers admitted the backlog at the bridge was worse than expected, they said the inconvenience was less important than protecting the trees. "You don't want to alienate commuters," said Celia Alario, 28, who was among those arrested. "My goal was to empower the people who saw the banner ... You want people to feel the loss of the redwoods with some immediacy."

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day

Monday, Nov. 25

Speaker — The Wildlife Society presents Dr. Rebecca Field, assistant unit leader for the Massachusetts Cooperative Fish and Wildlife Research Unit, who will speak on "Wildlife: A Career With the Federal Government" at 6 p.m. in Holdsworth 203. Refreshments will be served.

Wednesday, Nov. 27

Class — "Tanya Class" a free drop in class in the Tanya, the Chassidic text of mysticism, 8 p.m. at Chabad House at 30 N. Hadley Rd., Amherst. Free and open to the public. Call 549-4094 for more information.

Thursday, Nov. 28

Class — "Lunch and Learn" at this free drop in class. Learn about the Jewish concepts of Geulah, redemption, and Moshiach, the messiah, during the lunch hour. Sponsored by Chabad House at Amherst. Classes are at noon, location to be announced. Free and open to the public. Call 545-4094 for more information.

Dinner — Members of the GLBT community and allies are welcome to attend a Stonewall Thanksgiving Potluck Dinner. If unable to get home for the holiday, share a meal with people at the Stonewall Center. Time TBA. RSVP to the Stonewall Center at 545-4824. For more information, please contact the UMass Stonewall Center at 545-4824.

Notices

Special event — UMass is participating in the global observance of World AIDS Day which will take place from Nov. 25 through Dec. 6. You can get HIV/AIDS information and a red ribbon to pin on yourself or on our "Remembrance Tree" at the Campus Center Concourse table each day. Visit the Faces of AIDS art display and the Five College AIDS Quilt at Earthfoods. Watch Boys on the Side on HSCN. Activities will culminate with a candlelight vigil on the Student Union steps at 5 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 6 and a march to the First Congregational Church on Main St. in Amherst for a gathering of Remembrance and Hope. Refreshments will be served. After that, there will be a poetry/prose reading followed by an open mike at 8 p.m. at Claudia's Cafe. For more information, contact Health Education at 577-5181.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8-30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol-free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584- 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546-1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma. 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545-2391.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Tues., Dec. 3 from 5:30-7 p.m. in CC room 165-169.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577-5181 for more info) and 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H-4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30- 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545-2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Literature — MOTHERTONGUE, the multilingual student publication by the dept. of Comparative Literature, is currently seeking submissions for the spring '97 publication. We will accept original poetry, short stories, one-acts, international photographs, and art work created by multilingual students. Please submit a copy in English to the Comparative Literature Dept. in 203 South College. Rough drafts are acceptable.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546-6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

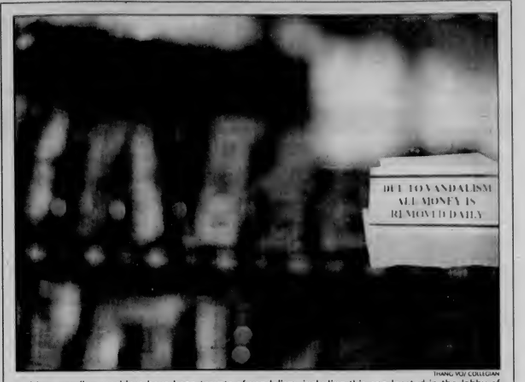
Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Orit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5-1925.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546-6487 or Nizam at 546-3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546-3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256-8482 or Lalli at 253-0874.



Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy, and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545-0848 if interested.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7-8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577-5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Student Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae and R&B dancers for next semesters annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546-2714 for audition information.

Theatre — UMass Theatre Guild presents the musical The Pajama Game Dec. 5-7 at 8 p.m. with a matinee performance at 2 p.m on Dec. 7. All shows are in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Tickets are $4/students and senior citizens and $6 for everyone else and are available at the door and in advance at Tix Unlimited, 545-0412.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for persons who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and to be sent a volunteer application, please call (413) 733-2251.

THANG VU/ COLLEGIAN

Many vending machines have been targets of vandalism, including this one located in the lobby of Bartlett.

■ vending

continued from page 1

which is designated to be money for UMass students, Wilkes said.

The destruction of the vending machines, which are the property of the vendors, has Wilkes concerned about the loss of money and potential removal of some machines.

"This is the worst fall we've ever had," he said. "The spring [semester] was average, but this fall has been absolutely horrible. It seems like a concerted effort to vandalize these machines.

"It may come to a point where machines have to be removed, and we feel bad for the students who are not damaging them."

Wilkes said the loss of revenue resulting from a removal of machines would be hard to assess since each machine is different, but it would be "substantial."

Luippold and Wilkes are currently discussing how to stop the vandalism and theft of money or contents of the vending machines.

"We are in the process of working with Auxiliary Services to develop strategies on how to minimize this problem," Luippold said.

Luippold said that in some cases locations of the machines may need to be re-evaluated. According to Wilkes, the locations of machines are either "historic" or determined by public demand.

Luippold also questioned the durability of the newer snack machines, and whether the glass was easier to break. However, Wilkes said the same design of machines have been on campus for five years and they have never experienced vandalism of this magnitude.

Wilkes said that perhaps the vandalizers were not UMass students, but Luippold said there is no evidence whether or not the individuals attend the University.

Ensuring that all academic buildings are property locked at night will be one step police will take in response to the vandalism problem.

"Academic buildings are officially closed during the night time hours," Luippold said. "Custodial staff helps with locking the doors.

"If an individual is found in a building after hours it could be considered breaking and entering, although in these cases there was no apparent forced entry to the buildings."

What Luippold says is of most concern to him are the vending machines in the residence halls, because of the large number of vandalism and break-ins that are occurring. He said students can help in the protection of the vending machines.

If a student witnesses someone vandalizing a machine, Luippold said he or she should get a good description of the individual involved, without approaching, and call the police 911 line.

In the Nov. 22 issue, the headline above the Associated Press article in the World column erroneously read, "Palestinian officer accused of beating." In actuality, the Palestinian officer accused Israeli troops in Hebron, West Bank of storming his home and beating his pregnant wife unconscious. The Collegian regrets the error.

JANUARY CLASSES

Take a course during Intersession!

You can complete a one, two, or three credit course during January.
(Most classes meet mornings 9 a.m. - Noon)
Classes Begin January 2 through January 21, 1997

Register now through Friday, December 27, 1996

- Keyboarding for Information Processing
- Introduction to Dance
- Computer Literacy
- Introduction to Internet
- English Composition I
- English Composition II
- French Skills Practice I
- Counseling Skills
- Winter Outdoor Recreation
- Practical Nursing Practicum
- Introduction to Professional Nursing and the Nursing Process
- Principles of Psychology
- Contemporary Trends/Issues
- Spanish Skills Practice I
- Spanish Skills Practice II
- Oral Communications: Public Speaking
- Principles of Sociology

For Registration Information Call: (413) 774-3131 extension 272

GREEN FIELD cc

GREENFIELD
The community's college!

New York Boston

Two Great Umass Campus Locations

Munchies Store
at Southwest
Hampden Dining Commons
Hours; M-F 8 am to 8:30 pm
Sat. & Sun. 12:30 pm to 7:30 pm

Peter Pan Office
Next to the Umass Travel Agency
in the Umass Campus Center
Tel. 256-0431 or 545-2006

Call 1-800-343-9999
Look us up on the Worldwide Web http://www.peterpan-bus.com

Black Greeks celebrate history at gala event in Campus Center

By Gregory Casimir
Collegian Staff

On November 17, the fraternity of Alpha Phi Alpha, Inc. put together an elaborate evening celebrating their 90th anniversary as the first intercollegiate Greek-lettered organization.

The event took place in the Campus Center Auditorium, that was elegantly decorated with balloons, streamers, napkins and tablecloths in the fraternal colors of the Alphas.

The fraternity of Alpha Phi Alpha was founded in 1906 at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y. by seven visionary founders known as the "Jewels" — Henry A. Callis, Charles H. Chapman, Eugene K. Jones, George B. Kelley, Nathaniel A. Murray, Robert H. Ogle and Vertner W. Tandy.

UMass is the seat of the Alpha Kappa chapter founded seventy-four years ago by R.P. Alexander. This chapter encompasses the colleges of American International College, Springfield College, Western New England College, Hampshire College and Amherst College.

The tenets of the fraternity encompass the principles of good character, sound scholarship, fellowship and the uplifting of humanity, especially the struggling black minority in America.

Some organizations run by the fraternity of Alpha Phi Alpha that perpetuate these ideals are the Coalition of Free Men, Fathers are Capable Too, Men for Non-Violence and M.A.L.E. (Men Assisting, Leading and Educating).

The keynote speaker of the evening was Professor William Strickland, author of Malcolm X: Make It Plain. He spoke about the need for fraternity and unity amongst black people today.

"Time has changed the ties that used to bind us. Instead of waving 'hi,' we're shooting one another now," he said. "The older people taught us you have to be tougher and stronger, smarter and can't be weak in the knees in America because the game isn't fair."

The next segment of the night was a historical presentation of the black Greek-lettered organizations. The speakers included Joe Page of Kappa Alpha Psi; James Callahan III of Phi Beta Sigma; Patty Rojas of Zeta Phi Beta Sigma; Lisa Dunn of Alpha Kappa Alpha; Lee Hayward of Delta Sigma Theta; and Brother Andrews of Iota Phi Theta.

Callahan's speech brought together the common goal of each of the black Greek-lettered organizations.

"Organizations don't transform you," he said. "All they do is help you realize who you really are as kings and queens. It is the power of the individual that makes the fraternities grow."

Senior Dan Lizana conducted the awards ceremony, and presented the first award to the ALANA Caucus for all their efforts for the in continuing to help UMass become a place where ALANA students could be proactive in all areas of their education.

The next award was presented to the fraternity of Phi Beta Sigma in recognition for their behind-the-scenes involvement in the Men of Color Conference.

Lastly, Sidonio Ferrera received an award on behalf of CCEBMS for their constant dedication and hard work to students of color.

During an intercession, there were performances by the Cape Verdean Student Alliance and Boundaries.

The night's final speaker was Thomas A. Brown, the president of the Theta Iota Lambda Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha, who talked about how black roots can be traced back to the ancient Greeks.

The party closed out the elegant "Evening on the Nile." The Alphas, who are always active in the UMass community, plan many more upcoming events in the semesters to come.

■ gala

continued from page 1

dance group of Casa. They were followed by the traditional Haitian dance group of Negres Kreyol. Both groups closed out the festivities with two final, explosive performances that garnered a deafening standing ovation.

An award ceremony was held to congratulate the many individuals that helped make Hasa/Casa a success once again. Among some of the recipients were Bien-Aime, Baez, Magalie Lamour, Monique De La Ov and the dancers from Cayena and Negres & Neg Kreyol.

Afterwards, the lights were dimmed and the party began with a mix of Haitian, Dominican and hip hop music dejayed by Rachelle Milord and Saen Mullix.

"This gala is our way of saying to our parents, grandparents, and government officials of both countries that it is time for us to unify and administer changes for a better tomorrow," Bien-Aime said of the evening.

THANG VU/ COLLEGIAN

Going Down?
On a clear day, one might find oneself walking up these stairs to the lookout on top of Mt. Sugarloaf in Sunderland.

■ Flores

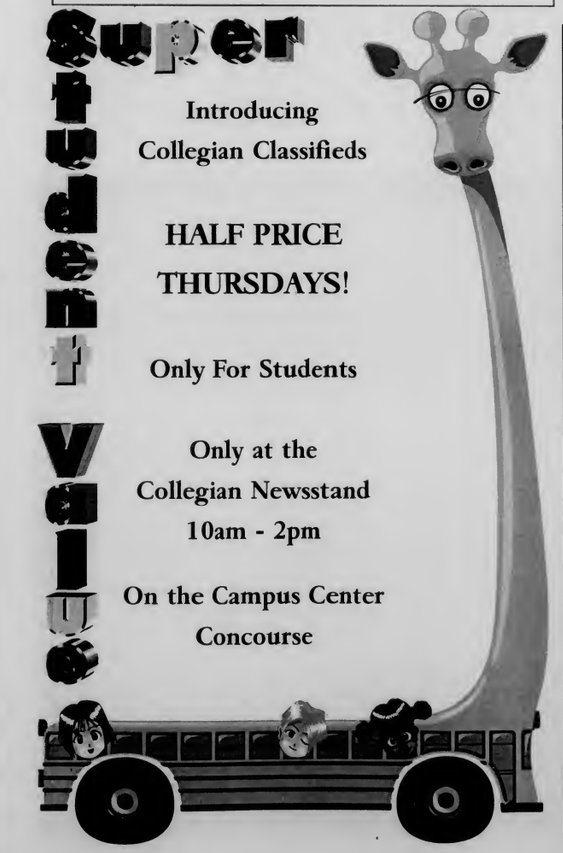
continued from page 1

again. The laws are too weak, without a union they (the workers) have no rights."

The sweatshops do not pay benefits, overtime or medical insurance, Flores said, adding that sexual harrassment is also a problem. "Sometimes my coworkers have to go out with a manager to get a better job," Flores said. "We could go to another shop, but it is the same in every shop, or it could even be worse."



When the laborers did try to unionize, they met severe resistance, according to Mejia. When another shop in L.A. tried to unionize "Guess? stopped contracting out production with that factory, which then lost 90 percent of its income," according to Mejia.

"They did not care that those people had to pay rent, or feed their children," Flores said. "This is exploitation, not just for the workers, but for you the consumers. We are asking you to boycott Guess? until they give the sweatshop laborers a contract."

COLLEGIAN NOW HIRING!!

The Collegian news department is currently accepting applications for Associate News Editors for spring 1997. These paid positions offer interested students extensive writing experience. Associates typically cover the most pressing stories and issues occurring on campus, within the state and throughout the country.

Interested applicants should contact Michael Elliott or Chris Conner at 545-1851, or drop by the Collegian office to pick up a application at 113 Campus Center basement.

Super Student Value

Introducing
Collegian Classifieds

HALF PRICE
THURSDAYS!

Only For Students

Only at the Collegian Newsstand
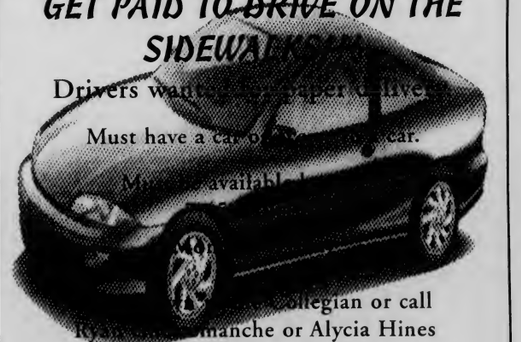
10am - 2pm



On the Campus Center
Concourse

GET PAID TO ~~DRIVE ON THE SIDEWALKS~~

Drivers wanted for paper delivery

Must have a car, valid license, insurance

Must be available [illegible]

[illegible]llegian or call
[illegible]manche or Alycia Hines
545 - 3500

Minuteman Basketball

UMass

UVC-TV 19 proudly presents another year of ESPN on UVC
Look for these basketball games on UVC-TV 19
channel 19 on HSCN.

Including a pre- and post-game show.

The Maui Invitationals

UMass at Chaminade
Nov. 25, 1:30pm
Nov. 26, 6:30pm
Nov. 27 10:00pm

UVC-TV 19 SPORTS

more info: http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~uvctv19

sponsored by: Housing Services Cable Network
Auxilliary Services
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
The Univrsity Store

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief — Chris Taylor Corner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager — G. Tony Morse Production Manager — Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager — Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor
Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renée LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quirk Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independents from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

State should pay for what they own

In a previous column, I began to look at the Service Fee, a $361 fee per semester which goes to cover the cost of a variety of services and resources, including intramural athletics, the cost of athletic tickets, events at the Fine Arts Center and paying off the bonds on various campus buildings.

In this column, I intend to go further in examining the allocation of the funds brought in under this fee and try to determine if students are really getting what they pay for.

According to a service fee breakdown, $406 per year of the fee goes to pay for something called "Authority."

In written information provided by the Budget Office, "The Authority pays for the debt service for various residence halls, the Campus Center, the Student Union Building, the Stadium, the Parking Garage, the Cage, the Mullins Center and the engineering research building."

Daniel E. Levenson

Why are we still helping to pay for the Student Union now when there are plans currently under consideration to construct a new student union building?

This makes less than no sense to me. We are paying for the construction and, partially, the maintenance of a building that is going to be gutted and renovated.

I spoke with Brian Tirrell, speaker of the Student Government Association, about concerns over the proposed addition and renovation.

He suggested that if the University had worked on having the Student Union and Campus Center become more self- sufficient in generating revenue, then students would not have to pay off the debt incurred from its construction. He also noted that the new student union building will not initially cost students any money since funding for its construction is coming from outside the University.

SCERA, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, is leading the effort to renovate the old building and construct a new student union which will be able to better accommodate Registered Student Organizations, already cramped because of lack of space.

According to Mark Kenen, director of SCERA, "Our goal is to renovate this building and build an addition." Kenen made it clear that the group wants to see the new student union addition and renovations built entirely without charging students, but with financial support from the state and outside sources.

The bottom line is that we are paying for what are, in actuality, state-owned buildings. I understand that as students at a University we have to help pay for the cost and upkeep of facilities that we use, but since this is a state-run institution, shouldn't the state government play a larger role in paying for them?

What will happen when private or state funding for new buildings runs out?

Will students have to start paying for it? If students don't foot the bill for buildings when funding runs out, then who will?

Getting back to athletic tickets for a minute, not only does part of the fee go to pay for tickets we are not guaranteed to receive, but also to paying off the debt on the Mullins Center.

Perhaps a better way of dealing with the ticket issue would be instead of making students stand in long lines waiting for something that we aren't promised to get, they should allot each undergraduate a certain number of tickets for the sports which are seemingly in the highest demand, men's basketball and hockey, that the tickets be distributed evenly throughout the student body. With 17,731 undergraduates and 12 basketball home games each student could, if they were distributed evenly, receive 2 basketball tickets per year, and 3 tickets per year for hockey.

It should also be noted that the Authority part of the fee does not necessarily go to pay debt on classrooms, but on things like the Student Union and the Parking Garage. I realize that the University needs buildings for people to use, and that as members of the University community we have a responsibility to help pay for those buildings, but it is very possible to get a quality education without expensive parking spaces or a new Student Union.

In the end, what we all would like to see is a well-maintained campus with quality facilities and services, and if the administration and students are willing to work together, there's no reason this can't be achieved.

It won't come easily, and everyone involved will have to be willing to look at the issues with a critical eye. Students will have to realize that if they don't pay attention to where their money goes, they have no one to blame but themselves for lack of service, and administrators will have to come to the realization that educating students is an investment for the future and not financial gain.

Maybe through the efforts of concerned students and administrators, a happy medium can be achieved, but I doubt it will come soon, and without significant cost to someone.

Daniel E. Levenson is a Collegian columnist.

Fugle impotence

For those of you who are unaware of the BDIC department, the acronym translates to Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration. Within the BDIC program, students synthesize their own major (i.e. concentration) combining two or more departments to create entirely unique, specialized majors. I fused elements of the art and English departments to formulate printmaking and creative writing, or bookarts, aspiring to create my own books.

The BDIC department, English department and my sponsor, a member of the printmaking department (a subdivision of the art department), have all been cooperative and supportive of my endeavors. Unfortunately, the art department, as a whole, has not.

After losing my studio space and being denied the opportunity to participate in a 5-College advanced drawing class, I've come to the conclusion that the art department at this University, preoccupied with the perpetuation of bureaucracy, fails to recognize and respect the interrelationship between BDIC students who integrate art into their concentrations and the art department itself. I was told that I was not entitled to a studio space because I was not an "official" printmaking major (which I interpreted to mean an "official" BFA major).

Cecilia Lim

I was fed the same argument when I went to claim my portfolio for those professors delegated the responsibility of determining who would participate in the Five-College drawing class. I was told flat-out that neither of these two delegates had opened my portfolio to view the artwork contained within.

Their denial of my opportunity would have been justified and understandable if these delegates had indeed reviewed my portfolio and deemed my artwork unsatisfactory for participation in this class. However, their refusal was based solely on the fact that I am a BDIC major and not a BFA major, a member of their elite and exclusive society.

Failure to comprehend and acknowledge the bridge between my BDIC concentration and the art department stems from the desire to adhere to the system of administration recognized by its apparent proliferation of officialism. It's ironic that there exists in the department here such a hierarchy intent on excluding those who are not "official" members of the society when art is hailed for its ability to bring diverse people together. That I am unable to pre-register for any art courses, though art is an integral component of my concentration, is another example of the art department's failure to comprehend, recognize and respect the intimate relationship between BDIC concentrations that utilize the art department and the art department itself. By comparison, the English department includes BDIC majors in its opportunities to pre-register.

The art department's inability to recognize BDIC students' relation to them is indicative of a greater concern: the inability to recognize the intense dedication and motivation of BDIC students, students who initiate an active role in the formulation of their education. The art department's insensitivity and disrespect towards the plight of BDIC students embodies society's intolerance of those who are "different," individuals seeking to shape and mold themselves. That my ability is not considered, but only my "official" status, evidences the perpetuation of immobility in this society.

My rejection by this University's art department serves only to affirm my feelings of displacement and alienation as a BDIC student. It is painful and discouraging to know that your needs can not be accommodated; that there is no support for you because of strict adherence to bureaucratic means; that, at an institution of education, you are denied opportunities to be educated because of your "official" status.

I write because I am unable to audibly express my frustration and sadness at the art department's impotence. Perhaps it is better this way, my written voice for you who experience similar disappointments to know you're not alone.

Cecilia Lim is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor

Some recognition for the police

To the editor:

Thanks to Suzanne Barber for her "Cat and mouse" editorial giving credit to Amherst police officers. I hope everyone read past the first two columns, in which you describe behavior of officers elsewhere, to the third column, in which you tell a great story about one of ours.

Our officers are not hostile to students. Most of them are college graduates and remember being students themselves. Our Police Department has long had a policy of dealing with student "disturbances" in as low-key a manner as possible.

I call to the attention of your readers one small sentence in the editorial: "It was still warm outside and we were loud." That sentence sums up the most frequent and most sensitive issue between townspeople and students (pardon the dichotomy, which I know is not always fair.) Students like to be loud late, particularly, but not only when alcohol is involved.

Almost no one in Amherst objects to being disturbed occasionally by students having good, loud, clean, fun. The problem arises when some of our citizens (some of whom are also students) because of where they live are disturbed two or three nights a week for weeks at a time. When the police receive a complaint, they have noise by-laws to enforce. They begin by asking that the noise be reduced; they issue citations only when their requests are ignored; and they make arrests only when a serious confrontation ensues.

Please help improve relations among yourselves, the police and all the citizens of Amherst by having a little consideration while you're having a lot of fun.

Barry L. Del Castilho
Amherst Town Manager

Send your Letters to the Editor to:
Mark McGrath, c/o the Collegian
113 Campus Center Basement/ UMass

Taking a look at societal ills

Imagine no possessions/ I wonder if you can/ No hell below us/ A brotherhood of man/ Imagine all the people, sharing all the world/ You may say I'm a dreamer/ But I'm not the only one/ I hope someday you'll join us/ And the world will live as one.

John Lennon wrote these words in one of my favorite songs. Every time it's played, I find it difficult not to think of all the problems we face.

Joseph Fountain

At a crucial point in the development of America, its social ills of must be addressed. We must reflect and tackle these problems as individuals for the future to be successful. We must also stop playing the politics of class and race and simply attack the problem and not the people who are suffering from the problem.

In 1993, when I ran for Springfield City Council, our most important endeavor was a "Youth Build" type project. The problem that needed to be attacked by such a program was the high school dropout rate. It would have taken kids who were at risk of dropping out of school or had already dropped out of school and put them back in.

The idea was to give them jobs and teach them a trade while going to school. The kids would work in construction jobs with trained people rebuilding blighted houses and buildings in poor neighborhoods.

Community development is important because if all you ever see is slums, it's hard to get past that and believe that work will get you out of that place. It's also important for young people to feel and know they have an investment in their communities — that they are not "just the problem," but can and should be part of the solution.

Infant mortality was possibly the toughest subject to deal with in that election. Springfield has one of the worst infant mortality rates in the state. There is no reason in the world for any children in Springfield or anywhere else to die because they don't get pre-natal care. It is insane that so many people can work in the Department of Health as children are still dying because of ignorance.

Here at UMass, the biggest project that I am working on is childcare. The school needs to expand and develop new types of care for all students. This isn't only a problem for the University — all across America women are having to make the choice between kids and career.

Wouldn't it be nice if maternity leave turned into maternity areas, where instead of a woman having to give up her job she could work, bring her child with her and could nurse the baby on the job? Her work wouldn't have to stop unless she wanted it to.

Someday, I'd like to see childcare programs offered in public schools. Not necessarily free, but at such a reduced rate that cities and town wouldn't complain of the cost, and more parents would be allowed the room for careers. I've heard the idea of mandated childcare, but I'm not sure in a country that could actually allow children to starve while so many fat cats fill their faces would ever pay for mandated child care.

School breakfast and lunch programs should also be expanded. We live in a strange world where not everyone is equal when it comes to the simple things like getting something to eat before going to school. If you want kids to do well in school you have to make sure they've eaten a good meal. It has been proven that kids who eat breakfast do better in school.

The big-wigs in Congress eat pretty well at the public trough. Why shouldn't poor kids eat a little better too?

Today is my birthday and I am the ripe old age of 24. I am a senior political science major at this University, and I am at mid-mid age. I figure I should live to be 96, unless I get hit by a bus or something. At this point of retrospection, I wanted to reflect on some of the projects that I have worked on in the past and projects I hope to in the future. Birthdays are funny in that they remind us of our mortality and our failures and our successes. The goal of course to have more successes than failures.

Robert Kennedy once said, "Some people look at America as is it is and ask why; I look at America as it might be and ask why not." Imagine the best America that can be and then make it happen.

Joseph Fountain is a Collegian staff member.

Letters to the Editor

Harmful stereotypes unfair to everyone

To the editor:

Last month an African-American UMass student, Pierre Elysee, was falsely accused of shoplifting from the University Store. A recent letter to the editor of the Collegian maintained that this incident had nothing to do with racism.

In fact, the writer implied that Pierre had somehow brought that accusation upon himself. The letter stated: "It seems like people bring themselves into these situations by making themselves look suspicious... There are certain things you could do to avoid doing that would bring attention to yourself in a store."

While it is true that not every false accusation of an African-American is automatically racist, it is also true that racism might very well be a contributing factor. One of the best television features I have ever seen helped me, as a non-black, understand the effect of race in situations like what may have taken place in the University Store.

ABC News, I believe, selected two University of Michigan students who were alike in every detail— socioeconomic status, academic achievement, family background — except race. One student was white, the other was black. These two students separately tried to rent an apartment from the same landlord, buy the same car at a dealership, shop in the same store and so on. Each interaction was recorded on hidden camera.

The results were deeply troubling. On the same day that the landlord told the black student that there were no apartments for rent in his building, he showed the white student an apartment that was available. The car dealer quoted a higher price and more stringent terms to the black student than to the white student. In every situation, the black student received markedly worse treatment than his white counterpart. The documentary made it absolutely clear that the only thing that made the black student look "suspicious" to the white salespeople and landlord was the color of his skin.

While we ought not automatically assume that what happened to the African-American student in the University Store was a manifestation of racism, we cannot automatically rule it out either. Even if our view of ourselves is that we would not treat people negatively based on the color of their skin, we must allow for that possibility in others and in ourselves as well. In some of our simplest day-to-day interactions, we may inadvertently cause pain and humiliation to others, and not even know it.

I can only try to imagine the pain and frustration that African-Americans feel when they are singled out for unfair and humiliating treatment. When those who are the victims of such experiences speak up, even at the very real risk of being blamed for the ill-treatment they received, they help us as a community move toward greater sensitivity and understanding.

In that regard, I want to bring our attention to an ongoing source of distress and pain that I and many other jews experience on this campus that also has to do with the articles that have appeared in the Collegian.

It is appropriate and healthy that political differences of all sorts be addressed in those pages and elsewhere on campus. Space should be fairly and equitably allocated for the expression of various views, and the same rules should apply to all. Differences ought to be aired without victimizing those with whom one disagrees.

As a Jew, I find most of the articles about Israel written on the Multicultural Affairs and Developing Nations pages of the Collegian to be insulting and hurtful, let alone filled with too many inaccuracies to be taken up here. They cross the line of fair, balanced and reasonable discourse. It is troubling to note that one-sided condemnations of Israel are the only articles ever allocated page-long discourses by one author anywhere in the Collegian. Only an article that is critical of Israel is printed with illustrations in multiple colors, as in the Collegian of October 22. Further, the articles are insulting and demeaning to anyone who might have a different perspective. The scorn heaped upon those who disagree goes far beyond the issues of the debate.

Opposing views are dismissed variously as "professional propagandists" (Collegian, Nov. 12, p. 5) or people who "have absolutely no commitment whatsoever to the truth"(Collegian, Nov. 12, p. 5). We are told that "the racist psychopathology associated with Israel remains a common affliction among supporters of Israel" (Collegian, Nov. 12, p. 5). These negative characterizations, as well as descriptions of Israel as "a parasite that thinks nothing of biting the hand that feeds it" or "a monster that is out of control," (both from Collegian, Oct 1, p. 5) contribute nothing to a constructive debate about the best and fairest ways to achieve peace in the Middle East. Instead they demonize Israel, and those who voice support for it are characterized as defective people who spread "blatant lies, distortions, and misinformation as a matter of course." (Collegian, Nov. 12, p. 5).

Is this any way to carry on an enlightened debate? Must anyone who has a different view about Israel be demeaned and ostracized in the same ways that Jews have been historically scapegoated? Jews have been victimized as monsters, parasites, sick or abnormal — the same accusations that are used in these articles criticizing Israel and its supporters. These are hurtful stereotypes, adding nothing to the debate, but continuing to perpetrate suspicions and prejudice about those who are different or express different views.

Stereotypes are harmful. They promote guilt or suspicion simply for being a member of a race or religion or nation. They can lead to false accusations and public humiliation in a store, or vilification of a people and a country in a newspaper. In place of victimization, stereotyping and scapegoating, we can try to move toward respecting, appreciating and even celebrating the different races and nations and religions that make our world so vibrant and fascinating.

Rabbi Saul Permutter
Northampton

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Editor-in-Chief
Managing Editor
Arts & Living Editor
Black Affairs Editor
Developing Nations Editor
Editorial/Opinion Editor
Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Editor
Jewish Affairs Editor
Multicultural Affairs Editor
News Editor
Photography Editor
Sports Editor
Women's Issues Editor
Night and Copy Editors

APPLICATIONS FOR THESE POSITIONS ARE NOW BEING ACCEPTED

Applications may be entered for any combination of positions except Editor-in-Chief and Managing Editor.

VOTE

Candidate's Night will be held on Dec. 2 at a time to be announced, and the elections will be held on Dec. 3

APPLICATIONS SHOULD BE PUT IN THE MANAGING EDITOR'S MAILBOX BY 5PM TODAY

Election
December 3
1996
TO CONTINUE YOUR VOTING
GO TO NEXT PAGE

A LIST OF WHO IS APPLYING FOR ALL POSITIONS WILL BE POSTED LATER TODAY.

MADE IN U.S.A.

Arts & Living

Wooten's bass holds the groove

By Joshua Boyd
Collegian Staff

VICTOR WOOTEN
Iron Horse
Nov. 22

Playing to a packed house on Friday night, bassist Victor Wooten, with drummer J.D. Blair, brought the crowd some music and a stage act that many may have not seen before. This was definitely not the ordinary, everynight show. Wooten and Blair actually looked like they were having...fun.

Mr. Wooten (with rhythm bass accompaniment by himself via samplers, which he let the audience know he was using) ran some utterly funky, some moody and some just plain bizarre bass lines with Blair's tom-tomless drumming, especially on songs like "You Can't Hold No Groove If You Ain't Got No Pockets."

Wooten showed how diverse his musical styles were on Friday night, dipping into a little rap (the mellow "Justice" being well-enjoyed by the large audience), as well as blues and classically-influenced bass playing. There were also quite a few bass lines reminiscent of his full-time work in Bela Fleck & The Flecktones, a band that balances an odd mix of bluegrass and jazz styles.

Despite his Flecktones membership, this was Wooten's night. However, drummer Blair, quite a charismatic guy himself, constantly held conversation with Wooten by way of headset microphones, and was as much a presence on stage as Wooten was. At one point in the show, he even picked up the bass, and Wooten took up the sticks and, with instruments switched, they still put out some great danceable music. Aside from many bands nowadays cashing in on the two/three-chord alternative scam, Wooten and Blair are actually great, utterly talented musicians.

One complaint about the show here is the length of it. Wooten's bass solo near the end of the two-hour set (which proved to be exhaustive, especially packed into a hot place, standing all the while) lasted at least half an hour. His abilities are astounding, with his playing producing odd harmonics, overtones and complicated lines, but he went at it a little bit too long. As it was well after midnight and much of the crowd were students who had just finished a long week of classes and the like, there were more than a few yawns going around near the end of the solo spot.

Other than the length, the show was quite a success. Wooten balanced live bass with sampled and the two musicians conjured up sampled vocals from James Brown and even themselves from Wooten's acclaimed debut solo album from this fall, A Show Of Hands. Their exciting personalities kept the crowd going — at least for the first hour-and-half.

ELIZABETH BROWN/COLLEGIAN

The UMass Theater Guild put on Neil Simon's Rumors this past weekend.

Guild shines in Neil Simon production

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

RUMORS
Bowker Auditorium
Nov. 23

Bowker Auditorium was filled Saturday night as the University of Massachusetts Theater Guild concluded its four-day run of Neil Simon's Rumors.

Rumors, a hilarious farce about high society, was pulled off wonderfully by the Guild, with spectacular performances from the entire cast.

Rumors was set in Sneden's Landing at Charlie and Myra's house. Charlie and Myra are throwing a tenth anniversary party, but when their guests begin to arrive, they find that Charlie has shot himself through the ear, while Myra and the servants are missing.

First on the scene are Chris and Ken Gorman (Tara McRae and Chris Cook). The Gormans are try-

Turn to RUMORS, page 7

Rent captures heart & soul of bohemia

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

RENT
Schubert Theater
Nov. 21

BOSTON — Every now and then a musical hits Broadway with the potential to save musical theater from itself. The Pulitzer Prize and Tony award-winning best musical, Rent, is such a musical.

Lately, musical theater has lost touch with its audiences. Light-hearted scores were buoyed by happily-ever-after stories. The Tony award winning musicals Crazy For You and How to Succeed in Business fall into that category. While this type of musical theater promises a good time, emotional response to the show is almost non-existent.

Rent elicits the emotions that have been missing from musical theater for a long time.

Written as a rock opera, Rent is about a group of bohemian artist-types trying to struggle with the day-to-day task of just living. Leaving nothing out, Rent manages to blend together homosexual lifestyles, poverty, homelessness, death, AIDS, drugs and drag queens in a sophisticated mix. While there is the potential for Rent to degenerate into crassness, it never does.

The original Broadway cast, made up of virtual unknowns, burst onto the scene this past January, performing under the most difficult and emotional of circumstances. Jonathan Larson, who wrote the book, lyrics and music for the production, died suddenly of an aortic aneurysm on the night Rent was supposed to open off-off Broadway.

When the production began to prepare for a second cast, there was a slight question of whether the Boston cast would be able to match Broadway's emotional intensity.

The Boston cast has more than met the expectations and standards of the original. The new cast is led by Sean Keller, who plays the bitter, HIV-positive Roger. Roger hasn't been outside of the apartment he shares with Mark Cohen (Luther Creek) in seven months, strumming his guitar in an attempt to achieve "One Song Glory" before he dies.

Roger is shaken out of his depression when the sultry and sensuous Mimi Marquez (Simon) enters his life, asking if he would "Light My Candle."

Stephen Alexander, playing the good-hearted drag queen Angel steals the show with his funk-laced "Today 4 U," about the mysterious death of an akita named Evita. Carrie Hamilton plays Maureen, the self-absorbed ex-girlfriend of Mark and current girlfriend of Joanne (Sylvia MacCalla). Mark and Joanne lament Maureen's selfishness in "Tango Maureen," but Maureen gets her own in with "Take Me or Leave Me."

Rent is a highly sensuous, anguished musical with turbulent, yet joyous undertones. It is far from perfection, but in its flaws, it has succeeded in conveying its messages and lessons about life.

Rent will continue at the Shubert Theater until Jan. 26. Call for times and tickets at (800) 447-7400.

WorldTeach is looking for people who have a mind to travel.
WorldTeach
Call 1-(800)4-TEACH-O

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
WHERE PERFECTION IS ACHIEVED EACH AND EVERYDAY!!!

Texas Graduate School of International Management
1yr International MBA
Texas, Costa Rica, Europe
Semester Starting
Jan. 13, 1997
Phone 1-512-888-8885
Fax 1-512-888-6005

Eating Disorder Programs
Fall 1995-96
Sponsored by University Health Services

Eating Disorder Assessment Program
For individuals- with Nutritionist, Mental Health Clinician, Physician and/or Nurse Practitioner. Tuesdays or Fridays- Confidentiality Assured. Call 577-5233, General Medicine 2.

Friends and Family Group
Single sessions for those concerned about somebody with an eating disorder. Call 577-5233, General Medicine 2.

Peer Support Group
For those struggling with anorexia, bulimia or compulsive overeating. Wednesday 4:30-6pm, at the Campus Center. Room number posted by elevator. Confidentiality assured. Call 577-5233, General Medicine 2.

Peer Health Connections
A confidential phone line for help around eating disorders- yourself or someone you know. Call 577-5168

Available on the Campus Center Concourse.

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE DISCOUNT OIL
Northampton / Holyoke
584-4112 • 535-1888
SAME DAY DELIVERY

Auto Glass Center
• Same Day Service
• Billed Directly To Insurance Company
• Windshields Replaced
North Amherst Motors
A Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass)

The Right Place to Be!
3 Barbers Everyday
Unisex Hair Styling
Jim & Gabe
Guys & Gals
Clipper Cuts
Layer Cuts
Razor Cuts
Flat Tops
Kid Cuts
Fades
Appointment Not Necessary
Amherst Barbers
Tel. 253-1722
40 Main Street, Amherst, MA
(Next to Newbury Comics)
Tom & Terri
Hours: Mon – Fri 8 – 5:15pm
Sat 8 - 2:45pm
Proprietors: Jim Reed and Terri Loncrini

There are College Boards and there are college boards.
We give extra credit with ours.

50%* off Stratton's lift tickets.
College Blast Week: 1/5-1/17/96 - Lifts & Lodging $40
Simply present your valid college I.D. and receive an early season, late season or midweek lift ticket for only '22 – that's a full 50% off – or a weekend/holiday lift ticket for $5 less than your non-matriculating friends. Just think of all of the educational things you'll be able to do with your savings.
• $8 million snowmaking expansion
• New England's only six-passenger high-speed chairlift
• New "Stratton Unplugged" Mountain Adventure Parks
You're in college. Do something smart. Do Stratton.
http://www.stratton.com 1-800-STRATTON
STRATTON
Vermont's Mountain Resort
* All with valid college I.D.; College Blast Week: 2, 3 or 4 br condo; rates based on maximum occupancy per unit; rates are per person per day; 4 day minimum, midweek only

EXPERT AUTO BODY REPAIRS, AUTO PAINTING and GLASS REPLACEMENT
MARSHALL STEINBECK
PROFESSIONAL COLLISION WORK
• OVEN BAKED URETHANE FINISHES
• FREE ESTIMATES & CLAIMS ASSISTANCE
• INSURANCE APPROVED GLASS REPLACEMENT
• PROFESSIONAL UNIBODY REPAIR AND FRAME STRAIGHTENING
256-8157 256-1385
53 South Prospect Street, Amherst, Massachusetts

Minutewomen trounce GW, Va Tech

By Steven Grant
Collegian Staff

Thanks to this past weekend, the Massachusetts Minutewomen may not be celebrating their third straight 20- win season at the end of the year. Instead, if things go the way they like, the post-season partying focus will be on the program's first 30-win season since 1986.

Coach Bonnie Kenny's gals (28-8, 15-5 A-10) squeezed out a couple of Atlantic 10 victories, juicing up both the win column and some momentum for the upcoming A-10 tourney, as the regular season has concluded.

MASSACHUSETTS	3
VIRGINIA TECH	1

Mass defeats George Washington, 3–2

In this one, an A-10 has–been fell to an A-10 still–is in a flip–flop (15–10, 14–16, 15–4, 4–15, 15–13) battle of teams headed in different directions.

The Lady Colonials, who lost last year's conference player of the year, Svetlana Vyurina, to graduation, are now a meager 13–20, 9–11 A–10. UMass, however, has won 10 of eleven and five straight, and is cruising into the playoffs.

Senior Dionne Nash, who will never play a regular–season match again, posted 15 kills and 15 digs for UMass, which finished 15–5 in the conference.

Junior Michelle Paciorek and freshman Jill Meyers added 10 kills each, while freshman Kari Hogancamp earned 12 kills and 23 digs. Sophomore setter Katie Pearce recorded 65 assists to set the pace.

UMass defeats Virginia Tech, 3–1

Despite dropping game one, and falling behind 6–0 in game two, the Minutewomen, led by Nash, dug deep and won the match, 8–15, 15–12, 15–13, 15–9.

The constant improvement of the freshmen has been evident, as career–highs have been popping up all season long. That trend continued in this match.

Friday marked the first time Hogancamp posted 16 kills, and also had 28 digs to boot. Meyers' 27 digs was a career–high for her, too. Even better, she broke the school's single–season record for blocks with 120, while earning 12 kills.

What's more, Pearce got into the act with 22 digs, a career–best, and stayed true to form with 52 assists.

But the Hokies had the most trouble with Nash, whose 22 kills was a match high. The outside hitter also tallied 17 digs. Watters chipped in 20 digs.

It's now impossible for the Hokies (15–16, 9–10 A–10) to finish .500 in the conference or overall. They were led by Meredith Braine, who collected 15 kills and 24 digs, both team–highs.

Volleyball Notes... UMass will be the No. 4 seed in the four team tourney, which starts Nov. 29... They've beaten the top two seeds in the regular season... UMass swept the season series with VTech... Both the Hokies and Minutewomen hit .164. Quite a coincidence, but not a very telling stat, considering the outcome. Also strange, VTech had more blocks and assists than UMass, made less errors, and earned only three less kills. Kenny's crew had the clear advantage in digs however, 133–103... Already, the 28 wins is the most under Kenny, who took over the reinstated program in 1993.

■ men's basketball

continued from page 10

year. Averaging only 16.3 minutes per game throughout his career, Weeks has averaged five boards a game in two years as a Minuteman.

The answer to everyone's question: Who will take the tip replacing last year's All–American, now Toronto Raptor Marcus Camby? In today's match, it will be junior Inus Norville, with 6–foot–10, 270 pound sophomore Lari Ketner coming off the bench.

The lone rookie in the starting line up will be small forward Winston Smith. Rated as one of the nation's top 60 high school prospects last year, he scored over 1,650 points and grabbed 830 boards in his three years at St. Patrick's in Elizabeth, N.J.

The UMass/Chaminade game is the first of four opening round contests today. In other Maui Invitational action, South Carolina meets Virginia, No. 2 Kansas meets LSU and No. 23 Iowa meets California. If the Minutemen rout Chaminade in the first round, they will play the winner of the South Carolina/Virginia matchup tomorrow at 2 p.m.

■ rumors

continued from page 6

ing to figure out what has happened here and what to tell the others when the classic yuppie couple of Lenny and Claire Ganz (played by Tim McKeon and Jenn Bean) arrive. Other guests include Cassie and Glenn Cooper (Darcie Dennigan and Chris Rohrer) and Cookie and Ernie Cusack (Susan Boyle and Justin Smith).

While Rumors owed its humor to its author, the play itself succeeded because of the talented cast.

McKeon stole the show, regaling the police officers who show up with a fantastic, off–the–cuff explanation of what happened to Charlie and Myra.

With plenty of slapstick comedy, high–pitched shrieks and facial expressions, the cast managed to convey the absurdity and silliness of high society life.

The Theater Guild's next performance will be Dec. 5–7 in the Student Union Ballroom. For more information call 545– 0415 or visit 423A Student Union.

■ streak

continued from page 10

action, and alleviated some of O'Brien's concerns about a backcourt missing senior co–captain Beth Kuzmeski, who will be out for the next three weeks with a sprained foot.

"I just tried to come out and play hard," Van Huisen said. "Once I step on the court I'm not a freshman."

OSU coach Nancy Darsch praised the Minutewomen's effort.

"They played hard and feisty and that's just what we expected of them," she said.

■ women's basketball

continued from page 10

the lead and pulled to within four at 19–15 on a Kelly Van Huisen jumper.

Van Huisen, shouldering most of the burden felt by the loss of Kuzmeski, was the Minutewomen's catalyst all afternoon. The freshman point guard tallied 14 points and dished out five assists, but had nine turnovers trying to force the ball down low, sometimes passing up the open shot.

Thrust into the starting line–up, Van Huisen is playing a large role early in her UMass career.

"[The coaches and I] really didn't talk about what my role was going to be. I just have to go out hard, strong and play a solid game," Van Huisen said. "Like coach has been telling me, once I step on the court I'm not a freshman anymore."

Van Huisen was the floor general for the better part of the Minutewomen's big rally early in the second half in which they drew to within a single bucket at 45–44.

Senior forward Crystal Carroll was the major beneficiary of Van Huisen's solid transition play. Carroll opened the second half by dropping a 10–footer and scoring from a Van Huisen dish on the very next offensive series.

Then Van Huisen drove the lane herself, had her shot blocked, got the ball back and laid it in through the forest of Buckeye defenders, pulling the Minutewomen within four.

With starters Kara Tudman and Sabriya Mitchell on the bench with four fouls and Carroll playing with three, sophomore Yolanda Rayside stepped up, pulling down a team–high six rebounds. Her biggest board came off the offensive glass with 8:40 to go as she put back the miss, bringing UMass within one.

Darsch was forced to call a time–out, as the momentum pendulum was swinging heavily in the Minutewomen's direction, and the 1,635 that occupied the William D. Mullins center could smell Buckeye blood.

Diminutive Ohio State point guard Marcie Alberts hit two crucial three–pointers to silence the UMass faithful, and effectively bury the Minutewomen.

Alberts was not shy with letting the treys fly as she launched 13 attempts, connecting on five to account for her 15 points on the day. Alberts dished out four assists, but more importantly committed no turnovers in 37 minutes of playing time.

"It was kind of an off day," Alberts said. "I had a lot of open shots. I hit a couple [towards the end of the game] and my teammates kept looking for me."

Alberts' 15 points led the Buckeyes, while Carroll notched a game–high 23 points before fouling out with under two minutes to go. Carroll shot 10–for–16 from the floor and pulled down five rebounds, three off the offensive glass.

The Minutewomen don't have a lot of time to regroup. They head back into battle on Tuesday in Connecticut to take on Fairfield University. Then over Thanksgiving break, UMass will participate in the Hartford Courant Connecticut Classic, where they will clash with UConn.

■ UMass

continued from page 10

boom–boom," Rudy said. "But actually, the one at Harvard looked more in from the way the ball spinned. It's too bad, because in another few minutes, we would have been ready to pull Erin Lynch. She would have come forward, and tried to take a crack in the last five minutes."

For another representative of one of UMass' top graduating classes in history, Amy Powell just knew that the team did their best to not have a call decide the match.

"In the second half, we came out strong and gave it our all... I don't know," Powell said. "You come out losing the first half, and now you only have 45 minutes left. We figured that out, and we just played how we knew how to play. No tactics. No systems. Just all out 100–percent. We gave it all we had but they just had more today."

"It was a fabulous four years. We made it to the tournament every year, and the final four the first year. But it all comes down to the tournament. We played a good Harvard game, came out and played a good second half, but we couldn't put the ball into the net today. So, we go home."

■ women's soccer

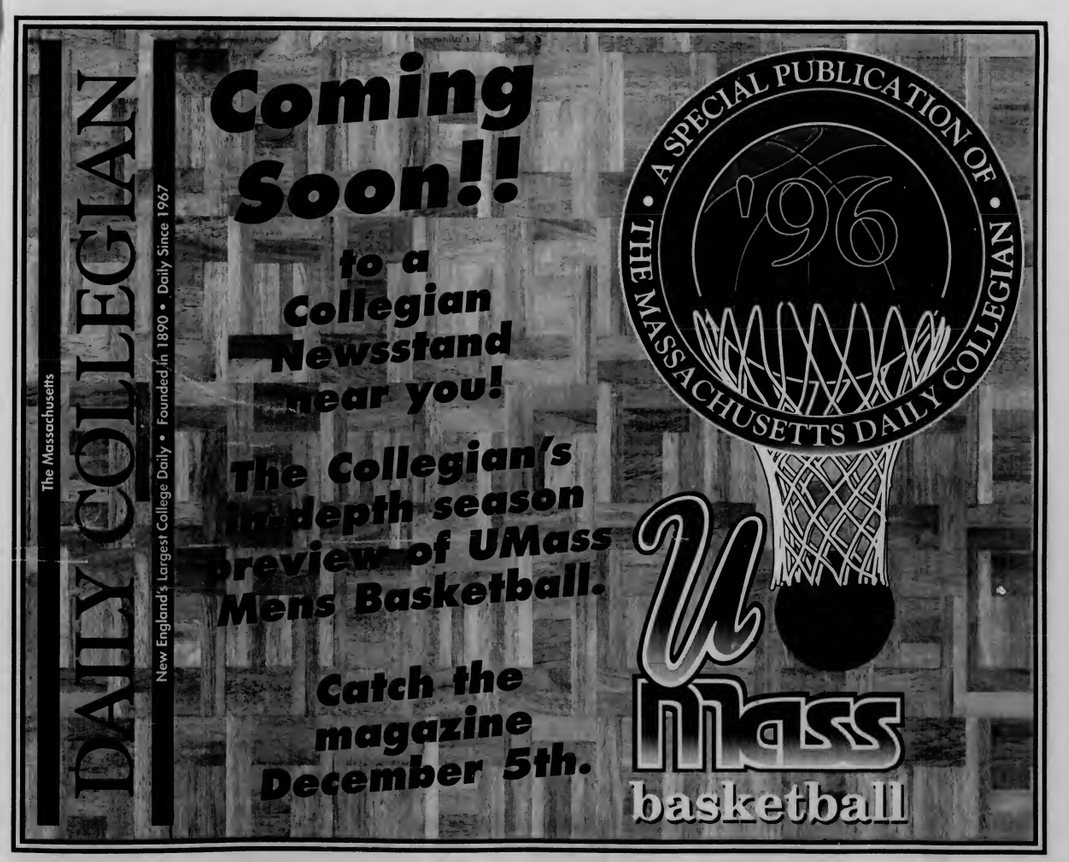
continued from page 10

With the UMass defense constantly worried about the swarming blue and white bodies around it, the Minutewoman offense never had a chance to produce.

"We didn't really have an offense," striker Emma Kurowski said. "It felt like we were playing defense the whole time. They just didn't allow us to get the ball and turn [upfield] at all."



The second half was more evenly played, but the Huskies would prevail in the end. UMass had its best–scoring opportunities on a pair of corner kicks in the 57th minute, and on shots by Julie Magid, Sandy Shimogaki and Lynch.

The Minutewomen, a majority of whom were fighting off nagging injuries, battled as well as they could against a strong opponent and despite the loss, the team, its six seniors in particular, felt no shame in their final efforts.

"We went down fighting," Rudy said. "That first half we got the ya–ya's out of our system after that I was very proud of the way they fought from here. I know how many times those people had to stop in the middle of training this week and how little they did [due to their injuries].

"Considering what we had in terms of health on the field, we did about the best that we could."

"We just came out [in the second half] and gave it our all and played like we know how to play," said Powell, a senior tri–captain completing a stand–out career with both the soccer and softball teams, who will be missed by many. "No tactics. No systems. Just all out 100–percent. We gave it all we had but they just had more today."

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CHINESE FOOD Kai Chi delivering Sunday-Thursday to 2am, Friday and Saturday to 3am

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take Over Lease 1/97 One bedroom, uptown ect Great location, Amherst Center Call 253-4781

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

'85 1/2 Ford Escort for $250! High miles, runs perfectly - only needs manifold repair Call Mike at 549-5205 (leave a message)

1986 Oldsmobile Delta 88 Great car, low price- $500 Call Chris 549-0564

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER CAMP! CO-ED Sleepaway! Many COUNSELOR POSITIONS AVAILABLE! We need role models, sensitive, caring and skilled staff members FOR THE BEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE! in NE Pennsylvania's Pocono Mts. call (800)161-WANDA or E-mail towander@intercamp.com or visit our Web S i t e

EMPLOYMENT

http://www.intercamp.com/towanda for information, application and to schedule an interview. This is a great camp and an awesome experience. Camp Towanda, Honesdale, PA

Campaign Jobs for the Environment: Part-time jobs now, full- time over break Earn $50-$75/day $250-$400/week Fun, casual atmosphere. Work with MASSPIRG to stop pollution Learn alot. Call Terri 256-6434.

Mullins Center seeks 20-30 reliable people to work event staff. Availability during Intersession preferred. Apply in person Mullins Center 2nd Floor by Nov 26.

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide! Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $75-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals Waterfront houses. Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL DOG - MISTRCATED - NEEDS A LOVING OWNER PLEASE INQUIRE @ 256-6909

Snowboard for sale Burton Twin Tip 139 with bindings $200 or best offer Call Rose 6-5538

Complete 5 CD stereo system! 5 band graphic equalizer, dual tape deck and powerful receiver $750 or B/O Call Craig 546-6811

TREK 800 Green Mtn Bike Bought $425.00/Sell $200 Steve 6-1996

MAC Centris 610 8MB RAM 80MB HD Full page monitor (gray scale) External fax modem Ethernet card Call Fernao 549-3927 Price negotiable

New York Knick Tickets for sale Vs Seattle, San Antonio, Indiana (888)602-0774 (pager)

FOUND

Found- Ladies Gold Timex watch in Bartlett 11/21 Call Dawn 665-9088

HOUSE FOR RENT

Secluded Rivarfront Home N Green River ARTISTS INN Residence Living or Studio Space Avail! Immed Part-Furnished 14x24' $350/mo or 20x24' $375/mo + % util., sec. dep., references, some pets ok, gas heat, wash/dry, snow mvl, kitchen cathedral ceiling, fireplace, balcony East Colrain, 20 min/GFLD, 40 min/UMass 624-3928

Amherst Belchertown line 4 bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area Available now 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

Boxing Three private 1/2 hour lessons $68.95 Call 732-8817 In Amherst Tues. & Thurs. Eve.

LOST

Lost 11-19-96 Woman's Gold Wrist Watch- Citizen Contact at 5-1015. Thanks

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed $35 800-776-9503 Doctor Approved

PERSONALS

LAUR - I'm out of my mind you're out of town - JTM

ROOM FOR RENT

2 Outgoing girls seek person(s) to rent large bedroom in uptown apt Great location, in great condition Start Jan 1 Contact Tricia/LB 549-3649 ASAP

Sublease my room for the Spring Semester Really close to campus! 549-5920

Looking for a Female to share an apartment in South Amherst on the bus route Call 253-6405 Available Winter-session and/or Spring

Sunderland 1BR in 2BR Apt $315.00 + utilities Must find someone before Thanksgiving for Spring term or Jan 1. 665-4394

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommates Wanted: One or two males to share rant at Brandywine Apts Starts January 1st Call Bryan 549-4591

SERVICES

GORILLAGRAMS Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, etc Send the crazy gorilla We'll go anywhere, anytime!! Student rates available! Call 256-0287

SERVICES

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info

CAR NEED REPAIR? Let me come to you! Student Rates 665-4790

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK TRIPS Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida. Best prices, best parties. GROUP DISCOUNTS Space is limited. For free brochure CALL TODAY 1-800-95-4SUN

Spring Break America's Premier Student Travel Co.! Party in Cancun & Nassau from $299!! Find out how to go for free and earn cash!!! Call (800)798-1509

Killington Ski House needs housemates $500.00 for entire season 549-8924

TRAVEL

$$ Cruise Ships Hiring $$ Travel free. Exotic places. Save $$$! Seasonal/Permanent. No experience necessary. Travel/Employment Directory. Free Info! Act now! HTTP:\\WWW.Tropical-Destinations.com Brett @ Tropical-Destinations.com (413)625-6487

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, FL Earn 2 credits! March 15-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm, Herter 227 Call Project DEEP @ (800)282-0877

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info. (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

Wanted- Tutor for AUTO CAD Realease13 Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment", call Carolina at 548-5269 for more info. Identity confidential upon request.

WANTED

Mattress Wanted QUEEN Call Eugenia 545-3768

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

W	E	A	N		J	U	M	P		G	R	E	E	K
R	A	T	E		E	T	A	L		Y	E	M	E	N
I	V	E	S		D	E	S	I		M	O	I	R	E
T	E	N	T	S		S	H	E	D	S		L	I	L
			S	I	R		E	S	E		M	E	E	T
J	A	W		C	A	R	R		L	E	E
O	L	E	O		S	A	S	S		P	A	T	T	I
G	A	L	L	O	P	S		A	M	A	T	E	U	R
S	I	T	A	R		H	E	M	I		Y	A	N	K
		N	E	G		Y	E	L	L		M	A	S	S
R	E	E	D		E	T	E		L	I	B
O	R	R		I	T	A	L	Y		P	I	N	C	H
C	R	O	W	N		C	A	A	N		T	A	R	A
K	O	D	A	K		O	S	L	O		E	T	O	N
S	L	E	D	S		S	H	E	M		S	O	W	S

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Runner Budd
5. Light bulb power
9. Radio
13. Monogram part abbr
14. Hooded snake
15. Sad news note
16. Marrow
17. Be of value to
18. Dracula costume
19. Before chase or jack
21. LP. informally
23. Peona's st.
24. Recital piece
25. Roping, cowboy-style
30. Deteriorate
34. Art course abbr
35. River to the Mediterranean
37. Henry Fowler's concern
38. Exported insecticide abbr
39. Disregarded
41. Refrain syllable
42. Sevarand at al
44. "Pleasure's ___ (Dryden) (2 wds.)
45. Afrikaner
46. Daughter on "Cosby"
48. Domestics
50. Dominate
52. Poet's "above"
53. Camouflage
56. South central Pennsylvania city
60. Vocalized
61. Risk
63. December song
64. "___ anarchy is loosed upon tha world" (Yeats)
65. Oodles
66. Biblical scribe
67. Pitcher Dennis "Oil Can"
68. Feminine suffix
69. Spreads hay

DOWN

1. Moves quickly
2. Sleep ___ (postpone s decision) (2 wds.)
3. Fossil suffix
4. Nonbeliever
5. Used a loom
6. "The ___ Date Honeymoon"
7. Causes a fall
8. Candle ingredient
9. Fu Manchu and Frankenstein
10. Blind as ___ (2 wds.)
11. Cry of pain
12. Suffix with young or old
14. Vocation
20. Mideast mits
22. How a bedtime story is read
25. Worked as a stevedore
26. Physicist Ampera
27. Lingerie material
28. One of Columbus' ships
29. It makes a model shine
31. Squelched
32. Heron
33. Draws close
38. Part of HOMES
39. Put forth
40. Registers
43. Surrounded
45. Tilled Englishman
47. Go by
49. Pet doc
51. Opt
53. Rooster's feature
54. Black-and-white snack
55. ___ a one (none)
56. General's assistant
57. Seep
58. Social pariah
59. Ah, me!
62. First to jump ship

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20

If you're trying to get something from a powerful person, working behind the scenes is best. It is always safer not to discuss your financial situation with anyone. Confidential information you hear later this week will help you make the final decision about a career change.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21

Keep private issues to yourself. It is better not to let the whole world know your business. A good deal could be right around the corner. If you must go out of your way, do it. It's worth the extra effort.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21

Concentrate on work today, and fight off as many distractions as you can. Your friends and loved ones will have to wait until after a big job is done. Don't worry, it won't take long. You'll have it wrapped up by the weekend.

CANCER
June 22–July 22

Negotiations with a business partner will be to your advantage. Hold your meeting in a private place so both of you can speak freely and honestly. Your partner may share more than he/she initially intended. Listen to a friend's advice when it comes to romance. He or she can help you finally make the right decision.

LEO
July 23–August 23

It could be a slow week, but you deserve it after the month that you've had. Help an impetuous friend to be more patient. The deciding vote is in your hands, so be extra careful when making your final decision.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22

You will finally get a chance to use your knowledge on an unusual subject at work. Enjoy it while you can—it may not last very long. Don't let another person's plans get in the way of your direction. There's only a short time to achieve your goal.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23

If you have the time today, go shopping for yourself. You deserve to be rewarded after last week. It's time to clean out your workplace. Get rid of what you're not using. You'll feel refreshed when it's done.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22

A relative could spill the beans about a family secret. Don't overreact. It won't look as bad in the morning after you've slept on it. Keep your curiosity under control, or you may find out more than you ever wanted to know.

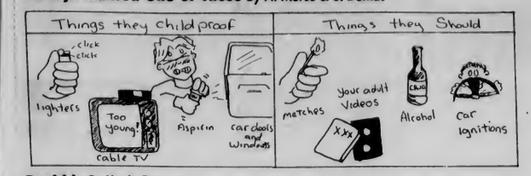
SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21

You will feel as if you're under some pressure this week. Don't cave in to it. Keep your promise, but without robbing the other person blind. You have a few tricks up your sleeve, too. Don't be afraid to use them. Join forces with a creative friend later in the week. Your artistic talents could have a chance to shine through.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20

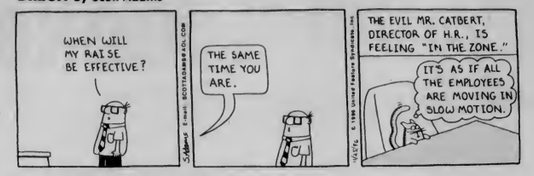
You might need to apply a little pressure to get what you want. Rehearse your scheme before you put it into play. You'll need a flawless performance to pull this one off. It should come together perfectly. It will be for another person's good.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18



Get some good advice from a favorite authority figure today. Some strong guidance may be just want you've been looking for. Don't be afraid to get a second opinion from a friend. It's a good week to spend some quality time at home with a loved one.

PISCES
February 19–March 20



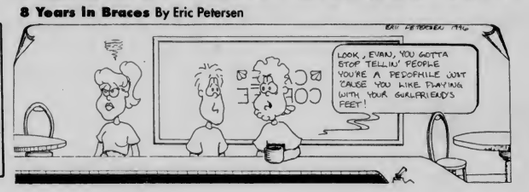
Keep your energy level high. Now is not the time to fall behind. If you work hard now, the opportunity to travel could be just around the corner. Give romance a second chance. First impressions don't hold as much weight as you once thought.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Drabble By Kevin Fagan



Frumpy the Clown By Judd Winick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

8 Years In Braces By Eric Petersen

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

Itold you how I bit a kid at school when I was a little boy. I think at one point in a little boy's life he thinks he's a dog.

My mouth was very close to his arm anyway. It was easier to bite him than to punch him.

I think biting someone really gets the point across.

Can't you see the headlines:

PRESIDENT OF KOREA BITES PRESIDENT CLINTON.... BOTH FEEL MUCH BETTER and the world tension eases.

Clothing doesn't taste too good... but it's a small price to pay.

...up and read

University² By Frank Cho

Leedee By Mike Rybicki

Social Norm By Mr. K-

Duh... By Maura & Micaela

Quote of the Day

"Nobody understands me! Do you know what I mean?"

–Overheard

Quote of the Day

"Who's the more foolish...the fool or the fool who follows him?"

–Ben Kenobi

Close to Home By John McPherson

"OK, Mr. Frawley ... severe sinus congestion."

Today's Staff

Chris Conner
Night Editor

Thang Vo
Photo Technician

Lorraine Urbanski
Production Supervisor

Sandra Krauss
Chris Lavin
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH
Mesquite Chicken
Italian Sausage Grinder
Pizza

DINNER
Chicken Fajita
Beef Stroganoff
Tofu Fajita
Chicken Hoagie

Hampshire

LUNCH
Hamburger on a Roll
Chicken Pucks
Italian Sausage Grinder

DINNER
Chicken Fajita
Beef Stroganoff

Worcester

LUNCH
Chicken Pucks
Ziti & Tomato Sauce
Macaroni & Lentil

DINNER
Chicken Fajita
Tofu Fajita
Pastabilities
Stuffed Shells

Berkshire

LUNCH
Pizza
Chicken Pucks
Ziti/Tomato Sauce
Macaroni & Lentil

DINNER
Beef Stroganoff
Chicken Fajita
Tofu Fajita
Pastabilities

SportsWeekend

Collegian Sports • Monday, November 25, 1996

Inside this issue:

• Yesterday, the Massachusetts women's soccer team was bounced from the NCAA Tournament, losing to UConn 2–0 in Storrs, Conn. (See page 10 for the story).

• The Massachusetts men's hockey team blanked Army on Friday at home before falling to UVM yesterday. (See page 10 for the recap).

• Women's basketball dropped its season opener to Ohio State yesterday in the William D. Mullins Center. (See page 10 for the scoop).

• The A–10 Tournament bound women's volleyball team came from behind to beat Virginia Tech on the road this weekend. (See page 10 for the rundown).

Sweet Sixteen soured, UConn blanks UMass 2–0

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CONN — A week ago yesterday, Harvard's No. 7 Emily Stauffer rocketed a 20-yard shot in overtime of the Crimson's NCAA first round women's soccer match against Massachusetts, and watched it strike the underside of the crossbar to goalkeeper Danielle Dion's right and drop straight down.

MASSACHUSETTS	0
CONNECTICUT	2

The referee ruled that the ball did not completely cross the goal line, and UMass went on to win in triple overtime.

With 11:32 remaining in yesterday's NCAA second round match against No. 4 Connecticut, Chrisy McCann rocketed a 20–yard shot that also struck the underside of the crossbar to Dion's right and dropped straight down.

This eerily similar shot was ruled a goal, and the Huskies hung on to win 2–0.

Last week the Minutewomen lived by a matter of inches; yesterday they died by a matter of inches. C'est la vie.

"I guess they got some lucky breaks and we didn't get the lucky breaks today," Dion said.

UMass entrenched itself in a bunker defense to open the match. The Minutewomen played much of the opening frame on its own half of the pitch, gauging UConn's attack tactics, as Husky coach Len Tsantiris often switches his methods.

UConn scored the match's opening goal early in this period, at the 4:57 mark, when a UMass defender got tangled up attempting to clear a ball eight yards from the goal. UConn's Margaret Tietjen fired the ball from between the UMass player's legs like a croquet wicket, blasting a beautiful shot from a tough angle into the side netting on Dion's left.

The UMass defense battled hard in the first half, with a trio of Minutewomen making back saves in the opening 29 minutes. Amy Powell and Robin Smith both stopped UConn shots, but none were more spectacular than Erica Iverson leaping over a fallen Dion to deflect a Kerry Connors shot in the seventh minute, averting a potential back–breaker.

UMass coach Jim Rudy made several adjustments before the close of the half, briefly going with three defenders and pushing Erin Lynch up into the midfield after inserting Kate Webb in the 39th minute. Still, UConn held a 19-0 shot advantage at the break, and an 8–0 edge in corner kicks.

Turn to WOMEN'S SOCCER, page 7

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

Senior Tina Lightning and freshman Tarah Tokarchik battle with UConn's Sarah Barnes in yesterday's 2–0 loss in Storrs.

Goal call goes Huskies way, UM momentum falls away

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CONN.— — In any game, especially a Sweet Sixteen match, there is no way that an official should judge the outcome of a game. Period.

At the 78:28 mark in the Massachusetts women's soccer team's 2-0 loss to Connecticut, line official David Boland reversed the head referee's decision to disallow sophomore defender Chrisy McCann's goal. It was all set up by a beautiful run up the left center of the field, with McCann's shot from 19 yards out hitting nothing but crossbar.

The ball bounced down and into the box in front of prone junior keeper Danielle Dion, but the ongoing struggle for the loose ball ended with referee Fred Pierera's whistle, and his right arm pointing to the center of the field for a restart. After a gutsy second half, where UMass left nothing at the Sunday dinner table in an attempt to tie up a 1–0 game, Boland decided to reverse a call made by someone who was an ex–All American soccer player at Brown University.

It must have been the key vantage point Boland had from over 35 yards away on the sideline, instead of Pierera's view from the center of the pitch, that made him change the original call. For the closest one to the action, though, Dion had both seen and heard the outcome of McCann's shot. The junior keeper saw the ball bounce outside the line, and heard the reaction from the partisan fans afterwards.

"That definitely was not a goal," Dion said. "It was clearly not a goal, and it was funny, because for once the fans behind me were silent. But they ruled it a goal, and I think [the fans] were in as just as much shock as I was."

After a first half where the Huskies dominated the pitch, the Minutewomen came out on all cylinders for the second frame. So much so that UConn was frustrated in not putting away UMass. Husky senior Kerry Connors did her best boxing imitation, with a body blow to sophomore Robin Smith, while junior Sarah Barnes was yellow–carded at the 70:42 mark.

The goal by McCann eight minutes later was the straw that broke the underdog's back, and the tide had officially turned in UConn's favor. Freshman forward Emma Kurowski brought up an interesting comparison with last weekend's crossbar shot from Harvard's Emily Stauffer, where the call went the other way, and UMass went on to win a 2–1 classic in triple overtime.

"Well, that kind of sucked the wind out of our sails," Kurowski said. "The same exact thing happened at Harvard, and it wasn't a goal. But the one at Harvard looked more like a goal than that one did, but that is just from where I was standing.

"That kind of killed us, and we thought if we could get one we could get back in it… but after that, it was over."

In the end, though, the final score is the final score. Coach Jim Rudy understands that fact, but can not help but make the comparison to Harvard as well.

"That's his call to make, and that is always a hard call, because it is

Turn to UMASS, page 7

Buckeyes bounce Minutewomen 68–53

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

In a game of offensive runs, Ohio State managed to come up with the biggest run of the contest — a 23–9 explosion to end the game giving the Buckeyes a 68–53 victory over a young and hobbling Massachusetts women's basketball squad.

MASSACHUSETTS	53
OHIO STATE	68

With co–captain Beth Kuzmeski, Tez Kraft and Lucia Madajova all out of the line–up, the Minutewomen fell prey to an OSU team that was coming off their first game of the season, an 85–78 victory over Providence College.

"[Having a game under our belt] helped, but it also can be a disadvantage," Ohio State coach Nancy Darsch said. "I think you have a certain anxiety and nervousness, and we wanted to guard against a letdown today."

The Buckeyes didn't come out like they were nervous or anxious as they started the contest with a 9–0 run. Senior center Kelly Fergus sparked the opening rally with five points in the first three–plus minutes of action. Fergus scored 13 points and hauled in nine rebounds in the game.

After the early OSU spurt, UMass chipped away at

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Frehsman Kelly Van Huisen notched 14 points in yesterday's 68–53 season–opening loss to Ohio State.

Ohio State controls the glass, breaks UM home win–streak

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

Opening day jitters.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team entered Sunday's season opener with Ohio State under pressure. The Minutewomen, coming off their best season complete with a first–ever NCAA appearance, were hoping to start phase two of the program on the right foot by extending a 15 game on– campus win streak with a win over the Buckeyes. They didn't get it, and as UMass head coach Joanie O'Brien explains, the Minutewomen have got to be more clutch than they were on Sunday if they want to make it back.

"Basketball is a simple game," O'Brien said. "You either make plays or you don't. We didn't step it up and make something happen, and it hurt us. We did a lot of good things, but we struggled in that every time we needed someone to step up and make a big play, we had nobody step up and make that big play."

Ohio State exposed UMass's main liability — lack of depth in the frontcourt. The Buckeyes owned the glass all afternoon, out–rebounding UMass 43–32, including a 19–10 edge on the offensive end. With the loss of Melissa Gurile and Octavia Thomas, both of whom rank in the top five of all–time scoring for the Minutewomen, to graduation, O'Brien's crew is thin down low. Besides forward Crystal Carroll, who bagged 23 points yesterday, there is nobody in the UMass frontcourt with significant playing time under their belt.

"You can't give up 19 offensive rebounds," O'Brien said. "They dominated us, and hopefully [center] Kara [Tudman] and [forward] Yolanda [Rayside] get back and rebound like they're capable of instead of standing still and letting the ball come to them like they did [today]."

One thing was apparent on Sunday. If the play of freshman Kelly Van Huisen is any indication, the Minutewomen have a bright future. Playing in her first college game, Van Huisen emerged as a genuine scoring threat. The freshman scored 14 points in 35 minutes of

Turn to STREAK, page 7

UMass splits weekend on ice

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team (3–7, 2–6 in Hockey East) saw the top of the mountain and the bottom of the valley this weekend in a 4–1 loss to No. 4 Vermont (7–3) yesterday afternoon and a 8–0 win over Army (5–7) Friday night.

MASSACHUSETTS	3
VERMONT	7

In the Mullins Center for the first game, the Minutemen were led by senior forward Gerry Cahill's natural hat–trick in a four–goal first period, moving on to trounce the Cadets. Fellow senior Warren Norris (4 goals, 7 assists, 11 points) also scored a hat–trick for UMass, while junior goalie Brian Regan recorded his first shutout in a Minuteman uniform.

For coach Joe Mallen, he was more than pleased with his own version of the "special forces": his penalty kill and power play units.

"This game really worried and concerned me," Mallen said. "This was kind of an in–between game, with Vermont on Sunday and Merrimack last weekend, and we really wanted to keep our momentum going.

"Obviously, we had a terrific performance from our special teams, two short–handed goals and three power play goals, that is big stuff for us."

Army was not in this contest after the first period. Senior co–captain Rob Bonneau and Cahill teamed up on two short– handed goals, tying the single game mark held by Mike Evans. Except for Cahill, the first goal was all Bonneau, as he set up a faceoff in the Cadet zone through good penalty killing. The faceoff went straight to Cahill, who one–timed his shot past junior Daryl Chamberlain at the 8:39 mark.

Cahill completed his natural hat–trick in the next two and half minutes, scoring another short–handed goal at the 9:56 mark, and a regular strength goal a little over a minute later. "I got a couple of nice breaks in the beginning, and a couple of nice passes from Rob [Bonneau]," Cahill said. "After a couple go in, the puck just sees it's way into the net, somehow. It's been a long time. I don't think I've scored a hat–trick since I was a squirt."

On Sunday afternoon, the Minutemen travelled up to Burlington, Vt. to face University of Vermont in Gutterson Field House. This would be UMass' third top–10 opponent of the young season, but the No. 4 Catamounts have seen rough times of late, losing 4–2 to RPI and 7–3 to the Big Green of Dartmouth.

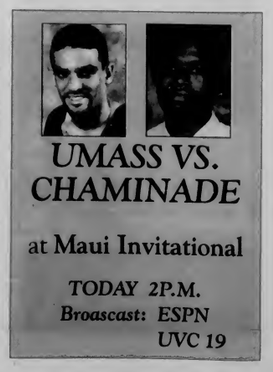
It could be easily assumed that the Catamounts would come out fired up on their home ice, but it was a 1–0 game after the first period. The Minutemen special teams kept up Friday night's success, and junior forward Chris Fawcett scored on a power play goal midway through the first period. UMass' penalty kill unit held the vaunted Vermont power play to an 0–5 mark on the afternoon, but that was not enough.

Senior J.C. Ruid led the Catamounts with two goals, as the home team scored four unanswered goals to avoid another Field House defeat in the early part of the season.

UM hoops kicks off against Chaminade

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

First–year coach James "Bruiser" Flint and the Massachusetts men's basketball team kick off the regular season today when they face host Chaminade University in the first round of the Maui Invitational at 2 p.m.



UMass will look to continue its tradition of trouncing season–opening opponents. It has won the first game of the year the last three consecutive seasons, disposing of preseason No. 1's in the last two. Last year the Minutemen toppled Kentucky 92–82 in the Great Eight, while they destroyed Arkansas 104–80 in the Tip Off Classic the year before.

In their favor, UMass has played well on the island paradise. Aside from the warm weather and blue skies, Hawaii has been good to the Minutemen in years past. Last year UMass went 3–0 in Hawaii when they won the Rainbow Classic in Honolulu defeating North Carolina State, Southern California and national runner–up, Syracuse.

With this experience behind them, Flint feels his team is ready to win on the island paradise.

As promised, the Minutemen will see some familiar faces at the opening tip off. Though UMass returns what has been billed as the nation's best backcourt in Carmelo Travieso and Edgar Padilla, the other three starting spots will see some new faces.

In the power forward slot, senior big–man Tyrone Weeks will get the nod to start. After emerging as one of the best sixth men in the country, Weeks, who averaged 5.8 points per game, will be counted on by Flint to go the distance this

Turn to MEN'S BASKETBALL, page 7

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 58 | New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 | Tuesday, November 26, 1996

Aloha means goodbye

Sparked by Carmelo Travieso's 16 points, the Massachusetts men's basketball team squeaked by Chaminade 59–48 in yesterday's season opener (See Sports, page 10)

The winter of our discontent?

Al Pacino tries to get ahold of Shakespeare in our "Modern World" in Looking for Richard. Check out our review (See Arts & Living, page 6).

WORLD

North Korea agrees to release American spy

TOKYO (AP) — North Korea agreed to release an American arrested as a spy three months ago, but the release ran into "complications" Tuesday and was delayed, U.S. officials said. The U.S. Embassy in Tokyo said Monday that Evan C. Hunziker, 26, of Tacoma, Wash., was scheduled to arrive in Tokyo Tuesday evening along with Rep. Bill Richardson, who helped secure the deal. But Hunziker's father, Edwin, told The Associated Press Monday night that Richardson "doesn't know if he's going to get him or not."

Hours later, Master Sgt. George Bieber, the spokesman for U.S. military forces in Japan, said the turnover had been delayed at least until Wednesday afternoon.

"There have been some complications," Bieber said. He would not elaborate.

Richardson arrived in North Korea Monday night in a bid to win the release of Hunziker, who was arrested and charged with spying when he crossed from China into North Korea on Aug. 24.

The United States had demanded Hunziker's release, and the State Department in October called the espionage charges against him "absolutely ludicrous."

NATION

Cronkite: It's too bad Brinkley apologized

NEW YORK (AP) — Walter Cronkite said Monday he's disappointed that his fellow broadcast veteran David Brinkley apologized for calling President Clinton "a bore."

As a commentator, Brinkley is entitled to express his opinions, Cronkite said. Rather than apologize, he should have put Clinton on the spot.

"Why shouldn't he have an opinion if he thinks the president is boring?" asked Cronkite, who retired in 1981 as the "CBS Evening News" anchor, in an interview with The Associated Press.

"If he's not going to apologize, then the nice thing would have been if he had said, "Mr. President, you know now that I think you're boring. You've got 10 minutes to prove me wrong," he said. Brinkley, who said late on Election Night that Clinton was a bore who would spread "goddamn nonsense" for four more years, made amends during an interview with Clinton for his final "This Week with David Brinkley" show.

The 80-year-old Cronkite, whose memoirs are being published next month, said his former competitor had forgotten one of the first rules of broadcast journalism: always assume the microphone is on. "I can understand in a euphoria of retirement that you're not thinking of the old rules any longer," he said. "It's kind of like retreating in a war. When you go into combat, you're ducking and dodging When you're retreating, you stand up and just go. You get shot in the back very easily."

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Weds.	Thursday
HIGH: 35 LOW: 25	HIGH: 30 LOW: 20	HIGH: 25 LOW: 9

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics.....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 10

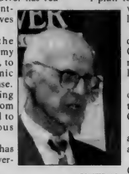
Congressman Olver appointed to House Appropriations Committee

By Raghuram Vadarevu
Collegian Staff

Coming off of a narrow victory against state Senator Jane Swift (R– North Adams) in the United States Congressional race, Congressman John Olver has reason to celebrate over his recent appointment to the U.S. House of Representatives Appropriations Committee.

"I want to use my position on the Appropriations Committee, as well as my strong relationship with federal agencies, to help aid our communities in economic development," Olver said in a press release.

He added, "I look forward to working with the individual communities——from Pittsfield to Leominster, from Greenfield to Westfield— to achieve a prosperous future."



According to the press release, Olver has been appointed to "one of the most powerful committees in the House."

Olver will be making a return to the Committee after his last appointment during the 103rd Congress.

"I look forward to returning to the House Appropriations Committee," Olver said, "this assignment puts me in a strong position to continue providing for the people of the First Congressional District."

Olver said that while he served as Appropriations Committee member he successfully obtained funds for education, health care initiatives, sewer and water projects and transportation projects.

"I plan to continue fighting for the First District, working to secure federal dollars for our local communities," Olver said.

COURTESY A.P.
John Olver

The House Appropriations Committee decides funding for federal programs. The Committee is divided into several subcommittees on which Olver served during his last tenure.

Olver has served on two of these subcommittees during the 103rd Congress; the Treasury–Postal and Foreign Operations subcommittees.

He also served on the Budget Committee and the subcommittees on Basic Research and Energy and Environment.

The subcommittees for the 105th Congress are expected to be announced in January, according to the press release.

Congressman Olver has served in the House since 1991. He filled the seat left by the late Rep. Silvio O. Conte. Before his political career, Olver was a chemistry professor at the University of Massachusetts.

U.S. exports to receive big boost

Summit leaders meets Clinton halfway on electronic tariffs

By David Thurber
Associated Press

SUBIC BAY, Philippines — President Clinton won a victory on the trade front yesterday by persuading Pacific Rim leaders to accept 2000 as the year for cutting tariffs on information technology. The communique ending the 18–government summit went beyond the language recommended last week by ministers and partially met U.S. demands for loosening restraints on the global market in computers, semiconductors, software and telecommunications gear.

But it hedged by speaking of "flexibility" and of "substantially" eliminating tariffs — caveats meant to appease poorer nations that fear their high–tech industries will be swamped by cheaper imports if all trade barriers come down at once. This enabled opponents like Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad of Malaysia to say he too got his way.

The deadline "is not binding. That means it depends on the abilities of countries concerned to open up their markets," he told reporters. "We feel that if we are not ready we will not have to submit to the deadline."

But Clinton called the pact "a big deal" and a boost for jobs in the U.S. information technology industry, which is a $100 billion-a-year export business.

"Imagine if we went to zero tariffs in the entire world, what that would mean to America and for exports in higher-paying jobs," he

Turn to EXPORTS page 3

BC president stresses academics

BOSTON (AP) — Boston College will not abandon its athletic programs in the wake of a sports betting scandal. But president Rev. William P. Leahy said the message will be clear that gambling will not be tolerated.

"I don't want Boston College to be a place where indoctrination is the norm or turn this into a monastery," Leahy said. "But this is a place where Judeo-Christian values and Catholic values are very much at the heart. And I intend to be reminding individuals about who we are."

Leahy promised BC would make several changes in its student orientation and handbook, the dorms, and even in its curriculum to reinforce the message that "illegal gambling is unacceptable" and will not be tolerated.

He said neither university staff members nor coaches were to blame for the gambling scandal that resulted in the suspension of 13 football players.

"Individual students made mistakes," Leahy said in an interview published in the Boston Sunday Globe. "I don't think the whole athletic program is fatally flawed."

Athletics helped build BC into a national university and Leahy said the school will not abandon its goal of excellence in both academics and sports, "but athletics won't call the tune." "We are first and foremost an institution committed to higher education," he said.

Leahy said that Chet Gladchuk "is still the athletic director and will be the athletic director." But he said it "is too early" to discuss the future of football coach Dan Henning and basketball coach Jim O'Brien.

O'Brien has recently clashed with BC's administration over two recruits who met NCAA standards but were rejected by BC admissions officials. Leahy said he supported admissions director John Mahoney's decision to reject Boston's Elton Tyler and Jonathan DePina.

"Although someone may meet NCAA standards, that doesn't mean they will be accepted or will succeed at Boston College," he said. Leahy told the Globe he intends to meet next week with student leaders, deans and department heads to discuss the gambling problem and what should be done to prevent a recurrence. He also sent letters late last week to the campus community and parents promising to address the serious departure from the university's Jesuit ethical values in the wake of the gambling scandal.

Simpson again takes center stage

Many questions, few answers emerge from court statements

By Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Confronted with the toughest physical evidence against him, O.J. Simpson couldn't explain yesterday how blood believed to be the victims' got into his Bronco or how he suffered hand cuts that plaintiffs claim were fingernail gouges from a death struggle.

Showing Simpson a close-up photograph taken three days after the slayings of a crescent-shaped cut on his finger, attorney Daniel Petrocelli charged: "It was a fingernail mark, wasn't it, sir?

"I seriously doubt that," Simpson replied.

COURTESY A.P.
O.J. Simpson

"It was somebody's fingernails ripping into your skin, wasn't it?" Petrocelli asked.

Simpson suggested his then-5-year-old son, Justin, could have cut his finger while they were "rassling" in the days after the killings of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

"Unless it was Justin's, I really don't know," Simpson said with a hint of exasperation.

"Are you saying it was your son's fingernail?" the lawyer asked.

"I'm not saying it was Justin's. I was saying he was the only one I was any heavy physical…wrestling."

Petrocelli, pacing sometimes within inches of the witness, challenged Simpson to explain virtually every move he made during 86 minutes on the night of the June 12, 1994, slayings when his whereabouts are unknown.

Simpson maintained he was resting in bed or showering at the time, and also said he was chipping golf balls and taking his dog out for a walk during those unaccounted-for minutes.

Petrocelli clearly tried to get a rise out of Simpson, but it didn't work. Once, the attorney paced so close to Simpson they were nearly nose to nose. At another instant, Petrocelli pointed a pen in Simpson's face and demanded, "Answer the question, sir!" Petrocelli quizzed the defendant about blood, noting there was blood in his Bronco, on a driveway at his home and on a kitchen counter. The defense has said the Bronco blood was planted by overzealous police.

Simpson said he remembered seeing some blood on his pinky finger and on the counter before he left for Chicago late the night of the slayings.

"I assumed at the time it was my blood. I don't know. Like I said, I didn't feel the cut," he said.

He said he had no idea why or when he bled.

He recounted how a glass broke in his Chicago hotel room and perhaps injured his hand. But he couldn't remember how the glass broke or when he was cut, suggesting it was perhaps when he was "sweeping" broken pieces into the sink.

Under questioning about when he changed his clothes in Chicago the day after the killings, Simpson said he knew he had some blood on his clothes and "at some point I threw up."

Petrocelli asked if he knew how

Turn to SIMPSON, page 3

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Smells like winter!
UMass saw it's first real snow fall of the season yesterday and like the people, the trees felt it too.

Investigation begins on convicted rapist who lives on campus

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

Until news reporters from Channel 40 News in Springfield approached residents of Leach Residence Hall in Northeast Residence Area last Wednesday, University of Massachusetts officials were unaware that a convicted sex offender was living on campus.

According to Kay Scanlan, a spokesperson for the University, the administration and UMass police did not begin to investigate the situation until they learned that Channel 40 had plans to broadcast a three–part series on freshman Michael Carlson, a convicted rapist who lives in Leach Residence Hall.

The Channel 40 series, which began last night, reported that while Carlson was a first–year student at Quinnipiac College he plead guilty to charges brought by Nora McShane of rape and sexual assault.

According to the Channel 40 report, McShane, who is three years younger than Carlson, lived in the same area as Carlson in Boxborough.

The report also stated that the two individuals' families were friends and that Carlson and McShane, who has Downs Syndrome, were childhood companions.

Channel 40 reported that McShane said Carlson had sexually abused her several times before he plead guilty and was sentenced to a two year prison term which he served at Massachusetts Correctional Institute in Concord.

Edward Melanson, Assistant Resident Director (ARD) of Leach Residence Hall, encountered the Channel 40 crew at the building last week.

"I saw a news reporter and a camera person around 2:45 Wednesday afternoon," Melanson said. "I went outside and asked why they were here. They said there was a convicted sex felon living in the building."

The reporters then sought student reaction and encountered Leach residents, according to Melanson. The ARD then asked the reporters to remain outside, which, he said, they complied with.

Scanlan said the University deals with situations such as these on a "case by case basis," and that there is no formal policy the University employs regarding convicted sex offenders living on campus.

University officials are currently reviewing the situation, however Scanlan said it is "premature" to say what actions, if any, the University will take.

"Safety is always a top priority," Scanlan said.

According to the state's Sex Offenders Registry law which was enacted Oct. 1, 1996, all convicted sex offenders in Massachusetts are required to register as such in the town where they reside.

20,000 university students protest Yugoslavian court ruling on election

By Jovana Gec
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Chanting "Red Bandits!" at least 20,000 university students protested in Belgrade today, angered by court rulings that erased an apparent opposition electoral victory. People standing on balconies cheered and applauded the biggest student protest against Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic in the capital since 1992, when similar demonstrations shook his authoritarian rule.

The courts that annulled the vote are widely thought to be controlled by Milosevic.

Students joined a week of demonstrations over court rulings that canceled local election victories in dozens of cities by the four-party opposition coalition Zajedno.

Acting on complaints by Milosevic's ruling Socialists, a court Sunday also annulled election results for the Belgrade city council, where Zajedno appeared to have won a majority.

Official results from a vote on Nov. 17 gave the opposition 60 of 110 seats in Belgrade's city council.

The victory would have given Belgrade its first non-Communist mayor since World War II. But the ruling coalition claimed irregularities and lodged hundreds of complaints.

The court Sunday ordered a third round of voting in more than 210 polling stations in Belgrade. Opposition leaders called for a boycott of Wednesday's runoff.

Today, students issued a statement saying the court rulings represented "a serious violation of human rights and an attack on the basic principles of democracy."

They also demanded that Milosevic, who has been quiet throughout the protests, address the nation and explain the decisions to annul the elections.

Mica Popovic, a well-known Serbian painter, told the students he doubted Milosevic's neo-Communists would step down peacefully. "I'm not calling on you to start a rebellion, but you have to think about your future, and take it into your own hands," Popovic said. The crowd chanted "Red Bandits! Red Bandits!"

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Wednesday, Nov. 27

Class — "Tanya Class" a free drop-in class in the Tanya, the Chassidic text of mysticism, 8 p.m. at Chabad House at 30 N. Hadley Rd., Amherst. Free and open to the public. Call 549-4094 for more information.

Thursday, Nov. 28

Class — "Lunch and Learn" at this free drop-in class. Learn about the Jewish concepts of Geulah, redemption, and Moshiach, the messiah, during your lunch hour. Sponsored by Chabad House at Amherst. Classes are at noon, location to be announced. Free and open to the public. Call 545-4094 for more information.

Dinner — Members of the GLBT community and allies are welcome to attend a Stonewall Thanksgiving Potluck Dinner. If you can't get home for the holiday, share a meal with the folks at the Stonewall Center. Time TBA. RSVP to the Stonewall Center at 545-4824. For more information, please contact the UMass Stonewall Center at 545-4824.

Notices

AIDS Day — UMass is participating in the global observance of World AIDS Day which will take place from Nov. 25 through Dec. 6. You can get HIV/AIDS information and a red ribbon to pin on yourself or on our "Remembrance Tree" at the Campus Center Concourse table each day. Visit the Faces of AIDS art display and the Five College AIDS Quilt at Earthfoods. Watch "Boys on the Side" on HSCN. Activities will culminate with a candlelight vigil on the Student Union steps at 5 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 6 and a march to the First Congregational Church on Main St. in Amherst for a gathering of Remembrance and Hope. Refreshments will be served. After that, there will be a poetry/prose reading followed by an open mike at 8 p.m. at Claudia's Cafe. For more information, contact Health Education at 577-5181.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol-free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584- 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546-1085.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545-2391.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Dec. 3 from 5:30-7 p.m. in CC room 165-169.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577-5181 for more info) and 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H-4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30-8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545-2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Literature — mOTHERTONGUE, the multilingual student publication by the dept. of Comparative Literature, is currently seeking submissions for the spring '97 publication. We will accept original poetry, short stories, one-acts, international photographs, and artwork created by multilingual students. Please submit a copy in English to the Comparative Literature Dept. in 203 South College. Rough drafts are acceptable.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546-6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 545-1925.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546-6487 or Nizam at 546-3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546-3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256-8482 or Laili at 253-0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy, and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545-0848 if interested.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7-8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577-5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae, and R&B dancers for next semester's annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546-2714 for audition information.

Theatre — UMass Theatre guild presents the musical The Pajama Game. Dec. 5, 6 and 7 at 8 p.m. with a matinee performance on Dec. 7 at 2 p.m. All shows are in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Tickets are $4/students and senior citizens and $6 for everyone else and are available at the door and in advance at Tix Unlimited, 545-0412.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for persons who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and to be sent a volunteer application, please call 733-2251.

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Don't lick me.
Frozen with snow the popular "dice" sculpture stands undaunted by the coming of winter.

Collegian Graphics...

Just because, ALRIGHT !!!

JANUARY CLASSES

Take a course during Intersession!

You can complete a one, two, or three credit course during January.
(Most classes meet mornings 9 a.m. - Noon)
Classes Begin January 2 through January 21, 1997

Register now through Friday, December 27, 1996

- Keyboarding for Information Processing
- Introduction to Dance
- Computer Literacy
- Introduction to Internet
- English Composition I
- English Composition II
- French Skills Practice I
- Counseling Skills
- Winter Outdoor Recreation
- Practical Nursing Practicum
- Introduction to Professional Nursing and the Nursing Process
- Principles of Psychology
- Contemporary Trends/Issues
- Spanish Skills Practice I
- Spanish Skills Practice II
- Oral Communications: Public Speaking
- Principles of Sociology

For Registration Information Call: (413) 774-3131 extension 272

GREEN FIELD cc

GREENFIELD
The community's college!

Graduate Student Professional Development Day

Wednesday December 4th
8:30am -- 4:30pm
Campus Center Auditorium

You are invited to a day of workshops designed to help graduate students springboard into their careers.

Topics covered include:
Networking
Transferable Skills
Academe Job Searches
Non-Academe Job Searches
& Informational Tables

Attend all day or just one session...
This is a day you won't want to miss!!

Call the Graduate Dean's Office at 545-5271 for more information
Sponsored by the Graduate Dean's Office and the University Career Center

■ export

continued from page 1

said in remarks to U.S. Embassy staff before leaving for Thailand.

He said information technology is "to the 21st century what highways and railroads were to the 19th century."

The statement read by Philippine President Fidel Ramos called for "the conclusion of an information technology agreement" by the World Trade Organization that would "substantially eliminate tariffs by the year 2000," but recognized "the need for flexibility" in the WTO negotiations.

The United States, backed by Japan, Canada and Australia, had wanted all tariffs on computers, software, semiconductors and telecommunications abolished by 2000. Malaysia led the objectors. When Washington failed to get its way in pre-summit talks last week, U.S. negotiators insisted they were satisfied nonetheless with the wording that was adopted. But Clinton clearly wasn't. U.S. officials said he warned Ramos, this year's host of the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation summit, that the meeting would be judged a failure unless it took a stronger line on information technology.

U.S. officials said Ramos, along with Japanese Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto and South Korean President Kim Young-sam, came to Clinton's support and a new draft was put together over the weekend.

The APEC summit is the high point of efforts by the world's largest economic region to become a free trade area by 2020. But the difficulties arising from the diversity of the member-economies are obvious from disagreements like the one about information technology.

So the host country tries to keep the summit chatty and informal. This year the dress code was tieless barongs, the flowing white traditional shirts of the Philippines.

Against a tropical backdrop of sea and palm trees, Clinton and leaders from Asia and the Americas sat down in the former officers' club of what was once the biggest U.S. military base in Asia, and is now a duty-free port and engine of the blossoming Philippine economy.

Ramos had called the summit the Philippines' "coming-out party," but it was also, in a sense, the coming-out party of an anti-APEC movement that believes free trade will enrich the powerful at the expense of the poor.

Some 6,000 left-wingers drove a convoy of vans, cars and jeepneys — homemade buses modeled on World War II jeeps — to Subic Bay to press their claim that the meeting will enrich the powerful and weaken the poor.

But police stopped them well short of Subic by stalling trucks along the road, creating a huge traffic jam. It was the first time an APEC summit has generated large-scale protests.

About 26,000 troops and police were on guard in Manila and Subic. On Sunday, the United States repeated its warning of last week about unspecified threats to its diplomats.

APEC's members are Australia, Brunei, Canada, Chile, China, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Singapore, South Korea, Taiwan, Thailand and the United States.

■ Simpson

continued from page 1

blood traces that experts have linked to Ms. Simpson and Goldman came to be in his Bronco. Simpson said he didn't know.

"You have an explanation for this jury?" Petrocelli asked incredulously.

"None," Simpson replied.

He also said he didn't know how blood matching his and Ms. Simpson's got on socks in his bedroom, or how blood matching his was found on the pathway of his ex-wife's house, on the path of his Brentwood estate and on the floor of his bathroom there, "except that's where I shave."

Fighting back persistent challenges to his alibi, Simpson maintained he was on his bed resting or in the shower between 10:35 p.m. and 10:40 p.m., when the plaintiffs say the killings took place.

Simpson said he was running late for a limousine ride to the airport, and hurried into the shower during those five minutes. Plaintiffs say Ms. Simpson and Goldman were slashed to death between 10:35 and 10:45.

While showering, Simpson said, he thought he heard a phone ringing. He said his security system causes the phone to ring when a visitor buzzes at the gate.

Limousine driver Allan Park testified that he rang the intercom from 10:40 to 10:49. House guest Brian "Kato" Kaelin arrived at the front of the estate at 10:55, checking out mysterious thumps, and Simpson came out of his house at 11:01.

Suspected hijackers may be released following deadly Ethiopian crash

By Tom Cohen
Associated Press

MORONI, Comoros Islands — Rescue workers dragged a chunk of an Ethiopian airplane fuselage onto the beach at low tide yesterday and used electric saws to cut bodies from the jet, which crashed when hijackers let it run out of fuel.

Wearing masks against the smell of decaying flesh, the workers zipped bodies into dark bags and hauled them to a makeshift morgue set up in a former meat warehouse. Feet and at least one head could be seen in the crush of metal, wires and seating.

One of history's deadliest hijackings, Saturday's crash killed 127 of the 175 people on board. At least 101 sets of remains have been recovered, but authorities were having trouble identifying some of them.

At least one U.S. citizen was among the dead. Leslianne Shedd, 28, was a commercial officer with the Foreign Service, and had been headed to Kenya to meet friends for Thanksgiving.

Among the missing was Ron Ferris, a missionary doctor from Tennessee who according to his father had given up "a six-figure salary to help Africans for $800 a month."

Two men were arrested for the hijacking, but officials said yesterday that they may be innocent. The plane's co-pilot, Yonas Mekuria, told police he did not recognize the suspects as any of the three hijackers who had refused to let the plane land to refuel.

If the two arrested men are determined to have been passengers, it would mean all the hijackers died, government spokesman Dgouma Ibrahim said. The suspects could be released as early as today. In addition to the bodies being pulled from the beached piece of fuselage, police said several more bodies were trapped in wreckage still submerged a few hundreds yards off Grand Comoro, the largest of the three Comoros Islands.

Ethiopian Airlines said yesterday that four of the 52 people pulled alive from the wreckage had died, raising the death toll to 127. Survivors have been flown to hospitals across the region. The airline did not give details of the four who died.

Flight 961 had just left the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa en route to the Ivory Coast when the three hijackers stormed the cockpit and demanded to be taken to Australia. Their motive remains unclear.

The pilot told them the Boeing 767 was running out of fuel and pleaded with the hijackers to let him land at an airport in Moroni, the capital of these islands east of Mozambique. But they refused. "They said, 'If we die, we want others to die with us. We want to make history,'" according to Indian passenger Rekha Mirchandani, 29, who said crew members gave her the account before she was flown to a hospital in Nairobi, the Kenyan capital. Apparently seeking to minimize the casualties, the pilot crash-landed the jet in the sea near the shore, where rescuers were able to reach the wreckage quickly. The body of the plane slammed into the water, bouncing and flipping at least once before it broke apart.

U.S. Army settles sexual harassment suit

By Mary Pemberton
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — The Army agreed to pay $60,000 to a woman who claimed fellow security guards subjected her to crude sexual comments and refused to let her take bathroom breaks, forcing her once to wet herself.

The settlement is unrelated to the recent scandal at Aberdeen in which soldiers have been accused of raping or sexually harassing women recruits. In another case that surfaced Monday, seven drill instructors at Fort McClellan in Alabama were removed from work with recruits because of sexual misconduct claims made in calls to an Army hot line.

Cecilia Marie Port, a 42-year-old former civilian employee at the Aberdeen Proving Ground, said that when she complained in 1993, the Army retaliated by assigning her to a trailer.

"Rather than deal with the problem, they removed her," her lawyer, Bruce Ezrine, said Monday. "That shows their state of mind: Let's not confront the problem."

The Army agreed with an Equal Employment Opportunity Commission finding of sexual harassment and retaliation against Port. One guard was fired and others, including supervisors, were reprimanded.

"It is obvious some people made bad decisions and did not respond the way the Army wants them to. As a result, this escalated and escalated and eventually ended up in court," Aberdeen spokesman George Mercer said.

Port worked as a civilian guard at Aberdeen in 1992 and 1993 and was the only woman on the day shift. She quit in 1994.

She said the male guards repeatedly made lewd comments about masturbation and one guard said he wanted to "get naked" with her. She said the guards refused to fill her post if she needed a bathroom break.

Port sued in 1995 for $300,000. The suit was settled Friday as Port prepared to go to trial Monday.

Fort McClellan spokesman Herschal Chapman said the seven drill instructors at the Army base near Anniston, Ala., were barred from working with recruits while officials investigate sexual misconduct claims. He did not give details about the allegations.

COLLEGIAN NOW HIRING!!

The Collegian news department is currently excepting applications for Associate News Editors for Spring, 1997. These paid positions offer interested students extensive writing experience. Associates typically cover the most pressing stories and issues occurring on–campus, within the state and throughout the country.

Interested applicants should contact Michael Elliott or Chris Conner at 545–1851, or drop by the Collegian office to pick up an application at 113 Campus Center basement.

New York Boston

Two Great Umass Campus Locations

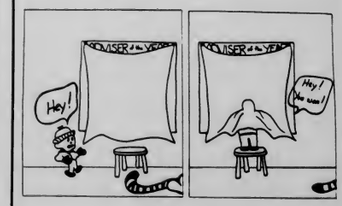
Munchies Store
at Southwest
Hampden Dining Commons
Hours; M-F 8 am to 8:30 pm
Sat. & Sun. 12:30 pm to 7:30 pm

Peter Pan Office
Next to the Umass Travel Agency
in the Umass Campus Center
Tel. 256-0431 or 545-2006

Look us up on the Worldwide Web http://www.peterpan-bus.com

EL ACUÑA BAR & GRILL

NOVEMBER DRINK SPECIALS!
$1 DRAFTS!
$1.75 BUD/ BUD LIGHT POUNDERS!
WEEKLY MUNCHIE SPECIALS



Every Tuesday after 9pm — 10 cent wings!
Every Wednesday after 9pm — 75 cent spicy fries!
Every Thursday after 9pm — $3 Nachos!

LIVE BANDS EVERY TUESDAY & WEDNESDAY NIGHT
Full menu served until closing every night!
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst, MA
(413) 253 - 4040

STUDENTS WITH LEARNING DISABILITIES

This Spring semester, researchers at the UMASS School of Education will be conducting a research project/independent study course which focuses on the life experiences of students with learning disabilities. The title of the project is Learning Disabilities and Adolescence: an Autobiographical Perspective. Students who participate in the project will write a personal essay about their own adolescence and how it has been affected by having a learning disability. Participants will receive 3 undergraduate/graduate independent study credits and individualized instruction in writing. If you are interested in participating, please call 545- 4192 for more information. Students who elect to participate will be asked to begin the first week of Spring Semester, so please call soon!

1997 OUTSTANDING UNDERGRADUATE ACADEMIC ADVISER

Submit nominations in writing
by Monday, December 16, 1996 to:

Lu Butler, Chair
Outstanding Undergraduate Academic Adviser Selection Committee
Division of Continuing Education, 614 Goodell Building, Campus

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sutanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Giving more than thanks

With the first snowfall already on the ground, the coming of winter marks a dangerous season for many residents of the Pioneer Valley.

Beyond the sheltered confines of the University, Amherst and the surrounding area suffer from the surprising problem of poverty. Whoever coined the phrase "the Happy Valley" obviously never opened their eyes to the residents who struggle to pay for housing, heat or dinner.

Fortunately, many local organizations are making an impact. Besides the numerous food pantries who are offering Thanksgiving Day dinners for the impoverished, campus groups are also taking a stand against such hardships.

A prime, and timely, example is the "Fill-a-Bus" campaign being conducted by the UMass Community Service Program.

The bus will be parked in front of the Student Union from 11 a.m. – 3 p.m. today and from Dec. 2–6. The group hopes to fill the bus with student donations of clothes, food and toys for the Amherst Survival Center. They are also looking for volunteers to staff the bus.

While the Collegian commends the efforts of UMass Community Service Program's and other similar organizations, we must not forget that hunger and poverty plague our society 365 days a year.

This Thanksgiving, think about how you could help those less fortunate, so next year they will have more to be thankful for.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

Holiday suffers an identity crisis

Somebody help me. I just can't work this dilemma out. We're coming upon one of the most cherished and revered of holidays, one of the few uniquely American celebrations. Unlike Christmas and many others, this holiday has no restrictive religious ties. Besides the fact that its traditional myth is largely incorrect, most are generally agreeable toward it as a holiday. For the most part, Thanksgiving has not fallen victim to the commercialism that has captured countless other holidays. For most, it remains a low-key opportunity to get together with friends, family, football and turkey.

And what better reason for celebrating a holiday than for giving thanks? In fact, it's great idea. One problem. On the day that has been designated for giving thanks, I find it hard to believe that most of our population truly realizes who, what, when, where, why and how to give thanks.

Mark McGrath

Why, you ask, do I say this? The answer itself is very simple. "Thank you" is one of those stock phrases used so often that it has somehow lost its value in society. I've seen it lettered on signs at the exits of stores and printed on hundreds of receipts, from groceries to ATM transaction registers.

While the phrase "thank you" itself pops up all over society, the message behind it is seldom true. What had its origins in showing gratitude is now used as a token of so-called politeness, a necessity in the social world. When the words "thank you" are muttered, one has to wonder if there is any actual gratitude present, or if the mutterer has been conditioned to offer these "thanks" as an automatic reaction to someone doing something for another.

In other words, gratitude is a feeling, thanks is a gesture. Therefore, devoting a day to "thanks-giving" becomes a lot more complex than previously thought. When celebrating this day, I wonder if most of the people in society even take the time to show gratitude for what they have, or whether they take part in a series of pre-programmed gestures, feigning gratitude, but in reality going along with the social norm.

If your Thanksgiving is anything like mine, it is filled with a lot of food, people and activities, but at most a simple prayer retains the original idea of the celebration.

The holiday of Thanksgiving must truly be having an identity crisis. How can we help this poor lost holiday rediscover what its meaning is and why it pops up on our calendar each year? How can we rediscover Thanksgiving when changihg its name to Gratitude Day just doesn't seem to be the answer?

Would it be smarter to just leave the day the way it is and enjoy the day off and the turkey for what it's worth?

If only it were that simple... but because there is so much more possible for that day, we cannot be content to leave it there. If there is more out there (and I feel there is), I want to find it; I want to help you find it.

To celebrate Thanksgiving, it is first important to find something for which you can be thankful. If you're not careful, you can be caught listing off a series of things that you think are proper for you to feel thankful for: family, friends, pets, earthly possessions, being alive.

While it is perfectly fine for you to have a list that resembles the one above, it is important that you go deeper into the thought process. What I mean is that if you just list items off, you are not allowing yourself adequate time to let gratitude kick in. You cannot possibly be giving each of these supposedly vital aspects of your life their due.

In the way that it is impossible for a 6-year-old child to realize how truly thankful he or she should be; if you are not using all of your mental resources to focus on the process of giving thanks, you will be unable to reap the bountiful harvest of a Thanksgiving in the true sense of the word.

Before Thursday comes along, it is important for us to stop whatever we're doing and do a little meditation (nothing freaky... just a few coordinated thoughts). Find something or someone you feel truly makes your life worth living and consider not only how thankful you are for their role in your life, but what it means for you to be thankful for them. Does that mean thinking about them for three seconds, or does it mean sitting them down and putting into words exactly why you are happy they're a part of your life? Will this affect the way you see your life on Friday? That will have to be up to you.

Thanksgiving has unique potential of becoming a truly multi-dimensional holiday for all of society, but for that to happen, it must be seen as more than a celebration. It must be seen as a chance to connect with the world around you and to bring the various aspects of your life into perspective.

Many times, I've heard comments about people not knowing how lucky they are. It certainly seems that many of society's ills are the result of people not knowing what they have and not treating themselves and the people and world around them with the respect they deserve.

For society as a whole to seize such an opportunity, and to use it to its fullest extent would undeniably change the way we relate to this world, but unfortunately we have lost the meaning of gratitude, and the last Thursday in November is now almost as automatic as the regular "you're welcome" following the typical "thank you."

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

Better off dead

Last week, I returned to my dorm room after another long night of multivariable calculus. As I walked through the doorway, my roommate let out a yell. He had been cutting a milk crate in attempt to make a little night stand when the Exacto-knife he was using slipped and lacerated his foot.

Although it didn't hurt, there was a lot of blood. The cut would need stitches immediately. Our resident assistant called Health Services so someone could come and pick him up. However, it was 11:20 p.m. and there was no one available to get him. We finally found a friend who was willing to drive us. I brought a book along, because I figured it would only take about 20 minutes to stitch him up, and then he could leave.

Patrick Rufo

Little did I know that we were in for a long night. As we entered the lobby, we were greeted by a male nurse. Joe (we'll call him Joe) immediately brought my roommate into a little room. He handed me a chart to fill out as he proceeded to examine my roommate's foot.

At no point, did Joe ask my roommate if there was any pain or attempt to clean the wound. In fact, the first thing he asked my roommate was, "What kind of insurance do you have?" I was starting to get annoyed, but said nothing. At this point, the doctor walked in, or so we thought. Jean (we'll call her Jean) introduced herself as the "physician's assistant" on duty.

She took one look at my roommate's foot, and said, "I'm sorry, but I can't stitch this up. It looks like you may have nicked a tendon, although I'm not sure. You are going to have to go to Cooley Dickinson Hospital."

I was stunned. First of all, we went through a lot of trouble to get to Health Services, and second, now she was telling us we had to leave. I was very surprised she only "thought" that he cut his tendon, seeing that she was a "physicians' assistant."

Then Jean and Joe started asking more questions about my roommate's insurance policy. My roommate wasn't sure, so Jean left to get him a form. Joe also left to do some other business, and still neither of them asked my roommate about his foot or tried to bandage it. Before Joe left the room though, he made sure to tell us, "We can't give you a ride to Cooley Dickinson, but we can call there for an ambulance."

Since ambulances are very expensive, we called my friend again for a ride. Joe told us that he and Jean would check the computer for my roommate's insurance records. We waited in silence, and still nobody had done anything to my roommate's foot. Jean returned with the form to be filled out, so I asked him if they had checked the records.

Her reply was very reassuring. "Oh, neither of us know how to use the computer, so we can't do that." Hearing that, I thought it was time to leave. As we were getting ready, two campus police officers walked into the lobby. One of them apparently had sustained an eye injury. Joe was there to greet them, and as he brought them to another little room.

I could hear their conversation. "Oh, you seemed to have irritated your eye. Let me go get you your chart. You are going to have to go to Cooley Dickinson to get that checked out." It was time to get out of there.

I asked Joe if Cooley Dickinson would be expecting my roommate. He replied, "Oh sure, we'll call them before you get there. What was your name again?"

Fortunately, we got to Cooley Dickinson that night, and my roommate's foot was fixed up. We weren't asked about insurance, and he was accepted right away. We arrived home around 1:30 a.m., and I started to think. Students, like you and me, pay a lot of money so we can go to Health Services if we are sick or hurt. But it seems to me that all they do is send us to Cooley Dickinson.

Nobody asked my roommate to move his foot. If a tendon was severed, don't you think it would hurt? My point is that Health Services is supposed to have doctors that will be there for students in need. What if my roommate had happened to cut something worse? Maybe an artery, an organ, his neck? I can see their reaction right now, "Yes sir, I know you have been stabbed, but we aren't qualified to help you. You'll have to go to Cooley Dickinson Hospital, and of course, you will have to provide your own ride. By the way, what type of insurance do you have?"

Two weeks ago, another friend of mine got her finger slammed in a dorm-room door. She went to Health Services to get it checked out. They made her fill out a lot of forms, and told her to come back the next day for X-rays. The next morning she went down for X-rays, and they told her that they lost the forms from the previous night. She had to fill out a whole new set of forms, before she could even get the finger looked at.

Do I sense a pattern here? Are we getting health service, or just the runaround? I personally recommend everyone just skip Health Services, and go to Cooley Dickinson Hospital. You'll end up there anyway. What is the point of Health Services if they aren't going to help you? We have to start opening our eyes to problems like these, because we all have rights. It is our right as students to be provided with the best health service available. After all, we paid for it.

Patrick Rufo is a UMass student.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Where are the prominent women?

Name five prominent women on this campus if you can. Having trouble?

Michelle Hillman

While the women's movement has made significant changes on a broad level, the impact on this campus is far harder to digest. There are great women among us, breaking through cultural and academic barriers, but their presence is unheard and unrecognized by the majority of the student body and administration.

The cover of Sunday's New York Times Magazine featured an 11-year old girl sporting a black t-shirt lettered with the names of women pioneers such as Eleanor Roosevelt, Oprah Winfrey, Martha Graham, Naomi Campbell, Patsy Cline, Amelia Earhart, Princess Diana and Frida Kahlo.

The special issue, entitled "Heroine Workshop, Inventing an Identity in the Age of Female Icons," dedicated itself to spotlighting women as diverse as Twiggy, Martha Stewart, Margaret Thatcher, Helen Keller, Virginia Woolf, Elizabeth Taylor and many others. After briefly skimming a few of the biographies at the nudging of a fellow Collegianite, it was decided I dedicate a column to the women on this campus who are unabashedly paving the way for students.

My fingers are tapping the keys, trying to think of a few local women that I would consider to be leaders, icons, public figures for students to emulate. I have also asked a couple of people in the newsroom if they could think of any — sadly enough, only a few came up with one or two names. How can I write a column about women at UMass setting examples when only a few come to mind?

Responses included Provost Patricia Crosson, Olympic and UMass Field Hockey coach Pam Hixon and Deputy Chancellor Marcellette Williams. Aside from these few examples, people were left scratching their temples in wonder.

The fact that many powerful, hard working women exist on this campus is not in question, it is why the student body does not hear about them. It is understood that people move in different circles and come in contact with different people, but you would have to live in a hole to not recognize names like Chancellor David K. Scott, former UMass basketball coach John Calipari or the invisible President William Bulger. These names on this campus are connected with certain prestige, power and accomplishment.

Personally, I have heard of women like Charlotte Coates, the second woman president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees(AFSCME), Ann Ferguson, director of Women's Studies, Deepika Marya, president of the Graduate Student Senate, Ketu Katrak former UMass English professor and co-author of Antifeminism in the Academy and Carol Wallace, director of the Everywoman's Center.

Unfortunately, most of the campus is not familiar with these names, considering the fact that someone such as the Women's Issues editor is in contact with individuals specifically related to Women's Issues. My problem is how can we begin to relate to women in power if we do not even know who they are?

Women at the college level, trying to create change absent of any inspiration save for the women they see on the news or read about in magazines have difficulty connecting with the very same issues they are fighting for. If indeed there are many role models on this campus, why is it so difficult to find them. Why must women go out searching for leaders? Ultimately, it leaves women with the conclusion that they must take the reigns and lead for themselves.

Why is it that women are still not respected in the academy? There are many women on this campus that deserve recognition but do not or have not received it. The only reason I can say this is because if they were well known I would not have to be writing this column.

Michelle Hillman is a Collegian Columnist.

Where does innocence go?

Yesterday, I heard a song I hadn't heard in some time.

It was P.M. Dawn's "Set Adrift on Memory Bliss." I think we all have a little ditty or tune that brings back memories, and this one reminded me of my last real innocent crush.

Christian L. DiLuzio

I was a junior in high school and I sat next to this adorable sophomore in my Spanish class. Let's call her "Jessica." She used to draw little cute hearts on her notebook, chew on her pen, do all sorts of cute things. I could remember her eyes, her hair, even her handwriting, but not her body. Why you ask? I never looked! I never wondered what color bra she had on, or tried to impress her by flexing or wearing a t-shirt (not like that ever worked anyway).

What happened to the good old days? The first thing someone noticed about the fairer set was eyes or a pretty smile. Now those rank about eighth, somewhere behind what she's wearing, how many beers you've had and how many she's had. Face it, a lush, alcohol-induced grin will never compare to a genuine, pretty smile.

Hey, I never claimed to be an exception. When I tell the guys about the girl I met the night before, the topic is rarely the sparkling conversation. When I used to say, "She had beautiful..." it always ended with "eyes." When did the rules change? Why did no one tell me? Where did my innocence go? Is it just me or is it getting even tougher Orits? Remember when girls fawned over the likes of skinny, goofy Cory Haim or Will Weaton? How about New Kids on the Block, hey that I could deal with.

I'm not superpumped with muscles, I'm not extremely good looking — all I ever hear is cute. I hate cute — and neither my parents nor I are rich. I love parties, but I'm never enough fun to be the center of attention. In short, I'm average, like most of the guys here. Does anyone else feel like this? The anxiety of being average.

Don't get me wrong, I like who I am. Don't we all? Back in the day if you tripped over your own feet you'd hear a giggle and it would be cute. Now you trip, probably spill beer on someone, and you can chalk that right up to the right-handed loss column. Such is the way of things now, when did it all change?

When "Jessica" would chew on her pen I'd think "a cute little nervous habit." Now when I — or most guys for that matter — see a girl with a pen swirling in her mouth, well, you know the deal guys. How about this one: "Family Feud" is on, 100 guys are asked to finish the sentence "She's got a great..." Did we all say "personality," or "sense of humor?" Don't worry, I didn't either.

I miss the days when being "cute" was actually something. This "gorgeous, hot, sexy" stuff is not me. It must be pretty tough on the ladies too, if it wasn't, they wouldn't spend an average of 3.5 hours getting ready to go out.

I now wonder what happened to cute little "Jessica," whom I only remember from the neck up. Is she in some college somewhere looking for someone "studly?" Tastes mature and tastes change, and maybe, like disco, cute will make a comeback. Maybe the skinny, goofy, cute, New Kid type will be tomorrow's stud. Something tells me no, but hey, I've been wrong before.

For now I'm "set adrift on memory bliss" and wondering what it would have been like to kiss dear "Jessica" on the cheek, and her cute little habit of chewing on pens. It was all really innocent back then, and a hell of a lot easier. I do remember being in such a rush to grow up, though I can't remember why. Here's to you "Jessica," I've never looked at a chewed up pen the same way again.

Christian M. DiLuzio is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor

Why Affirmative Action?

To the editor:

After 400 years of slavery and years of fighting back, black people were finally considered as human. The masters agreed in paper to treat them as such. In order to redeem themselves for those years of injustice and humiliation, Affirmative Action became a law in the early '60s. Today, Affirmative Action is no longer a law in California. Affirmative Action has been abolished for being unfair and unjust to most.

It comes as no surprise that Affirmative Action has been termed unfair and unjustified by those who are trying by all means to keep black people as second-class citizens. They are the ones who will not promote qualified black employees for higher positions at their companies. Instead they enjoy making fun and ridiculing us at their private meetings. How many other companies and institutions play and replay the game perfected by Texaco?

Affirmative action has been labeled unfair and unjustified by some at this University as well. Yet, the percentage is below 15 percent with less than three percent in the biology department. What about the retention rate for minority students? As for the graduate student body in the anthropology department, the number of minorities is less than six percent. Not to mention the zero percent of minority students hired in the old prestigious University Store security force. Nevertheless, when the University is presenting itself to the outside world through brochures, it appears as if we [minorities] represent 40 percent of UMass. Feel free to pick up one of these brochures at the campus center information desk and judge for yourself. Our faces are not to be used solely for advertisement purposes.

Affirmative Action is needed to give minorities a fair chance. Unlike others who grow up with the luxury of having the best high schools in their communities, children of color grow up with the best basketball courts, the best CIA agent specializing in distributing drugs, the best police officers who master the skills of killing and getting away free, as well as the best jails in the nation.

Without Affirmative Action, I would not be here at this University. It is sad, however, to see that other students are afraid to take a stand in favor of Affirmative Action. They are insensitive to the issue. Their attitude would be considered shameless by those who sacrificed their life for this valuable cause. Blacks as well as whites fought for us in order to contemplate a brighter future today. The responsibility is now ours to guarantee a similar future to those coming after us. One Clarence Thomas is enough.

Pierre Arthur Elysee Sylvan

Developing Nations

Tuesday, November 26, 1996

Castro remains conscience of world community

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pro-Cuba demonstrators wave placards welcoming Fidel Castro Nov. 11 at Vina del Mar on his trip to the Ibero– American Summit.

Speech given by Cuban Presidente Fidel Castro at the World Food Summit held at the Headquarters of the Food and Agricultural Organization, Rome, Nov. 16, 1996:

What will we do to prevent one million people in the world from dying of starvation every month?

HUNGER, the inseparable companion of the poor, is the result of the unequal distribution of wealth and of the injustices of this world. The rich do not know hunger.

Colonialism was no stranger to the underdevelopment and poverty that today is suffered by a large part of humanity. Nor are the offensive opulence or the extravagances of the consumer societies of the former metropolises which exploited a large part of the countries of the Earth. Fighting against hunger and injustice, millions of people have died.

What bandages are we to apply so that within 20 years there are 400 million, instead of 800 million, starving people? These goals, if only for their modesty, are shameful.

If 35,000 people starve to death each day, half of them children, why is it that in developed countries olive groves are uprooted, flocks sacrificed and great sums are paid so the land will not produce?

While the world is logically moved when accidents, natural and social disasters occur, killing hundreds or thousands of people, why isn't it moved in the same way in the presence of this genocide that takes place every day right before our eyes? Intervention forces are being organized to prevent the deaths of hundreds of thousands of people in eastern Zaire. What will we do to prevent one million people from dying of starvation every month in the rest of the world?

It is capitalism, neoliberalism, the laws of a savage market, foreign debt, underdevelopment and unequal terms of trade that are killing so many people in the world.

Why do we invest $700 billion each year in military expenditures, and we do not invest a part of these resources in combatting hunger; soil deterioration; desertification; the deforestation of millions of hectares each year; global warming; the greenhouse effect, which increases the hurricanes, causes a lack of or excess rainfall; the destruction of the ozone layer and other natural phenomena that affect food production and the life of people on Earth?

Why are we producing more and more sophisticated weapons since the end of the cold war? What are these arms for, except to dominate the world? Why is there fierce competition to sell arms to underdeveloped countries, since they won't make them stronger in the defense of their independence and since hunger is what we must kill?

Why, on top of all this, are there criminal policies and absurd blockades, which include food and medicine, to kill an entire nation through hunger and disease? Where are ethics, justifications, respect for the most elemental human rights, the sense in such policies?

Let truth reign, not hypocrisy and lies. Let us be conscious of the fact that in this world, hegemony, arrogance and selfishness must cease.

The bells that toll today for those who die of hunger each day, will toll tomorrow for all of humanity if it doesn't try to save itself, doesn't know how to save itself, or is not wise enough to save itself.

Thank you very much."

Courtesy of Granma International

A close examination on the colonial origins of the Rwanda crisis

This is the first of a two part series focusing on Rwanda.

Shyamala Ivatury

Haunting images of orphans, bedraggled men and women walking for hundreds of miles with little or no food, water or medicine have flooded the world's newspapers and television screens. Almost half a million Rwandan refugees are leaving the squalid, microbe-infested camps in Goma, eastern Zaire, to return to their homes and lives in Rwanda.

But, in designating this crisis, the American media refuses to acknowledge that Rwanda conflict has its roots in colonialism. They would have you believe that the conflict between the Hutu and Tutsi is merely the result of deep- rooted, ancient hatred between the two groups. Rwanda is composed of a Hutu majority, with a 15 percent Tutsi minority, as well as the Twa, nomadic pygmies who are less than one percent.

While social categories existed in pre-colonial Rwanda, the differences between the Hutu and Tutsi were neither racial nor ethnic per se. Both groups shared the same language, traditions, and territory. They also recognized the same kings, allowed a degree of inter-marriage, and fought together against neighboring kingdoms. The social distinctions that did exist were based on a division of labor and were fluid rather than fixed. The formerly nomadic Tutsi, who migrated to the region hundreds of years ago, were primarily cattle herdsmen, while the Hutus were traditionally settled farmers.

When the Europeans first arrived in Africa, their worldview was informed by racist doctrines, which they used to try to make sense of African societies. These doctrines took a number of forms, including psuedo– scientific and theological. For example, many Europeans believed that the origin of the African was to be found in the biblical story of Ham, as described in the book of Genesis. It was thought that Ham, third son of Noah, and his descendants were "cursed" with African physical characteristics. Ham had spied on his father Noah, and seen him drunk and naked. Consequently, he and his offspring were cursed by God, and condemned to a life of servitude and slavery. In keeping with other European attitudes and practices, Africans were therefore deemed to be descendants of Ham.

Throughout the 19th century, such biblically–derived theories of racism were augmented by "scientific" theories of race, which emphasized a system of classifications based on physical characteristics such as type of hair, skull size and skin color. This led to a European classification of Africans, supposedly on the basis of physical characteristics, between those now "scientifically" identified as "descendants of Ham" (Nilotic peoples) and those considered simply as "Blacks" (such as Bantu speaking peoples) who were alleged to be another kind of human being and not descended from Noah. This entirely Eurocentric and malevolent distinction was to have far reaching consequences for many African peoples.

Rwanda was first colonized by the Germans in the late 19th century, but after the German defeat in World War I, it was given to Belgium as a League of Nations mandate. The colonizers devised a system of distinct tribes or categories largely on the basis of their Eurocentric prejudices and aesthetic impressions. They determined that in Rwanda, the tall Tutsi minority were the "Hamites" or the "superior Africans," and considered them "white coloreds," and a missing link between the whites and the blacks. They even suggested the Tutsi were "Europeans under a black skins," because of their straight noses, high foreheads and thin lips. In any event, they were identified as clearly superior to the majority Bantu people, the Hutus.

The majority of the people of Rwanda, the Hutu were denigrated as "inferior humans" even in the context of their own African society. They were described by J. Sasserath, a Belgian doctor in Rwanda as "possessing all the characteristics of the Negro: flat nosed, thick lips, low foreheads and brachycephalic skulls. They are like children, shy and lazy and usually dirty." The nomadic Twa were, of course, placed below both the Hutu and the Tutsi.

The colonizers systematically favored the Tutsi over the Hutu, thereby reinforcing and consolidating this division in Rwandese society. They exacerbated the damage by citing the supposed racial superiority of the Tutsi as the reason for this preference. For example, in 1927, a Belgian official wrote that the future of Rwanda lay in the hands of the Tutsi, as "they are born leaders, they have a natural ability to command." He claimed that this fact was acknowledged by even the Hutu. Thus, wealth, education, and other privileges were concentrated into the hands of the Tutsi.

The Belgian colonizers reorganized socio-economic relations in Rwanda by creating an oppressive hierarchy based on their own willful misreading of Rwandan history. Their undisguised aim was the maintenance their power through the age-old process of "divide and conquer." They consolidated these divisions by mandating "racial group membership" specification on identity cards.

These ethnic distinctions have permeated the Rawandan consciousness. By the early '50s, a fixed ethnic awareness had definitely developed in the populace. Also, there was a growing identification on the part of the Hutu majority of the Tutsi as outsiders, colonizers, and "Ethiopian invaders."

This perception was deliberately encouraged by the wily Belgians, who now sought to advance their interests by condemning the Tutsi social domination that they had systematically created. The Belgians now championed the Hutu majority citing the "democratic principle of majority rule" as the reason for this switch. In 1959, encouraged by the Belgian authorities more than 20,000 Tutsi chiefs were massacred by Hutu mobs.

In Rwanda, after formal decolonization in 1962, the Hutu majority came to power with a vengeance, and as Alain Destexhe points out, "the Tutsi minority became a scapegoat in every political crisis." These social divisions were further solidified, political parties desperate to achieve or remain in power, cynically continued played the "ethnic card."

In the 1970's, Hutu President Kayibanda placed quota restrictions on Tutsi representation in university admittance and civil service employment, and condemned "hybrid marriages." After he was overthrown by Julius Habyarimana in 1973, a period of relative calm followed until 1990.

After the decolonization of most of Africa in the 1960's, the French have emerged as the hegemonic European power in central Africa, including Rwanda, Burundi and Zaire. Interference and meddling has continued as French troops remained stationed in many parts of the region.

The western powers have continued to rely on exploiting differences, particularly those they largely created, in their former colonies. In Rwanda, the conflagrations of the 1990s have been the product of both the legacy of colonialism and the continued interference of the western powers.

In part two, we shall focus on the role of the French and other western powers in the giant human catastrophes ongoing in Rwanda and the Zaire.

Shyamala Ivatury is a Collegian Columnist.

Editor's Note

Welcome to another Developing Nations Page. Today we have included an outstanding speech by President Fidel Castro of Cuba. In spite of Castro's urgent reminders about the moral imperative regarding the crime of widespread global hunger, the United States government took the lead in refusing to acknowledge any international moral or legal obligation to feed the world's poor.

It is because of speeches like this one, and Castro's riveting address to the United Nations 50th Anniversary session, that so many around the world regard him as the voice of the conscience of the international community.

Along with an in–depth editorial on Rwanda, we include a press statement by LAWE — The Palestinian Society for the Protection of Human Rights and the Environment.

It is our obligation to examine the oppression of Third World peoples without fear or apology. We find this especially necessary when certain crucial issues are systematically misrepresented in our national newspapers, such as the oppression of Palestinians by the Israeli government, which is best compared to apartheid in South Africa.

The issue of United States government responsibility for the abuse and oppression of Third World peoples is also an important factor in orienting our concerns. It is a major part of our role to examine the effects of American policy, American allies, and American money in the Third World.

The continued oppression of the Palestinian people results in part from the unqualified support that the United States government gives to the State of Israel, and Washington's continued categorical opposition to the creation of a Palestinian state. This issue cannot be avoided, denied, or swept under the carpet. It is our obligation to continue to address it until justice at last comes to the people of Palestine.

— Sunanda Ghosh

Fidel wants you to write for Developing Nations!!

CONTACT SUNANDA GHOSH AT 545-1851

Israeli justice and the new era of peace: High court sanctions torture Palestinians

The following is a press release from LAWE (The Palestinian Society for the Protection of Human Rights and the Environment) issued Nov. 19.

In the last week, the Israeli High Court twice permitted the Israeli secret police ("GSS") to continue to use torture during their interrogations of Palestinian detainees. On Friday, Nov. 11, the High Court approved increasing the severity of torture used against Muhammed Hamdan a student from Bir Zeit University. The court deferred to the secret police's argument that Hamdan falls under the "ticking bomb" category — that the torture is necessary to avert the loss of lives — despite the fact that Hamdan has been in Israeli custody for more than four weeks. Incredibly, Justice Cheshin rebuked Hamdan's defense lawyer as immoral for petitioning the High Court to stop the torture.

In another High court decision yesterday, Justices Michael Cheshin, Dalia Dorner and Eliezer Goldberg permitted the secret police to continue to deprive Khader Mubarek of sleep and to cover his head continuously with a rancid sack. In this case, the court refused to issue a temporary order to stop the other methods of torture used, accepting the secret police's argument that the sack, the handcuffs and the "particular positions" utilized in Mubarek's interrogation were procedural to assure that Mubarek won't escape, and not part of the "moderate physical pressure" applied. Deprivation of sleep for five days continuously was not considered torture by the High Court. Mubarek has also been in Israeli custody for over month. During the entire interrogation period so far in which torture has been used against Mubarek and Hamdan, the secret police has not elicited any evidence from either of them regarding an imminent attack.

Under Israeli regulations, certain forms of torture are legal; others are legal only after the GSS head approves their application. Within Israeli legal discourse, the authorized legal torture methods are termed "moderate physical pressure." This moderate pressure includes tying up interrogees in twisted positions for up to five days continuously, denying sleep for days, covering detainees' heads with thick rancid sacks for days, light body–shaking, placing the detainee in a small windowless cell for weeks, playing blaring music 24 hours a day. Almost every Palestinian interrogee is tortured in this manner. Judges permit this torture routinely by extending the interrogation and not issuing prohibitions. Other more intense torture methods including severe body–shaking, require the approval of the head of the secret police — GSS. A special ministerial committee of the Knesset, made up of representatives from the Meretz, Labor and Likud parties, has routinely approved since 1994, the license to the GSS head to order more intense forms of pressure.

On Sunday, the Israeli military court fined four Israeli undercover unit agents one cent for accidentally assassinating the wrong Palestinian in 1993. Iyad Mahmoud Awad Badran, 19 years old from Qabalan, Nablus was murdered on November 13, 1993 by Israeli undercover units while riding in taxi. The court's decision overturned a plea bargain reached between the state and the undercover agents' lawyer in which the units were to spend 24 hours in prison as their sentence.

LAWE – The Palestinian Society for the Protection of Human Rights and the Environment deplores the High Court's decision sanctioning the use of torture. Under all international standards and the Torture Convention — to which Israel is a signatory — the prohibition against torture is absolute with no exceptions. The Court's reliance on the "ticking–bomb" theory is wholly inapplicable under international law and is a disgraceful legalism used by the Court to justify gross violations of Palestinian human rights.

LAWE expresses its strongest outrage at the Israeli military court's decision to fine murderers of an innocent civilian one cent. LAWE believes that this decision emanates from a deeply-rooted racism against Palestinians and the "cheapening" of the worth of Palestinian life. The Israeli court's decisions "sanctioning murder and torture" demonstrate how perverted the Israeli legal system has become and that justice for Palestinians can never be assured in an Israeli court. For the "new era of peace" to begin, even the Israeli courts must undergo a serious change.

Arts & Living

Hampden goes Greek; New Antigone a winner

By Julia Casson
Collegian Correspondent

ANTIGONE
Hampden Theater
Nov. 21

The first annual student-run production of Antigone, despite a few technical problems, was a success. The Theater Department and the Residential Arts program combined to create a thoroughly enjoyable evening of theater.

The Hampden Theater was packed Thursday night as the theater group performed a modern version of the classic Greek tragedy.

In this version, the character of Antigone was personalized. A willful, headstrong woman is portrayed at times, other times the audience saw her for what she really was — a young innocent girl in love.

Antigone is the tale of a young woman struggling with outside pressures. Questions of loyalty and responsibility were brought up continuously throughout the course of the play. If she should honor the presence of her dead brother she would no doubt face death herself.

However, if she should respect the law of the state and the king she would therefore be forgetting her brother.

From the beginning of the play, Antigone knew her destiny. She was a strong, soulful young woman who continued fighting until the last moments of her life. Her influential effect on others was apparent in the play as many mourned for her death.

Antigone was a wonderful opportunity for a vast array of talent to come together. A brilliant interpretation of a classic was created by the hard efforts of the cast and crew.

COURTESY FOX SEARCHLIGHT PICTURES

"Hoo— Wahlll My kingdom for a horse!" Al Pacino directs and stars in Looking for Richard.

Pacino's Richard tries to make Bard for all

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

LOOKING FOR RICHARD
Directed by Al Pacino
with Al Pacino, Winona Ryder, and Kevin Spacey Playing at Hampshire Six

There is one point in Al Pacino's new documentary about the filming of Richard III in which the creator walks about the streets of New York asking people their opinions of Shakespeare. The answers are both honest and obvious at the same time: Shakespeare has a lot to say, but he's difficult to understand.

When Looking for Richard works best is at the points when this concept is carefully examined. Pacino has almost obsessively attempted to capture Shakespeare's spirit and make it accessible to the common American. The fact that he contains such gleeful determination allows him to create an original outlook in the blending of cinema and theater.

Shakespeare's classic plays have been an amazing influence on playwrights and filmmakers for countless generations. Most recently, we have seen modernized renditions of Richard III and Romeo and Juliet, each marking a new trend in Shakespearian analysis. Although Romeo and Juliet seems to center far too much on violence, Ian MacKeller's Richard III is a superb masterpiece. MacKeller brought Shakespeare's most performed play to the screen and set it in a fictional 1930's fascist England. Anyone who is interested in an easier to understand, yet poetically dramatic version, would be pleased with this movie.

Pacino's film is impossible to compare, because it's not really about the play as much as about the essence of Shakespeare in general. The problem is that Pacino, one of the most accomplished American actors, has absolutely nothing to prove. He appears extremely confident in his directing debut, but when it comes to his message, he tries far too hard to get his point across.

The hope he has is for the viewer to understand Shakespeare as he does and relate to his personal passion. During the first half of the film he travels to Shakespeare's home and to the Globe Theater, as well as lecturing to students on what "The Winter of our Discontent" really means.

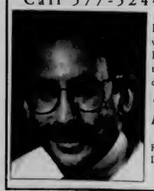
He adds amusement and the hope to frey from pretentiousness by not taking himself too seriously. When witnessing the bed in which Shakespeare was born, he realizes that it's not quite as magnificent as he had envisioned. During his lecture, the camera quickly switches angles to capture two students ferociously making out while listening to the wise words of their guest teacher.

After all the pre-production obstacles are accomplished, the film re-enacts the classic tragedy as it switches from rehearsals to the finished project, all within the same scene. Pacino gives us a clear sense of how difficult it is to preform Shakespeare; his technique in demonstrating this is interesting. We are taken through all the major aspects of the story, with time off in-between for Pacino and a host of intellectuals and celebrities to say what each scene or character means to them. Toward the end, Pacino disregards the documentary and focuses on the play's finale. The highlight of his entire career is at this point when all his hard work and determination pays off and he finds the Richard he was looking for.

Alec Baldwin proves once again that he can perform best when appearing in supporting roles. As the brother betrayed by Richard, Baldwin is magnificent in his cameo, seizing the intensity of the first half of the story. Winona Ryder, Kevin Spacey and Aidan Quinn serve more of a who's who of celebrity guests than pivotal characters.

The real star of this film is Shakespeare himself. At times Pacino notices his hero watching him from the sidelines, filling him with the inspiration he needs to get us through the rest of his film. All in all, Richard is just a means of communicating more directly to the heart of our most cherished playwright.

Pacino's only failure comes in the fact that he often forgets his own concern for us to understand this play. Almost ironically, many parts of the re-enactment become too overwhelming and the less experienced Shakespearian viewer can become lost in the world of unfamiliar language. Most of the time Looking for Richard serves brilliantly as a Cliff's Notes on film.



B

TOP 10 Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1. We have a comprehensive contact lens program.
2. Emergency eye care delivered at UHS, is a covered benefit if you are a student plan member.
3. Savings on eyeglasses from participating opticians are available if you are a student and have a complete optometry examination at UHS.
4. A great place to get contact lenses.
5. On-site contact lens specialist.
6. Free sample start-up contact lens solutions.
7. Contact lenses can be mailed directly to you; free postage for normal delivery.
8. Same day replacement of contact lenses, in many cases, due to our large in-house inventory.
9. We take great pride in being able to fit many people who have had difficulty in the past wearing contact lenses.
10. Convenient hours and location.

For appointments or questions, Call 577-5244 uhs

Patient feedback of those who have used the UHS Eye Care Program over twenty years has been consistently excellent.

"I invite you to use the Eye Services at UHS."

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D
Director, Eye Care Program

•Free Estimates
•Lifetime Repair Warranty
•Auto Glass Replacement
•Car & Truck Rental

North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

TONIGHT
PRE-HOLIDAY PARTY
Captain Morgan and Coke 2.00
Grape Crush 2.00
Red Dog 16oz Drafts 1.50
-Weekly Drink Specials-
with
D.J. BoB Paulin
Dancing
1/2 price Appetizer + Nachos
New Hours
3-5pm and 7-11 pm
NO COVER CHARGE
THE PUB
SMOKING SECTION 9-1
15 East Pleasant Street

BECOME AN AIR FORCE OFFICER.

Take the first step to becoming a leader in today's Air Force. Put your college degree to work in the Air Force Officer Training School. After completing Officer Training School you can become a commissioned Air Force officer with:

- great starting pay
- medical and dental care
- 30 days vacation with pay per year
- management opportunities

Discover how far a career in the Air Force can take you and what it takes to qualify. Call

AIR FORCE OPPORTUNITIES
TOLL FREE
1-800-423-USAF

AIR FORCE

Peruvian music explored by Smithsonian

COURTESY SMITHSTONIAN FOLKWAYS

This harpist and percussionist are presented on Lambayeque: Traditional Music of Peru.

In the world music scene there are all kinds of music, from Chinese punk rock to soukous. Some of the music is heavily produced for a thriving market, some in a classical artistic tradition, some true folk never heard outside its native region until an ethnomusicologist with a tape recorder visited.

Smithsonian Folkways is in the last category. The label results from the acquisition, in 1988, of famed Folkways Records by the Smithsonian Institute. Smithsonian Folkways is keeping every last one of the groundbreaking Folkways releases in print, while adding ambitious new projects to the catalogue.

The material on all of these albums is motivated by a research/academic orientation. As a result, what you get on SF records is "the real thing," true folk music barely influenced by mass media. The liner notes are extensive and usually written by ethnomusicologists with a good deal of expertise in the field. I do have some problems with this style: the approach sometimes leads to results that are too much like museum pieces. Music that comes from a thriving tradition can sound lifeless and canned on the albums. However, SF's vast coverage and high-quality products, born from love instead of profit, make it a deservedly respected label.

The most recent releases from Smithsonian are numbers three and four in the "Traditional Music of Peru" series. These new CD's come from the Archivo de Musica Tradicional Andina; number three is music from Cajamarca, an area in the north of Peru, and the Colca Valley in the far south. Cajamarcan music comes mainly from fiestas (such as Carnival, Holy Week and the Nativity of the Virgin) and working songs. The Colca Valley's music also stems heavily from Catholic festivals, but these celebrations have been integrated into the pre-Conquest Andean traditions. For this reason, the celebrations of Saints' Days are often related to agricultural seasons, such as the "time of scarcity" and "time of giving thanks."

Number four of the series presents music from Lambayeque, a district in coastal north Peru. The district spans a variety of environments, from high mountains to the environs of the Pan-American Highway along the coast. Accessibility to the outside world has brought strong new influences into the coastal regions, but many mountain areas remain inaccessible except by foot. A large number of the pieces from this area have also been recorded at religious festivals, central community events in the lives of many villages.

by Daniel Bodah

Often music to accompany dance, the songs are usually marked by a strong drum beat accompanied by wind instruments and, less commonly, stringed instruments such as mandolin and guitar. Some pieces that stand out especially are the solo agricultural songs played on clarin (an extremely long trumpet made from cane) in the Cajamarca region, the Lambayequen music which accompanies the diablicos (little devils) festival dance, and the Lambayequen marinera performed on harp, in which the drummer uses for his instrument the resonating chamber of the harp.

High quality field recording and extensive liner notes make Smithsonian Folkways releases worth watching for. The music of Peru is a diverse and interesting glimpse into the soul of an old culture. Watch also for Smithsonian's new additions to their extensive Music of Indonesia series, numbers 10 through 12, coming soon to this column.

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian Staff member.

■ misses

continued from page 10

Yarworth explains.

Apart from the reasons UMass was not at 100 percent, St. John's did finish victorious. Keith Conners, for SJU, finished first in both the diving events, scoring nine points in both. Sophomore Derrick Demaio, freshman Ed Heffernn and freshman Matt Turner slid into the second through fourth spots for both events.

Other notables for St. John's swimming and diving team were Justin Cisario winning in the 500 and 1000 free, Mark Westphal and Matt Rudolph coming first and second in the 100 fly, William Colman swinging those arms in the 100 Breast, and Thomas Allen grooving it in the 400 I.M.

Again, the important time for the men's swimming and diving team has not even come close to peering over the horizon. It's not until January, when the team's schedule starts to load up, with meets versus Dartmouth, UNH and UConn, but even then, February is the target for Yarworth and his team.

■ swim

continued from page 10

attempts, outdistancing her nearest competition by 85 points. Rodriguez was just continuing the roll she's been on all season, having recently stuffed the opposition in the one- and three- meter diving events against Boston University.

In other highlights at St. John's, Hickey won the 1000 Free in 10:46.49 leading a maroon and white sweep in that event. She was followed by Sonnwald (11:01.56) and Julie Alexander (11:01.84).

UMass still was in the meet entering the final event, the 200 Free Relay, but a St. John's win (1:40.30), offset the two through four finish by the Minutewomen.

"This is just an annoying blip on the big screen," stated Newcomb. "It has no effect on us one way or another. It will have no effect whatsoever on how we do in Philadelphia. We are a very good championship meet team."

The swimmers and divers will take an extremely deep squad to LaSalle University next weekend for the much anticipated Philadelphia Open. Newcomb agrees that his team should be considered among the favorites, matching up well against the likes of Drexel, Fordham and host LaSalle. The team will have a few days off over Thanksgiving to get the St. John's debacle out of its mind, and focus on the upcoming schedule which features three straight invitational meets, considered much more conducive to its strength than the recent dual meets it has been swimming and diving.

FILE CAO/COLLEGIAN

Save some turkey for me...
The hockey team won't have much time for leftovers this weekend when it travels to Colorado Springs,

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

Coming Soon!!
to a Collegian Newsstand near you!
The Collegian's in-depth season preview of UMass Mens Basketball.
Catch the magazine December 5th.

• A SPECIAL PUBLICATION OF •
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
'96
UMass basketball

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take Over Lease 1/97. One bedroom, uptown apt. Great location, Amherst Center. Call 253-4781

AUTO FOR SALE

'85 1/2 Ford Escort for $250! High miles, runs perfectly - only needs manifold repair. Call Mike at 549-9205 (leave a message)

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER CAMP! CO-ED Sleepaway! Many COUNSELOR POSITIONS AVAILABLE! We need role models, sensitive, caring and skilled staff members FOR THE BEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE! in NE Pennsylvania's Pocono Mts. call (800)61-WANDA or E-mail towanda@intercamp.com or visit our Web S i t e a http://www.intercamp.com/towanda for information, application and to schedule an interview. This is a great camp and an awesome experience. Camp Towanda, Honesdale, PA

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

EMPLOYMENT

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info: call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals Waterfront houses, Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

Smith Corona Personal Word Processor Like new, $100 or Best Offer. 546-6924

BEAUTIFUL DOG - MISTREATED NEEDS A LOVING OWNER. PLEASE INQUIRE @ 256-6909

Snowboard for sale Burton Twin Tip 139 with bindings. $200 or best offer. Call Rose 6-5538

Complete 5 CD stereo system! 5 band graphic equalizer, dual tape deck and powerful receiver. $250 or B/O. Call Craig 546-6811.

MAC Centris 610 8MB RAM 80MB HD Full page monitor (gray scale) External fax modem Ethernet card Call Fernao 549-3927. Price negotiable

FOUND

Found Single key on Dare keyring. Call The Collegian 545-3500

Found Ladies Gold Timex watch in Bartlett 11/21. Call Dawn 665-9068

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy Birthday Brendan Shaal Hey cutie boy coma here are you tickelish. I wanted to be the first person to wish you a glorious day. I hope tomorrow is all that you wish for. I love you, I love you, I love you. Be good be happy and smile. My heart—Diva

HOUSE FOR RENT

Secluded Rivarfront Home N. Green River ARTISTS INN Residence Living or Studio Space Avail. immed. Part-Furnished 14x24 $350/mo or 20x24 $375/mo + % util., sec. dep., references, some pets ok, gas heat, wash/dry, snow mtn., kitchen cathedral ceiling, fireplace, balcony. East Colrain, 20 min/GFLD. 40 min/UMass 624-3928

Amherst Belchertown line 4 bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area Available now 549-4270

MISCELLANEOUS

Rental Problems Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed. $35 800-776-9503. Doctor Approved

ROOM FOR RENT

Female Students: On-Campus living Room and board. Starting at $2000/semester. Singles available Immediate occupancy for Spring Semester. Call Karen (508)682-9213, Kathy (617)479-7636

On-Campus Housing available for Intersession. $250 Call Karen (508)682-9213, Kathy (617)479-7636

2 Outgoing girls seek person(s) to rent large bedroom in uptown apt. Great location, in great condition. Start Jan 1. Contact Tricie/LB 549-3649 ASAP

Sublease my room for the Spring Semester. Really close to campus! 549-5920

ROOM FOR RENT

Sundarland 1BR in 2BR Apt. $315.00 + utilities. Must find someone before Thanksgiving for Spring term or Jan. 1. 665-4394

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommates Wanted: One or two males to share rent at Brandywine Apts. Starts January 1st. Call Bryan 549-4591

SERVICES

GOPILLAGRAMS Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorilla. We'll go anywhere, anytime! Student rates available! Call 256-0287

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Screem Savers 549-0383

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free tasting and assistance. 549-1906

Mattress Wanted QUEEN Call Eugenie 545-3788

TRAVEL

Killington Ski House needs housemates $500.00 for entire season. 549-8524

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, Fl. Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Hasbrouck 227 Call Project DEEP @ (800)282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info. (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinne 567-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

Wanted- Tutor for AUTO CAD Release13. Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment", call Caroline at 546-5269 for more info. Identity confidential upon request.

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals, this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

Z	O	L	A			W	A	T	T		D	A	Y	S
I	N	I	T		C	O	B	R	A		O	B	I	T
P	I	T	H		A	V	A	I	L		C	A	P	E
S	T	E	E	P	L	E		P	L	A	T	T	E	R
		I	L	L		S	O	L	O
L	A	S	S	O	I	N	G		W	O	R	S	E	N
A	N	A	T		N	I	L	E		U	S	A	G	E
D	O	T		I	G	N	O	R	E	D		T	R	A
E	R	I	C	S		A	S	I	N		B	O	E	R
D	E	N	I	S	E		S	E	R	V	A	N	T	S
		R	U	L	E			O	E	R
C	O	N	C	E	A	L		A	L	T	O	O	N	A
O	R	A	L		P	E	R	I	L		N	O	E	L
M	E	R	E		S	C	A	D	S		E	Z	R	A
B	O	Y	D		E	T	T	E			T	E	D	S

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Expanded
5. Enjoys the sun
10. "Sweet" film role for Shirley
14. Agitate
15. Chef's protection
16. Use a sickle
17. "____ Lovely Day Today" (2 wds.)
18. Songstress Cleo
19. In the past
20. One cutting canines, e.g.
22. Ceded
24. Sponsors
26. Ill-lit
27. Say "yes"
30. More in Toledo
32. Lama
36. Actor Will of "The Waltons"
37. Tractability
39. Santa ___
40. Container
41. Clear
42. Type of cassette
43. Prodigious
46. Place (of)
47. Lets up
48. Ology: abbr.
49. No longer au courant
50. "___ Haw"
52. Inclled
54. Native environment
58. Certain falls
62. Caliph after Abu Bakr
63. Recipe direction
65. Joyce's home
66. Only fish in the sea?
67. Adjusts a piano
68. Rich: Sp.
69. Swerve
70. Squirrel away
71. Depict unfairly

DOWN

1. Sandpaper particles
2. Baptism, e.g.
3. If ah ___ fails ...
4. Meteorologist's concern
5. Large bundles
6. Flails
7. Hindustani title
8. King or Hong
9. Bergen dummy
10. Triathlete
11. Mediterranean Avenue's $2
12. Armor-breaking weapon
13. Imitated
21. Gardener's tool
23. Lent a hand
25. Jose or Juan start
27. Chalcedony
28. Seaport in Italy
29. Brings up
31. Less crooked
33. Jeans
34. Volcano's product
35. Volume
37. Type of rummy
38. Diminutive, to Capp
40. Assail
44. Put back on staff
45. Surface for Ekza
46. Stepping up tools
49. ___-brained (extraordinarily stupid)
51. Bridge seats
53. "A-laying" birds
54. "Bonanza" role
55. Run ___ (be in a frenzy)
56. "Road" film destination
57. Tense
59. Composer Satie
60. Donna or Jim
61. Kind of flake
64. Numero ___

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20

This week may be a good time to ask for a raise. You won't have to prove yourself—it's obvious to everyone that you deserve it. Call in old debts before the weekend. Choose a special evening to discuss future plans with your mate. A big change is ahead.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21

You're really on top of things this week. Use it to your advantage and move ahead. You may even be able to do something very risky and get away with it. Make travel plans with some old friends.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21

It may be time to seek an expert's advice on a recurring problem. You've handled it on your own long enough. A friend will try to repay an old debt this week—let him or her do it. It's been put off long enough. This weekend is the perfect time to put a romantic plan into effect.

CANCER
June 22–July 22

Go for team objectives early in the week. A friend may be able to help in an area you can't, so don't be afraid to toss the ball if you get stuck. It's time to get paperwork done that you've been putting off. Getting started is half the battle!

LEO
July 23–August 23

Your boss may overload you this week—hang in there. It's the perfect time to show your stuff! You'll also be gaining experience that will eventually be beneficial. Be thankful and keep your energy level up!

VIRGO
August 24–September 22

It's time to shine early in the week at work—you can do no wrong! Push hard for what you want. Even if you need to go out of your way, now is the time to do it. You're generally sort of shy, but you begin to let your guard down. Get excited—your dreams are finally within your grasp!

LIBRA
September 23–October 23

Put your house in order this week. Unexpected guests may surprise you this weekend. You'll feel better if you're prepared. Spend some time with your mate. He or she may be feeling a bit neglected lately because of your hectic schedule.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22

It's time to make a move at work that you've been contemplating for a long time. You've got nothing to lose. Don't wait until late in the week; complications will arise. You've made mistakes before; now use what you've learned from them. A relative inspires you.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21

Your mate is no help in your present dilemma. He or she seems to be unable to relate. Don't worry—it is only an isolated incident. It is best to avoid an argument and handle your problems on your own this week.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20

The beginning of a romantic adventure is right around the corner. It may be what you've been waiting for. Take the time to relax while you can—your moments of leisure may soon be few and far between!

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18

Your mornings could be tough this week, but don't worry. You know how to handle it. Put those good organizational skills to work. Old methods will work best for new problems. Start a new novel. It may be the best therapy to ease your mind.

PISCES
February 19–March 20

You and your coworkers make a great team this week. You're finally starting to work together to your benefit. You'll all be in a productive mood, and a lot will be accomplished. There is still a slight conflict between you and a close relative. Do your best to smooth it over.

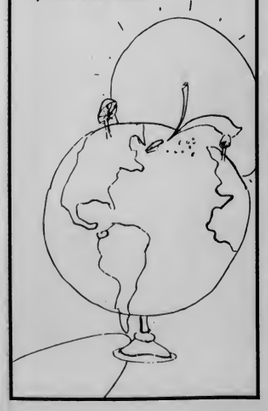
For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

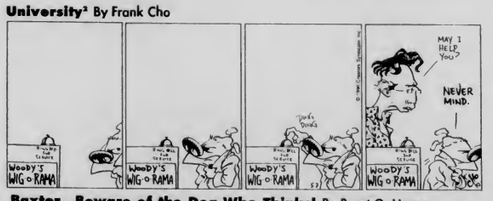
Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom



Everybody knows that things are not always what they seem.

Did you ever leave an orange out for a long time? Green mold starts to grow in little spots at first, but eventually, it completely covers the orange.



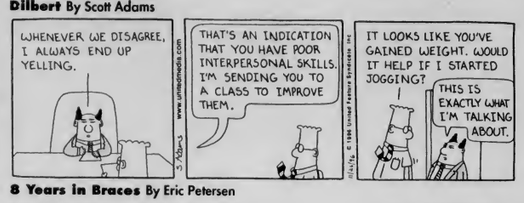
Basically the orange disappears. The living mold is the only thing that remains..... but the mold has nothing left to eat so it dies.

We think the earth was created for us, but what if.... we are only a growth on the earth. We eat the earth, ... then the earth lets us die.

Sometimes the mold-orange-earth thing reminds me of my girlfriend and me... except I'm not sure which one of us is the mold.

University² By Frank Cho

Baxter...Beware of the Dog Who Thinks! By Brant G. Henne



Bastards By Matt & Greg

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

"My husband said to send the bill to the New York Jets."

RECYCLE YOUR COLLEGIAN!
Pass it on!
Paper your R.A. in his/her room!

Quote of the Day

"I'm a giver, not a receiver."

–Over heard in 1615 JA

Quote of the Day

"The normal person, including bartenders, would be confused at this point."

–Professor Cade

Today's Staff

Mike Burke
Night Editor

Mark McGrath
Copy Editor

Kenneth W.P. Scott
Photo Technician

Brian Inocencio
Production Supervisor

Roberto Snow
Thang Vo
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH: Hamburger on a Roll; Grilled Cheese Sandwich; Hot & Spicy Chicken Wings

DINNER: Greek Style Lemon Chicken; Southern Fried Steak; Veg. Chow Mein

Hampshire

LUNCH: Hamburger on a Roll; Grilled Cheese Sandwich; Chicken a la King/Rice

DINNER: Greek Style Lemon Chicken; Southern Fried Steak

Worcester

LUNCH: Hamburger on a Roll; Spaghetti with Tomato Meat Sauce; Harvest Burger

DINNER: Greek Style Lemon Chicken; Vegetable Chow Mein; Pastabilities

Berkshire

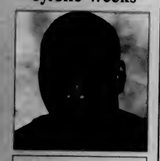
LUNCH: Hamburger on a Roll; Spaghetti with Tomato Meat Sauce; Harvest Burger

DINNER: Greek Style Lemon Chicken; Southern Fried Steak; Vegetable Chow Mein

Sports

In Hawaii, Minutemen bid aloha to Chaminade 59–48 in debut

UMass (1-0), 59



Smith 0-0 0-0 0, Weeks 8-15 3-6 19, Norville 1-2 1-2 3, Padilla 2-7 0-0 5, Travieso 6-13 2-2 16, Clarke 3-6 1-1 7, Ketner 3-8 0-0 6, Babul 1-2 0-0 2, Basit 0-3 1-2 1. Totals: 24-56 8-13 59

Chaminade (0-1), 48

Cephas 3-13 0-0 8, Antonio 3-4 0-0 9, Umberger 1-1 0-0 2, Farrell 0-5 0-0 0, Clavon 6-17 3-5 19, Tracy 1-1 0-0 2, Rivera 1-3 0-0 3, Davis 1-1 0-0 3, Bowling 1-1 0-0 2. Totals: 17-46 3-5 48

— HIGHLIGHTS
— After falling behind 13–8 early in the first half, UMass outscored the Silverswords 24–10 to take nine point lead into locker room
— Carmelo Travieso added 16 points and sophomore Lari Ketner chipped in with eight in his first collegiate outing.

Tyrone Weeks

UMass basketball Player of the Game

PLAYER OF THE GAME
Senior forward Tyrone Weeks scored a career-high 19 points, and pulled down 11 rebounds.

THANG VO \ COLLEGIAN
Tyrone Weeks led the Massachusetts men's basketball team to a 59–48 win over host Chaminade in the Maui Invitational yesterday.

LAHAINA, Hawaii (AP) — James Flint didn't know who was more nervous — he or his players — for 15th-ranked Massachusetts' season-opener.

Flint, making his debut as coach of the Minutemen after replacing John Calipari, got a win, 59-48 over Chaminade in the Maui Invitational opener yesterday.

"When I woke up this morning, I was ready to play," he said. "I just wanted to get this one out of the way."

But when his team took the floor, it wasn't what he expected. "We didn't get off to a good start," he said after the Minutemen fell behind 13-8. "We weren't hitting and we were rushing. We were getting off quick shots and they made for easy baskets for them [Chaminade].

"But once we settled down, and got the ball inside, we were OK."

Getting the ball inside to UMass' bulkier front line was the key to victory. Of the Minutemen's 36 rebounds, 15 were off the offensive boards and they led to 18 points.

Tyrone Weeks, who is expected to take up the slack left by the departure of All-America Marcus Camby, scored 19 points and grabbed 11 rebounds, five coming off of missed shots by teammates.

"We have to have post presence," Flint said. "That's our game — get the ball inside and play. But it was our first game and it's going to take time before we get the right chemistry."

Chaminade's Al Walker, also coaching his first game, agreed that lack of size was a problem for the undersized Silverswords. "That's why we tried to spread the floor with four perimeter players," he said. "But it's tough to get shots off against good defensive teams like UMass."

Carmelo Travieso had 16 points for UMass. Darnell Clavon led Chaminade with 19 points.

Weeks gives career effort in UMass win; Minutemen down Chaminade, 59–48

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The arena at the Lahaina Civic Center looked more like a high school gymnasium than the host site of an established early-season college basketball tournament.

Fittingly so, because even though the members of the Massachusetts men's basketball team squeaked by host Chaminade with a 59–48 victory, Minuteman senior Tyrone Weeks took control of the game and single handedly schooled the Silverswords.

Weeks dominated UMass's play, scoring a career-high 19 points and shutting down Chaminade's front line with his tenacious defense.

In the first half, the Silverswords were running on the adrenaline created from playing a nationally ranked opponent, and it scared the Minutemen. UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint called time out just over five minutes into the game, as if to call for someone to step it up a notch.

If Flint did make that call, Weeks answered.

Time and again, Weeks scored when UMass needed it, to bring the Minutemen back from a deficit the pumped-up Hawaiian team had staked for itself.

With just over nine minutes remaining in the first half, Weeks came away with a crushing block at Chaminade's end of the court. That block set the stage for the Minutemen to make a 15–3 run over the course of seven minutes.

Weeks didn't let up in the second half either, helping UMass stave off Chaminade's hopes for a comeback.

The senior forward was everywhere.

Bill Raftery, who provided the color commentary for the game on ESPN's broadcast said that Weeks exemplified the concept of "BruiserBall."

"You have to put it inside and bang it up. [Weeks] does it," Raftery said.

He was in the air, jockeying for one of his 11 rebounds. He was on the ground, fighting for a loose ball. He was on his opponent's heels, giving the Silver Sword small forward fits.

"He's taken up the challenge, and I've talked to him about that," Flint said. "He knows this is his time. He had a tough match-up, because that kid was really like a small forward. He played out on the floor and never posted Ty up."

Weeks was the quintessential leader for the Minutemen on the afternoon, calming the young Minuteman squad after a jittery start to the game.

Yesterday's game marked the start of the UMass season, and it was apparent that there were some nerves in the opening minutes of the game.

Although Flint started only one freshman, swingman Winston Smith, he rotated his young artillery throughout the game.

Sophomore Lari Ketner provided a spark in the middle, chipping in for six points in his debut.

"Lari played with a lot of spunk and enthusiasm," Flint said. "I was really happy with Lari's effort."

Smith played strong at the small forward position, aggressively diving for loose balls. Ajmal Basit spelled Ketner and junior Inus Norville in the middle; while Mike Babul and Chris Kirkland settled their collegiate butterflies with their first game action.

"We got good shots, we just had to post the ball," Flint said. "In the second half Lari and Tyrone just settled down today."

Over the course of the preseason, UMass guards Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso talked about how important it was to be leaders for the newcomers, to help them adjust to the college game. While the Chaminade defense keyed in on the backcourt tandem, Weeks stepped into the leadership role, showing the rookies what the college game was all about.

"He's one of our senior leaders," Flint said. "I thought he played well, he dove on the floor to show the young guys — this is how we play."

Women's hoop looking to start a new winning streak

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

The home winning streak is over, so the Massachusetts basketball team will try to start one on the road.

Tonight the Minutewomen of the hardwood take on the Stags of Fairfield University at Alumni Hall in Fairfield Conn.

UMass is coming off their first regular-season tilt, a game in which Ohio State used a 23-9 run to finish off the Minutewomen and end their string of 15 home contests without a loss. Crystal Carroll — picking up the offensive slack in the absence of fellow co-captain Beth Kuzmeski and junior forward Tez Kraft — poured in 23 points on 10-for- 16 shooting.

The Stags also have one regular season contest under their belts heading into battle with the Minutewomen. Fairfield opened up its season last Friday against the Big East's Seton Hall Pirates. The Stags outscored the Pirates by seven in the second half to pull out a 54–53 season-opening victory.

Junior forward Page Driscoll led the Fairfield effort with 18 points and eight rebounds. Driscoll was Fairfield's sixth woman a year ago, averaging 8.8 points and 3.9 boards off the pine in 19 minutes per game.

The Stags' top returning scorer from last season, Jessica Grossarth was held to nine points on 3-for-14 shooting, but the junior forward hauled in six defensive rebounds and dished out five assists.

Grossarth was second on the Fairfield scoring list a year ago averaging 13.4 points a contest, but she shot a meager .363 from the field. She was second on the team in rebounding last season, clearing off the boards at a clip of 5.9 rebounds a game.

The Stags' rebounding leader from last season is one of this year's co-captains, Bridget Cleary. The senior center/forward averaged 6.4 rebounds per contest and tallied nearly five points a game. Cleary played only eight minutes in the Seton Hall game as she was in foul trouble throughout.

Fairfield's other captain is 6-foot-1 senior forward Heidi Gill. Gill averaged 6.3 points and 5.0 rebounds in 31 games last season including 20 starts. Gill came off the bench in Fairfield's first affair notching five points in eight rebounds in 29 minutes.

Role players Cindy O'Connor and Jennifer Natale — both sophomores — round out the Stags' starting line-up. Natale averaged 2.6 points and 1.9 rebounds while O'Connor did not play last season.

Like the UMass women, the Stags are lacking depth this season. Fairfield went with a seven woman rotation for the majority of the contest.

The Minutewomen worked with only two players off the bench for most of the game on Sunday. Kuzmeski and Kraft are both out indefinitely, and Minutewomen head coach Joanie O'Brien said she would be happy if one or the other was back in the maroon and white for the Hartford home game on Dec. 22.

As a result of the loss of Kuzmeski and Kraft, freshmen Kelly Van Huisen and Alison MacFarland have been thrust into starting roles. MacFarland, a pure long-range shooter, has struggled in the early going as evidenced by her 2-for-12 effort in the Ohio State loss — 2-for-4 from three-point land, 0-for-8 inside the stripe.

Van Huisen has answered the call, running the show for the better part of the Ohio State game with senior point guard Sabriya Mitchell on the bench in foul trouble. In 35 minutes of action, Van Huisen responded with 14 points and five assists.

St. John's swims past UM

By Chris Krein
Collegian Staff

Three points and a tardy bus.

That would be the Reader's Digest condensed version of the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team over the past two weeks.

The team registered a momentous two point win over Boston University on Nov. 16. That momentum was unable to carry over to this past weekend, due to a late bus that was partially responsible for an unfortunate one point loss Saturday at St. John's.

The team's record now stands at a respectable 3–2 going into the most important meet thus far this season, a Dec. 6–7 showdown with seven other schools at the Philadelphia Open. The team looked to enter the invitational brimming with confidence after a hard-fought 151–149 victory in Boston, but the team faltered against St. John's due to extenuating circumstances.

The Minutewomen made an impressive splash against the Red Storm, considering the obstacle that they had to hurdle. The bus that was to carry the team to Jamaica, NY arrived over two hours late, putting the team in an uncompromising situation. UMass was only delegated minimal time for warm-ups and suffered as a result.

Despite the handicap, the women performed admirably, winning four events and placing at least in second in seven others. It wasn't enough to eke out a win, and St. John's was able to capture the final relay to finish with the 122–121 victory.

Sparkling in the heartbreaking loss were individual wins from freshman Andrea Spencer, sophomore Meghan Matacera (1:02.50 in the 100 Back), junior Barbara Hickey and junior diver Angelique Rodriguez.

"Matacera, in particular, is swimming very well right now," said Head Coach Bob Newcomb. He also pointed to solid performances by Pam Perog (third in the 100 Breast, 1:12.99) and Lyndsay Crenshaw (third in the 200 Free, 2:00.52). He equally expressed his delight in having junior Karen Sonnwald back earlier than expected from a foot injury.

Spencer has been on fire lately, taking the 100 Fly in a time of 1:00.73. She also claimed three individual victories against B.U., touching first in the 50 Free, 100 Fly and the 200 IM.

In the lone diving competition, Rodriguez continued her assault on the school diving record book, obliterating her own previous mark on the one-meter board in route to a commanding victory. She posted a mark of 388.72 in 10

Turn to SWIM, page 7

UMass misses the bus

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team suffered a not-so-surprising defeat to St. John's on Saturday. In favor of UMass, the Red Storm were healthy and were playing in their home pool in Jamaica, N.Y. With that in mind, St. John's was able to pull off a 143–95 victory. The Minutemen are now 2-1 overall in dual meets.

"Nothing went wrong," Coach Russ Yarworth said, "We swam OK, but we had travel problems and only had a half an hour to warm up because the bus company screwed up. But we swam well."

The bus that was supposed to take the Minutemen from Amherst to Jamaica, N.Y. arrived late and got the team to St. John's pool over a half hour after the meet was supposed to begin. So without a proper warm-up, and only 30 minutes in the pool to get loose, UMass had to swim in a foreign pool with a fired up Red Storm.

"They're [St. John's] nothing spectacular. But they were fired up and ready to go and we're pretty battered up right now, but I'm not disappointed," Yarworth said.

Riddled with injuries and the lack of good transportation, the Minutemen of the chlorine sea swam tough, but in the end, the Red Storm, confident and fired up, put the jets on and won. Out of the 13 events the men swam in Saturday, St. John's finished first in 10. Matt Davey, a junior who performed well versus Boston University, won two events for UMass, in the 200 freestyle, and the 200 freestyle relay. He also finished a split second behind Van Nostran of SIU in the 100 freestyle, while a quiet Sean Anderson finished in a distant fourth.

"Matt Davey swam well, along with Dave Kortitkowski," Yarworth said. "Geoff Gear is almost ready to come back, but basically that is all. No one else [out of the nine top athletes of the team that are out] is ready to come back."

Apart from the super freshmen Rich Slinguff and Billy Hunter competing in the final four for Yarworth's water polo team next weekend, more than a few players will not be eligible to participate in the pool until the second semester.

"We swam like a tired team," Yarworth said. Not to mention the fact that the team is involved in it's toughest practicing sessions of the season.

After turkey, stuffing and grandma's special gravy, the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team will be ready for the Philadelphia Invitational, where the Minutemen will sharpen up their skills for the final months to come. Unfortunately, Coach Yarworth will not be able to attend his boys down in Philly, since he'll be basking in the rays of San Diego, where he will be coaching UMass in the final four of men's water polo.

"That's when they will improve. Philly is really a stepping stone for us. They [UMass swimmers] know when to swim faster. They know what means the most to the other coaches and myself, and when it really counts, they'll turn it on."

Turn to MISSES, page 7

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

We've only just begun...
The Massachusetts women's basketball team looks to grab their first win tonight when they take on Fairfield.

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 59 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Wednesday, November 27, 1996

Music to the ears

moe. and Chuck D have new albums out. Find out about the new music and more inside (see Arts & Living, page 5).

Minutemen mauled in Maui

Charlton Clarke was one of few bright spots for the Minutemen, as the unranked Virginia Cavaliers ambushed UMass, 75–68. For the wrap–up, (see Sports page 8).

WORLD

Amnesty: 500 Rwand refugees slaughtered

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A Tutsi-led rebel force massacred 500 men at a camp sheltering Rwandan and Zairian refugees from fighting in eastern Zaire, Amnesty International said yesterday.

Rebels also killed a Roman Catholic priest when he protested the slaughter of civilians south of Bukavu, Zaire, the London-based human rights group said in a statement.

The report could not be independently confirmed. The Nairobi office of the International Committee of the Red Cross, which has medical staff in Bukavu, said it knew nothing of a massacre.

The killings happened on or around Nov. 18, when a rebel force found the Rwandan refugees and displaced Zairians at Chimenga refugee camp in rebel-held territory 40 miles south of Bukavu, Amnesty International said.

The rebels separated the men from women and children, the group said. They opened fire on the men, killing all of them, it said.

The victims were buried in mass graves near the camp, it said.

The priest who was killed, Father Jean-Claude Buhendwa, had been staying with the refugees, the rights agency said.

NATION

Ex-Contra leaders deny drug charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former commander of the Contras in their fight against the Nicaraguan government yesterday scoffed at the idea that the CIA was connected to cocaine trafficking in the United States to raise money for the Contras.

"I could never suspect or never imagined as the CIA people I met... could be capable of going into any kind of illegal or immoral or criminal activities," Adolfo Calero told the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Eden Pastore, the "Commander Zero" who was the No. 1 resistance leader on Nicaragua's Southern Front, denied knowing that a wealthy contributor to the Contras was a drug trafficker.

"Only when he was arrested in San Diego," Pastore said of Oscar Danilo Blandon. "I did not know he was a drug trafficker but I did know him as a good friend."

Sen. Arlen Specter, (R-Pa.), chairman of the committee, said Blandon had testified in a deposition Monday that he became involved in selling cocaine in California in late 1981 in order to earn money for the Contras.

"In response to direct questions from the committee, Mr. Blandon stated that he had never had any contact with the CIA and that the CIA was not involved in his drug-trafficking business in any way," Specter said.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 20	HIGH: 40 LOW: 20	HIGH: 40 LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 6
Comics .....page 7
Crossword .....page 6
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 8

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN
"Fill – A – Bus"!
Aaron Cash, a sophomore undeclared major and Emily Pfeiffer, a senior psychology major, stand out in the rain yesterday afternoon to hand out flyers for the UMass Community Service Program's "Fill–A–Bus" clothing and toy drive.

UM issues statement: sex offender's record known by admissions

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

In a new development, the University of Massachusetts Dean of Students Office issued a statement yesterday saying that the University did know the criminal history of sophomore Michael Carlson, a convicted sex offender, before he was accepted by the University and granted on– campus housing.

"[Carlson] fully disclosed information about his background on his application form and in an on–campus interview, and was admitted through normal admissions procedures," said Jo–Anne Vanin, dean of students and associate vice chancellor for student affairs. "We stand by that decision."

Kay Scanlan, a spokesperson for the University, said she was misunderstood in a statement she issued to the Collegian on Monday night that the University did not know about Carlson's conviction. Scanlan affirmed that the University was aware of this fact, but that until last Wednesday, the Dean of Student's Office was not.

"He himself fully disclosed his criminal record to the University," Scanlan said of Carlson. "He went through several interviews in the admissions process."

Scanlan said Carlson had two interviews before his acceptance to UMass and that his background was considered in the process.

"No policy was violated when he was admitted. However, with recent legislation requiring the registration of convicted sex offenders, we are reviewing our policies and practices to see if they need updating or if they can be improved," Vanin said.

The issue of whether or not Carlson's criminal record should be disclosed to other students living on campus arose from a Channel 40–Springfield news report about Carlson and the Massachusetts Sex Offender Registry statute. The first two parts of a three–part series aired Monday night and last night, respectively.

Carlson, who served a two–year prison term for rape and sexual assault, is registered with the Criminal History Systems Board in his hometown of Boxboro.

Since interpretations of the recently enacted Sex Offenders law are varying, questions have risen as to whether college students who are living on campus who are convicted sex offenders should be required to register at their legal address, in the town of where the college is, or with the public safety department of the college or university.

John Luippold, UMass Chief of Police, said that these questions have been posed to the state's attorney general's office who is reviewing the statute in order to provide guidance for law enforcement officials, such as UMass police.

"In a training session that all police departments had during the summer which we attended, the Criminal History Systems Board indicated that the specific statute did not include campus safety, college police departments or state police," Luippold said.

Therefore, according to Luippold, the Amherst police department is responsible for local

Turn to RAPIST, page 2

Another juror dismissed in wrongful death trial

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — A juror who said all she did was talk to a law clerk about his tie was dismissed from the O.J. Simpson jury today for trying to contact lawyers in the case. In what's become a pattern in the sensational case, she already hired an agent and was booked on a national morning talk show for today.

In kicking aspiring actress Ann-Marie Jamison off the case, Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki sternly warned others on the panel that "a jury is not a social camp."

Simpson then took the stand for the third day in the wrong death trial.

The juror chosen to replace Jamison is white and in her 20s. She wrote on her questionnaire that Simpson was "secure, athletic and wealthy."

The new jury still has nine whites, one black, one person of mixed race and one Hispanic. There are still seven women and five men. The alternate pool is now down to five people.

On Monday, the judge said he was going to excuse the juror because she was "unable to conduct herself properly as a juror." He said she twice tried to contact trial participants — attorneys and one of their employees.

Fujisaki started today's session by scolding the remaining members of the jury. He suggested that sequestration would be one way to deal with the problem "but I don't think that's appropriate in a civil case."

Jamison told KABC-TV that the closest she came to contact was to make a comment about a law clerk's tie.

"I said, 'I like his tie,'" she said. "This is an absolutely ludicrous reason for being dismissed... I was on my best behavior and I was taking good notes and I thought that I was a good juror."

Sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said some fellow jurors complained about Jamison, who works in retail jewelry sales. During jury selection she said she had no opinions about the criminal case and didn't pay much attention to it.

On Halloween, she marched into the jury box wearing a purple T-shirt with a bright orange message: "It's Halloween! Care to Go Bump In The Night?"

Jamison is the fourth juror or alternate to be dismissed. Dismissals have come for drinking, sleeping and illness.

Attorney Michael Brewer, who was interrupted by the jury problem late Monday just as he started to question Simpson, began his questioning today.

During two days of relentless plaintiff questioning, the theory that helped Simpson win acquittal in his criminal trial has not been mentioned. Simpson has not suggested there was a police-driven plot to frame him.

Instead, when asked in the trial to explain all the physical evidence, from blood in his Bronco to blood at the crime scene, Simpson simply said he didn't know how it got there.

No racist rogue detectives. No nefarious lab guys. No mention of conspiracy. No allegation of contamination.

"You have no explanation for this jury?" asked plaintiff lawyer Daniel Petrocelli, in one of many questions about blood evidence.

"None," Simpson said.

He also denied he ever officially took a lie detector test. He said he only underwent a practice session and was unaware he had scored a minus 22, which Petrocelli defined as "extreme deception."

"They wired me up to something and they got to where they explained to me how it works," Simpson said. "We went through it once. We didn't take a lie detector test. I was asking him how it works and he gave me an example."

Simpson's testimony Monday was marked by a series of "I don't knows," a companion to his string of denials on Friday.

Simpson said he couldn't explain in detail anything from the location of any gloves he owned to how he got cuts on his left hand — gouges the plaintiffs say his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman made with fingernails during a death struggle.

Simpson's demeanor was somber. He rarely raised his voice. The judge had to tell him to move the microphone closer so people could hear him. His few quips were generally greeted with stares from the jury.

He never got angry, and endured Petrocelli's relentless questions by answering in calm, even tones. He never got involved in the sharp exchanges between Petrocelli and Simpson's lawyer, Robert Baker, who accused Petrocelli at one point of "showboating."

Simpson was acquitted last year in the June 12, 1994, stabbing deaths. Simpson did not testify during the criminal trial. Relatives of the victims sued Simpson for wrongful death, forcing him to take the stand this time. Protections against self-incrimination do not apply since he was cleared of charges and can't be retried.

UM, town discuss local problems

Off campus students, town relations topic of last weeks meeting

By Beth McCarthy
Collegian Staff

Representatives from the University of Massachusetts and the town of Amherst met on Nov. 15 in efforts to solve the problems caused by students living off–campus.

The meeting was part of an ongoing effort to mend strained relationships that have historically caused tensions between the town and the University.

UMass students' behavior off–campus has been a particular point of contention in recent years and was addressed at this meeting.

"I'm certainly willing to concede that most students behave like they would at home, but there are pockets of unacceptable behavior and they need to be addressed," said Hill Boss, an Amherst Selectboard member.

The question remains whether the University will take responsibility for activities, such as drinking and the continuously disturbing parties that last into the early morning, of students who live off campus, Boss said.

"I think it was a good meeting," said Jo–Anne Vanin, dean of students and vice chancellor for student affairs. I think we were able to clarify that our codes wouldn't apply to this situation."

Boss, however, said "we accomplished very, very little," and that he is beginning to think that these conferences are just for show, due to the lack of any implementations of decisions made in the past.

According to Associate Vice–Chancellor John Feudo, what was accomplished was the possibility of forming a subcommittee to find an agreeable solution for everyone.

This committee will include students, representatives from UMass and town representatives and one of its goals is to determine if a former committee should be revived, said Vanin.

This decision was made after the town requested that a full time mediator be implemented, said Feudo.

According to Boss, this same type of situation occurred at the University of Vermont and it was resolved by implementing mediation procedures.

Boss said that he would have liked to see more immediate changes.

"I wanted them [UMass] to apply campus conduct to off– campus behavior," said Boss. "If you can apply the campus code to buses then you can do so off–campus."

Boss said he was referring to the sign in the front of Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) buses that says students must conduct themselves as they would on campus.

Vanin explained that the "PVTA is an extension to UMass because we do contribute money to it out of students fees and that's why there is an exception."

Feudo said that the landlords should be the ones primarily responsible about what occurs in the houses that they lease.

"We've brought into the picture absentee landlords," Feudo said in an attempt to answer the question of who is ultimately responsible. "Is it the Dean of Students who should be responsible for off–campus behavior or the landlord who owns the property?"

Boss said that he agreed that landlords are an "integral part of the problem."

He said that most landlords are responsible and do exert proper control over their tenants, but the problem arises when the leaser is absent from the scene.

Boss also suggested the University implement residential monitors, similar to the role that residential assistants (RA's) play in on–campus dormitories.

"The University shot that down," said Boss.

Boss said that the only positive progress made at the meeting was the mediation plan.

"There is a potential of some good coming out of that meeting," said Boss. "But, if this plan is not implemented, then nothing of much significance came out of it."

According to Vanin, representatives of UMass and the town of Amherst have agreed to meet again sometime in mid December.

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN
Pool shark!
Maria Resendes, a junior school of management and international business double major, plays pool in the Game Room at the Student Union yesterday afternoon.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Thursday, Nov. 28

Class — "Lunch and Learn" at this free drop in class. Learn about the Jewish concepts of Geulah, redemption and Moshiach, the Messiah, during your lunch hour. Sponsored by Chabad House at Amherst. Classes are at noon. location to be announced. Free and open to the public. Call 545-4094 for more information.

Dinner — Members of the GLBT community and allies are welcome to attend a Stonewall Thanksgiving Potluck Dinner. If you can't get home for the holiday, share a meal with the folks at the Stonewall Center. Time TBA. RSVP to the Stonewall Center at 545-4824. For more information, please contact the UMass Stonewall Center at 545-4824.

Monday, Dec. 2

Talk — Susan Clarke, a Five College Women's Studies Community Associate from South Hadley High School, will give a talk entitled "Mid-life Women High School Teachers' Models of Transition for Adolescent Students" at 4:30 p.m. in the Dickinson House Living Room at Mount Holyoke College.

Tuesday, Nov. 3

Colloquium — Leslie Bender, a Five College Women's Studies Research Associate from the Syracuse University College of Law, will give a colloquium entitled "Legal Challenges to Social Injustice: How Women Can Use Tort Law to Continue Feminist Struggle" at 7:30 p.m. in the Dickinson House Living Room at Mount Holyoke College.

Notices

AIDS Day — UMass is participating in the global observance of World AIDS Day which will take place from Nov. 25 through Dec. 6. You can get HIV/AIDS information and a red ribbon to pin on yourself or on our "Remembrance Tree" at the Campus Center Concourse table each day. Visit the Faces of AIDS art display and the Five College AIDS Quilt at Earthfoods. Watch "Boys on the Side" on HSCN. Activities will culminate with a candlelight vigil on the Student Union steps at 5 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 6 and a march to the First Congregational Church on Main St. in Amherst for a gathering of Remembrance and Hope. Refreshments will be served. After that, there will be a poetry/prose reading followed by an open mike at 8 p.m. at Claudia's Cafe. For more information, contact Health Education at 577-5181.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol-free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584-8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546-1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma. 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545-2391.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Tues., Dec. 3 from 5:30-7 p.m. in CC room 165-169.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach international team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577-5181 for more info) and 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H-4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30- 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545-2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Literature — MOTHERTONGUE, the multilingual student publication by the dept. of Comparative Literature, is currently seeking submissions for the spring '97 publication. We will accept original poetry, short stories, one-acts, international photographs and art work created by multilingual students. Please submit a copy in English to the Comparative Literature Dept. in 203 South College. Rough drafts are acceptable.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon-1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546-6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5-1925.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546-6487 or Nizam at 546-3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546-3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256-8482 or Laili at 253-0674.

Campus Police Log

Accident — Property Damage

Nov. 22
A vehicle collided with a light pole on Commonwealth Avenue near the Mullins Center.

Assault & Battery

Nov. 23
There was a domestic dispute in Lewis Hall. An emergency restraining order was issued. One party was served and removed from campus.

Nov. 24
An individual from Patterson Residence Hall reported being assaulted by a resident and wanted a report on file regarding the incident.

An anonymous caller reported being pushed from behind while walking on the Orchard Hill walkway. The assailant made derogatory remarks to the victim and fled from the scene.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering

Nov. 22
A vehicle was broken into in parking lot 44. A stereo system was stolen.

A vehicle was broken into in parking lot 44. There was interior damage to the vehicle.

Nov. 23
A vehicle in parking lot 49 was broken into.

Health/Safety Hazard

Nov. 23
There was a report of water coming through the ceiling in the lobby of Kennedy Residence Hall.

Environmental Health & Services was called to check a live Christmas tree brought into Chadbourne Residence Hall.

Larceny

Nov. 22
There was a report of cash stolen from People's Market in the Campus Center.

An individual from Lederle Research Building reported that his bookbag was stolen.

Nov. 23
A delivery person reported a pizza was stolen in Mackimmie Residence Hall.

An individual reported a backpack stolen from the W.E.B. DuBois Library.

Nov. 24
A delivery driver reported that a pizza was stolen from his vehicle on Eastman Lane.

Liquor Law Violations

Nov. 23
Rebeccah D. Pauquette, 18, of 16 Wilmot Rd., Waltham, was arrested on the Southwest Mall for person under 21 possession and transport of liquor, operation on a sidewalk and license not in possession.

Motor Vehicle Theft

Nov. 23
A vehicle was stolen from parking lot 32.

Noise Complaint

Nov. 23
Police responded to a noise complaint in Cashin Residence Hall. An individual was arrested for assault and battery and resisting a police officer making a lawful arrest.

Suspicious Person/Activity

Nov. 23
Christopher M. Cassidy, 18, of 142 Vine St., Reading, was arrested for possession of a Class D substance, possession of liquor by a person under 21 and possession of an altered Registry of Motor Vehicles document.

Traffic Stop

Nov. 22
David S. Lindsay, 23, of 40 Main St., Marshfield, was stopped on Commonwealth Avenue and arrested for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

Nov. 23
Terrance C. Murphy, 22, of 73 Yorktowne Ct., Chicopee, was stopped on North Village Drive and arrested for disorderly conduct, operating under the influence of liquor and speeding.

Nov. 24
Charles L. Malek, Jr., 39, of 76 North Maple St., Hadley, was stopped on Stadium Drive and arrested for operating under the influence of liquor (third offense), unreasonable and improper speeding and driving outside of marked lanes.

Vandalism

Nov. 22
A vending machine was damaged in Mackimmie Residence Hall.

Nov. 23
Sexual graffiti was written on a door in Brett Residence Hall.

A window was broken on the fourth floor of Kennedy Residence Hall. Housing was notified.

A vehicle in parking lot 22 was damaged.

■ rapist

continued from page 1

sex offender registry information.

According to the Dean of Student's press release, Carlson has been moved out of Leach Residence Hall because of concern for all parties involved.

"Michael [Carlson] is not currently living in a residence hall," Vanin said. "I have met with him, some other residents of his residence hall and numerous administrators, and am working to determine the best solution for all concerned.

"The safety and privacy of our students are high priorities with us. The recent publicity has heightened our concern, particularly for Michael and the other residents of his resident hall," Vanin said.

Scanlan said Carlson moved out of the resident hall system after they became aware of Channel 40's presence on campus. Scanlan could not comment as to whether or not Carlson is still residing on campus somewhere.

Michael Gilbert, Director of Housing, said the Housing Staff has been working on this matter since it came to their attention on Wednesday.

"I have had several phone conversations with the student involved and had occasion to meet with him once," Gilbert said. "We will work to see that he is afforded appropriate privacy levels in the residence hall."

DAILY COLLEGIAN and ICP present:

The First Annual UMass bandWidth Spanning Five UMass Bands

Watch here for band listing!

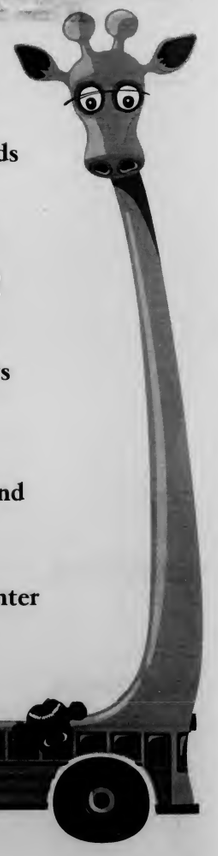
18+ CLUB METRO NORTHAMPTON, MA

Monday Dec. 9th

Doors Open @ 7:00
Bands Start @ 9:00

$5 admission ($4 with this ad)

Super Student Value



Introducing Collegian Classifieds

HALF PRICE THURSDAYS!

Only For Students

Only at the Collegian Newsstand 10am - 2pm

On the Campus Center Concourse

Milosevic foes keep on fighting

By Dusan Stojanovic
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — A day after massive opposition protests rocked Belgrade, 50,000 people marched again today, appealing for Western help to prevent Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic from stealing an election.

Braving heavy rain and freezing temperatures, 30,000 Belgrade University students took to the streets of Belgrade, hurling eggs at Serbian TV, Milosevic's mouthpiece.

They were followed later by more than 20,000 other Milosevic foes who chanted "Down, Slobo, Down!" and "Red Bandits!" Courts controlled by Milosevic annulled results of local elections won by the opposition. The fractured opposition has united, and responded with daily protests that swelled to more than 100,000 people on Monday.

Opposition leaders say this week's display of public anger is reminiscent of the 40 days of street protests in 1989 that brought down the Communist regime in Prague. However, they also have hinted that peaceful protests might not be enough to topple Milosevic. Today, the opposition kept up the pressure both on the streets and in the courts.

Milosevic foes appealed to Serbia's Supreme Court to reinstate the election results. The court must rule before today, when lower courts ordered voting to be repeated.

On the streets, the students chanted "USA, USA, We want changes!" as they passed the U.S. embassy, and booed a cordon of heavily armed riot police deployed around the building.

One policemen threw away his rubber baton and lit a cigarette, signaling support for the demonstrators. When asked if he feared punishment, he said: "I don't care."

The students also tossed eggs and stones at a branch office of Milosevic's Socialist Party and declared a boycott of classes at the university.

"We are only half a step away from our triumphant victory," said opposition leader Vuk Draskovic.

Milosevic instigated wars in Croatia and Bosnia as the old Yugoslav federation collapsed in 1991-1992, but later turned peacemaker. Now, the United States and its allies count on him to make Bosnia's nationalist Serbs stick to the Dayton peace agreement.

At home, Milosevic has reverted to his old ways. His wife and political ally, Mirjana Markovic, is an unapologetic neo-Communist. Milosevic continues to control the media and has put the brakes on any market-oriented economic changes.

The opposition has little influence over the Bosnian Serbs and it is doubtful they have the muscle to oust Milosevic. But their protests signal increasing problems for the Serbian president. On Monday, university students joined a week of demonstrations by others angered by rulings annulling victories in dozens of Serbian cities by the four-party opposition coalition Zajedno. Acting on complaints by Milosevic's ruling Socialists, a court on Sunday also annulled results for the Belgrade city council, where Zajedno appeared to have won a majority.

Clinton samples exotic Thai flavors

By Nancy Benac
Associated Press Writer

BANGKOK, Thailand — Zipping through Thailand in a day, President Clinton paid tribute to a jazz-loving, saxophone-playing king, did a diplomatic duet with in-and-out prime ministers and eagerly sampled the exotic flavors of a city known for white elephants and an emerald Buddha.

Clinton and his wife, Hillary, awoke today in the splendor of the Grand Palace, a walled compound of manicured gardens, soaring rooftops and gleaming golden pagodas.

With just 27 hours for his whirlwind visit, Clinton set aside the afternoon for sightseeing at sites such as the Temple of Emerald Buddha, carved from a single piece of jade and an item of national veneration.

"Have you ever seen anything like it? Unbelievable," the president marveled. The Buddha has three coats: a winter coat, a summer coat and a rain coat. On Monday, the winter coat was draped around it. It is made of gold and diamonds and valued at over $1 million.

King Bhumibol Adulyadej, the world's longest reigning monarch after 50 years on the throne, was playing host to the Clintons at a state dinner this evening. The Clintons came bearing gifts, including a series of photos of jazz musicians dating back to the 1930s.

"I've read a lot about him," Clinton said of the king. "He's been a very constructive influence in his country, and he loves jazz music."

As his first order of business today, Clinton took care of a few diplomatic duties — and stumbled on a human reminder of the Cabinet shuffle that awaits him in Washington.

At a signing ceremony for a treaty to protect investors from double taxation, Clinton ran into retiring Sen. William Cohen, a Maine Republican considered a potential choice for the president's reconfigured Cabinet.

Cohen said he had been on an Asian tour with other senators and stopped here to meet with Thai and American businessmen. Shaking hands with members of the audience afterward, the president stopped to chat with Cohen, who insisted the subject was no more weighty than the elephants on his tie.

Clinton's visit to Thailand — the first by a president since Richard Nixon in 1969 — comes at a time of transition for a government that collapsed under charges of corruption and incompetence.

With one prime minister on the way out and another on the way in, Clinton decided the diplomatic thing to do was to meet with both. He visited with outgoing Prime Minister Banharn Silpaarcha in the morning and planned to see incoming Prime Minister Chavalit Yongchaiyudh later in the day.

In a midday speech at Chulalongkorn University, a hoarse Clinton emphasized the importance of Thai cooperation in efforts to combat drug trafficking, pollution, prostitution among young girls and the spread of AIDS.

"Whether we are fighting drugs, combating AIDS, trying to open bright new futures for our children or working to protect the planet we share, Thailand and the United States are making our partnership work for our people," he said.

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN

Going down the drain!

The rain came down all afternoon yesterday on the UMass campus.

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN

Earth Foods is now exhibiting a "Beyond the Names UMass Quilt Project" displaying AIDS quilts for an indefinite time.

COLLEGIAN NOW HIRING!!

The Collegian news department is currently excepting applications for Associate News Editors for Spring, 1997. These paid positions offer interested students extensive writing experience. Associates typically cover the most pressing stories and issues occurring on–campus, within the state and throughout the country.

Interested applicants should contact Michael Elliott or Chris Conner at 545–1851, or drop by the Collegian office to pick up a application at 113 Campus Center basement.

Support Group

Ongoing support group every Wednesday night starting October 23 from 7 - 8PM at the UMASS Campus Center. Room number posted at elevator.

Are you thinking about quitting smoking?
Have you quit and felt it difficult to stay quit?
Do you want to help other people quit and stay quit?
Come to your quit smoking support group.

Get professional advice and counseling, peer counseling and proven quit tips and techniques.

FREEDOM FROM SMOKING FREE OF CHARGE

For more information call Steve at: 577-5181

Jointly sponsored by: University Health Services Health Education Division The Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts and The Massachusetts Tobacco Control Program.

U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd.
North Amherst, MA
549-RENT

Weekend Special
Noon Friday to Monday AM - Starting at $59.95

- Cars • Mini Vans
- Trucks
- Cargo Vans
- 15 Passenger Vans
- Low Daily/Weekly/ Weekend Rates
- We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
- Direct Billing To Insurance Co.

(One Mile from UMass bus route)

AIM HIGH

CLIMB HIGH FAST AS AN AIR FORCE OFFICER.

Bring your college degree to the Air Force. Then find out if you qualify for Officer Training School. You can become a commissioned Air Force officer following successful completion of Officer Training School. From the start, you'll enjoy great pay, complete medical and dental care and 30 days of vacation with pay per year. And as an Air Force officer, you can enjoy professional growth and management opportunities. Learn what it takes to qualify. Call

AIR FORCE OPPORTUNITIES
TOLL FREE
1-800-423-USAF

AIR FORCE

THE FINEST SINCE 1976

Handmade diamond engagement rings & featuring ideal cut Lazare Diamonds®
Setting the standard for ...BRILLIANCE™
Gifts from glass to gold.

silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324

UMass Student Legal Services Office

FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!

545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE DISCOUNT OIL
Northampton Holyoke
584-4112 • 535-1888
SAME DAY DELIVERY

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elitzabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renée LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

A little winter fluff

Henry J. Brier

Marshmallow, which is sugar (in both its powdered and crystallized forms), starch, corn syrup and gelatin, is at its best not while melted with chocolate between graham crackers but when spreadable upon a piece of bread opposite peanut-butter.

Ahh... fluff.

***

In preparation for a World's Fair of yesteryear, perhaps in the '60s sometime, Seattle's distinguished and privately- owned tower (read: capitalistic venture), known as the "Space Needle," was constructed.

Six-hundred five feet above-ground measures the zenith of this aesthetically pleasing edifice, according to a tourguide during a 45-second elevator ride to the top, where a flying- saucer is situated upon structures that contain eyes through which thread, or rope, could pass.

However, not very much else about this tower's description or biographical information is thoroughly comprehensible.

Apparently, the tour guide explained, architects designing this galactic pin were convinced that by the turn of the century (three years from now) all skyscrapers would look similar.

What they believed would happen to withstanding storyboards is not entirely clear.

***

To paraphrase Mr. T. "I pity the" soul (remember, this is the University of Massachusetts — the heart of political correctness) who has to read something such as a column printed the day something such as Thanksgiving break begins.

***

Despite the fact that snowfall more excessive than that of Veteran's Day blessed us this past Monday, some are patiently awaiting even more.

One would not mind if the light flakes would add up and build upon themselves so that the accumulation of snow will occur in order to provide for a "Winter Wonderland" here in the Happy Valley.

Only half-a-foot or so, just enough to be fluffy.

***

On a more serious note, is there anyone out there who honestly supports the Middle East peace process?

If so, you are being dwarfed, partially because such a perspective is not publicized but mostly because here there is widespread, passionate and vitriolic whole-hearted rejection, overtly evident to even a casual reader.

People have spoken, while complaining, about their support for and knowledge of Middle Eastern issues, but that is the extent of their supposed promised involvement.

Now, speaking of snow and confusing towers, one could also find very difficult to understand why it is that people walk around with umbrellas when it does snow.

Call me crazy and correct me if this is wrong, but the point of an umbrella is to protect against wetness caused by rain, or to guard against sunburn for those whose pigment lacks significant amounts of melanin, which screens potentially harmful amounts ultraviolet rays.

But the snow? What harm can gentle white flakes possibly do?

***

Staying warm as it becomes colder is imperative to maintaining one's health.

The value of a woolen scarf, which blocks the entry of frigid air by hugging the neck, should never be underestimated.

However, what are far more important are heavy coats, some of which are extremely effective insulators.

One may be led to inquire "why?"

Simply because they are filled with down feathers, which some people may consider fluff.

***

So, everyone.

All that said, happy and healthy Thanksgiving, to those for whom this applies. Eat as much as you possibly can (this writer will), and enjoy the turkey.

To the vegetarians out there (chances are that UMass has quite a few), enjoy the fluffing — err, make that the stuffing.

Henry J. Brier is a Collegian columnist.

Just say Yahtzee

Andrew Trodden

I stood with my arms in the air as if I had just scored the winning touchdown or won the Boston Marathon. But although I had done neither, a victory was nonetheless imminent as I had just rolled a Yahtzee. That's correct ladies and germs, a Yahtzee.

My roommate and I have suddenly found ourselves on a massive Yahtzee kick. We can't play enough of this game. You might say we're Yahtzee-aholics. It's like our little fix. I can see it now; we'll be calling people asking where we can score some Yahtzee. To hell with scratch tickets, this game is the new opiate of the masses. It's like cigarettes — if you haven't played don't start.

We play and play in a never ending hunt for that perfect Yahtzee score. Of course if that were to happen I could only be more surprised if I woke up tomorrow with my head stapled to the floor.

We all know the pain of needing a Yahtzee on the last roll. When that roll is done and you're as close to Yahtzee as my toenails are to my eyelids it seems to hurt as much as someone twisting your nipples on a cold day.

Seriously, there are only two words essential to survival in this game, Yahtzee and the expletive of your choice. Unfortunately the typical game stirs about such profanity it would be safe to say I'm a potty mouth. If you saw my toilet you'd understand.

However, if that elusive Yahtzee comes up... well then I'm as happy as a pig in... a fly on... as Michael Jackson in an elementary school.

This is a great game, you don't even have to own it. All you need is some dice, a pen, some paper and a properly functioning brain. I guess three out of four isn't bad.

Don't let anybody tell you this game isn't full of strategy, it's chock full of it. However what isn't strategic about it is the actual roll of the dice. Some Copperfields seem to believe that if they set the dice a certain way or hold or roll them a particular way their numbers will come up. Uh huh, sure. Try the lottery buddy, your chances a better. While you're at it, why don't you guess my social security number.

This game is so addicting I'll even play it by myself just for fun. It's not like you can practice this game, the dice will do whatever gravity dictates at that moment. Which is not to say that gravity is changing but it is the prevailing force in deciding whether it's a scream of "Yahtzee" or a bite out of a bar of Irish Spring, which, by the way, tastes almost as good as it smells. Add a little peanut butter and you're good to go. Flavored soap? Hmmm... Nah.

So there you have it, the game of Yahtzee. It's mind numbing torture yet somehow so enjoyably addictive. We all know the game, we've all played it and we'll continue to do so. The soap manufacturers are counting on it. That perfect score is out there somewhere just as much as the truth is. So until it's found, we'll keep on rolling. I know I will.

Who knows... maybe someday the planets will line up, gravity will shift, Bill Clinton will diet, we'll find Hoffa, I'll pass Spanish, Dick Clark will die, Twinkies will be healthy, the Sox will win the Series, Monkees will fly out of my butt, we'll know the truth about JFK's assassination, racism will end, flavored soap will exist, Bob Dylan will lose his voice, the 4th dentist will give in, President Trodden will be sitting in the White House, Mars will get a zip code, Wily E. Coyote will catch that damn roadrunner, someone will cook that little doughboy and cut the head off snuggles the bear, politicians and honesty will be synonymous, we'll hear the last of the O.J. trial, people will be asking, "What's a warhead?," I'll fly out of a monkees butt and Yahtzees will fall like rain.

Andrew Trodden is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Bad words leave bad impression

To the editor:

I am writing this letter because, quite frankly, I am infuriated at the Collegian's lackadaisical policies concerning the crude language it sees fit to print. I am, of course, referring to the "Joke of the Day" printed on Friday, Nov. 22. The Collegian is supposed to be a respected news publication, but once again it has shown disrespect for those who read it. Flippant utilization of vulgar words such as "ass" should not be tolerated in a venue that is meant to convey news to thousands. After all, this is "New England's largest college daily," isn't it? I would hope that those who decided that it was OK to print such barnyard language will think twice when they have a similar choice in the future. While the editor may think it's funny, I will have you know that outright and unnecessary vulgarity is no joke.

Jason Mann
Amherst

Thieves ruin holidays

To the editor:

When I graduated from high school a couple of years ago, I was under the impression that students had moved past the thoughtless pranks and practices that hurt other people, but I guess I was wrong. Just the other day, food was taken from a box that was put in the John Adams Tower. A resident was trying to support Circle K's Thanksgiving Food Drive by putting in several items. To her surprise, the food was gone hours later.

When are people going to grow up and learn some human, moral behavior? It's mean enough to steal bikes and break into vending machines, but to steal from a charity puts theft on a whole new level.

For whoever is stealing from the poor and homeless, this may be a game for you, but for every person taking food out of a box, someone else goes hungry. A family is turned away from a soup kitchen somewhere because there is barely enough food for the 100 people already waiting in line. You say, "It doesn't matter if I take a few things?" Well, it does, because it adds up. Stealing from a charity just shows how pathetic you are. I realize you could care less about what this letter says, in fact you were probably hoping someone would write an article so you could sit and smirk about it while you indulge in the food you stole.

I feel sad for pitiful people such as yourself. It's really bad to know that you don't have a heart and would dare to take away from citizens who really need the support of community service organizations such as Circle K. I'm not writing this letter so that you will change. Only God could fix someone like you. Not only did you hurt the needy with your evil prank, but the girl who provided that food as well. It was a sacrifice for her. That's right. As you know, college students are not rich, and every dime we give to a charity and all the causes that we donate to are a sacrifice for us.

If you really are poor and hungry, I suggest you get to the welfare office and get yourself some food stamps or go wait your turn in line at a soup kitchen and receive food instead of stealing it.

I used to think it was funny years and years ago (when I was supposed to be immature) to order pizza for five or six families on my block, hide behind some bushes with my friends and laugh at the whole scenario with the driver and the family denying the order. We didn't care that this business was losing money.

We've all grown up since then and childish games have been left behind. Even then, our games were not an attack on poor and homeless people. Thieves and players of other mean practical jokes — it's time you get rid of your baby mentality, grow up, learn some responsibility and work on being productive citizens that can benefit them.

Tashamma Smith
Thatcher

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Examining the intentions of a dissident

Dan Bodah

Harry Wu gets emotions riled wherever he goes. Mr. Wu met with a mixture of warm applause and solid resistance when he spoke at Mt. Holyoke College this past Friday evening. The event was a book signing for his new work, Troublemaker.

Perhaps you know Mr. Wu's name from the many mainstream news reports about him in papers last year. Mr. Wu has been called the foremost Chinese dissident, and hailed by the U.S. media as an outspoken and important defender of human rights and the democratic movement in China. Mr. Wu spent 19 years imprisoned under the Communist government in China, for being a "thought reactionary." It is evident that this prolonged "re-education" has been woefully unsuccessful, as shown by the several books Mr. Wu has written slamming the Chinese government. Troublemaker is the most recent.

Mr. Wu returned to China and posed as a police officer and businessman in order to document his claims that the Chinese government is involved in using prisoner slave labor to make products for export to the United States. He also alleges that China farms the bodies of prisoners, going so far as to execute them in order to sell their internal organs.

In the course of these investigations, Mr. Wu was caught by the police and thrown in jail. Through the intercession of the U.S. government, he was ultimately released, and did not have to serve the 15 year sentence handed down at the end of his four-hour trial.

Controversy was present before Mr. Wu had even entered the room. Several Asian students moved throughout the hall, handing out a statement against Mr. Wu's criticisms of the Chinese government, and a negative review of Troublemaker. Nowhere on the papers was a group identified as their source, but 27 individuals' names were listed as being in support of the documents.

This made Mr. Wu's speech very interesting. Suddenly his status as a hero of democracy was called into question. The documents pointed out several inconsistencies in his statements, and also claimed that certain of the facts he presented were false. Before this, I had never heard anything but glowing praise for Mr. Wu. Now I was beginning to wonder. Were these protesters simply indoctrinated supporters of the Communist order in China, or were they champions of truth, making an accurate criticism of a corrupt Mr. Wu?

Mr. Wu began his speech with a dramatic demand for someone to claim responsibility for the documents criticizing him. After a long time, someone finally did claim it. Mr. Wu requested his name, and asked permission to write it down. After searching his pockets and being unable to find a pen, Mr. Wu's plan backfired and actually raised a few chuckles as he began to speak anyway.

Mr. Wu did not in his speech present solid, documented evidence to support his accusations against the Chinese government. However, some things he said made a lot of sense. For instance, he compared the Revolution's programs against the bourgeoisie to the Nazi programs against Jews. In many ways the comparison holds up: both are groups that were blamed for a broad array of social problems, and both groups were reputed to be holding an excessive amount of wealth. Both groups were also systematically eliminated, and it's hard to defend that in service of any ideology.

Mr. Wu stated he risked all in returning to China to document his accusations. What could he have had to gain? However, it is clear from the swift and powerful intercession of the U.S. government on his behalf that he is a favorite of theirs. Don't think our government would have done the same for a dissident, or even U.S. citizen, caught by one of their pet Latin American tyrannies. This favor our government shows Mr. Wu suggests that perhaps he does have something to gain with all his troublemaking. Since the United States seems to ignore or scream about human rights issues in China for reasons directly related to the status of trade, it's possible to see Mr. Wu as a spy. During a time when China is resisting U.S. trade efforts, will the government use Mr. Wu's reports as leverage? Or perhaps Mr. Wu is being groomed as a high-profile public relations man, our token Chinese dissident, spreading the official U.S. government word on all issues related to China. He could be, in other words, a propaganda machine.

However, the man who claimed responsibility for the handouts released a stream of opposite propaganda during the question and answer period. His argument said that more people were happier under the Communist rule of China, and that Mr. Wu had betrayed his country.

Between these two contradictory veils of opinion, we must do a little work to extract what facts there are. It isn't just an intellectual disagreement between two individuals we saw on Friday night. Those individuals were acting voices for ideologies that work ceaselessly to bring the world's populations under their control. Both hold out the prospect of a better life, a more equitable society, a dreamy future of wealth and ecstatic joy for all people. In reality, both capitalism and communism have shown themselves to operate in the interests of their own power.

The prison issue is a good one for revealing how our ruling ideologies exert control. Wherever you live, if you raise your voice in dissent against the powers that be, you may be subjected to forced labor, the results of which directly profit and support the government you fight. Capitalism and communism, in practice, are equally tyranny.

Dan Bodah is a Collegian columnist.

Adventures on the Bunny Slope

Kristi Fournier

Up until last year, I had never skied. I had never even been on skis. But, there was no hope for it. I had to attempt a little skiing. My friend and I had made other mistakes along the way. We foolishly purchased lift tickets. Since we never even mastered the bunny slope, we knew that attempting any of the other slopes would certainly result in disaster. Most likely, I would have fallen off the lift to my death and my friend would have crashed into a tree and split her head open. Not pretty thoughts, but probably accurate ones. We also made the mistake of listening to the advice of those people graced with the art of fine skiing. We bundled ourselves up like Eskimos complete with big bulky ski parkas. Well I'm sure that when one is whizzing down the slopes, it can be a little chilly. But when you're my friend and I, you work up quite a sweat. After all, the greatest challenge of all turned out to be pulling ourselves up from a fall. And all that friction from rolling down the slope sure wasn't a cooling factor. Sadly, my beautiful green earmuffs were a casualty of my skiing trip. Naturally, they fell off my head during one of my many tumbles and with all the grace of a true klutz, I sat on them.

By the end of the longest day of our lives, my friend and I had decided that skiing just wasn't for us. What did seem like fun to us was pretending to be skiers. The next day, while counting our bruises and comparing aches and pains, we made a decision based on our concern for the safety of ourselves and others. The next time we embark on a brave skiing adventure, we will happily don the clumsy skis, hold the pretty poles, and wear the brightly-colored ski ensemble, but we will not leave the lodge. Instead, we will be the skiing cheerleaders, waving to our brave friends who are blessed with a flair for skiing as they skate off to the lift, but we will not join them. Rather, we'll just sip hot chocolate and reminisce about the most embarrassing day of our lives.

Kristi Fournier is a UMass student.

Attention Columnists and Staff!

Next week elections will be held for many Collegian office positions, including Ed/Op editor. Please take the time to meet the candidates and vote consciously. If you need more information, talk to Mark McGrath in the Collegian office or call 545-1361.

Arts & Living

Ski resorts offer deals; special passes available

Alfresco News with Liz Anderson

Alright, winter is here! Snow is no longer only sticking to the summit tops of New England's high peaks, but it's also accumulating throughout the Pioneer Valley. Now is the time to tune up your skis and snowboards, and prepare for a winter full of tricky turns, high jumps, and super-speed. Numerous ski resorts throughout New England have carved new trails out of their mountainous woodlands and have filled down their old lift ticket prices.

This winter "shred the Beast" at Berkshire East's new snowboard park on its half-pipe, table top, rail and spine under chairlift number three. The half-pipe is an impressive gully that stretches down the fall line of the mountain. The table top is a steep pile of snow that consisting of a flat top and three vertical sides excellent for kicking off tricks. The rail is a long metal pipe that snowboarders use to ride sideways in the same manner that skateboarders ride hand rails. The spine is a long narrow pile of snow that resembles a quarter-pipe.

Berkshire East has also created an island of glades called the Blizzard. Centered between the trails Exhibition and War Dance the Blizzard consists of a maze of trees that follows a gentle fall line down the mountain. The Blizzard is marked as a "Black Diamond" trail, however, it covers intermediate terrain.

Take advantage of Berkshire East's "99 Custom Mid-Week Pass" before the deal gets buried by mid-ski season business. The 99 Custom Mid-Week Pass allows students to ski one day and night a week (Mon-Fri) throughout the entire ski season for only $99.

You better act fast if you want to take advantage of this outstanding deal, because it ends when ski season begins. Berkshire East plans to open to the general public on Dec. 7. The normal price for full day lift tickets is $25 and $18 for half day tickets.

According to Outside Magazine now a days only "a chump walks up to a ticket window and pays full price." Now is the prime time to reassess your budget and invest in the wonderslopes of Vermont's Green Mountains.

In Vermont students can pay $25 for Okemo's College Card and ski for free with their first mid-week tickets as well as get $10 off on weekends and holidays. Stratton Mountain is offering students savings of $10 up to $17 on lift tickets during the mid-week with the purchase a $39 Stratton Mountain Frequent Skier Card.

Take advantage of the University of Massachusetts' Ski Club and buy a Seven Mountain Ski Pass for $75 less than the market price. This pass can be used at any of the American Skiing Company's seven mountains including Killington, Sugarbush, Haystack, Mount Snow, Attitash, Sunday River and Sugarloaf.

Student skiers and snowboarders can also earn points towards a free ticket at any mountain of the American Skiing Company by skiing just one of the seven mountains.

Now that winter is officially here take advantage of New England's ski resorts and cut a sweet deal on lift tickets with your student I.D. Transform Jack Frost's frigid forecasts into a Winter Wonderland and prepare your boards for wild rides over the slopes of New England.

Liz Anderson is a Collegian columnist.

Chuck D's solo disc: don't believe the hype

COURTESY JON TOPPER

moe. is known for its high energy performances.

CHUCK D
Autobiography of Mistachuck
Mercury

From the title of Chuck D's long awaited solo debut disc, one would expect an in-your-face, overwhelming soundtrack on the level of Public Enemy's finest work. Unfortunately none of P.E.'s genius shines through the crack on this rather dull release.

Gone are Chuck D's brilliant lyrical wrap-ups of American's societal ills. Gone are Chuck D's strong pro- black, highly political lyrics. Gone are the shout-outs to Farrakhan. Gone are the revolutionary samples and beats that made P.E. the greatest, most influential hip-hop band ever.

But unlike Farrakhan who has become a household name who still generates fear among many Americans, Chuck D's solo work is as thought provoking of a Readers Digest version of a Nancy Reagan biography. Where is the substance?

At time Chuck D's lyrical sermons are worthy of his name but this difficult is incredibly difficult to sit through — especially when a copy of It Takes A Nation of Millions To Hold Us Back lies within reach.

Sad but true, Chuck D seems to be cursed with the Paul McCartney syndrome — stagnant solo mediocrity. Perhaps Chuck D should take a listen to his own words on "Underdog:" "So many rappers and not enuff rhymes — I hope they around next year but I fear... But what good is the rhyme — without substance." D- (Mike Burke)

MOE.
No Doy
550/Sony

Four guys from upstate New York: essentially, that's all moe. is. Yet who would have thought that under such seemingly normal presences one could find such bizarre senses of humor, stark appreciation for the unusual and most importantly, incredible talent as musicians. Frankly, the world has become a better place upon discovering such things.

Having seen this band live, let me assure you, these boys know their stuff. Like any good jam band, or groove rock, or whatever you'd like to label them, moe. embraces the unknown — producing tunes that drive audiences to boogie- ing frenzies. They're a band that burns down the stages wherever they play, and make it look easy.

What's equally astonishing as this band's energy and vitality live (it has to be seen to be believed) is its ability to represent itself faithfully in a studio situation.

With moe.'s recent signing to Sony Records and its first major-label CD No Doy just released, it's feasible to think success may have wrought some ugly changes, that some of the bandmembers' obvious style may have been lost, or the jams somehow controlled. Thankfully, this isn't the case. Although there are some songs on No Doy that are more radio-friendly than others, one of the album's strengths is its clean jamming.

Unlike shows, where good music is sometimes lost in the mix, songs like "Buster" and "Rebubula" (moe. classics, also found in more intense form on the band's live CD Loaf) are clear representations of what a mellow moe. can do. Songs like "St. Augustine" and "Moth" will no doubt be popping up on radio stations, bringing grins to new faces. Also, "She Sends Me" and "Four" are songs that definitely make you want to shake your bones 'til they rattle.

Another of the album's high points is its subtle intricacies, like the bullfrogs croaking for three minutes at the very end of the CD, or the strange speaking part in the middle of "Moth." Perhaps the only downside to this CD is that Rob Berhak's bass playing (he is one insane bass player, wild and funky) was not as strong as it has been in the past.

However, No Doy in general is a strong major-label debut. Check this CD out, for the jams especially; there you encounter the true character of moe. And if you get a chance to see these guys live, by all means, take it! They are a treat not to be passed up. B+ (Jean Sienkewicz)

VARIOUS ARTISTS
O Quatrilho: Original Movie Soundtrack
Blue Jackel Records

Brazilian singer Caetano Veloso brings his bright alto voice to the soundtrack for O Quatrilho, one of the best foreign films of '96 in the collective mind of "the Academy."

"Merica, Merica" is a traditional tune adapted in a nice almost sing-along version here by Veloso and Jacques Morelembaum. "A Voz Amada" is a beautiful song. These two songs are the only vocal tracks on the disc.

Most of the disc is instrumental; much of the last half has the same dark phrase taken in different moods by different setups of instruments. There is a startling mandolin on the disc all over, played by Luiz Alberto Brasil. The orchestra takes the dark phrase in stride, eliciting a different feel and emotion each time, despite the somewhat annoying repetition. The music echoes the film's theme of "an emotional history of love, transgression and search for liberty" quite well. Not a beginner's disc for Brazilian Music (Verve Records and/or David Byrne's series are recommended for that), but some very nice music, indeed. B- (Joshua Boyd)

SPORTS

■ hockey

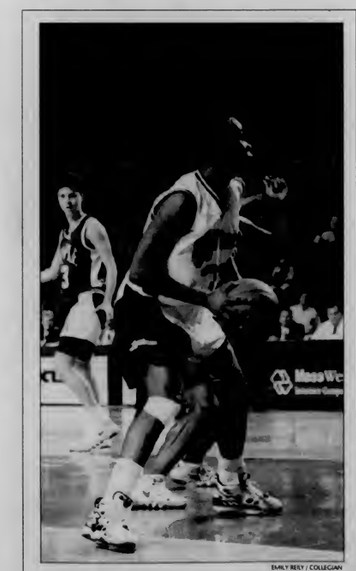
continued from page 8

last season, and it will just a matter of consistency this weekend.

"What we really want to do is put two solid back-to-back performances together," Mallen said. "We have played well at home, despite a few bumps in the road. I'm just hoping that we can put together two real good efforts.



"We beat [Air Force] twice last year, and they were down a few players to injury, so I think they're going to be feisty, and ready to go."

Senior co-captain Rob Bonneau is now atop the scoring list for UMass, as after his four-point performance on Friday night (1g, 3a) he now leads the team with 12 points (7g, 5a). Norris holds the second spot at 11 points, with juniors Dan Juden, Chris Fawcett and sophomore Steve MacKinnon rounding out third with seven points each.

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey squad hopes that some good will come of such a collision as they do battle with Air Force.

EMILY REILY / COLLEGIAN

On the rebound.
Jaywana Bradley, and the Minutewomen of the hardwood travelled to Fairfield, Conn. last night and beat the Stags, 65-56. See the next Collegian Sports Weekend for complete results.

■ NFL

continued from page 8

they are that Michael Irvin is taking drugs or O.J. Simpson allegedly beat and killed his wife.

• And the strangeness continues this season in the NFC East. What was supposed to be the NFC Least, one of the weakest conferences in the NFL, has instead turned into one of the toughest.

After the first half of the season, no one was going to deny that Washington, Philadelphia and Dallas were the real thing, but New York and Arizona seemed as pitiful as expected.

But then the unexpected happened — the good teams started losing and the bad ones started winning.

Last Sunday was the perfect example as Dallas fumbled away a chance to move into a tie for first place in the division with a loss to the Giants and the Eagles lost their third straight game, this time to the Cards.

Now Arizona, which earlier in the year managed just one first down in the first half against a weak New England defense, is 6-6, and with games against other playoff contenders Minnesota, Dallas, Washington and Philadelphia could end up playing in January.

They — along with Washington and New England — do get a break. Dallas superstar Leon Lett was suspended for the second time for drugs, though he is appealing.

The Cowboys had seemingly just gotten back on track, but the double loss — to the Giants and of Lett — could derail their playoff express. With two games against Washington — who swept them last year — and an offensive-minded New England, and the Boomer Esiason-inspired Cardinals, there's no guarantee the Cowboys will even make the playoffs.

• Speaking of playoffs, if they started right now, the Carolina Panthers not only would be in, but would host a game.

Not bad for just the second year, but now they need to make sure they don't turn into the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. The Bucs made it to the playoffs in just their third year, but have been the joke of the league ever since.

• A colleague suggested, in honor of Thanksgiving, the NFL uses a turkey instead of a pigskin on Thursday's games. However, he then realized it would give Detroit an unfair edge as it would force them to run the ball with Barry Sanders every play, since you can't throw a turkey.

• Jim Harbaugh is probably hoping he doesn't have to play the Patriots again in the playoffs this year, or if he does that there are no Willies playing for the defense. In the first game this year, Willie McGinest broke his nose late in the fourth quarter.

On Sunday, he didn't even get that far after Willie Clay rolled up on his knee on a safety blitz early in the second half, knocking out "Captain Comeback" for two to three weeks with a strained medial collateral ligament.

Jacob W. Michaels is a Collegian columnist.

■ NHL

continued from page 8

through the forever fleurs de lis (i.e. Quebec) from Toronto in a deal that sent then-top pick Todd Warriner and Mats Sundin to the Leafs for Wilson and Sylvain Lefebvre (now everyone, spin the mad trade circle).

Hey, it's better than what Boston has been drafting for the past couple of years, except Kyle McLaren, that is. But you already know what my opinions are on Bruins draft history.

Who cares, because none of you are reading this anyway. So, hey, whatever.

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

■ hoop

continued from page 8

blocking talents of sophomore center Lari Ketner who erased 2 shots on the night, and the casual observer might not have noticed much of a change between this squad, and last year's team.

That is, until the Minutemen ran it the other way. Offensively, UMass was atrocious. The Cavaliers held Padilla scoreless in the first frame to lead 34-22 at the half. However, UMass shot a paltry 25 percent from the field in the first half as opposed to UVA's 52 percent. Even more telling was the fact that Massachusetts scored 10 of its 22 points on second chances. With 17 offensive boards in the first half, consistency was not the name of the game.

At the same time, there were times when UMass showed flashes of brilliance. With just under six minutes gone in the second half, Padilla drilled a trey with two seconds left on the shot clock on an inbounds pass from freshman Mike Babul. Seconds later, Padilla stripped the ball as the Cavs moved upcourt sending the long pass to Babul for a solid slam bringing the Minutemen within nine.

Sloppiness struck again when senior power forward Tyrone Weeks committed a lazy foul putting a damper on UMass' momentum, making it even harder to get into the shooting groove.

The foul war not indicative of Weeks' play, as he led UMass with 22 points and 11 boards, posting his second consecutive double-double. Offensively, it has been Weeks who has bared the brunt of the scoring burden, topping his previous career scoring high (16 pts) in both regular season games.

Early in the preseason, Massachusetts coach James "Bruiser" Flint remarked that despite the loss of Marcus Camby, the Minuteman game would still be looking for a strong game inside. He said that a team without post presence is a fraud, and while his team does boast the nation's best backcourt and a sharp-shooting Carmelo Travieso, don't expect them to shoot an exorbitant amount of three-pointers.

While this may be true — and it is painfully obvious that UMass will need to utilize its depth of its bench throughout the season — the Padilla-Travieso ticket is crucial, especially in this young season. Granted they cannot be expected to carry the team on their shoulders all season long, it is clear that until the young freshman frontcourt starts to gel, they will.

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take Over Lease 1/97 One bedroom uptown apt Great location, Amherst Center. Call 253-4781

AUTO FOR SALE

1986 Oldsmobile Delta 88 - Great car low price- $500 Call Chris 549-0564

EMPLOYMENT

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S Korea No teaching background or Asian languages required For info call (206) 971-3570 ext J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses. Falmouth area. (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL DOG - MISTREATED NEEDS A LOVING OWNER PLEASE INQUIRE @ 256-6909

Snowboard for sale Burton Twin Tip 139 with bindings $200 or best offer. Call Rose 6-5538

29 Gallon Fishtank Light, heater, filter, gravel, and decorations included $100 call Amy 546-0706

FOUND

Found Single key on Dare keyring Call The Collegian 545-3500

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy Birthday, Jules. Your roomie!

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst Balchertown line 4 bedroom, 2 bath home in quiet area Available now 549-4270

MISCELLANEOUS

JAZZ BANDS

Jazz Band Needed Experienced or not, Come jam at our party. Will pay. Dec 6th Call 253-8520

New Metabolism Breakthrough Loss 5-100 lbs Guaranteed $35 800-776-9503 Doctor Approved

ROOM FOR RENT

2 Outgoing girls seek person(s) to rent large bedroom in uptown apt Great location, in great condition

ROOM FOR RENT

Start Jan 1 Contact Tricia/LB 549-3649 ASAP

Sunderland 1BR in 2BR Apt $315.00 + utilities Must find someone before Thanksgiving for Spring term or Jan. 1. 665-4394

ROOMATE WANTED

Room Available 5 bedroom house in Sunderland on bus route Call for details 665-8729

Roommates Wanted: One or two males to share rent at Brandywine Apts Starts January 1st Call Bryan 549-4581

SERVICES

GORILLAGRAMS Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorilla. We'll go anywhere, anytime! Student rates available! Call 256-0287

SERVICES

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry Call (413) 538-0041 for more info

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

SCUBA SPRING BREAK Dive Key Largo, FL Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project DEEP @ (800)282-0977

TRAVEL

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info. (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

Wanted- Tutor for AUTO CAD Realease13. Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment", call Caroline at 546-5268 for more info. Identity confidential upon request.

Mattress Wanted QUEEN Call Eugenie 545-3768

PRINCE
THURSDAYS

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities	Miscellaneous
Announcements	Motorcycles
Apartment For Rent	Personals
Auto For Sale	Room For Rent
Employment	Room Wanted
Entertainment	Roommate Wanted
For Sale	Services
Found (2 days Free)	Summer Sublet
Happy Birthday	To Sublet
Houses For Rent	Travel
Instruction	Transportation
Lost	Wanted to Rent
Musicians	Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

G	R	E	W		B	A	S	K	S		I	R	M	A
R	I	L	E		A	P	R	O	N		R	E	A	P
I	T	S	A		L	A	I	N	E		O	N	C	E
T	E	E	T	H	E	R		G	R	A	N	T	E	D
			H	O	S	T	S		D	I	M
A	G	R	E	E		M	A	S		D	A	L	A	I
G	E	E	R		G	E	N	T	L	E	N	E	S	S
A	N	A		B	I	N		R	I	D		V	H	S
T	O	R	R	E	N	T	I	A	L		L	I	E	U
E	A	S	E	S		S	C	I		P	A	S	S	E
			H	E	E		E	G	G	E	D
H	A	B	I	T	A	T		H	E	A	D	E	R	S
O	M	A	R		S	A	U	T	E		E	R	I	N
S	O	L	E		T	U	N	E	S		R	I	C	O
S	K	I	D		S	T	O	R	E		S	K	E	W

Collegian Classifieds
"they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Heart
5. Chan player
10. Carte du jour
14. Jacob's brother
15. Gossip
16. Emulate Max Perkins
17. Simon Bolivar at al.
19. Actor Robertson
20. Some Scrabble tiles
21. Crackerjacks
22. Baronet's wife
23. Bard title start
24. Actor Howard
25. Angler's tip-off
29. With humility
33. "Our Town" heroine
34. Towns, informally
35. Wallaby, for short
36. Roof rooster
37. Latten
38. Make Mine ___ (1960 film)
39. One of a supermarket dozen
40. ___ Star (1988 Preakness winner)
41. Indian digs
42. Stages a Civil War battle
44. Destructive insects
45. Dark and Middle
46. Ready to pick
47. ___ Kelly's Blues
49. Siamese
50. From ___ Z (2 wds.)
53. Last name in surrealism
54. Astrological forecasts
57. ___ many words (2 wds.)
58. Bea Arthur role
59. Abode of evil
60. Watergate whistle-blower
61. Charger
62. Cookie some unscrew

DOWN

1. Soccer legend
2. "The doctor ___" (2 wds.)
3. Typewriter settings
4. Dyer's selection
5. Delphic priestess
6. Pear-shaped instruments
7. Grandpa McCoy
8. Trygve Lie's homeland: abbr.
9. Salk and Pepper: abbr.
10. Bravery awards
11. Dutch cheese
12. Shade of blue
13. Southwestern Indian
18. Pep, for one
22. These do! Peppermint Patty's report card
23. Proficient
24. Muslim scripture
25. Tense
26. Adamant word of refusal
27. Picture
28. Spree
29. Slip-one
30. Malarkey
31. Friendless one
32. Joins together
34. Outdoes
37. Cut into cubes
38. Marcel's mom
40. Violent anger
41. Subject matter
43. Country
44. Prejudiced
46. ___ island
47. Glass sheet
48. Born Free lioness
49. Valid
50. Mimic
51. Far off: prefix
52. Airport nearest Lilliehammer
53. Carried out
54. ___ Pinafore
55. Cereal ingredient
56. Sound of exultation

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20

Make the most of your time, don't put off or delay things that need to be done. Small delays could lead to major setbacks. Keep in touch with friends, loved ones. Money is a cause for concern, but things will work out.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21

Forget past hurts and resentments. Stay focused on the future and expect professional advancement. Travel could be on the horizon, but don't neglect chores around the house.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21

This could be the perfect time to catch up on those little things you have let slide. Now is the time the renew old friendships—one could pay off handsomely. Inspire others with your positive outlook. Keep health resolutions.

CANCER
June 22–July 22

Be cautious—play it safe. Now is not the time for bravado or recklessness. Take things slow for best results. An older person could be a valued adviser if needed. Heed others' advice but don't abandon your instincts.

LEO
July 23–August 23

Put your ideas down on paper, get things in writing. It could help settle disputes later. Treat yourself to a special program or event but be careful not to spend too much. Put things in perspective and take time to laugh.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22

You could solve a tough problem by asking the right question. Look at it from a new angle. Intuition plays a major role, trust your hunches. You see things the way they are. Don't let others fool you.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23

Mend fences, patch up differences. People close to you want to help if you will let them. Take time to get a true picture of events, people. Don't overlook good things in unlikely places. Your health takes a turn for the better.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22

Focus on home and family. Get all the information possible before making an important decision. Hold off on major purchases—a better bargain may be available later. A younger person could provide much-needed chuckle.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21

Your leadership skills are at a high level, and you can overcome personal and work challenges. Put financial concerns out of your mind, things will work out. A person considered a good friend may not be trustworthy.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20

Putting off temporary pleasures and sticking to business pays big dividends. Pets and possessions take center stage. Creativity flourishes, artistic pursuits are highlighted also. A partner could help you reach new heights.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18

Romance heats up. Your interests attract other people. Don't forget home and family. Be sure to set and keep priorities or things could get out of hand. Paperwork proves challenging but profitable.

PISCES
February 19–March 20

Stick with a project. You'll know what to do and when to do it. Once the job is done, it is time to relax. Travel and education are important areas for consideration. Don't get bogged down with details.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom

I had a girlfriend.

I gave her two nicknames, "Sweetie," and "Her Imperial Foulness."

She was a little moody.

She had at least one problem. Her photo belonged in the dictionary listed under:

"Why don't you show me any attention, you scum?"

I really loved her but she never knew it. She was so busy thinking of ways to make herself feel rotten.

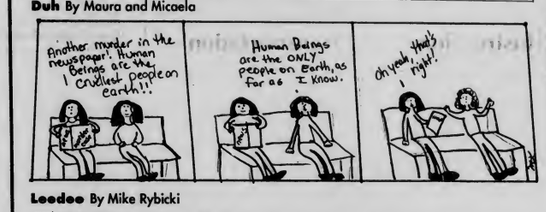
Ah ..... it's OK.

Someday she'll wake up and she'll say softly to herself while her head is still on the pillow, "Maybe it was me who was wrong."

Then she'll call me up and ask, "Don't you owe me forty five dollars?"

Robotman By Jim Meddick

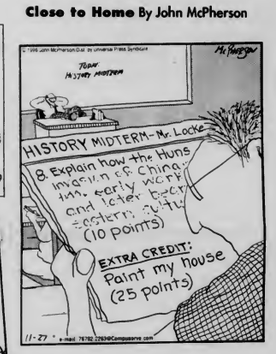
Dilbert By Scott Adams



8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

University² By Frank Cho

Duh By Maura and Micaela



Loodoo By Mike Rybicki

Adventures of M.K. By M.K.

Close to Home By John McPherson

Quote of the Day

"When I was a kid I got no respect. Every time my old man wanted sex, my mother showed him my picture."

–Rodney Dangerfield

Bad Joke of the Day

How do you make an old lady swear?

Get another old lady to yell "BINGO"

Recycle your Collegian

Today's Staff

Tara "Cruella DeVil" Connelly
Night Editor

Lisa "Belle" Oliveri
Copy Editor

Elizabeth "Cinderella" Brown
Lauren "Ariel" Kosky
Photo Technician

Marc "Snow White" Dionne
Production Supervisor

Mark "Pocahontas" McGrath
Kelvin "No Name" Torres
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH
Chick. Cutlet Sand.
Spicy Black Bean Burger
Mac and Sneeze

DINNER
1/4 Lb. Burger
Lightburger
Chicken Breast
Sandwich

Hampshire

LUNCH
Hamburger off a Roll
Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
Grilled Sneeze

DINNER
Closed for Thanksgiving recess

Worcester

LUNCH
Mac and Sneeze
Rotini
Red Beans

DINNER
Closed for Thanksgiving recess

Berkshire

LUNCH
Mac and Cheese
Rotini
Tri-bean Casserole

DINNER
1/4 Lb. Burger
Lightburger
Chicken Breast
Sandwich

Sports

UMass Volleyball goes for first A–10 tourney win

Bonnie Kenny

By Steven Grant
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Minutewomen, with the possible addition of Lesley Nolan, plan on taking their preseason goal of qualifying for the postseason one step further Friday, when they head to Kingston, R.I. to capture their first ever Atlantic 10 Championship.

The University of Massachusetts, the fourth–seed of the four–team tourney, has the unenviable but very possible task of beating host Rhode Island in the first round. The return of the injured Nolan, out well over a month with a broken foot, will be determined this morning by the trainer.

The outside hitter was an offensive force for the Minutewomen before she was sidelined. Her presence would provide a spark to a team that, quite frankly, may not be in dire need of her services.

Though URI will be playing in front of its home crowd, UMass, coached by Bonnie Kenny, has a lot going for it, too. The Minutewomen have won their last five matches and 10–of–11, and the young team looks like it may have started to gel just in the nick of time.

The Rams are the regular season A–10 champs, and boasted a 17–1 conference record as of November 21. The Minutewomen (28–8, 15–5 A–10) split the season series with them, as both squads won at home.

"It's all or nothing," said freshman Kari Hogancamp (team–high four digs/gm in A–10 play), who was named A– 10 Rookie of the Week for her last weekend's performance. "We've got nothing to lose. The whole team has a positive attitude. We've split the season series, so anything can happen."

And whatever does happen, the winner will face the winner of Temple and Dayton on Saturday for the conference crown and an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

"Early on, I thought we had a good chance to make A–10s, until we lost to George Washington [Oct. 18]," said freshman Jill Meyers (3.6 kills, 2.7 digs/gm in A–10 play). "But after we beat URI, I thought we had a good chance again. We still know we have to work hard, and we've had a good week of practices so far."

One plus for the program is that senior outside hitter Dionne Nash was named the A–10 Player of the Week in her final regular season week of her collegiate career. Nash tallied 42 kills and 32 digs in matches against Virginia Tech and GW.

Nash leads the team in kills with 4.6 kills per game to go along with her 3.2 digs per game. She is a major reason the Minutewomen have a shot at winning 30 matches for the first time since 1986.

Sophomore setter Katie Pearce totalled 1,635 assists on the season, and is on pace to break Cass Anderson's all–time mark by the time she graduates. Her consistency will have to continue if UMass is to make some noise in the days to come.

"Making it to the NCAA's would be great," said Hogancamp. "Especially because people really didn't think that much of us early on. But, I know if we play like we're capable of playing, it'll be a good match."

Wrestling, NFC East & Turkey ball

The next time St. Louis Rams defensive tackle D'Marco Farr and Carolina linebacker Kevin Greene meet, they may go at each other fist swinging. But don't worry, there shouldn't be any fines or injuries, since it's all in good fun.

The two are just a growing group of wrestling fans in the National

JACOB W. MICHAELS on the NFL

Football League, who, according to Alex Marvez of the Dayton Daily News, have different opinions about a storyline going through World Championship Wrestling, a competitor of the World Wrestling Federation.

Other fans of the New World Order — supposedly an upstart third organization in WCW — include a group of Pittsburgh Steelers defenders who have begun calling themselves the NWO.

The association between wrestling and football is nothing new. Just two years ago, Lawrence Taylor wrestled Bam Bam Bigelow in the main event at Wrestlemania. He was accompanied by a group of other NFLers, including Ken Norton Jr. and Reggie White.

Just before the last Super Bowl, Greene, who was a Steeler at the time, showed up at a WCW pay–per–view match. Steve "Mongo" McMichael joined WCW full–time, first as an announcer and then as a wrestler, after he retired from the sport.

It dates back even further. Over 10 years ago, William "the Refrigerator" Perry and a group of other players participated in an over–the–top–rope Battle Royal at Wrestlemania.

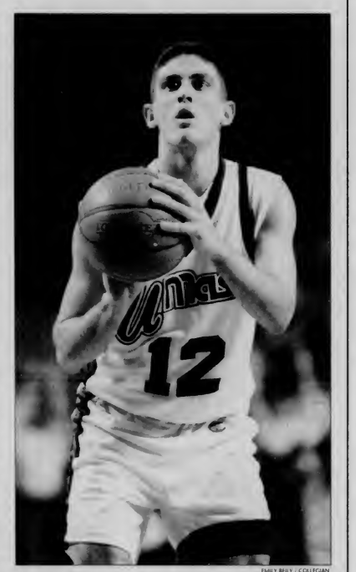
And the trend shows no sign of stopping either. One of the reasons linebacker Monty Brown signed with the Patriots in the offseason was because he wanted to be closer to Stamford, Conn., home of Vince McMahon Jr., owner of the WWF, where Brown hopes to work after football.

Perhaps the most confusing part of the whole thing is the cries of betrayal by the fans when the NFLers take part. OK, wrestling is not a real sport, and everyone knows it.

Nonetheless, it's a perfectly good form of entertainment for millions of people. It's sad when people are more upset that LT is wrestling than

Turn to NFL, page 5

Cavaliers trounce UMass in Maui



LAHAINA, Hawaii (AP) — Courtney Alexander and Norman Nolan each scored 20 points as Virginia upset No. 17 Massachusetts 75–68 last night at the Maui Invitational.

Harold Deane added 13 points for the Cavaliers (2–0), who beat South Carolina 93–70 in the opening round Monday.

Tyrone Weeks scored 22 points for UMass (1–1), which never led in the game and finished without its first–year coach, James "Bruiser" Flint, who was ejected with 2:06 left when he got his second technical foul.

Nolan and Alexander each had 12 points in the first half as Virginia took a 34–22 lead over the cold–shooting Minutemen. Excluding Weeks, who went 6–for–10, the rest of the Minutemen made only 4–of–30 shots from the field in the first half, including 1–for–11 from three–point range.

Carmelo Travieso scored 16 points for UMass.

EMILY RILEY / COLLEGIAN
Edgar Padilla and the Minutemen have some work to do after getting beaten by Virginia in the Maui Invitational.

Turn to HOOP, page 5

Hands down, UMass looks sloppy in paint

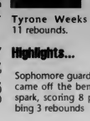
By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

Last night was a learning experience for both the Massachusetts men's basketball team and its fans.

Early on in the Minutemen's 75–68 second round loss to Virginia in the Maui Invitational, it became clear that the University of Massachusetts has a few bugs to get out of its system in the preseason.

While UMass lost by only seven points, the final score was a deceptive one, as Massachusetts found itself down by as much as 16 points during last night's contest. However, the Minutemen had been in that position before. In the first half of last night's game, one might have remembered last year's non–conference win over Maryland where UMass battled back from a 16 point defecit for the win.

Last night was a different story.



While UMass came out slow in the first half, the Minutemen played its typically scrappy defense. With the in– your face pressure of senior guard Edgar Padilla leading the way in the hustle department, at first glance it seemed to be business as usual for the Minutemen. Add into the mix the shot

Turn to HOOP, page 5

Virginia 75 Massachusetts 68

Virginia (2–0)
Nolan 10–16 0–4 20, Alexander 6–13 6–7 20, Metheney 0–0 0–0 0, Staples 4–11 1–2 11, Deane 3–5 6–10 13, McAndrew 0–0 0–3 0, Ducharme 3–5 0–0 6, Robinson 1–4 3–6 5, Dersch 0–1 0–0 0. Totals: 27–55 16–32 75

Massachusetts (1–1)
Smith 1–4 0–0 2, Weeks 9–17 4–4 22, Norville 0–6 0–0 0, Padilla 4–12 1–2 11, Travieso 6–19 0–0 16, Ketner 2–6 3–5 7, Babul 1–1 0–0 2, Clarke 4–9 0–0 8, Bast 0–1 0–0 0, Kirkland 0–0 0–0 0. Totals: 27–75 8–11 68

Tyrone Weeks – 22 points, 11 rebounds.

Highlights...

Sophomore guard Charlton Clarke came off the bench to provide a spark, scoring 8 points and grabbing 3 rebounds

Former UMass star Camby collapses during warmup

TORONTO (AP)— Toronto rookie Marcus Camby was carried off the court on a stretcher yesterday night after sustaining an apparent back injury during warmups before the Raptors game against the Sacramento Kings.

Camby was injured while attempting a spin move under a basket. The 6–foot–11 forward was moving to his right when he suddenly grabbed his lower back and fell to the floor.

He lay motionless under a basket in the Skydome for about 25 minutes while emergency personnel strapped him to a stretcher and placed him in a neck brace for support.

The Raptors released a statement saying Camby had been taken to the Toronto Western Hospital for examination with "limited feeling in his right and left leg."

Turn to NHL, page 5

LaFontaine out for the count? Bruins get talent

Well, knock me upside the head with a half–eaten turkey leg. If any of you pucksters read this column today, I will be one happy pilgrim... Indian... politically correct entity. Why? Because you're not supposed to be here. So, hey, whatever:

on the NHL

• In the "parting is such sweet sorrow" department, Buffalo Sabre center Pat LaFontaine will be out for the next three months due to the negative effects of a concussion. This is a scary thing. This is the fifth concussion of his career, and when this kind of physical ailment starts to steamroll, you can basically kiss your career goodbye. Once concussions start to come one after another, you can not stop it.

The other well–known Lindros brother, Brett, had to end his hockey career prematurely due to this awful physical reoccurrence. He was no Eric, but he had the potential to be a real solid role player for the New York Islanders. And this condition is not just for the NHL–ers, it happens in other contact sports as well.

The big story this season in the NFL has been with the San Francisco 49ers' Steve Young. One of the top quarterbacks in recent pigskin history has been consciously sidelined due to his medical folder being filled with repeated head injuries. Back when the N.Y. Jets were decent, one of their all–time great receivers, Al Toon had to end his career early due to this ailment, too. But speaking about the NFL at this point means I do digress immensely...

LaFontaine is a class player. He has been questioned over the years by some about his street psychology (as in, one way), having reported problems with GM John Muckler, but you can't doubt what he has accomplished on the ice. Before his trade to Buffalo from the Islanders in 1991, Boston had thought about acquiring him. But, oh, I think it was about money, or more aptly said, not wanting to pay him money. That's nothing new. GM Harry Sinden has never been stingy. Never. (insert sarcastic tone) Down the line, we did get Adam Oates instead, but in my opinion, LaFontaine is a more complete player. Once again, I digress...

This man has played for his country on many occasions, but after looking at his non–appearance for this year's World Cup USA Team (yes, we did win it), on the ice but not on the bench, I began to feel his career might be on the downswing. It is. And now with this development, I think it might be all over but the crying.

Who cares, because none of you are reading this anyway. So, hey, whatever.

• I think the Bruins just made one of their smarter moves this week. For a future first round draft pick, Boston receives from Colorado right winger Landon Wilson, and Anders Myrvold, a defenseman. Myrvold — Schmyrvold.

I like the other guy. Wilson has been playing for Cornwall of the AHL, and will automatically step in to the Bruin's lineup, as they need the help on the right wing. As Mark Sandman of Morphine once said, "Yes, yes, yes." Coach Steve Kasper has squeaked that he isn't satisfied with that position of late, hence right winger Rick Tocchet spending time on the left side of the ice.

Little did you folks know out in Valley Land, but I did pick this guy as one of my surprise player of the year picks in the preseason. You did not know that because it never made the final cut, but in my opinion, Wilson will.

Just for knowledge sake, Wilson made it to Colorado

Turn to NHL, page 5

All–American Minutewomen

UMass Field Hockey stars, Rothenberger & Rose honored

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Two members of the Massachusetts field hockey team were honored with the distinction of All–American yesterday, the National Field Hockey Coaches Association announced.

Hilary Rose, UMass' senior goalie, was chosen as a first team All–American, while senior midfielder Kyle Rothenberger was named as a member of the second team.

This All–America honor was the first for Rose, who was the backbone of the UMass defense this season. She was previously ineligible for the award because she hadn't played the two years at the varsity level as foreign players must do to become eligible.

Rose, who took last year off in order to compete with the British national team at the Olympics in Atlanta, was named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year and was named to the All–Conference team, having led the Minutewomen to a 17–6 record. Rose's .899 save percentage led the nation for the majority of the season.

Rothenberger was dubbed a second–team All–American for the second time in as many seasons. As the on–field director of the offense and a main component of the defense, Rothenberger was instrumental in UMass' NCAA Tournament appearance, regular season Atlantic 10 title and Atlantic 10 Tournament crown.

She finishes her collegiate career having started every game and ranked seventh all–time on the Minutewoman career scoring chart with 81 points. This season, she tied for the team lead in goals (13) and second in overall points (31).

Hilary Rose

Kyle Rothenberger

Hockey hosts low–flying Falcons

By Jorma Kansonen
Collegian Staff

Looking at the Massachusetts hockey team of late, you might think that they have a thing against authority — governmental authority, that is.

Yet with the Air Force Academy, it will not be a political debate on the ice, but a competitive one. This Friday and Saturday night, the Minutemen (3–7, 2–6 in Hockey East) will face off with the Falcons (4–5–1) at the William D. Mullins Center. If you are not still full of turkey, and can get off the couch, game times will be at 7 p.m.

UMass made last Friday night's representative of our national armed forces look like turkeys, making creamy gravy out of Army goaltender Daryl Chamberlain in an 8–0 humiliation. Seniors Gerry Cahill (4 goals, 1 assist, 5 points) and Warren Norris (4g, 7a, 11pts) bombarded the Cadet defense, both tallying hat–tricks, with Cahill's done "natural" style, and with only 2:34 spent on the first period clock. On the defensive side, junior goalie Brian Regan (3.96 GAA, .867 save percentage) registered his first career shutout, holding back the Army offense on 19 shots. It has been a rough start for Regan, but after his performance against Army, the Connecticut native appears to be getting back on track.

UMass' own special forces were the tale of last weekend's two games. The penalty kill unit held Army to an 0–for–9 effort, while a solid No. 4 Vermont squad, led by All–Americans Martin St. Louis and Eric Perrin, was held to 0– for–5 on the power play.

The Minuteman power play almost broke .500 (4–for–8), going 3–for–6 on Friday night at the Mullins Center, and 1– for–2 at Gutterson Field House on Sunday afternoon.

For coach Joe Mallen, his special team play will be key as the team moves back into Hockey East action next weekend versus the Friars of Providence College.

"We have worked a lot on both [the power play and penalty kill], and both have improved," Mallen said. "You've got to have good special teams to win in this game, and we actually shut down both teams [on penalty kill] this weekend.

"So, we're making steady strides in both of those areas, and those are areas you have to be good at to win in any college hockey game."

The Falcons will be led on the offense by a pair of seniors in Cushing Academy's own Todd Lafortune (9g, 2a, 11pts), and Peter Sandness (6g, 3a, 9pts). Freshman forward Wels Grafstrom is tied with Sandness for second in scoring, tallying nine points on three goals and six assists.

Senior goalie Pat Kielb (4.43 GAA, .837 SV) is the weak link of the Air Force defense, being replaced in three of his seven starts by freshman Aaron Ratfield.

Mallen knows his team has had recent success against the Falcons, beating them by 4–2 and 7–1 scores

Turn to HOCKEY, page 5

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 60 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Monday, December 2, 1996

Let it snow Lemons

The Lemonheads headline tonight's winter jam multi–band fest with Superdrag and Goldfinger. Check out our preview (See Arts & Living, page 5).

Weekend Split

Kelly Van Huisen and the UMass women's basketball team earned one of two in weekend action in Storrs, Conn. (see Sports, page 10).

WORLD

Gas leak could factor in San Juan explosion

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Federal investigators have discovered a big leak in a gas line near the site of an explosion that killed at least 29 people, officials said yesterday.

It still was not clear whether that leak caused the blast that ripped apart a six–story commercial building Nov. 21, officials said at a joint news conference of the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) and the Puerto Rican government.

A coupling in the 1 1/4–inch–wide plastic pipe, which belongs to the San Juan Gas Co., was spewing gas at a rate of two cubic feet a second, Police Chief Pedro Toledo told reporters.

"There may or may not be other leaks," NTSB official Bob Barlett said. He said workers were testing other gas pipes that did not hold pressure, indicating leaks.

Officials have said all along that they suspected a gas leak, but acting Gov. Norma Burgos cautioned yesterday that the blame could lie elsewhere. She said officials also are trying to find out which other companies, such as construction firms, had worked in the area and might be responsible for the damaged pipe.

For example, Barlett said investigators had found five telephone conduits within five feet of the leaking pipe that did not appear on a map given to investigators.

NATION

'No solution' theorists emerge in TWA ordeal

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Another theory is beginning to emerge in the search for what caused the explosion of TWA Flight 800 — the no–solution scenario.

That could frighten the public, demoralize families of the 230 people who died July 17 and leave investigators frustrated. If no cause is found, "we will be left hanging forever," said Aurelie Becker of St. Petersburg, Fla., whose teen–age daughter, Michelle, died in the explosion.

"It will be a cruel blow if there is no answer," said Rita Aguilla, a Red Cross volunteer who counseled victims' families. "People need to know so that they can go on with their lives."

The Paris–bound Boeing 747 exploded minutes after taking off from New York's Kennedy international Airport. Investigators trying to determine whether the center fuel tank blew up because of a mechanical problem, a missile or a bomb have not found evidence to prove any of the theories.

The National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) is beginning to summarize some of its findings without knowing what caused the center fuel tank explosion — and is discussing whether to simply blame the disaster on the fuel tank without knowing what ignited it, a source said on condition of anonymity.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Tue	Wed
HIGH: 45 LOW: 20	HIGH: 46 LOW: 28	HIGH: 45 LOW: 30

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics .....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI .....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 10

Survey results indicate rise in students abroad; stats bound ten percent

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Rising numbers of U.S. college students are studying overseas, and many aren't going to the traditional universities in Europe, a survey found. They're venturing farther afield, to Africa, Australia and to the Middle East.

The number of American students studying abroad rose 10.6 percent to 84,403 in 1994–95, continuing a 10–year upward trend, a report released yesterday by the New York–based Institute of International Education said.

Foreign student enrollment in U.S. schools, meanwhile, rose less than 1 percent the past two years.

"As recently as a decade ago, studying abroad was considered a luxury," said Richard M. Krasno, the institute's president. "I think it's now considered a more instrumental part of undergraduate education."

He speculated that American students are warming to the idea of studying abroad because they are being exposed to other cultures on their own campuses. Many also recognize the importance of a second language and international experience in competing for good jobs, he said.

"When I went to school, they said 'Here, study French. If you even go to France, you'll be able to order off a menu.' Now, it's seen as a career asset," said Wayne Decker, director of the office of international studies at the University of Arizona.

Amy Hofsheier, 21, a student at the University of Arizona, is off to Israel next month to study for 5 1/2 months at Ben Gurion University in Beersheva. She's majoring in archaeology and Judaic studies and hopes to see the country and improve her language skills.

"I think for myself it's really a necessity," said Hofsheier, who hopes to do archaeology work in Israel one day. "The majority of the kids are still going to Spain and France, but I think interest is opening up to other places."

Kenitra Burton, 20, a junior at Hartwick College in Oneonta, N.Y., spent a month in Thailand as a freshman to broaden her knowledge of the country's language, culture and religion.

"I grew up a lot. I really matured. It gave me a whole other perspective on being a minority," said Burton, who is black. "I had braids in my hair at the time. They were all curious and kept asking 'How did you do that?'"

Suzanne Hartman, 21, a junior majoring in business at Emory University, is leaving in February to study a semester in Sydney. Except for the airfare and personal spending money, she said it will cost about the same to study in Australia as it would at Emory, a private school in Atlanta.

"It's a great opportunity. More kids are doing it," Hartman said. "Schools are starting to realize that this is not just a trend, and they're making it easier — like finding you ways to talk to other students, who have done it."

A fast–growing economic market in China led to a 30 percent increase in American students studying there in 1994–95, Krasno said. Costa Rica also reported a 30 percent increase, partly because many students recognize the advantage of knowing Spanish, he said.

He said Australia is aggressively recruiting U.S. students. It reported a 42 percent rise in American enrollees in 1994–95 with 5,346.

While these countries reported large percentage increases in American students, Britain still hosted the most — 19,410 students, or 23 percent of all study–abroad students. France, Spain and Italy ranked second, third and fourth with 7,000 to 7,900 students. Despite a rising wave of Americans signing up for study abroad, the 455,787 foreigners on U.S. campuses this year is only 0.3 percent more than a year ago, continuing a six–year trend of slow growth.

Milosevic foes call for countrywide protests

By Misha Savic
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Foes of Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, struggling to maintain momentum after two weeks of protests, declared yesterday that they would take their movement to cities throughout the country.

Up to 100,000 people braved a frigid mix of rain and snow to march through the capital on the 14th day of protests sparked by court decisions annulling opposition victories in local elections. Once again, they hurled eggs and firecrackers at state TV and the Serbian parliament building.

It was unclear how long the demonstrations could continue to draw crowds as large as Saturday, when 150,000 people were on the streets. But the protests already have been the largest and most sustained ever against the Serbian leader.

Police so far have tolerated the demonstrations, but warned in a statement yesterday that they would no longer allow unauthorized protests. Protesters will bear the responsibility for the results if they break the law, police said.

The speaker of the Serbian parliament also said a crackdown might be in the works against the protests, which he called a "pro–fascist rampage."

"This is not discontent. This is a struggle for power," Dragan Tomic said in an interview with Serbian TV, a Milosevic mouthpiece. There were unconfirmed hints of compromise, however:

• One independent radio station reported that Western diplomats were trying to mediate between Milosevic and the opposition.

• Belgrade's independent BETA

Turn to SERBIA, page 3

Focused global effort gives World AIDS Day fresh life

By Sue Leeman
Associated Press

In Rome, taxi drivers distributed AIDS leaflets. Across Thailand, gas stations offered free condoms. In South Africa, Nobel laureate Desmond Tutu went on TV to urge people to practice safe sex.

World AIDS Day was marked with renewed vigor around the world Sunday after a U.N. agency reported an accelerating death toll, with nearly a quarter of the 6.4 million AIDS deaths to date occurring in the past year.

In 1996, 3.1 million people were infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, bringing the total number of people with HIV or AIDS to 22.6 million, UNAIDS said.

In Asia, the site of an AIDS explosion, the war on the disease got graphic.

Activists posted photos of an emaciated AIDS victim in Beijing's central Zhongshan Park near the ancient imperial palace, along with posters that read, "The risks of careless sex and lifestyle hygiene."

Health officials have warned that more than 1 million Chinese — 10 times the estimated present number — could be infected with HIV by 2000 if preventive measures are not taken.

In Thailand, which has an active sex industry, 420 gas stations distributed 3 million condoms to customers with the warning, "Be careful of AIDS when feeling naughty."

The health ministry and state–owned Petroleum Authority of Thailand sponsored the program. An estimated 800,000 of Thailand's 60 million people have the HIV virus, and 50,000 more have died of AIDS.

In the Philippine capital of Manila, about 250 government officials, activists and at least four HIV patients joined in the 1 1/4–mile "First National AIDS Walk."

In Taipei, an AIDS awareness group displayed memorial quilt patches to honor victims of the disease.

Turn to AIDS, page 2

LAUREN KOSKY / COLLEGIAN

Turkey Time!
Doug and Monica Williams of Belchertown pick out a turkey for their Thanksgiving meal at a grocery store in Amherst last Wednesday morning.

Simpson defense to try new plan

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Fresh from a long weekend with time to regroup and recoup, O.J. Simpson's defense will try to counter his bruising days on the witness stand and present an alternative story.

The plaintiffs in the wrongful death trial may finish up this week after calling 32 witnesses — including some of Simpson's closest buddies — to contradict his testimony. For an emotional finale, the lawyers plan testimony from the relatives of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

Then it's Simpson's turn, and his lawyers face an uphill battle. The trial resumes tomorrow.

Jurors headed into the Thanksgiving break carrying a final image of Simpson denying yet again — during questioning by the plaintiffs' lawyers — that he stabbed Ms. Simpson and Goldman. With a heavier burden of proof and so much physical evidence to explain away, it is understandable that lead defense lawyer Robert Baker chose not to ask Simpson any "rehabilitative" questions last week, analysts said.

"The defense needs to tell their story to the jury before calling Mr. Simpson back to the stand," UCLA law professor Peter Arenella said. "What you're going to see in the defense is an instant replay, in an abbreviated fashion, of the garbage–in–garbage–out theory, combined with a more aggressive attack on Ms. Simpson's character, to suggest why someone other than O.J. Simpson committed the murders."

As it did in the criminal trial, the defense will likely promote the theory that police planted or contaminated evidence. Expect to see more of criminalist Dennis Fung, a favorite target of the defense for his alleged sloppiness.

Simpson's lawyers also are expected to bring back former Detective Phil Vannatter, a brief witness in the plaintiffs' case, for questioning about allegedly lying on a search warrant affidavit and for violating police policy by carrying around a vial of Simpson's blood.

As for an explanation of why there was so much blood evidence against Simpson, defense attorneys will likely present testimony from Dr. Henry Lee, star defense witness from the criminal trial. Lee is expected to repeat his suggestion that something was wrong in the police crime lab. Lee's power as a witness, however, will be diminished since he will appear only on videotape. Forensic pathologist Dr. Michael Baden will likely testify that the killings took longer than the plaintiffs have suggested, and that Simpson, under the tight time line, didn't have time to kill. A photographic expert may be called in to denounce as a fake a photo of Simpson wearing shoes similar to those that left bloody prints at the scene.

The defense also will try to portray Ms. Simpson as an emotionally unhinged woman who in her final weeks was running with a crowd of drug abusers and prostitutes.

Her friend, Cora Fishman, may be a key witness. She testified in a deposition that Ms. Simpson "was leading, like, a dangerous life" and that she "was coming on to guys."

Simpson himself will likely be a final defense witness. Analysts expect to see a different man from the somber witness of last week, who issued numerous denials and made little or no attempt to explain anything.

LAUREN KOSKY \ COLLEGIAN

The Voyage Home!
UMass students crowd onto a bus bound for Boston last Wednesday afternoon at the Haigis Mall.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Monday, Dec. 2

Special event — Distinguished Visitors Program and UPC present Public Insomnia Tour #1 — Henry Rollins at 7 p.m. in the FAC. Admission: $4/students, $10 general public.

Lecture — Susan Clarke, a Five College Women's Studies Community Associate from South Hadley High School, will give a talk entitled "Mid-life Women High School Teachers" Models of Transition for Adolescent Students" at 4:30 p.m. in the Dickinson House Living Room at Mount Holyoke College.

Tuesday, Nov. 3

Colloquium — Leslie Bender, a Five College Women's Studies Research Associate from the Syracuse University College of Law, will give a colloquium entitled "Legal Challenges to Social Injustice: How Women Can Use Tort Law to Continue Feminist Struggle" at 7:30 p.m. in the Dickinson House Living Room at Mount Holyoke College.

Film — The Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies and the Judaic and Near East Studies Dept. at UMass sponsor a showing of the Crown Sephira production "If You Make It Possible: Portraits of Middle East Peacemakers." For more information, contact Adi Bemak at 582–5519.

Notices

Special event — UMass is participating in the global observance of World AIDS Day which will take place from Nov. 25 through Dec. 6. You can get HIV/AIDS information and a red ribbon to pin on yourself or on our "Remembrance Tree" at the Campus Center Concourse table each day. Visit the Faces of AIDS art display and the Five College AIDS Quilt at Earthfoods. Watch "Boys on the Side" on HSCN. Activities will culminate with a candlelight vigil on the Student Union steps at 5 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 6 and a march to the First Congregational Church on Main St. in Amherst for a gathering of Remembrance and Hope. Refreshments will be served. After that, there will be a poetry/prose reading followed by an open mike at 8 p.m. at Claudia's Cafe. For more information, contact Health Education at 577–5181.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol-free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584- 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, new-comers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on the following date: Tues., Dec. 3 from 5:30–7 p.m. in CC room 165–169.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon. All conversations are confidential.

Literature — MOTHERTONGUE, the multilingual student publication by the dept. of Comparative Literature, is currently seeking submissions for the spring '97 publication. We will accept original poetry, short stories, one–acts, international photographs and art work created by multilingual students. Please submit a copy in English to the Comparative Literature Dept. in 203 South College. Rough drafts are acceptable.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546-3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae and R&B dancers for next semester's annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546–2714 for audition information.

Theatre — UMass Theatre guild presents the musical The Pajama Game. Dec. 5, 6 and 7 at 8 p.m. with a matinee performance on the 7 at 2 p.m. All shows are in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Tickets are $4/students and senior citizens and $6 for everyone else and are available at the door and in advance at Tix Unlimited, 545–0412.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for persons who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and to be sent a volunteer application, please call (413) 733–2251.

■ aids

continued from page 1

Photo exhibitions carried the message in India, which volunteer organizations say has Asia's worst AIDS epidemic, with an estimated 1 million or more HIV cases. Charity organizations sponsored marches in Bombay.

More than 400 people gathered in Tokyo for the lighting of a 20-foot tree bearing 12,000 red ribbons, symbol of the fight against AIDS.

Europe warned against complacency.

In central Paris, several hundred AIDS activists marched with signs reading, "AIDS: The Epidemic Isn't Over" and "Zero Equals the Number of AIDS Survivors."

In Rome, two taxi companies distributed AIDS information leaflets to passengers and included similar messages on their telephone answering service. Some players in Italy's top soccer league wore red bows on their uniforms.

Dozens of candles were lit at Madrid's Puerta de Alcala monument in memory of the estimated 5,000 AIDS victims to have died in the Spanish capital since 1981.

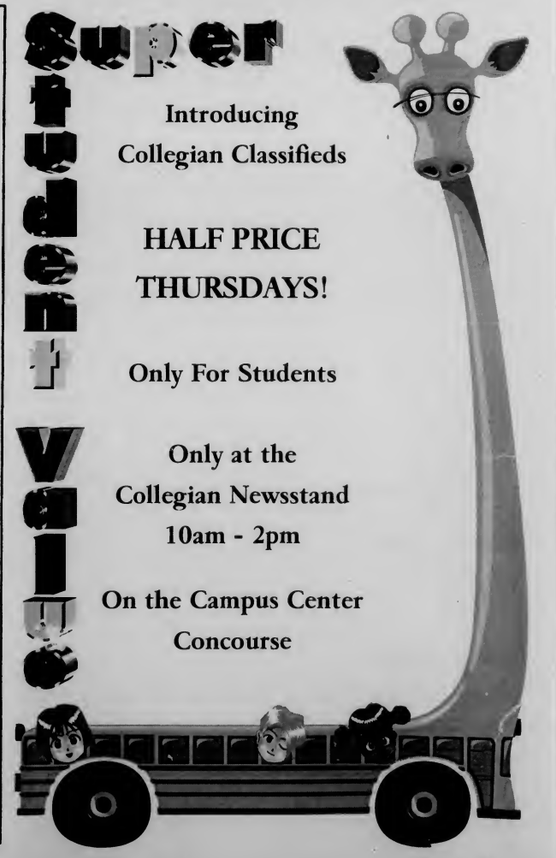
LAUREN KOSKY/COLLEGIAN

It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas...
Stores get ready for the holidays in anticipation of the rush of holiday shoppers after Thanksgiving.

JANUARY CLASSES

Take a course during Intersession!

You can complete a one, two, or three credit course during January.
(Most classes meet mornings 9 a.m. - Noon)
Classes Begin January 2 through January 21, 1997



Register now through Friday, December 27, 1996

- Keyboarding for Information Processing
- Introduction to Dance
- Computer Literacy
- Introduction to Internet
- English Composition I
- English Composition II
- French Skills Practice I
- Counseling Skills
- Winter Outdoor Recreation
- Practical Nursing Practicum
- Introduction to Professional Nursing and the Nursing Process
- Principles of Psychology
- Contemporary Trends/Issues
- Spanish Skills Practice I
- Spanish Skills Practice II
- Oral Communications: Public Speaking
- Principles of Sociology

For Registration Information Call: (413) 774-3131 extension 272

GREEN FIELD MCC

GREENFIELD
The community's college!

~ NATION/WORLD ~

Roleplaying game ends tragically

Teen vampire cult forces quiet Ky. town into national notoriety

By David Royse
Associated Press

MURRAY, Ky. — For years, this quiet college town was perhaps best known as home of the national Boy Scout museum. Now it is newly notorious, and its residents are increasingly afraid, with the discovery that some of its teens belonged to a vampire cult. The news that four area teen-agers are suspected of beating a Florida couple to death was frightening enough. Now prosecutors say the youths were involved in a strange role-playing game that went much too far — from the mutilation of animals to drinking each other's blood and eventually to murder.

Few would discuss the case with outsiders, but the cult was the hot topic of hushed gossip among residents.

"People are talking about it," said Greg Duncan, sipping coffee at the Hungry Bear restaurant. "Some people are afraid."

Details remain sketchy but the secretive cult known as "The Vampire Clan" is believed to have been active in Murray, where members were suspected of breaking into an animal shelter and mutilating two puppies.

"The fear of the unknown is always greater than the fear of the known," said another man at the Hungry Bear, who refused to give his name.

Murray, a semi-rural town of about 13,000, lies in southwestern Kentucky near the Tennessee state line. Murray State University is there — a 8,300-student school known for its basketball program. Now the town is linked to three Murray teens arrested along with another youth from nearby Mayfield. All four, along with the daughter of the slain couple, were arrested on Thanksgiving night in Baton Rouge, La. All are suspected in the Nov. 25 slayings of Richard and Naoma Wendorf of Eustis, Fla.

Police say Rod Ferrell met the Wendorf's 15-year-old daughter, Heather, when he lived in Eustis with his father. Ferrell, 16, moved back to Murray last year to live with his mother.

It was Ferrell who police think broke into the animal shelter, stomping one dog to death and pulling the legs off another. Neighbors at the public housing complex where he lived say they never noticed anything unusual about him or his mother, Sondra Gibson.

Yet Gibson herself is charged with solicitation to commit rape. Police say she wrote to a 14-year-old, inviting sex and hinting she was involved in vampire-type activity.

"I longed to be near you... to become a vampire, a part of the family immortal and truly yours forever," the letter reads. "You will then come for me and cross me over and I will be your bride for eternity and you my sire."

Accused with Ferrell and Ms. Wendorf of killing the Wendorfs are Dana Cooper, 19, of Murray, and Scott Anderson, 16, of Mayfield. Charity Keesee, 16, of Murray was charged with being an accessory to murder.

Extradition proceedings in Baton Rouge are to begin today. Calloway County prosecutor David Harrington described Cooper as a "follower, someone who wanted to be liked. Probably easily manipulated."

A young woman stopped in a grocery store who graduated from Calloway County High School with Cooper last year said the girl craved attention.

"But this vampire stuff?" she asked, refusing to give her name. "There was nothing that suggested that. She was just strange."

Harrington said the youths were involved in an ongoing role-playing game, but that Ferrell had begun to take the vampire game more seriously, scaring others into quitting.

"The animal shelter thing was the first visible sign he had gone beyond game-playing," Harrington said, refusing to disclose more details because the accused are minors.

Eastern Zaire faces volcanic threat

By Chris Tomlinson
Associated Press

RUMANGABO, Zaire — A volcano erupted in eastern Zaire on yesterday, spewing a plume of ash and lava into the air about 30 miles from the border crossing at Goma where Rwandan refugees are still straggling homeward.

A lava flow down the northwestern slope of 10,022-foot Nyamulagira was six miles long by evening, but there was no indication of an immediate threat to the refugees.

The U.N. refugee agency said it did not know whether any refugees would be affected by the eruption, but it is in the area where the Kahale and Kahindo camps were located.

Rwandan Hutu refugees fled from those camps more than a month ago to escape fighting between anti-government rebels and Zairian troops. Hundreds of thousands of the refugees have since returned home, 2 1/2 years after they fled to Zaire in fear of retribution for a Hutu-led massacre of minority Tutsis.

The flow of refugees slowed to a trickle yesterday, and only a few hundred arrived at the border. Aid workers said they believed most of the refugees in the immediate area have already made their way home.

In Goma, aid workers set up a field hospital for sick and exhausted refugees who have spent the last five weeks fleeing through the forest.

"The groups we're getting now are worse and worse, and we know the further we go into the forest they will continue to be worse," said Dr. Marc Gastellu Etchegorry, head of Doctors Without Borders in Goma.

He said his group had treated more than 140 cholera cases among refugees in the last two weeks.

A Canadian-led military relief mission to Central Africa was approved on Friday by 14 countries, including the United States, to help the remaining refugees and other people displaced in fighting. More than 150,000 refugees are believed to be in the forest and headed toward Walikale, 90 miles northwest of Goma. They may still be under the control of Rwandan Hutu militias.

The militias, responsible for the 1994 massacre of 500,000 Rwandan Tutsis, have been fighting the rebels who seek to oust President Mobutu Sese Seko.

The leader of the Zairian rebels, Laurent Kabila, said Saturday that his forces will let up to five military men from the Canadian-led mission into rebel areas in order to coordinate their activities with U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

Also yesterday, an official statement read on the Voice of Zaire radio station said Mobutu prolonged by 15 days the state of emergency in eastern Kivu region, where the rebellion has been centered. It said the order was signed on Nov. 25 by Mobutu, who has been in Switzerland for months for cancer treatment and is expected to return home shortly.

Zaire also lodged a formal protest with Uganda, saying Ugandan soldiers had helped the Zairian rebels take the town of Beni on Saturday.

Joseph's Tomb reopened to students

By Jack Katzenell
Associated Press

NABLUS, West Bank — Jewish settlers returned to a religious seminary in Palestinian-controlled Nablus yesterday for the first time since gun battles erupted between Israeli and Palestinian troops in September. Palestinian police prevented some of them from entering the city.

The Israeli army had said it wasn't safe for the students to return to the seminary at Joseph's Tomb for several weeks after the fighting. The army allowed them back yesterday.

Most of the students live in the Jewish settlement of Yitzhar, outside Nablus.

Palestinians living close to the heavily fortified seminary compound accused the students of planning to turn it into a settlement by staying there overnight, despite assurances from the army that they would be there only during the day.

"They don't just intend to pray and study here," said Hani Abu-Rabiye, who owns a carpentry shop a few yards from the concrete wall that surrounds the seminary and is topped with rolls of barbed wire. "They used to stay overnight and they will do it again."

The reopening of the seminary came as the Arab League, convening in Cairo, warned that Israel will endanger Middle East peacemaking if it insists on expanding Jewish settlements in Arab territories. In Jerusalem, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's office denounced the warning and Syrian demands that Arab nations to freeze relations with Israel. "Such pressure tactics will achieve nothing," it said in a statement.

Yesterday, 17 students with the side curls and skullcaps worn by some Orthodox Jews arrived at Joseph's Tomb in an Israeli army truck escorted by a Palestinian police jeep, and carried a refrigerator into the seminary.

The site is believed by many religious Jews to be the burial place of the biblical figure Joseph.

In September, Israeli and Palestinian troops traded fire throughout the West Bank. Six Israeli soldiers and one Palestinian policeman were killed at Joseph's Tomb and many more were wounded. Dozens of Israeli soldiers were trapped for hours inside the small mausoleum as angry Palestinians rioted outside. Rioters ransacked the seminary and burned prayer books.

Paramilitary Israeli police in full battle gear guarded the students inside the gate Sunday, while Palestinian police with Kalashnikov assault rifles stood guard outside.

But when the truck returned to an Israeli army base outside the city to pick up the remaining seven students, the Palestinian police refused to let them enter.

A senior Palestinian officer told the associated press that the seminary violates the Israel-Palestinian agreements.

"Joseph's Tomb is a Jewish holy place, and therefore Jews are permitted to pray there," said Col. Mahmoud Aloul, governor of Nablus. "But setting up a seminary and studying there is quite a different matter."

The head of the seminary, American-born Rabbi Yitzhak Ginsburg, said he hoped to restore the seminary and expand it.

COLLEGIAN NOW HIRING!!

The Collegian news department is currently accepting applications for Associate News Editors for spring 1997. These paid positions offer interested students extensive writing experience. Associates typically cover the most pressing stories and issues occurring on–campus, within the state and throughout the country.

Interested applicants should contact Michael Elliott or Chris Conner at 545–1851, or drop by the Collegian office to pick up a application at 113 Campus Center basement.

■ serbia

continued from page 1

news agency quoted sources close to the leadership of Milosevic's Socialist Party as saying he was preparing to fire some party hardliners, including the leader in the southern city of Nis. The source, who was not identified, said Milosevic would follow that with negotiations with the opposition. The source was quoted as saying Milosevic was in a "blind alley," because he could not undo the election results, but also recognized how much they had damaged him.

Opposition leader Zoran Djindjic, at a rally in Nis, Serbia's second-largest city, told independent Index radio that the demonstrations would spread.

"We have decided to broaden the protests to another six or seven towns," he said. "The network of protest and civil disobedience is taking hold... This is a test of legality, we are defending the principle of respecting the law."

Belgrade, the capital, has long been an opposition stronghold. But Nis was a Milosevic bastion until it angrily turned against him because of the country's economic woes.

About half Serbia's workers are unemployed, and low wages have driven many into poverty.

The economy is suffering from the effects of mismanagement, corruption and 3 1/2 years of economic sanctions imposed because Milosevic instigated wars in Croatia and Bosnia as the old Yugoslav federation broke up.

DAILY COLLEGIAN and ICP present:

The First Annual UMass
bandWidth
Spanning Five UMass Bands

Watch here for band listing!

18+
CLUB METRO
NORTHAMPTON, MA

Monday Dec. 9th
Doors Open @ 7:00
Bands Start @ 9:00

$5 admission ($4 with this ad)

TONIGHT TODAY'S 93 MODERN ROCK WHMP-FM PRESENTS

Snow Show 96
DECEMBER 2nd, PEARL STREET NIGHTCLUB
The Lemonheads
Goldfinger
SUPERDRAG
Doors Open at 7:30pm
Downstairs BIG BANG SHOWCASE
TICKETS ON SALE
Tickets Available at: Strawberries, Northampton Box Office, TIX Unlimited - UMass, For The Record in Amherst,

DID YOU KNOW?
The University Health Services Offers Contact Lenses!!!
With all these great features:

- Same day fitting or replacement in many cases
- Wide variety of lenses available
- Convenient On Campus location
- Free sample start-up solutions
- Contacts mailed FREE!* *normal delivery

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?
For appointments call Eye Care Services
577-5244

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Ted Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Vaklan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke, Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey Brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Cousins Black Affairs Co-Editor
Shmanda Ghosh Psychoping Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
James Northcutt Fast Forward Editor
Ryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Sommer Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Hiltzik News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Simms Sports Co-Editor
Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Blame UM, not sex offenders

Michael Carlson is not to blame — he has already served his justice. It is the University of Massachusetts administration that deserves to stand trial — for failing to notify housing authorities that a registered sex offender lived in a University-owned residence hall, next to unsuspecting and innocent students.

The Sex Offenders Registry Law, enacted in the beginning of October, requires that all sex offenders register with the police in the town where they reside in order that concerned residents and parents can be aware of convicted rapists and other sex offenders residing in their vicinity.

Unfortunately the current law leaves a giant loophole — what about college students living on-campus, away from their permanent home?

While last week's special report by Channel 40 was disturbing, the Collegian feels the true blame lies on the Administration, who knew about Carlson's past history but failed to inform the appropriate officials.

The University must legislate their own policy concerning past sex offenders. We feel they have every right to become members of our campus community, but should not be allowed the privilege of living in residence halls with students who have very little or no say in choosing their neighbors.

The Administration should be commended for giving Michael Carlson a chance to better his life, but they must not sacrifice the safety of the University by allowing him to live among uninformed students.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

Salvi: Just another victim

Thank you Governor Weld. Obviously your stance on getting "tough on crime" is working — the criminals are dying.

John C. Salvi III is just the latest victim of our deteriorating penal system in Massachusetts. Salvi, who was serving a severe sentence in the Walpole state prison for the double murder at a reproductive clinic in Brookline, was found dead in his cell on Friday — an apparent suicide.

In explaining why Salvi received little to no mental health care at the prison, officials at Walpole claimed he was sane, even though recent letters of his discussed "opening a vein [of his], pouring metal fragments into his body and letting them wash through his bloodstream."

But Salvi's lack of care should come as no surprise. Since taking office, Governor Weld has drastically cut rehabilitation programs such as mental health care for prisoners. In 1994, to save taxpayers' money Weld even hired a private contractor, Correctional Medical Services, to take over care at Bridgewater State Hospital — the state's largest mental health hospital; the number of inmates cared for dropped from 330 to 280 — a 15 percent decrease.

This trend of cutting rehabilitation programs has spread across the nation, especially since 1994, when the House Republicans promised to get "tough on crime." In an attempt to make prisoners a financial asset, Arizona and Florida recently re-introduced "chain gangs" as a form of labor for prisoners.

For 12 hours a day, criminals are bound in groups of five by metal leg shackles. They perform menial tasks like cutting weeds and collecting trash while dressed in uniforms bearing the words, "Chain Gang." If a prisoner refuses to work they are chained to "the hitching post" and often not fed. There are no sick days on the chain gang.

In Arizona the state is saving more money by setting up makeshift jails for the chain gangs by pitching army tents surrounded by barbed wire. During the summer, temperatures rise over 110 degrees, while falling below freezing in the winter.

In an interview with the National Law Journal, a sheriff from Arizona commented, "Why build jails when you can put them in tents for free? I was nice enough to pump electricity in. [Inmates] should be made to suffer, in a humane sort of way."

But is this humane? Or does this border on the "cruel and unusual punishment" that the Eighth Amendment supposedly protects Americans from — yes, even prisoners?

While the theory of "tough and cheap" may appeal to the self-consumed taxpayer, we have to look back at history to see what may lie ahead if we continue to cut rehabilitation programs in favor of projects such as the "chain gang."

Mike Burke

In 1971, a riot in an Attica, N.Y. prison left 39 dead. In its aftermath the New York State Special Commission on Attica stressed the importance of rehabilitation and recommended an overhaul of the penal system. Have we already forgotten this advice?

Critics of the current trend in deteriorating treatment of prisoners largely agree that Attica is a sign of what will come — this time all over America.

And if you expect justice from the Supreme Court in ruling against such practices as chain gangs, think again. According to Alvin J. Bronstein, the executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union's National Prison Project, "It is clear that a current majority of the [Supreme] Court takes a very restrictive view of prisoner's rights. The chief justice went out of his way to send a message to lower courts: 'Stop interfering with prison administrators' ability to run their prisons.' Add to that the huge number of very conservative judges and appeals court judges appointed by Reagan and Bush and [you have a group that is] delighted to cut back on prisoners' rights."

With men working under slave-like conditions, receiving no form of rehabilitation, we must really question the usefulness of our penal system. John C. Salvi III is just one of many Americans who will die this year because of our nation's and state's unwillingness to treat prisoners like human beings.

Mike Burke is a Collegian columnist.

How well do you know your roommate?

When I read about the sex offender on our campus, I was disturbed by his presence. I don't understand how the University would accept a convicted sex offender when the school has trouble with rape as it is. I understand the University's call for diversity in student backgrounds and lifestyles, but this goes too far.

Matthew Wurtzel

According to reports in the Collegian and by Springfield's News 40, Michael Carlson raped his neighbor's daughter in Boxborough. When he was charged with the crime, he pleaded guilty and he was given a sentence of two years imprisonment at Massachusetts Correctional Institute in Concord. Now he's again out on the prowl.

I understand that the recent Sex Offenders Registry Statute was passed with the intent to help parents who live in neighborhoods where dangerous predators may stalk their children. Carlson reportedly is registered with the police in his hometown of Boxborough, but not on campus nor in Amherst, where he spends eight months of the year.

If administrators knew of his history, why didn't they notify the student body that a sex offender was among them? If I was a resident of Leach or Northeast, I'd have wanted to know. If residents in suburban and urban neighborhoods are notified of the presence of sex offenders, then officials should also inform students on college campuses. Students are entitled to the same rights as those in other communities outside the walls of academia.

If the student in question is interested in children, then there are grave reasons for concern because graduate students with families often live on campus. Some Resident Directors and their assistants live in residence halls like Leach with their young children. What if the student in question approached one of these unsuspecting children?

However, not all sex offenders prey on the very young. Every semester we see the headlines in the Collegian about a woman who was raped. It is sickening, and the revelation of this student's presence only makes it worse.

Almost as fascinating as the University's lack of notification is their initial renunciation of knowing anything about the young man's record. On Tuesday, the Collegian ran an article with Kay Scanlan, the University's spokeswoman, denying any knowledge of the situation. The following day, the administration changed the story and admitted it knew everything.

In response to the News 40 story and the articles in the Collegian, the student no longer lives in Leach. However, when University officials were asked whether he still lives on campus, they declined to answer.

The University can no longer hide from the problem of sex crimes. In the past, the administration seemed rather lax toward the problem of rape in the residence halls and fraternities. It is time for them to pull their heads out of the sand and vigorously attack the problem. The chancellor can not simply assign another committee to examine the problem, and wait until the students forget; so he can simply ignore the findings. It is obvious that policies concerning such crimes, as well as how these students get into the University, are in dire need of change.

Matthew Wurtzel is a Collegian columnist.

ATTENTION COLUMNISTS AND STAFF!

On Tuesday, elections will be held for many Collegian office positions, including Ed/Op editor. Please take the time to meet the candidates on Monday night at 7 p.m. and vote consciously. If you need more information, talk to Mark McGrath in the Collegian office or call 545-1361.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

What a bargain?

Want a deal? You can buy a President for $100,000 cash. The rewards of such an investment may include, but are not limited to, state dinners and jobs. Just look at the people and companies who made $100,000 contributions for the prez's Inaugural Ball in 1993 and you will see a list partly made up of employees and invitees list for White House events.

Joseph Fountain

According to an Associated Press story, "seven companies and three individuals contributed $100,000 or more," and did not ask for the money to be returned.

The three individuals were Mrs. James Riady, John Huang and Richard Park. They were later repaid with an invitation to a state dinner with the president of South Korea.

Huang later got a job in the Commerce Department and a job in The Democratic National Committee.

Now look at who gave the most money... drum roll please... Merril Lynch. "We make money the old fashioned way, we earn it." Or you pay off other people's debt with the hope of getting to spend some time with the president. Of course they also lent another $100,000 at — what? — no interest! That doesn't seem too smart. Of course we're not talking about buying off a president, oops I didn't mean to say that.

The other corporations were Guess Inc. (Why would a jean company donate money?), The Limited (a retail chain — boy, clothes companies really like this president!), Federal Express (They ship it anywhere!), Union Pacific Corp. (I think I can, I think I can...) and Panhandle Eastern Corporation (I have no idea).

Then of course there were the lenders who were quite impressive. They loaned the Prez $100,000 or more each and were paid back from the sales of memorabilia from the Ball.

The insurance companies who were awaiting a health care overhaul all lent $100,000. They were Aetna, Metropolitan Life, New York Life, Beneficial, Primerica and Blue Cross/ Blue Shield, as well as drug manufacturers Genentech and Merck and Company.

Clifford Hudson lent $100,000 and was given the job of chairman of the Securities Investor Protection Corp., which insures investors if their brokerage house goes under.

The new White House Chief of Staff Erksine Bowles also loaned out 100 big ones. So did he buy the job?

Occidental, who was facing an energy department case on price fixing, loaned $100,000 and then settled out of court for $275 million in fines. Gerald Stern, the attorney handling the case for Occidental through 1992, was also a major fund-raiser for Clinton.

Some final thoughts. What are private companies doing donating money to presidential inaugurals? What effect does this have on the role of the President? Do people benefit from this, and if so, why should they also get tax credits? Maybe the only people who should be allowed to contribute and go to balls should be decided by lottery or be friends of the president. The way it works now, no one but a select few can go, and that is wrong.

Joseph Fountain is a Collegian staff member

Letters to the Editor

Ticket system doesn't stink

To the editor:

How can the procedure for picking up tickets for basketball and hockey be annoying? All you need to do is go get your activity card (not on pick-up days of course) and bring that with your student ID (with appropriate valid sticker) to the cage on scheduled pick-up dates. What is so difficult about that? Sure, basketball tickets sell out fast sometimes, but that's because it's become quite popular around here. As for hockey tickets, there has never been a sellout and they are always available. How can that be annoying?

Now, let's break down Mr. Dan Levenson's "researched" story about the woes of the ticket system. First he asks, "... why are we not guaranteed tickets for hockey and basketball?" Well squishing 17,751 undergraduates into the Mullins Center, which seats exactly 9,493 for basketball, would be quite a fire hazard, Mr. Levenson later states that "...there is absolutely no reason why many more students who want tickets to games should not be able to get them." Well, it's true that student seating at the Mullins is 37 percent of the arena, that is one of the few things Mr. Levenson is correct on. However, in conducting a little research on my own, I found that when compared to some other top basketball programs, UMass looks pretty generous. For example, Kentucky reserves just 28.2 percent of their arena for students, North Carolina 29.2 percent, Indiana 22 percent and UConn just 24.8 percent. Thirty-seven starting to look a little better? Even more, most of these schools make their students pay per game or buy season tickets which would be even more expensive. As for waiting outside at 5 a.m. for tickets, lines are not allowed to form until 6:30 a.m. according to signs posted on every door of the cage. This "tradition" of waiting for tickets in the early morning cold was started by students. Tell me you've never seen TV coverage of students camping out overnight to get tickets at Duke or North Carolina. If you haven't, you're living under a rock.

Let's continue with Mr. Levenson's "researched" numbers. We move to the $361 service fee. Approximately one third of this fee is for athletics (about $120), but that does not include tickets alone. Students pay this fee for access to all gyms and other non-ticketed sporting events (lacrosse, soccer, etc.) The rest of the "service fee" is for things such as "Fine Arts Council Events." I don't know about anyone else, but I've never been to one of those, yet I still pay for it. I suppose if those tickets were in high demand, Mr. Levenson would be making up a story to bash the Fine Arts Council, right?

It's time to stop complaining and start supporting the ticket process at UMass. It is probably one of the most convenient ways of distributing tickets in the country. As for Dan Levenson, if you don't have an activity card, get one. It's time to suck it up and get in line like everyone else.

Robert Bochnak
Amherst

What's with the mascot name?

To the editor,

Two hundred and nine years ago, a major historical event took place in the British Colonies now known as the United States of America. Colonialists, who had come to America in search of religious freedom and a better life, became sick of the controlling, unfair and stubborn behavior of their British government and King George III. British behavior such as "over-taxation" and refusals to comply with important documents such as the "Declaration of Independence" led to the rebellion most famously known as the "Revolutionary War." These respectable and courageous men risked their lives in order to gain freedom for their families to come. Although the odds were minute towards winning, they fought for what they knew was right. They won. We have the privilege to know that many of these hard-earned, but successful, battles took place in this wonderful state where we attend college, Massachusetts. We are also aware of the drummers that instilled spirit into American warriors and gave them hope in times of battle. These courageous eight to 12-year-old boys were known as "The Minutemen." By the way, these boys were labeled as men for their heroic behavior and seen as soldiers fighting for the "American cause."

This semester, I transferred from the University of Rochester, whose team name used to be the "Dandelions" (but eventually copied the name of Georgia Tech's Yellowjackets), but at least there is such a thing. Glancing over The Collegiate [sic] one day I read "The Minutewomen have won again." I thought to myself, "This has got to be a joke." Regardless of what the feminists want to believe, there were no women involved in our proud country's quest for freedom. I don't care what rights women had back then, but we should at least respect the people who fought for the benefits we have today! As I must assume, the women's sports teams at UMass were at one time referred to as the Minutemen. This term did not mean these women were males, but was a symbol of our accomplished heritage. Instead of being oversensitive to this name, female athletes should have been inspired by the fact that they were named after such a brave group of people. Now, don't get me wrong — women are definitely equal to men, have the same brain capacity and capabilities and should be allowed to participate in the work force, but this so-called "feminism" is getting way out of hand. I thought the quest for women's rights was so we could all enjoy the same benefits of life, but not so we could put down others. Without the original Minutemen, "women's suffrage" may never have begun. I'm sorry, but my predecessors who contributed to the fantastic life I live now have been disrespected, and as a proud citizen of the United States of America, I feel a need to stick up for them. And I congratulate last year's basketball team, for their position in the Final Four would have made our founding fathers proud. Good job, guys.

I'm not writing to complain about Feminism. I realize there are many problems in our country, but I also recognize the advantageous conditions I live in. To all the Republicans, Democrats,

Liberals and Conservatives out there, love this country and never take for granted the privileges we do have. Remember where our founders came from, and of course, that they made mistakes, but it is due to their diligence that we live as successfully as we do today. I think Steven Stills put it best when he said, "If we can't do it with a smile on our face... if we can't do it with love in our hearts, then children, we ain't got no right to do it at all."

Jeff Hirschberg
Southwest

Candidates' night

for next semester's board of editors
and editor in chief is Monday night, December 2

Elections will be held in the business office from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Tuesday, December 3

Any staffmember may vote for Editor in Chief

Any newsroom staffmember and members of the Business and Graphics Boards may vote for Managing Editor and Editor in Chief

All other positions may only be voted on by members of the desk.

on December 3rd

Arts & Living

COURTESY KARIN THOMAS

Evan Dando brings the latest installment of the Lemonheads to Pearl Street tonight.

Dando faces burden of celebrity

By John Hendrickson
Collegian Correspondent

Evan Dando has all too often been written off as the Keanu Reeves of rock — just another pretty boy who's longer on looks than talent. Dando's knack for writing the perfect pop song is unfortunately overshadowed by his "alterna-hunk" tag, which is a damn shame, because he and his latest batch of Lemonheads have once again reached pop nirvana with their latest Atlantic release, car button cloth.

Although the Lemonheads' current sound can best be described as a hybrid of bubblegum, punk and country, the band's roots lie in Boston's hardcore scene. Formed at the Commonwealth School in 1986, they released their debut EP, Laughing All The Way To The Cleaners, that same year.

In 1987, they signed to Taang! Records, Boston's premier punk label, and over the next three years released the full-length albums Hate Your Friends, Creator and Lick. With each LP, the Lemonheads built upon the limitations of the hardcore format, soon creating a unique style of their own.

It was one of their singles, though, which catapulted the Lemonheads to national attention. A rocked-up version of Suzanne Vega's "Luka" became a college-radio smash, and the band soon signed to Atlantic Records. 1990's Lovey followed, and 1991's Favorite Spamish Dishes EP gave some insight into Dando's influences, including fellow Boston homeboys New Kids On The Block.

1992 saw the release of It's A Shame About Ray and yet another cover, Simon And Garfunkel's "Mrs. Robinson" – with these releases, the band exploded The following year's Come On Feel The Lemonheads achieved similar success, and in 1994 Dando officially became a celebrity when he was voted one of People magazine's "50 Most Attractive People."

Throughout their decade-long career, Dando has been the Lemonheads' one constant member. Some of the band's alumni include Godstar's Nik Dalton, video director Jesse Peretz and Juliana Hatfield.

The three-year hiatus which preceded the release of car button cloth was marked primarily by the inevitable backlash to Dando's celebrity status. After spending ample time hanging out with Oasis and winding up in rehab, he assembled this year's version of the band — including former Blake Baby John Strohm (now serving his third stint as a Lemonhead) and Valley native Murph (formerly of Dinosaur Jr.).

The Lemonheads are playing tonight at Pearl St. in Northampton, with Goldfinger and Superdrag. Call the club for more information.

Spoken word punk style at FAC

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

There's more to Henry Rollins than meets the eye. Or so we must think, judging from how many pies he has his fingers in.

He has been able to move far beyond the artistic limitations of his band, fittingly titled, The Rollins Band which has entered into the American consciousness from exposure on MTV and the Lollapalooza tour.

Aside from hilariously playing the straight man in movies like The Chase and Heat, he has published volumes of poetry under his publishing company, 2.13.61.

But spoken word? The images of the hulking, tattooed mass that are shown in his band's videos and in movies don't lend itself to our connotations of spoken word — people who like to hang out in the Village, "deep" musicians like Laurie Anderson, or neurotic schizoids like Spaulding Grey.

However, Rollins seems to make spoken word his own, ignoring whatever conventions we may be coming in with. His tirades may be described as a cross between an unfunny stand-up comic and an angry man simply explaining what makes him tick.

"Like a lot of you, I hate. A lot. You know? But, I hate with style and creativity. I don't hate you. I hate weakness. I hate all the [s—] that weakness brings — like racism and rape — the [s—] that keeps life from being 100 percent fun. But I tell ya, every once and a while you get into the petty hate trips where you can focus your hate upon a certain person or persons, like cops and stuff. That's pretty universal," Rollins said on 1992's The Boxed Life.

Universal? Maybe. Offensive to some, people? Probably. But, if you can move beyond the at-times pretentious ranting, you can find some of his shticks both comic and thought-provoking. And with this his goal is reached — Rollins' spoken-word performances seem to take shots by pointing out all the little annoying things that rip at the flesh of our souls.

Henry Rollins will be performing tonight at the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at both Tickets Unlimited and the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Evita's high flying, but not so adored

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

MADONNA
Evita Soundtrack
Warner Bros.

The public loves to shine the spotlight on Madonna. Perhaps the only thing more scrutinized than her latest film Evita was the birth of the child. Nevertheless, the film production of the Andrew Lloyd Webber musical is one of the most hyped, most controversial films of the year.

The first setback the film had was losing director Oliver Stone. Then, the Argentine government wasn't going to let filming continue with Madonna playing the part of Eva Peron, even though she felt she could do the part justice. And to make matters worse, Webber and lyricist Tim Rice hadn't spoken in over two years, and had to be coaxed into writing one final song for the film.

But Madonna was given the part of Peron, and Spanish heartthrob Antonio Banderas was given the part of her lover, Che Guevara. So even though Evita lost its star director, it certainly had two leading stars. The only question now was can they sing musical theater?

The answer is, quite frankly, not really. There is no doubt that Madonna has the voice of a pop superstar, but it's a struggle for her to pull of the part of Peron. On many of the songs, including the famous soliloquy "Don't Cry For Me, Argentina," Madonna's voice falters on any notes higher than her alto range.

She fails to belt out any of these often emotional songs, something which is expected, considering the intensity of what they are about. Let's face it, she is no Patti Lupone. But in all fairness, this is a film, not Broadway. While Madonna would falter in front of an audience, she does sound clear and nice on tape.

However, as a career move, score one for Madonna. Evita is one of the best things she has done in the past few years, much better than her past few solo albums.

Banderas is quite the surprise, though. His voice is warm and sincere and shines on such songs as, "High Flying, Adored," his ode to Peron.

But one aspect that simply can not be forgotten is that it is Madonna and Banderas who are singing. Given their superstardom, it's hard for the listener to imagine they are really listening to Peron and Guevara. Madonna and Banderas lurk in the back of your mind.

It seems as if the songs were sung with every intent of making them into music videos, rather than scenes from a film. The first single, "You Must Love Me," culminates in Peron's falling, and Madonna does do a great job on it.

With all the hype, one of the most talented musical performers got lost in the shuffle. Best known as the Engineer in Webber's "Miss Saigon," Jonathan Pryce adds an air of sophistication to the production.

Would Evita be better if they would have stuck to the original idea of casting unknowns? Maybe not — it's hard to say. But this will certainly help a trend in making musicals into films emerge. If Madonna was cast as an Argentine leader, it will only be a matter of time before she tries to play Miss Saigon's Vietnam refugee, Kim. B–

R.E.M. captures their Monster tour with Road Movie

By John Hendrickson
Collegian Correspondent

R.E.M.
Road Movie
Warner Bros.

When R.E.M. announced that they would be touring to support their Monster LP, the anticipation and expectations were feverish. The 1990s had seen the band make the unprecedented leap from being cult heroes to international superstars, and most of their new audience had never seen them perform. Although the resulting Monster tour taught every R.E.M. fan more than they would ever want to know about brain hemmorhages, it was an unqualified success. The peak of the tour was the finale in Atlanta, and these performances were filmed for the release of the new video Road Movie.

With Road Movie, R.E.M. manages to effectively capture the musical and visual excitement of their year-long trek around the globe. Consisting of 19 songs primarily taken from 1991's Out Of Time through this year's New Adventures In Hi-Fi, Road Movie shows that R.E.M. have come to terms with their superstar status after a six-year absence from touring.

Musically, the band has never sounded better. Augmented by guitarists Nathan December and Scott McCaughey, the days of R.E.M.'s murky, Byrds-esque jangle are long gone; bassist Mike Mills and drummer Bill Berry provide a solid foundation for layers of distorted guitars and keyboards. The dynamic vocals of Michael Stipe provide the frosting on this musical cake — effortlessly shifting from a low growl to a perfect falsetto, the artist formerly known as "Mumbles" proves himself as one of today's premier vocalists.

The song selection also captures the excitement and atmosphere of the Monster tour. From the Stonesy raunch of "I Took Your Name" and "The Wake-Up Bomb" to the punk sensibility of "Star 69" and the explosive "Orange Crush," R.E.M. proves they can still rock with utter conviction. However, it is their willingness to experiment which provides the most fascinating moments of the show. The stark acoustic shimmer of "Country Feedback" is chilling, as is the feedback-laden "Let Me In."

Director Peter Care succeeds in creating a visual counterpart to the music itself. Rapid editing coupled with shots from every conceivable angle convey the excitement of the live show, as do the use of background projections aimed above and around the stage. Unlike Tourfilm, which documented 1989's Green tour in artsy black-and-white, Road Movie's vivid color only adds to the dynamic of the music itself.

However, the true star of the show is neither the music nor the production, it is the singer. On the Monster tour, Michael Stipe at once accepts and lampoons his rock-star status. From his Elvis impersonation in "Man On The Moon" to the manic ranting of the show-closing "It's The End Of The World As We Know It (And I Feel Fine)," he plays the role of the consummate showman — yet it is simultaneously impossible to ignore the irony of his Minor Threat t-shirt. An analogy for R.E.M.'s independent roots, they may be playing the major-label game, but they are not compromising themselves in the process.

Although Road Movie tends to edit out Stipe's between- song banter with the audience, and the song selection ignores much of the band's '80s output, it in no way detracts from the power of the musical performances contained within. Road Movie is the ultimate souvenir for those who saw the Monster tour live, a great substitute for those who missed it, and above all, testimony to R.E.M.'s talent and unwavering artistic integrity. A–

Attention all Arts & Living staff members. Elections are quickly approaching for the spring Semester. Please attend Candidates Night on Monday night. Elections are being held on Tuesday. If you have any questions stop by the Collegian or call Mike at 545-1361.

The day that we don't have extra space is the day that you come and write for the Collegian!
545-3500

Auto Glass Center
America's Number 1 Choice
• Same Day Service
• Billed Directly To Insurance Company
• Windshields Replaced
North Amherst Motors
A Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass back roads)

Munchie Madness 3-6 PM MONDAY-FRIDAY
Potato Skins Supreme $4.99 3.50
Nachos 5.75 2.88
Gorgonzola Buffalo Potatoes 6.95 3.48
1/2 PRICE!
Judies
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
http://virtual-valley.com/judies
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491

THEFT OF MEDICAL EXAM FOILED IN S.F.
17-year-old With Nonfunctioning Gun Beaten by Students
By H. K. Lee and C. Bowman, Chronicle Staff Writers
A young masked gunman burst into a room full of students taking a medical exam Saturday in San Francisco and demanded a copy of a test section but was thwarted when several outraged proctors and would-be doctors punched him out, police said yesterday.
Police said the youth grabbed a green folder at the front of the room, disappeared into a bathroom and then re-emerged, cursing. He then confronted a proctor, demanding the Physical Sciences portion of the test. As the proctor fumbled for the test section, the youth may have been careless with his gun—the proctor grabbed it, and suddenly the intruder found himself at gunpoint.
The youth then apparently smacked the proctor in the face. Enraged, at least five proctors and test-takers surrounded the suspect and threw punches at him, drawing blood, witnesses said...
The San Francisco Chronicle, Monday, August 19, 1996
You don't need a gun.
You just need our course
(We've got all the released MCATs, plus 14 more.)
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE DISCOUNT OIL
Northampton / Holyoke
584-4112 • 535-1888
SAME DAY DELIVERY

Jonathan Reid LTD
THE COMPLETE MEN'S STORE
HAMPSHIRE MALL, HADLEY, MA
We Specialize In Dressing Men for Interviews, Banquets or any Casual Outing, with Prices to Fit ANY Budget.
When Appearance Counts, Count on JONATHAN REID LTD.
We Pride Ourselves on Friendly, Professional, and Courteous Service.
Bring in This AD When Purchasing any Suit or Sport Coat and Get 20% OFF ALL Accessories.
exp 12/30/97
Buy 1 Suit & Get 1 Free

EXPERT AUTO BODY REPAIRS, AUTO PAINTING and GLASS REPLACEMENT
MARSHALL STEINBECK
PROFESSIONAL COLLISION WORK
• OVEN BAKED URETHANE FINISHES
• FREE ESTIMATES & CLAIMS ASSISTANCE
• INSURANCE APPROVED GLASS REPLACEMENT
• PROFESSIONAL UNIBODY REPAIR AND FRAME STRAIGHTENING
256-8157 256-1385
53 South Prospect Street, Amherst, Massachusetts

■ Minutewomen

continued from page 10

Press and USA Today\CNN polls. Yuppie hell or not, this "soccer mom phenomenon" is all the rage in the Nutmeg State.

"It's one big family," said Jim Ryan, a Windsor Locks, Conn. resident and devoted Husky fan. "I love everything about it. The fans, the packed house, the television, the excitement."

Saturday's crowd of 9,324 is nothing new in Storrs. Gampel Pavilion was expanded from 8,271 seats to 10,027 seats this summer, in part to accommodate the ticket rush for the Lady Huskies. The men's team plays half of its games at the Hartford Civic Center, making the women's team the featured attraction on campus.

"It's like this every game," said Rene Rodriguez, a 24– year–old UConn student who made the trip from Hartford. "For students it's not so bad [getting tickets], but for the alumni it's hard. You have to know somebody."

Connecticut can also thank the media for its rabid following. The Lady Huskies will have 22 games on television in 1996–97, including a nationally televised CBS clash with Tennessee Jan. 5, and two games on ESPN and ESPN2. The cornerstone of this coverage is a package with Connecticut Public Television, in which CPTV will televise every home game across the state. They also have a radio network that stretches as far south as Danbury.

Not too shabby for a sport struggling for publicity.

"I love Kara \olters," raved Jessice Charest, a 13–year–old hoopster from Colchester. "I've been able to follow [her career] on TV. I watch every game. She's just great."

The Huskies are stars, and rightfully so. Storrs has become a veritable hoop factory of late, churning out such women's hoop legends as Rebecca Lobo and Jennifer Rizotti, now a star for the ABL's New England Blizzard.

Wolters and Nykesha Sales look to continue the trend. Wolters, who dropped in 17 points and 10 rebounds in Saturday's win, is a pre–season first team All American, and Sales, who chipped in 16 points and three steals was tabbed pre–season Big East Player of the Year by the conference coaches. Add to the mix freshman Shea Ralph, last year's USA Today high school Player of the Year, and you have a steamroller that doesn't appear to be stopping anytime soon.

Where do they get all this talent? Our backyard.

Lobo, Wolters and senior co–captain Carla Berube all share one fact: they're from Massachusetts. Lobo broke records left and right at Southwick, and Wolters did the same in Holliston. Auriemma has also inked schoolgirl Brianne Stephenson, a Masconomet junior who has been playing varsity basketball since the seventh grade.

But Massachusetts coach Joenie O'Brien is finally getting some of that Bay State talent to play for the Minutewomen. Freshman Kelly Van Huisen, who has been electrifying in three starts, averaging over 15 points a game, is from Haverhill, and two local recruits recently signed letters of intent to come to Amherst next year. But with the injury to Northampton senior guard Beth Kuzmeski, Van Huisen was the only Massachusetts player to see action for the Minutewomen Saturday.

In four games at Gampel this season, two of which were exhibitions, the Lady Huskies have drawn 33,105 fans. They're 4–0 so far. Maybe those "soccer moms" really are onto something.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist

■ hoop

continued from page 10

execute our offense all that well. We ended up with some good shots and didn't knock them down."

Then, David said, "Not so fast, big guy."

Van Huisen knocked down a trey at the 10:20 mark to cut off the UConn run and stop a seven minute UMass scoring drought that included six Minutewoman turnovers.

Van Huisen's clutch three–pointer lit a fire in the Minutewomen's shoes as UMass went on to outscore the Huskies 21–16 the rest of the first half.

Senior forward Crystal Carroll scored six points in the last 10 minutes of the first half to help bring the Minutewomen to within 10 points at the buzzer, 37–27.

Carroll, who scored her 1000th career point at UMass, had 12 points and a team–high seven rebounds playing the entire forty minutes as UMass struggled with the size, speed and depth of UConn's post players all day.

Fellow senior Sabriya Mitchell had a tough day overall, but also came up big in the Minutewoman rally to end the first half. The diminutive point guard came up with four points, two assists and a steal in the run that clearly had the Huskies and their following frazzled.

"We survived the storm and got ourselves back into the game," O'Brien said. "We were just fighting to survive and do the things we do best."

The Minutewomen were never given a chance to stay in the game as the Huskies came out of the intermission with a 14–3 run that sealed UMass' fate. The Minutewomen made a few mini–runs in the second half, keyed by the aggressive offensive play of Jaywana Bradley (12 points in 32 minutes), but UConn was just too much.

The Connecticut Classic wasn't a total loss for the Minutewomen, as they emerged victorious from consolation land with a 59–48 win over UNLV in the third–place match– up yesterday.

With the win, UMass improved its record to 2–2 before a trip to California to face No. 1 Stanford on Dec. 6.

Carroll led the way for the Minutewomen with 20 points and 10 boards in 39 minutes, as O'Brien again went with a seven–woman rotation. Carroll hit 10–of–12 from the charity stripe, dished out three assists and blocked two shots in the contest.

Freshman guard/forward Alison MacFarland had a solid game off the bench, scoring 14 points and pulling down seven rebounds. She was 2–for–6 beyond the arc.

Attention Hoop Fans!

The Collegian's exclusive basketball preview issue will be on newsstands Thursday, Dec. 5. Check it out for profiles, previews and pictures.

■ volleyball

continued from page 10

for the Massachusetts volleyball program. I can't praise their effort and contributions enough."

Nash was not the only Minutewoman honored by the A–10 coaches' post–season poll. Freshman middle blocker Jill Meyers was selected to the All–Conference team, the only freshman among the ranks, and Kenny was voted Coach of the Year as well.

Meyers chipped in 11 kills and 2 solo blocks in the loss, while leading the team with a .292 hitting percentage. Meyers is just one of the three freshmen players in the line– up for the Minutewomen, who were consistently faced with more experienced opposition throughout their conference schedule.

"Our freshmen played very hard, and made adjustments, they just made freshman mistakes," Kenny said.

The Massachusetts players and the opposing coaches accredit the success of the season to the architect of the program. Kenny has built the Minutewomen from being literally non–existent to being a contender for the league title.

"Bonnie Kenny has done an excellent job with that team in the short time that she's been there," Schneck said. "Starting three freshmen and having only seven or eight players to go to, you go to the well only too often before the well runs dry."

"Coach Kenny's the best coach," Nash said. "No one else was as deserving of the award as she is. No one has done what she has done here."

The team that Kenny has brought up to the level of contender will not falter in the near future. Although graduating decidedly the best player in the conference, the wealth of talent from the underclass ranks among the top in the A–10.

The Minutewoman can look forward to a promising 1997 campaign, led by current juniors Lesley Nolan and Michelle Paciorek. Nolan saw limited action in the closing moments of the second game against R.I., her first on–court appearance since dropping from the line–up with a hairline fracture in her left foot in October.

■ basketball

continued from page 10

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — So how much better is No. 8 Kentucky than its opposition?

About 51 points better, judging by its performance at the Great Alaska Shootout.

In Saturday's championship, the Wildcats manhandled the College of Charleston 92-65, putting six players in double figures to win its third blowout in as many days.

Ron Mercer scored 22 points and Kentucky shot 64 percent from the field in the win over Charleston.

On Thursday they beat No. 12 Syracuse by 34, and Friday topped Alaska Anchorage by 32, for a three-game average margin of 31. The Wildcats never gave the Cougars a glimpse of hope, taking the lead for good 2 1/2 minutes into the game.

Allen Edwards added 17 points and Nazr Mohammed had six rebounds for the defending national champions.

Charleston, which beat No. 21 Stanford to advance to the finals, got a game-high 24 points and five rebounds from Thaddeous Delaney. Stacy Harris added 13 points.

Six Wildcats reached double figures: Anthony Epps had 12, and Jared Prickett, Magloire and Mohammed had 10 each.

The Cougars shot 51 percent, but were just 1-of-9 from 3-point range.

With Kentucky leading 22-20, the Cats ripped off 12 straight points, including seven in 28 seconds.

* * *

No. 5 Villanova 85, Tulane 70

BAYAMON, Puerto Rico (AP) — Tim Thomas and Jason Lawson each scored 21 points yesterday to lead No. 5 Villanova to an 85-70 victory over Tulane and the championship of the Puerto Rico Shootout.

The Wildcats (3-0) were the only unbeaten team in the four-team, round-robin tournament, while Tulane (3-3) finished 1-2.

Lawson, who was 9-for-11 from the field and was named tournament MVP, had 13 points in the first half as Villanova took a 37-30 lead. The Wildcats pulled away in the second half by shooting 70 percent from the field and finished 34-of-56 for the game.

■ hockey

continued from page10

career appearance, playing the final 10:42 and making a pair of saves.

Cahill opened the scoring 2:13 into the game, firing a 30– foot slapper in off the post. Dean Campanale scored on the power play at 13:54, and MacKinnon tallied 34 seconds later to give UMass a 3–0 lead at the first intermission.

UMass scored a pair of pretty goals to take a 5–0 lead by the 12:39 mark in the second. The first came when Dean Campanale fed Fawcett from behind the net, who roofed a shot from the edge of the crease over Kielb's blocker and into the top shelf. Tiger Holland and Rob Bonneau executed a perfect breakout with Air Force in a line–change to send MacKinnon in all alone. A reflection of a more developed game since last year, MacKinnon swiftly deked Kielb on a break away, flipping a forehand over the goalie's right pad.

After Warren Norris made it a 6–0 game on a wrister at 16:31 of the second period, a tremendous individual effort by Justin Kieffer made it a 6–1 game at the end of two. Fore–checking shorthanded, Kieffer stole a pass and put a beautiful back handed shot over Regan's glove that ended up just under the cross bar and will also undoubtedly end up in the Falcon year–end highlight tape.

Mike Gaffney scored 3:43 into the third on a blistering slap shot from the point, and Cahill scored his fourth shorthanded goal in as many games at 11:55 on a low snap shot to give UMass an 8–1 edge.

Entering his senior season with 11 career goals, Cahill has seven thus far in 1996, proving to be one of the team's top surprises. Cahill, who has been particularly effective killing penalties alongside Bonneau, is tied with Bonneau and Fawcett for the team lead in goals. His 10 points in just 12 games ties his career single season high.

Dan Davies scored for the Falcons with four minutes to play when his power play shot deflected in off a UMass defenseman in front of DiLeo, but the Minutemen went on to score two more goals for the 10–2 final.

O'Connell scored his second goal in as many nights on the rebound of a Dean Stork shot at 16:48 and Fawcett struck at 19:39 to close the scoring.

Minuteman Notes: All news was not good for UMass this Thanksgiving weekend though as it was learned that co– captain Tom Perry will be out for an extended period of time, likely into intersession, with a fracture of his left wrist... Recovering from illness, Rich Moriarty was unable to play this weekend but will be healthy for this weekend's games against Providence.

IRON HORSE
SUPER HALL
246 Center St. Northampton
ALL AGES
ALL THE TIME
monday, december 2 • 7 pm • $14
JiM CARROLL
tuesday, december 3 • 10 pm
JOHN FAHEY AND THURSTON MOORE
of sonic youth • $10
wednesday, december 4 • 10 pm
strangefolk
AND DAN BERN
great grooves & renegade folk • $6
thursday, december 5 • 10 pm
SCHLEIGHO & E.D.O.
ignore your finals, come out & dance • $5
friday, december 6 • 10 pm
PERCY HILL
great acoustic rock • $12 saturday, december 7 • 7&10 pm
theNIELDS
great acoustic rock • $12
tuesday, december 10 •
MARSHALL CRENSHAW
thursday, december 12 • 7 pm
BOILED IN LEAD
celto-garage-world-beat • $10
thursday, december 12 • 7 pm
JIGGLE the HANDLE & E.D.O.
ignore your finals, come out & dance • $5
friday, december 13 • 10 pm
yeP! & SNAPPIN' GOMEZ
very funky grooves • $7
MUSIC SEVEN NIGHTS A WEEK
TICKETS At the door & at Record Connection in Amherst at the North street • Box Office hours: M-F 10-6 • Sat 12-5 • Sun 2-5
24-hour Concert info 413 584 0610

Because all-nighters aren't always spent in the library.
VISA
It's everywhere you want to be.
© Visa U.S.A. Inc. 1995

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Women's Long Term Therapy Group Weekly 1 1/2 hr meetings Tuesday night in Amherst For info, call (413)774-5418

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Chinese Food Kei Chi delivering Sunday-Thursday to 2am, Friday and Saturday to 3am

All University Woman invited to Open Rush Sigma Kappa Wed Dec 4, 6:00 to 8:00pm Located behind Initial Call Beth at 549-1462 for more information.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Specious Apartment for rent Jan 1 $525, heat included 1 mile from campus, pets negotiable 549-3620

AUTO FOR SALE

Blue Volsvagen Golf Excellent condition, born in 1990 $3000 negotiable Call Guy 253-7243

1986 Oldsmobile Delta 88- Great car, tow price- $500 Call Chris 549-0564

EMPLOYMENT

CHRISTMAS/JANUARY BREAK

Earn $10 up to $15/start! International firm has 80 local openings. 2-6 week program. All majors considered. Gain business and communication skills Scholarships and summer programs possible. Apply now- Begin after finals. On-campus accepting applications on Monday and Tuesday, December 9 and 10 from 9-1 on the concourse in the Campus Center or call (413)738-3730.

Abt Telephone Research Center seeks candidates for interesting part-time telephone assignments to collect data on a variety of research topics. Absolutely no selling involved. Computer/typing skills required. Flexible hours: Monday-Friday 5pm-11pm, Saturday 11am-5pm, and Sunday 12pm-5pm and 5pm-10pm. Must work a minimum of 20 hours per week. Start at $5.25/hour with paid training and earn up to $7.00/hour. Conveniently located in the new Venture Center with free rides on nearby bus lines. Interested candidates, please call (413)587-1607. An equal opportunity employer

EMPLOYMENT

Spring Break '97! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica and Florida. EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH! Call (800)700-0790

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info. call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses; Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

Packard Bell P60 8MB RAM, 545 MB HD, monitor, multimedia, modem, software, HP Lezer Jet 4 $1600.00 546-7464

FOR SALE

Complete 5 CD Stereo System! 5 band grephic equalizer, duel tape deck and powerful receiver $250 or B/O. Call Greg 546-8811

Seowboard for sale Burton Twin Tip 139 with bindings. $700 or best offer. Call Rosa 6-5538

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guarentaed. $35 (800)776-9503. Doctor Approved

JAZZ BANDS

Jazz Band Needed Experienced or not, Come jam at our party. Will pay Dec. 8th. Call 253-8520

PERSONALS

Congrats to the new sisters of AX: Valeria, Melissa C., Becca, Lauren, Jane, Melisse S., Melenie, Tara, Ellen, Liz, Elysa and Kerla

ROOM FOR RENT

Three females seeking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan. 1-May 31. Rent nagotiable. Call Jess at 253-1797

ROOM FOR RENT

2 Outgoing girls seek person(s) to rent large bedroom in uptown apt Great location, in great condition Start Jan 1. Contact Tricia/LB 549-3649 ASAP

ROOMATE WANTED

Room Available 5 bedroom house in Sunderland on bus route. Call for details 665-8229

Roommates Wanted: Ona or two males to share rent at Brandywine Apts Starts January 1st Call Bryan 549-4591

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

GORILLAGRAMS Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorilla We'll go anywhere, anytime!! Student rates available! Call 256-0287

SERVICES

Money for College. Millions of dollers unclelmed every year. Results guarenteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry Call (413) 538-0041 for more info.

Computer Problems? Need on upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Severs 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amharst area for free tasting and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

Toka over our lease 2/97. Large 2 bedroom apt. 5 min. from campus $600 Call 549-8511

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK TRIPS Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica and Florida. Best prices, best parties. GROUP DISCOUNTS. Space is limited. For a free brochure, CALL TODAY (800)959-4SUN

TRAVEL

Spring Break Americe s Premier Student Travel Col Party in Cancun and Nassau from $299!!! Find out how to go for free and earn extra cash!!! Call (800)798-1509

Spring Break '97 Hottest dastinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guarenteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info. (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinna 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED

Desperate for Bibliographic Material Must have vigorous book list, textbook, workbooks, and problams for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education) Will pay above $150. My phone may have been defactiva in previous weeks. Therefore, please notify by mail. May Deuwson, 67 Amity Piece, Amherst, MA 01002-2255. Don't hesitate, I am correct. Thank you

Weeted- Tutor for AUTO CAD Resleasa13. Will pay Call Rob at 546-0272

WANTED

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment", call Caroline at 546-5269 for more info Identity confidential upon request.

Mettress Weeted QUEEN Call Eugenie 545-3768

PRICE ✧ THURSDAYS ✧

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

P	I	T	H		O	L	A	N	D		M	E	N	U
E	S	A	U		R	U	M	O	R		E	D	I	T
L	I	B	E	R	A	T	O	R	S		D	A	L	E
E	N	S		A	C	E	S			D	A	M	E
			A	L	L	S		K	E	E	L
N	I	B	B	L	E		M	O	D	E	S	T	L	Y
E	M	I	L	Y		B	U	R	G	S		R	O	O
V	A	N	E		D	E	L	A	Y		M	I	N	K
E	G	G		R	I	S	E	N		T	E	P	E	E
R	E	E	N	A	C	T	S		B	O	R	E	R	S
		A	G	E	S		R	I	P	E
	P	E	T	E			T	H	A	I		A	T	O
D	A	L	I		H	O	R	O	S	C	O	P	E	S
I	N	S	O		M	A	U	D	E		H	E	L	L
D	E	A	N		S	T	E	E	D		O	R	E	O

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Stink
6. Lhasa ___ (dog breed)
10. Beast's abode
14. Cost told
15. Young deer
16. Where some work out
17. Sociologist Durkheim
18. Mag or Musketeers, e.g.
19. Harvest
20. As easy as ___
21. Night vision
23. Natives of Oulu
24. Eat between meals
26. Falklands feuder: abbr.
27. Mill: female
28. Actress ___ B. Davis
30. General Bradley
32. ___ Buddhism
35. In a high dudgeon
38. Don't bet ___! (2 wds.)
39. Member of an '80s pop group (2 wds.)
40. Took out
42. Weird
44. Perjured oneself
46. Disturbance
47. Salad ingredient
48. School course: abbr.
49. Prose for Soupy Sales
50. Beatlemania adjective
51. D.C. lobbying gp.
52. Singing syllable
54. ___ the Top (Stallone film)
58. Express grief
61. Honesty
63. All About ___ Eve
64. ___ facto
65. Cheese, in a mousetrap
66. "Out like a lamb" follower
68. Made a knot
69. Restless desire
70. Vulgar one's lack
71. Bessell and Mack
72. Words from Scrooge
73. Perspire

DOWN

1. Purge
2. MIA rescuer of film
3. Narratives
4. Electric
5. Asked for mercy
6. Ten Years ___
7. Model
8. Do the crawl
9. Artist Yoko
10. Kind of soprano
11. Hymn ender
12. Positive thinker's phrase (2 wds.)
13. Sings like Hammer
22. Also-___
23. Cold, in a guessing game
25. Loathed
27. Inventor James
29. Clear profit
31. Moor morning feature
32. "The Twilight ___"
33. Layers' legacies
34. Nays
35. Spin wheels
36. Tackroom item
37. Break ___ ("Good luck") (2 wds.)
38. Garfield's stooge
39. ___ Talks (1984 film)
41. Actor Bogosian
43. NYC building
46. Flightless bird
48. Certain camera shot
50. Suet
51. Nudges
53. Gordon and Roman
55. Powr's output
56. Musical set in Argentina
57. Rent anew
58. Catcher's need
59. Early Ron Howard role
60. ___ car dealer
61. Adieu!
62. Boaters
65. Tuckler's mate
67. Hand, informally

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN

Serving Amherst, Hampshire and Mount Holyoke Colleges Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20

Don't allow a disagreement to fester this week. The longer it lasts, the more the other person will gain the advantage. An early compromise is best. Major purchases require extra attention to details, or you could miss some vital fine print.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21

Now that you've checked out all your options, go ahead and make a decision. Your instincts are pretty good. Don't try to mix business and pleasure this week, or you'll end up feeling shortchanged in both.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21

A reluctant companion threatens to ruin a pleasant outing. Don't force the issue. Instead, change the subject and enjoy a lively conversation. Concentrate on domestic issues by starting a new family tradition.

CANCER
June 22–July 22

A simple conversation turns ugly when egos are at stake. Steer clear of emotional comments to keep things from getting out of hand. Suggest a distraction at work to break out of a stale routine.

LEO
July 23–August 23

An emotional commitment begins to flower, so nourish it with a thoughtful, romantic gesture. Do not mistake silence for assent at work—you may need to work harder to ferret out objections to a plan you've made.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22

A shopping spree could get out of hand this week, so leave your plastic at home. During a meeting or discussion you may need to ask more questions than usual to be certain you understand everything.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23

To feel good, it's important to look good, so treat yourself to a little luxury. Your charm is running high, so schedule activities that will take advantage of this. You might even consider asking for a raise, but be graceful if it doesn't happen.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22

The pressure of a deadline begins to encroach upon your peace of mind. Delegate the responsibility, and you'll accomplish more than you would have alone. Honesty is the best policy, especially when it comes to an intimate relationship.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21

Your organizational talents shine this week, so take on extra responsibilities, especially if you need to make a good impression. You're full of great ideas—just think of a way to get the word out.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20

Don't follow suggestions blindly, especially where large sums of money are concerned. You need to find the solution that's right for you. Enjoy a leisurely outing with an old friend.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18

Anticipation is your best ally as you navigate your way through a simple encounter. Plan ahead, and you'll stay on top of things as the situation suddenly becomes complicated. A labor-saving idea offers more trouble than it's worth.

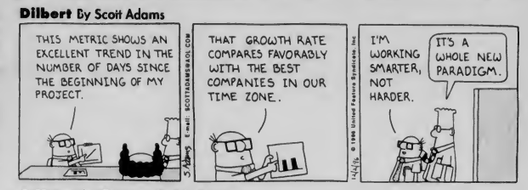
PISCES
February 19–March 20

Avoid getting bogged down in details, especially as the weekend approaches. Your clear vision and enthusiasm will be needed to supply energy for a group discussion.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan



Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

Leold (leold@javanet.com)
by Roger and Salem Salloom ©1996

Usually after my friend Norm leaves my house, I find little notes....

"I was here, Norm."
or
"Norm was here."

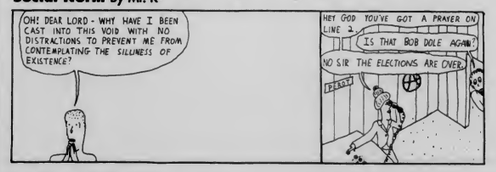
....or things. He usually leaves his famous red hat.

If he stays at my house a long time, I find lots of junk.

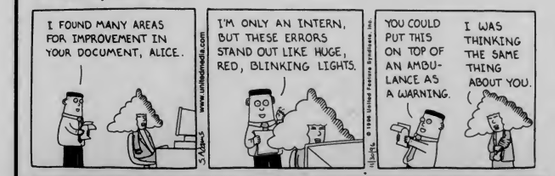
Beeber does it, too... like earrings or gloves.

I think Shakespeare did the same thing....

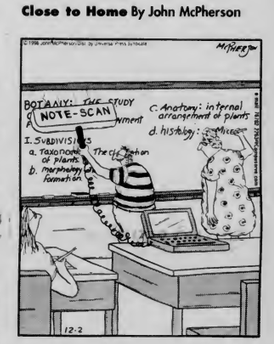
except he only left stuff to read.



University² By Frank Cho



University² By Frank Cho



Social Norm By Mr. K-

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Close to Home By John McPherson

Quote of the Day

"Your overconfidence is your weakness."

–Luke Skywalker

Quote of the Night

"I had a great idea this morning, but I didn't like it."

–Samuel Goldwyn

Today's Staff

Chris Conner
Night Editor

Lisa Oliveri
Copy Editor

Lauren Kosky
Photo Technician

Lorraine Urbanski
Production Supervisor

Sandra Krauss
Chris Lavin
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH	DINNER
Chicken Pucks	Roast Beef
Turkey Tetrazzini	Spaghetti w/ Sausage
Philly Cheese Steak Sandwich	Tofu Balls & Sauce
	Quarter Pound Burger

Hampshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Hamburger on a Roll	Roast Beef
Chicken Pucks	Spaghetti w/ Sausage
Turkey Tetrazzini

Worcester

LUNCH	DINNER
Grilled Cheese Sandwich	Roast Beef
Grilled Ham & Cheese	Black Eyed Peas
Spaghetti w/ Sauce	Vegan Falafel Sandwich
Hearty Latin Stew	Pastabilities

Berkshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Grilled Cheese Sandwich	Roast Beef
Grilled Ham & Cheese	Shrimp Jambalaya
Spaghetti w/ Sauce	Black Eyed Peas
Wheatball Grinder	Vegan Falafel Sandwich

SportsWeekend

Inside this issue:

- The Massachusetts volleyball team lost to Rhode Island in the semifinal of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. See page 10 for the details.
- For o wrap-up of A-10 men's basketball action, check out page 10.
- More major college hoop news is at your fingertips. Page 10 has the news.
- For the AP Top 25 men's basketball poll, pick up tomorrow's Collegian.

UMass falls flat in Maui, Xavier knocks off Cincy and Tech 'Kouls' off GW

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The Maui Invitational was not kind to the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

After defeating Chaminade, a Div. II school that plays in the Invitational solely because it hosts the tournament, in the opening round, the Minutemen fell victim to Virginia in the second round.

The downward trend continued on Wednesday, when UMass' effort against California fell short. The Golden Bears downed the Minutemen 59-55, relegating them to fourth place in the Invitational.

Carmelo Travieso led the Minutemen with 19 points, while forward Tyrone Weeks chipped in for 14. Edgar Padilla had six points in the contest.

Padilla and Travieso recorded four steals and one block apiece, with point guard Padilla dishing out six assists and Travieso handing out five.

Winston Smith was the only other Minuteman in double figures, as he contributed 10 points.

• • •

For the past three years it has been the custom of an Atlantic 10 school (notably UMass) to knock off the nation's top-ranked team.

Chalk up another yearly win for the A-10, and give the credit to second-year member Xavier.

The Musketeers gave a stellar performance in beating No. 1 Cincinnati, 71-69.

A-10 Player of the Week Lenny Brown led Xavier, as he notched 19 points, including the game-winning 15-footer at the buzzer. The 6-foot-2 guard also pulled down four rebounds and connected for a block.

James Posey, a candidate for A-10 Rookie of the Week, was the team's second leading scorer in the Cincy game with 14 points, 11 boards, a block and a steal.

• • •

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anyone thinking Texas Tech's best-ever season was a fluke had better think again.

Having lost four starters from last year's 30-2 team that reached the NCAA tournament's Sweet Sixteen, the Red Raiders shot 58 percent and took control of the game with a 15-6 run at the start the second half in an 84-75 upset of No. 25 George Washington on Saturday night.

The defeat snapped a 14-game home winning streak for the Colonials (3-1).

Alexander Koul scored 28 points and had 11 rebounds to lead George Washington, but the 7-foot-1 center was stymied by Red Raider man-in-the-middle Tony Battie during the early second-half run. Koul also had little help from his teammates as GW's halfcourt offense became ragged in the second half.

Point guard Shwanta Rogers was just 2-for-13 from the field and finished with 11 points.

• • •

In other Top 25 action yesterday, No. 2 Kansas edged San Diego, 79-72; No. 3 Wake Forest pounded Richmond, 80-55; No. 5 Villanova downed Tulane, 85-70; and Iowa State crushed Maryland-Eastern Shore, 82-62.

Material from the Associated Press was used in this article.

Huskies prove too much for Minutewomen

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

STORRS, Conn. — Apparently, Goliath has gotten sick and tired of David stealing all the press when the two combatants meet.

So, Goliath (No. 5 Connecticut) stuck it to David (a skeletal crew of Massachusetts Minutewomen), 67-50 in front of 9,324 women's basketball fans at Harry A. Gampel Pavillion on Saturday for the first round of the Hartford Courant Connecticut Classic.

UConn advanced to the finals, while UMass was relegated to the consolation match against Nevada-Las Vegas.

The injury-ravaged and youthful Minutewoman line-up fought gallantly for the better part of its forty minutes on the national stage holding the Huskies (4-0) to their lowest offensive output of the season.

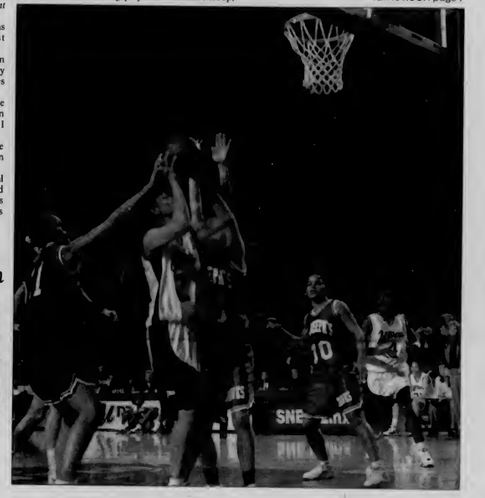
"They were pretty gutsy," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "Obviously, our numbers (seven healthy Minutewomen) were a little short, so I thought the kids played hard."

UMass (1-2) won the opening tip and scored the game's first two points on a pair of Kelly Van Huisen free throws.

The freshman point guard again played an integral part in whatever success the Minutewomen found Saturday, but her eight turnovers offset her five steals and two assists. Van Huisen finished with 12 points and five rebounds before fouling out.

CONNECTICUT	67
MASSACHUSETTS	50

The Minutewoman advantage was short-lived as UConn's Nykesha Sales came up with two consecutive steals and ensuing breakaway lay-ups giving the Huskies a 4-2 lead.



UMass countered with a pair of buckets to take the lead back at 6-4.

That's when Goliath said, "Sorry Dave, not today."

After a Massachusetts turnover, Kara Wolters, one of the most dominating players in women's hoop, scored her first bucket on a baby hook shot. Wolters' first of eight field goals on the afternoon (17 points, 10 rebounds, 5 blocks) opened the floodgates for a 17-0 UConn run that pushed the score to 21-6 with just over nine minutes into the first half.

"They came out gunnin'," O'Brien said. "I don't know if we were nervous, if we were scared, but we didn't really

Turn to HOOP, page 7

EMILY RILEY / COLLEGIAN

Crystal Carroll led the Minutewomen in two weekend games at UConn. UMass fell to the Huskies and beat UNLV.

Lady Huskies a model women's hoop program

Luke Meredith

STORRS, Conn. — Usually the women's basketball program at a big-time school is not on the same level as the men's team. Less funding, smaller gyms, no television exposure and measly crowds are the norm for most of the lady hoop squads in America.

And then there's Connecticut.

Our neighbors 70 miles down I-91 have something special going on. Largely the province of the Perrier and Volvo crowd, Lady Husky hoop is a religion, and quite possibly bigger than Jim Calhoun's vaunted men's team.

Head coach Geno Auriemma's crew fills the Harry A. Gampel Pavillion, Connecticut's on-campus arena, on a nightly basis, and the UConn faithful are just as vocal as any Top 25 men's crowds. The Huskies are 57-1 since 1993 in Gampel, and currently rest at the No. 3 slot in both the Associated

Turn to MINUTEWOMEN, page 7

Hockey downs Air Force during break

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

After defeating Army 8-0 last Friday and Air Force by 10- 2 and 4-1 scores this past weekend, its safe to say that if the United States is invaded, Amherst might be the first town to go. The Massachusetts hockey team (5-7) has not made too many friends in the Pentagon lately.

The two wins over the Falcons, which many fans mercifully stayed away from, were tremendously lopsided. It is admittedly hard for Air Force to compete when coach Chuck Delich is not allowed to recruit Canadians, but the games this weekend were like watching the lovable dimwits at Cheers bar trying to out-practical joke Gary's Olde Towne Tavern or Sandra Bernhard winning a beauty pageant over Jenny McCarthy.

MASSACHUSETTS	4
AIR FORCE	1

It just is not going to happen.

UMass steamrolled to a pair of wins this weekend over a tremendously overmatched team. The victories were less stunning than flipping around a radio dial today and not hearing either "Don't Speak" by No Doubt or "Head Over Feet" by Alanis Morissette.

Friday night, UMass charged out of the gates, scoring thrice in the opening 11:31, and putting it into cruise control from there, breezing to a 4-1 victory.

Warren Norris, Gerry Cahill, Dan Juden and Keith O'Connell tallied for UMass in Friday's contest, as the Minutemen outshot the Falcons by a 37-18 margin, keeping impressive freshman Aaron Ratfield busy in the Falcon net.

Saturday night UMass again charged out of the gates, scoring thrice in the opening 14:27, but did not relax like the night before, powering ahead to a 10-2 final. The 10 goals is the most UMass has scored in a game against a Division I opponent, and the most overall since drubbing Division III North Adams State 12-1 on Feb. 22, 1994.

MASSACHUSETTS	10
AIR FORCE	2

Seven different Minutemen scored goals and 13 recorded points in the onslaught. Cahill, Chris Fawcett and Steve MacKinnon scored twice. UMass took 41 shots against Falcon goaltender Pat Kielb, the often-lit red goal light behind him undoubtedly making him feel like a kielbasa.

A night after making 17 saves in going the distance for the win, Brian Regan played the first 49:18 and made 16 saves in the UMass net. Freshman Dan DiLeo made his first

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Brad Norton and the UMass hockey team beat up on the Air Force Academy this weekend, taking a pair of games from the Falcons.

Wake, Wildcats score wins
Weekend boosts WF, UK, Nova

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — After beating the likes of The Citadel, VMI and Davidson, Wake Forest coach Dave Odom challenged his team to make a special effort against Richmond.

Tim Duncan was listening.

The senior center scored 14 points, grabbed 18 rebounds, blocked five shots and demoralized the Richmond defense with his passing yesterday as the third-ranked Demon Deacons beat the Spiders 80-55.

Duncan opened the game by rejecting Richmond's first shot en route to his 13th consecutive "double-double" and the 62nd of his career.

Wake Forest (4-0) held Richmond (1-2) to 34 percent shooting from the field, the fourth team this season to shoot less than 40 percent against the Demon Deacons.

Jerry Braswell led Wake Forest with 16 points, while Ricky Peral added 15 and Sean Allen and Loren Woods had 10 each.

Trailing 44-22 at halftime, Richmond started the second half with a 9-2 run, cutting the lead to 46-31 with 17:32 left, the first time the lead was under 20 since the 4:18 mark of the first half.

The Demon Deacons responded with a 9-4 run to get the lead back to 55-35 with 14:55 left and the Spiders never again challenged. Richmond had some success running the break to open the second half, but Wake Forest quickly shut down the Spiders by reasserting its dominance on the boards. Wake Forest had a 50-28 rebounding advantage.

Woods, a 7-foot-1 freshman, had nine rebounds and four blocks. With 8:52 remaining, Duncan got the ball at the top of the key and promptly hit a 3-pointer, his first of the season.

• • •

No. 8 Kentucky 92, College of Charleston 65

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 7

Volleyball falls to Rhode Island in the A-10s

By Jeremy R. Adams
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — The season of giving may be just beginning for much of the world, but for the Massachusetts volleyball team, its season of giving 110 percent has come to an end.

Friday night at the Atlantic 10 Tournament, the Minutewomen bowed to Rhode Island, ending an important era in Massachusetts volleyball. The first four years since the reinstatement of the program have drawn to a close, and the first class of the new program can take pride in what it's worked hard to build.

RHODE ISLAND	3
MASSACHUSETTS	0

"I think we overachieved all season long," UMass coach Bonnie Kenny said. "We did as well as we could this year. Our goal was to make it here, and I couldn't ask them to play any harder than they did."

This season the Minutewomen played with the grit and determination of teams believed to be far more talented or experienced than itself, and beat many of those teams along the way to an A-10 Tournament berth.

"[The Minutewomen] scrapped all year long," Rhode Island coach Bob Schneck said. "They're without a doubt the best defensive team in the conference."

Schneck's team, the host and top seed of the tournament (30-6, 19-1 A-10), was neither able nor willing to accommodate the championship hopes of the upset-minded Massachusetts squad (28-9, 15-5 A-10). The Rams defended their territory mercilessly on Friday night, beating the No. 4- seeded Minutewomen in three games, 15-13, 15-3, 15-5.

"They fought right to the end," Schneck said. "They're much more capable than they showed in the last couple games, but the intensity was there."

The Minutewomen were led once again by their captain and 1996 A-10 Conference Player of the Year Dionne Nash. Nash earned 13 kills and 10 digs in the last match of her collegiate career. The outside hitter will graduate with a degree in communications and 12 school volleyball records, including being the first Minutewomen to accrue both 1000 kills and 1000 digs in her career.

"Dionne is the epitome of what a student athlete should stand for," Kenny said. "On and off the court she would win that award hands down, any coach would vote for her.

"[Nash and senior Susan Maga] have done so much

Turn to VOLLEYBALL, page 7

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue xx • New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 • Tuesday, December 3, 1996

UMass Basketball: no longer Top 25

Winston Smith and the UMass men's hoop team dropped out of the national ranking. Check out the latest poll (See Sports, page 10).

Rollins fills F.A.C. with testerone filled humor

Punk rock's leading voice (in his eyes), Henry Rollins stormed onto campus last night but left few impressions. Check out our review (See Arts & Living, page 5).

WORLD

Mother Teresa in bad condition; showing signs of recovery

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Mother Teresa was in critical condition and using an oxygen mask yesterday, but the 86-year-old nun showed signs of recovery as she sat in a chair reading a Bible, the hospital said.

Doctors were worried about the condition of her kidneys and lungs following a heart attack and an angioplasty, but still were optimistic that the nun would recover enough to return to her work of caring for the poor.

"I am very hopeful and I am sure Mother will survive," said Dr. Patricia Aubanel, one of seven doctors treating her, but added that her kidneys were not working well because her heart had been malfunctioning for several months.

The hospital switchboard was jammed all afternoon after rumors swept Calcutta that Mother Teresa had died, said Dr. Devi Shetty, chief cardiosurgeon at the B.M. Birla Research Center where doctors performed an angioplasty last week to improve blood flow to the Roman Catholic nun's heart.

NATION

White couple gets two years for shooting at nine-year old

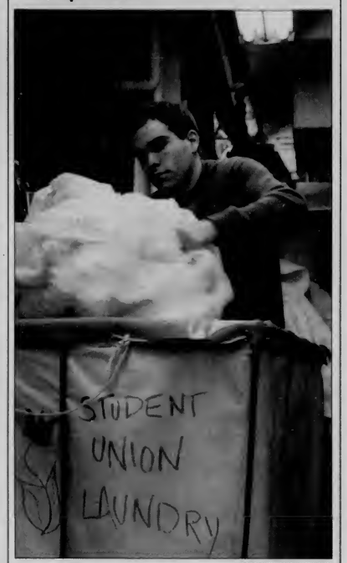
MANNING, S.C. (AP) — A white couple who tied a 9-year-old black boy to a tree and fired a shotgun past his face received a two-year prison sentence Monday.

The boy and his parents said they thought the sentence handed to Benjamin and Betty Mims was too lenient.

"I think they should have had more, five to 10 years," said Dwight Miller, who now is 10. "What they did to me was wrong." The Mimses could have received up to 10 years for aggravated assault and battery. They were acquitted Nov. 22 on another charge, second-degree lynching, the state's term for mob violence. They could be eligible for parole in six to eight months, prosecutors estimated.

Dwight said the Mimses tied him to a tree, beat him and fired a shotgun at him Jan. 5 after accusing him of stealing from a truck. The boy, who lives across the road in the rural New Zion community, said he had come over to play with the couple's 9-year-old son and 13-year-old niece, but that the children also turned on him.

The boy said that Mims and his son Benji both fired the shotgun past his face.



EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Wed.	Thursday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 25	HIGH: 35 LOW: 25	HIGH: 40 LOW: 30

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics .....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 10

Ah, April fresh!

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT-COLLEGIAN

John Carroll, 20, a Junior Astrology major, has helped clean UMass' dirty laundry for the last eight months.

Clinton admits receiving letter; denies its influence on policies

By Marcy Gordon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton acknowledged Monday that he received a letter in 1993 from an Indonesian tycoon whose family had contributed to Clinton and the Democrats, urging him to normalize relations with Vietnam. Clinton called it a "straightforward policy letter."

Republicans demanded immediate release of the three-page letter from Mochtar Riady. Clinton pledged to provide it to congressional investigators, but did not say when.

Although White House officials had the letter in their possession before the Nov. 5 election, they did not release it. Asked why, presidential spokesman Michael McCurry told reporters, "I think we never formally disputed the notion that there was such a piece of correspondence from Mr. Mochtar Riady, but... we did not elect to make piecemeal disclosures of any correspondence... until we had more of the record available." McCurry confirmed a Wall Street Journal report that Riady's letter pressed Clinton to normalize relations with Vietnam. Riady confided that two of his company's managers were in Vietnam scouting investment opportunities.

Clinton suggested there was nothing unusual about the letter. "It's a letter like tens of thousands of other letters I get of people suggesting — every day I get, I suppose, hundreds every day, suggesting what our policy ought to be in various areas," the President said while posing for photographers with astronaut Shannon Lucid.

Later, at a lengthy news briefing dominated by the issue of Riady's letter, McCurry would not say whether it would be released this week.

Riady's family owns the Lippo Group banking and real estate conglomerate based in Indonesia and Hong Kong, which is at the center of the controversy over foreign-linked campaign contributions to the Democrats.

Republican congressional investigators have questioned whether the Riadys and Lippo were given preferential treatment or allowed to influence U.S. policy toward Asia in return for the millions their associates donated or helped raise for the Democratic Party and Clinton.

Israeli fear for future after the recent rise in imported workers

By Dan Perry
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — It's a balmy fall afternoon in south Tel Aviv. Romanian construction workers drink cheap beer. Africans stroll toward a basement church. Polish laborers watch a TV broadcast from Warsaw.

The bustling neighborhood of Neve Sha'anan, around an abandoned bus station, has become a symbol of a new wave of foreigners sinking roots in the holy land, much to the dismay of many Israelis.

The foreigners bring with them a variety of tastes, ethnicities and religions. And in nation built on immigration — by Jews, that is — the non-Jewish influx has prompted proposals for a mass expulsion.

Yossi Unger, for one, is none too happy with his new, non-Jewish neighbors. "Look at these East Europeans, drinking barrels of beer and urinating on the sidewalk," sniffed Unger, a Neve Sha'anan resident who himself immigrated from Hungary after World War II. The worst thing, Unger said, was foreigners like his Indian neighbor establishing pre-schools for Israelis and "educating our children in a different culture."

The first wave of foreigners came three years ago as contract laborers. The government accepted them as replacements for Palestinians unable to travel to jobs in Israel after the West Bank and Gaza Strip were sealed off to prevent terrorist attacks. As Israel's economy grew, other foreigners came as tourists and stayed illegally to work as nannies and housecleaners. Now, many are bringing their families.

By Labor Ministry estimates, there are 300,000 foreign workers from Eastern Europe, Asia, Africa and South America living in Israel. Two-thirds have overstayed visas and are here illegally. The foreigners complain of discrimination and abuse by employers who pay low wages and house them in rat-infested hovels, sometimes eight to a room. Nevertheless, many see Israel as a land of opportunity.

"In my village it is impossible to achieve anything legally, unless you go to work in a rich country," said Andy Okeke, 28, who arrived two years ago from Nigeria as a tourist and stayed after his visa expired.

Students given on-campus vote; limited to Southwest & Greeks

By Beth McCarthy
Collegian Staff

After 20 years, students at the University of Massachusetts will be able to vote on campus as of Jan. 1, 1997.

In a unanimous decision, the Amherst Selectboard agreed last night to allow for voting substations in the Hampden Dining Commons for residents of Southwest Residential Area.

"It's been 20 years coming," said Director for Commuter Services Joanne Levenson, who has been working toward this goal since its beginning. "We should feel good."

"It was a long time coming," Maurice Caston, President of the SGA agreed. "More than anything, it was a result of a lot of hard work and the town buying into the support of students."

The only concern that the Selectboard had was the potential problem of getting the necessary personnel to run these stations.

Brian McCarthy, a junior at UMass as well as a member of precinct 10, said in response, "I can assure you this will not be a problem."

It was also mentioned during the town meeting that the election coordinator, chosen by the University and SGA, will ideally handle the overseeing of staff during election times.

According to Caston, the original proposal that was brought to the Selectboard, which attempted to include all UMass students in the use of these substations, was rejected.

What the town has agreed on is the placement of substations for precincts 4 and 10, which includes the Southwest residential area and the fraternities and sororities of N. Pleasant St., in the Hampden Dining Commons.

"Southwest voters actually had to cross precinct lines," explained Caston, "In precincts 4 and 10, a majority of the voters are students."

The permission to have these voting substations comes with virtually no cost to the town.

The University will be responsible for providing funds for the various costs that are involved with running polling stations like paying the workers, buying the necessary equipment, moving and storing the equipment and anything else that may arise.

The project will have a trial period of two years, running from Jan. 1, 1997 to Dec. 31, 1998. At the end of these two years, the town will decide on whether to continue the project and whether it can be "extended and expanded," depending on UMass' providing substantial voters, poll workers and complying with federal and state regulations.

"If they [town of Amherst] stick to the parameters they set, then we're going to be safe," said Tirrell, who said he was confident that UMass students will be able to meet the requirements placed upon them. "We'd be satisfied if 120 students voted."

Hill Boss, an Amherst Selectboard member, however, said that even though he is supportive of the voting stations he is concerned for student turnout.

"I think anything that encourages participation in a democratic system by students is desirable," Boss said. "I have serious doubts as to if it will work, but I think it should definitely be given a chance."

Caston said that "we're providing students with access" and the rest is going to be up to the students.

With another large election coming up in 1998, the students will really be tested.

"If students don't vote now, when will they?" asked Caston. "There's really no excuse for not voting now."

Efforts were made by a number of various sources including Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Tom Robinson, the chief of Amherst police and the UMass Student Government Association (SGA).

World AIDS day observed at UM

Many varied activities will continue to bring attention to disease

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

At the University of Massachusetts and around the world, people took time to observe World AIDS Day this past Sunday, according to AIDS CARE/Hampshire County, an area organization devoted to serving people living with AIDS.

The day created by the World Health Organization in 1988 is an annual day of celebration to draw attention to the world-wide spread of AIDS and to galvanize the coordinated efforts to fight the disease.

According to a fact sheet provided by the AIDS Action Committee of Massachusetts, Inc., "... AIDS is now the leading cause of death of all Americans aged 25-44. In the last year alone, more than 50,000 Americans have been newly diagnosed with AIDS."

In addition to the annual day of celebration, AIDS CARE/Hampshire County has organized a variety of activities that will be held locally in the next few weeks to acknowledge the day, remember victims of the disease and increase general awareness of the disease's debilitating and life-shattering effects.

On Dec. 6 at 5 p.m. there will be a candlelight walk beginning at the Student Union, continuing down North Pleasant Street and onto Main Street and will end at the First Congregational Church in Amherst.

At 6 p.m., an event will be held at the Church titled "Gathering of Remembrance and Hope." The event will include speeches made by a person with HIV and local leaders including Rev. Victoria Safford of the Unitarian Society of Northampton.

The event will also include performances by the Pioneer Valley Gay Men's Choir, the Sappho-nics and people in attendance will be allowed to read the names of persons lost to AIDS, according to the press release.

AIDS Care/Hampshire County, one of the organizations sponsoring the event, which was established in 1991, provides services such as case management, support groups and transportation to both people infected with the HIV virus and people living with AIDS and their families.

According to a press release, the group's work has benefited more than 135 people since its creation.

According to the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, the state has the 10th highest amount of AIDS cases in the United States, with Boston ranking 11th among American cities.

Nationally, the United States Center for Disease Control and prevention estimates that between 650,000 and 900,000 people in the United States are infected with HIV.

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Clear Opening

The clouds above the First Congregational Church of Sunderland saw a glimpse of clear sky yesterday.

For Your Information

PIPs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Tuesday, Nov. 3

Colloquium — Leslie Bender, a Five College Women's Studies Research Associate from the Syracuse University College of Law, will give a colloquium entitled "Legal Challenges to Social Injustice: How Women Can Use Tort Law to Continue Feminist Struggle" at 7:30 p.m. in the Dickinson House Living Room at Mount Holyoke College.

Film — The Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies and the Judaic and Near East Studies Dept. at UMass sponsor a showing of the Crown Sephira production "If You Make It Possible: Portraits of Middle East Peacemakers." For more information, contact Adi Bemak at 582–5519.

Info Social — An info–social, sponsored by the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Alliance, will be held at 6 p.m. in Campus Center room 803.

Meeting — Club Communication will hold a meeting at 6 p.m. in Machmer W–22. Angela Santiago from Employment Options will speak about job referral opportunities.

Wednesday, Dec. 4

Craft Fair — A Holiday Craft Fair, sponsored by the Student Union Craft Center will be held from 9 a.m.– 4 p.m. at the Campus Center Concourse.

Discussion — Religion and Identity Series presents a discussion on "What distinctions can be made between religion and spirituality? How do these distinctions impact the way in which 'religious people' and 'spiritual people' relater to each other?" at 7:30 p.m. in Butterfield main lounge. All are invited to attend. Call 546–5174.

Film — A screening of "Fires in the Mirror" will take place at 3:30 p.m. in the Hillel House Recreation Room. The Jewish film class invites all to watch the film.

Meeting — The Student Health Advisory Board (SHAB) will hold its last meeting of the semester in room 304 of UHS from 5:30–6:30 p.m. All are invited to attend.

Poetry — The UMass Poetry Society will have its meeting in Campus Center room 804 at 7:30 p.m. For more information, contact Tim at 546–0562.

Thursday, Dec. 5

Performance — University Dancers will perform Thurs. Dec. 5 through Sat. Dec. 7 at Bowker Auditorium. Reservations may be made by calling 545–2511. Tickets are $7/general admission, $4/students, and $2/seniors and children. UMass students free. Reservations are recommended.

Test Taking Workshop — A workshop, offered by the Learning Resources Center from 3:30–5 p.m. on the 10th Floor of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. Free. Call 545–5334 to register.

Notices

AIDS Day — UMass is participating in the global observance of World AIDS Day which will take place through Dec. 6. You can get HIV/AIDS information and a red ribbon to pin on yourself or on our "Remembrance Tree" at the Campus Center Concourse table each day. Visit the Faces of AIDS art display and the Five College AIDS Quilt at Earthfoods. Watch "Boys on the Side" on HSCN. Activities will culminate with a candlelight vigil on the Student Union steps at 5 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 6 and a march to the First Congregational Church on Main St. in Amherst for a gathering of Remembrance and Hope. Refreshments will be served. After that, there will be a poetry/prose reading followed by an open mike at 8 p.m. at Claudia's Cafe. For more information, contact Health Education at 577–5181.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584–8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly Delesus at 546–1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Financial aid workshops — Financial Aid Exchange workshops will be held on Tuesday Dec. 3 from 5:30–7 p.m. in CC room 165–169.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach international team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 5 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

Menorah Lighting — All are welcome to attend the lighting of the 6–foot menorah in front of the Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at the following times: Thurs. Dec. 5 at 5 p.m.; Fri. Dec. 6 at 4 p.m.; Sat. Dec. 7 at 6 p.m.; Sun. Dec. 8 time TBA; Mon. Dec. 9 at 7 p.m.; Tues. Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.; Wed. Dec. 11 at 8:30 p.m.; Thurs. Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy, and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Campus Police Log

Alarm — Fire

Dec. 1
Environmental Health & Services extinguished a trash can fire outside of Lederle Research Building.

Annoying Behavior

Dec. 1
Unruly individuals were reported outside of the Campus Center.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering

Nov. 25
Two individuals from Coolidge Residence Hall reported that cash and credit cards were stolen from their room.

Nov. 27
A truck cap was broken into on University Drive and a compound bow was stolen from the truck bed.

Nov. 29
Staff from the Agricultural Engineering Building reported that an individual entered the building through a window. The building was checked and secured.

Dec. 1
A vehicle was broken into in parking lot 13. A CD player was stolen.

Disturbance

Nov. 25
Problems with an individual at the WMUA radio station in the Campus Center were reported.

Nov. 27
An individual refused to get off a bus on Presidents Drive.

Health/Safety Hazard

Nov. 27
Environmental Health & Services responded to a report of an alarm from the storage tank area of Hasbrouck Laboratory.

Nov. 30
There was a water leak in a room in Goessman Laboratory. Maintenance crew responded.
Environmental Health & Services responded to a lab alarm sounding in Paige Laboratory.

Dec. 1
An alarm sounded in Thayer Laboratory due to rainy weather.

Larceny

Nov. 25
An individual from Kennedy Residence Hall reported that money was stolen from his room.
A walkman was reported stolen from Cashin Residence Hall.

Nov. 26
An individual from John Adams Residence Hall reported a laptop computer was stolen from a lounge.

Dec. 1
An individual in Cance Residence Hall reported that his jacket was stolen.
An individual in Gorman Residence Hall reported that 100 CDs were stolen from a room.

Vandalism

Nov. 25
Construction equipment was damaged at Marshall Hall.
Homophobic graffiti was written on two posters in the lobby of Baker Residence Hall.
A vehicle in parking lot 12 was damaged.
A vending machine was damaged in Butterfield Residence Hall.
A rock was thrown at a window of Moore Residence Hall.
Two tires were stolen from a vehicle in parking lot 22.

Nov. 27
A window was smashed on a vehicle in parking lot 13.

Dec. 1
A window was smashed on a vehicle in parking lot 13.

COLLEGIAN NOW HIRING!!

The Collegian news department is currently excepting applications for Associate News Editors for Spring, 1997. These paid positions offer interested students extensive writing experience. Associates typically cover the most pressing stories and issues occuring on-campus, within the state and throughout the country. Interested applicants should contact Michael Elliott or Chris Conner at 545-1851, or drop by the Collegian office to pick up a application at 113 Campus Center basement.

Graduate Student Professional Development Day

Tomorrow
8:30am -- 4:30pm
Campus Center Auditorium

You are invited to a day of workshops designed to help graduate students springboard into their careers.

Topics covered include:
Networking
Transferable Skills
Academe Job Searches
Non-Academe Job Searches
& Informational Tables

Attend all day or just one session... This is a day you won't want to miss!!

Call the Graduate Dean's Office at 545-5271 for more information
Sponsored by the Graduate Dean's Office and the University Career Center

ARE YOU COMMITTED TO SOCIAL CHANGE?

ARE YOU A RISK TAKER WITH THE ABILITY TO GET THINGS DONE?

The echoing green Foundation's Public Service Fellowship for undergraduates may be right for you!!!
The fellowship provides up to $15,000 for one year!!

Social entrepreneurs with ENERGY, TALENT, and COMMITMENT are encouraged to attend our

INFORMATION SESSION

Wednesday, December 4th
7:00 pm

Campus Center 805-809

For more information contact the COMMUNITY SERVICE PROGRAM
at 545-3368

Family survives crash while returning home

By David Kinney
Associated Press

LONG POND, Pa. — In the pouring rain and icy cold, hundreds of rescuers scoured the Pocono Mountains, searching through the night for a small plane that disappeared after the pilot said he was low on fuel.

By 4 a.m., it was so foggy that searchers couldn't see a few feet in front of them and the search was suspended. They'd been so close that the family that survived the crash heard the rescuers and shouted in vain.

Rescuers returned in daylight and found the couple and their two small children in the wreckage, where they had been huddling under a blanket for 16 hours.

"Four lucky people," said Harry Robidoux, emergency services director for Monroe County, who amassed a search corps of about 300 people from 13 fire companies and 19 other police and emergency agencies.

The family had been flying home to Milford, N.J. on Saturday after visiting relatives near Montague. Gary Knapp, a 13-year veteran pilot for Continental Airlines, was at the controls of the tiny Cherokee Archer.

His wife, Marie, and their two daughters, 5-year-old Annie and 2-year-old Isa, filled the other three seats. They brought children's cassettes to pass the time, a couple bags of Sun Chips and grapefruits for snacking.

Around 5:30 p.m., he called the tower at the Lehigh Valley International Airport, about 30 miles away. He said he was low on fuel, just four gallons in each tank. Was there somewhere closer he could land and gas up? Air traffic directed him to an airport in Pocono, just a few miles away.

He didn't make it through the fog, wind and rain.

"We're still working on why," said Bob Hancock, an investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board. It was unclear why the plane had so little fuel.

Trees sheared off both wings and the landing gear as the plane crashed to the ground. It collided head-on with a foot-thick oak tree, mangling the propeller and engine and shattering the front windshield.

Miraculously, the passenger compartment was mostly intact and everyone escaped without life-threatening injuries. Knapp, 41, suffered cuts and bruises; his wife Marie, a 35-year-old former flight attendant, had a broken arm; one child had a minor skull fracture.

But they knew better than to leave the plane. Instead, Knapp activated an emergency beacon, which rescue crews and a U.S. Air Force satellite picked up. He scouted the area, and set up a cooler to catch rainwater.

And for 16 hours, they waited for help, singing songs to keep their minds off the cold.

Because of the weather, rescuers couldn't use aircraft, Robidoux said. Using all-terrain vehicles and equipment that picked up Knapp's beacon, they scoured the surrounding mountains, gullies, woods and swampland grid by grid.

Forty searchers had to be treated for exposure. Another went to the hospital with hypothermia.

When the family was found Sunday morning, "It was just absolute euphoria among the searchers," Robidoux said. "You saw a lot of hard and grown firemen with tears on their cheeks."

The rescue crews carried the family out on stretchers through two lines of cheering firemen. The family remained hospitalized yesterday in stable condition at the Pocono Medical Center and declined requests for interviews.

But on their way out of the forest, Annie's priorities were clear.

"All I want is to get some pizza," she kept saying.

Africa regional association seeks more U.N. candidates

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — In a blow to Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, the president of Africa's regional association is urging Africans to submit candidates for the top U.N. job because of U.S. opposition to the Egyptian incumbent.

The call by Cameroon President Paul Biya, president of the Organization of African Unity, appeared to break a standoff that followed the U.S. veto of Boutros-Ghali's candidacy in the Security Council on Nov. 19.

The OAU endorsed Boutros-Ghali for a second, five-year term at its July summit in Cameroon. African envoys repeatedly have told the Security Council that because of that endorsement they could not nominate other candidates.

In a letter sent to fellow African heads of state, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press yesterday, Biya noted that the OAU endorsement had failed to convince the United States to drop its opposition to Boutros-Ghali.

Biya said council members "appear favorable to the principle of a second mandate for Africa" in the post. In order keep an African in the top job, Biya said in the letter, which was sent Friday, that it was time for African states to submit "other candidates" along with Boutros-Ghali.

He urged African governments to move quickly since a new secretary-general must be chosen by the end of Boutros-Ghali's term on Dec. 31.

The United States, which has accused Boutros-Ghali of not being aggressive enough in pursuing reform, cast the lone negative vote against him in the 15-member council.

It was unclear when the council would meet again on the secretary-general issue. Once additional names have been offered, British Ambassador John Weston said he expects council members to take unofficial "straw votes" to winnow out the weaker candidates.

Other diplomats said the process could still drag on for weeks if no strong candidates quickly emerge.

Some Africans mentioned unofficially as potential candidates are Undersecretary-General Kofi Annan of Ghana, head of the U.N. peacekeeping operation; former Nigerian Prime Minister Hamid Algabid, secretary-general of the Organization of the Islamic Conference; the Ivory Coast's Foreign Minister Amara Essy; Olara Otunnu, a former Ugandan ambassador and head of the International Peace Academy in New York; OAU Secretary-General Salim Salim of Tanzania; and Senegal's Foreign Minister Moustapha Niasse. Once the council has selected a nominee, the name goes to the full 185-member General Assembly for ratification. Assembly President Razali Ismail of Malaysia wants to complete the ratification by Dec. 17.

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Where's the snow?
Craig Hovey, 21, Geology major and vice president of the UMass Outing Club helps rent out equipment for UMOC members.

Work faster with it.

Simplify your life with it.

Communicate to the world with it.

Have fun with it.

Get $150 back with it.

Power Macintosh® 7600
132 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM
15" display/keyboard
Now $2,558

Power Macintosh® 7200
120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM
15" display/keyboard
Now $1,918

Apple® Color StyleWriter® 2500
Up to 720x360 dpi
Now $329

Check out Apple's Holiday Savings.
Right now Apple Computer is it, offering a $150 rebate when you purchase a Macintosh® personal computer and an Apple® printer. Fact is, your timing couldn't be better to get your Mac,® a machine that features some of the world's most innovative technology. And it's easier to use than anything you'll encounter in your class schedule. So get to your campus computer store and pick out your Mac. It'll help keep you ahead in your classes (.:: at least tied). And right now, you'll come out $150 ahead on the price.

Power Macintosh® 5260 120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/14" built-in display/keyboard Now $1,559
Power Macintosh® 8500 150 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/17" display/keyboard Now $3,548
Macintosh® Performa® 6400CD 180 MHz/16MB RAM/1.6GB/8X CD-ROM/15" display/keyboard Now $2,198
Apple® Color StyleWriter® 1500 Up to 720x360 dpi Now $239

UNIVERSITY STORE

The University Store
Campus Center
Hours: M-F 9-5, Sat. 10-5
545-2619

©1996 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo, Mac, Macintosh, Performa, Power Macintosh and StyleWriter are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Apple mail-in rebate offer valid from November 2, 1996, through January 11, 1997, while supplies last and subject to availability. To qualify for rebate, printer, computer and an Apple monitor (if sold separately) must be purchased on the same invoice. Offer good on any Macintosh desktop computer sold very Apple printer. Void where prohibited by law. See participating reseller for further rules and details. All Macintosh computers are designed to be accessible to multi-talents with disability. To learn more (U.S. only), call 800-600-7808 or TTY 800-755-0601.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Cusimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affiar Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor
Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

We'll miss you Mahar — Not!

Mark McGrath

On this campus, few will deny that a problem exists in the condition of various classrooms. As students, we confront this problem face-to-face every day. Whether it be Bartlett, Mahar, Thompson or any other building, most of us have had to stomach one of the ugliest classrooms on campus.

As students, having classes in these specific auditoriums and/or buildings can be very disappointing. Invariably, we come to wonder why, if we're paying this much money, we are accommodated in such shoddy surroundings. As angry and disappointed students, we look for someone to blame, someone to take the fall on account of our unhappiness.

Sometimes, in our haste to cast judgement we create enemies, that do not exist, which may serve to help us accept the fact that there is no conceivable way of dealing with a problem of a certain magnitude. In many cases, we vilify a person or group of people whose work may not seem apparent to us. Such may be the case with the condition of various classrooms on this campus and the people who are paid to deal with them.

Countless times, I've heard and voiced complaints about the condition of classrooms. While this criticism may be successful in pointing out the problem, they do little to help fix it. Everyone and their mom knows that there is a problem, but how many can say they truly understand the situation?

To get to the root of the "classroom situation" we have to take a trip back in time — destination '60s. Because of the Baby Boom, that decade was a time of unprecedented growth at this University and those around the country. In fact, 40 percent of the current UMass buildings were erected during that time period.

How, you ask, does that explain the problem we are now facing? The answer (or should I say answers?), are very simple. The decade of the '60s was a different era. It was a time when the American economy was stable and the general political climate lent itself to education. People figured that because the seas were smooth, they would remain so for the foreseeable future. And why wouldn't they? Nothing indicated the looming problems of funding state universities.

As time passed and the government's pockets got shallower and shallower, the University Administration had to cut funding somewhere, and to avoid the unpleasantness of cutting academic departments or student services, they cut down on maintenance and upkeep. After all, the buildings were still in pretty good shape. There was no immediate danger.

Now we may proceed to the '90s. As many of us are aware, money is tight, and the state government is very hostile towards education, resulting in very little state funding for the University. Add in the factors that 40 percent of the buildings on campus are getting to the point where they need serious renovations, and that government regulations standards for buildings are becoming higher and higher — necessitating further repairs and additions — and we have quite a problem.

In fact, we have a "mega-problem," the magnitude of which few can comprehend.

While we had nothing to do with the generation of the classroom situation, we are the ones who have to deal with it. It was "thrust upon us." That we cannot change. That's just the way it is.

So here we are, the students of UMass, complaining about our classrooms. When I conceived the idea for this column, I figured I'd be ranting and raving, using anger as a motivation for change. Instead, I decided to take my concerns directly to the Administration. What I found was a group of people who, like me, want to see a better UMass. I talked at length with Bill Rose, the associate vice chancellor for campus services and Earl Smith, director of the Physical Plant.

Their willingness to acknowledge and address the problem at hand surprised me and their vision for the future was certainly impressive. Taking time to clearly present the situation, they found a way to make a believer out of me. I was only too happy to hear what was already in the works.

For those of you who don't already know, Mahar Auditorium will be shut down next semester for a "complete renovation and technological modernization." Next September, you may not recognize the place. Also, the Physical Plant is working within its budget in an ongoing project to restore classrooms, the visible results being Herter 227 and a number of classrooms in Machmer. Next semester 20 classrooms and two auditoriums will be restored. In addition, students will be greeted with 6 to 8 new computer classrooms when they return for the Fall '97 semester.

According to Rose, "The classrooms have improved in the last year and will be improving steadily over the next couple of years."

We are facing a problem that is tough to deny, but to say that nothing is being done to correct it would not be doing the University justice. Had any of the student body or the administration the ability to fix all of the eroding classrooms with the snap of a finger, it surely would be done. It just can and will not happen.

Even if all the classrooms were brought up to condition for now, that says little for the future. What the Administration is working on is a cycle which would keep money coming in on a regular basis so that the classrooms could be addressed in turn, dealing with some of the problems simultaneously.

With the right care and patience on the students' part. There's no reason why this problem cannot be resolved.

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

Where everybody knows your name

Tara M.K. Connelly

Like almost everyone, I went home this weekend to eat turkey, laugh at my relatives and fight with my siblings. I also went back to hang out at that place where everybody knows your name and you're always glad you came. No, not "Cheers" (I live in Gloucester), but a place called The Rhumbline. Now I think that every home town has a said bar, a place where you know certain people will be waiting for you to come in, shout a hearty hello and get you sloshed.

I'm in a rather unique situation in that my hometown is really not much of a "hometown," simply because I was never integrated into the public school system. I met people in Gloucester through brief acquaintances at a few parties, through a variety of summer jobs and maybe because they went to the same private school I went to before going to "the high school."

It is rather a unique system in which people will ask where you're from and you say, "Gloucester" which is usually preceded by, "You're whole life?" "Yes." and then the conversation is almost always closed with, "Oh, never heard of you before." I smile, say, "not surprised," and they go off to ask someone if they have ever heard of me.

Although I missed being greeted by yells and slaps at the door, I was amazed by the amount of people I did know through the aforementioned groups and through people who were just curious as to who I was. But, in a way, my trip to the local bar was more of a time to experience life in a close knit town from an outsider's view, and it seems that no matter where you go, there are universal things that tie together almost every hometown bar.

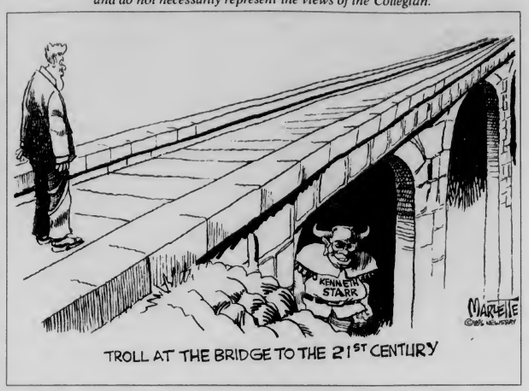
• No matter what you did, who you became, or how much money you make — if you were known to pick your nose, wet your pants, or bully people in high school — chances are you are going to be known for that until the day you die. I caught myself doing that. I saw a boy who used to eat Chunky Campbell's soup in second grade, but told everyone that it was dog food; ergo he was always "that boy who ate dog food."

• Image is a hard thing to break. This sort of ties in with the first, but a lot of people see college as a time to be different and explore different personas. People will basically believe the worst of you if you don't set the record straight. How many times have you heard about so and so who used to do this and that and "seems not to have changed." Quite a conclusion based solely on a glimpse across a crowded bar.

• Image is a hard thing to maintain. Some people bask in the glow of past lives and strive very hard to keep up their high school image. In fact sometimes you wonder if they will ever stop pegging their pants, wearing shoe string ties and worshiping Molly Ringwald.

• Some people will stay the same. Some people will never get past high school, never go to college, have a kid and no job and think that everything is okay. They will have the same group of friends and hang out at all the same places. On one hand you pity them because you honestly wonder how they can have such low expectations and goals. On the other hand if they are truly happy, can ignorance really be bliss, or is being content a bad thing as along as you're not settling?

The thing is that we may enjoy hanging out with them, going to all the old places, drinking beer in the woods and running from the cops — but it gets old — fast. That's what makes visiting your hometown cool. You think it's a nice place to visit, but not necessarily a nice place to stay. You can see yourself getting sucked into it and going nowhere.



Gloucester is a nice place. It's a beautiful place and I miss it's beaches, the ocean and my family. But I can see how easy it would be for me to see the same people over and over, do the same thing and see my life come to a grinding halt. While I miss the security to being able to walk down the street and see five people I know, at the same time I like being obscure and not having to tell everyone where I've been and what I've been doing every five minutes. I like not having a label, a past life, an image or bias that I have to shake off.

Maybe I will end up living there sometime down the road. But for now I'd like to make my own name, create my own bias and be known for who I am and not who I was. And come Christmas time I might see a few more familiar faces, pull up a stool at the bar, smile at Carla, wink at Woody and have Norm ask me how I've been.

Tara MK Connelly is a Collegian columnist.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Jurisprudence and Affirmative Action

Mike Elliott

California's Proposition 209 may never get a chance to prove what a misguided law it is — last Wednesday, a federal district court judge in San Francisco ruled against implementing the recently passed initiative on the grounds that it may be unconstitutional.

The law, which will eliminate all Affirmative Action programs for state funded agencies, has been a consistent source of controversy as the nation re-evaluates government efforts to combat racism and discrimination.

The decision by Judge Thelton Henderson rekindles the debate on federal power over state initiatives. Critics charge that Henderson's move was undemocratic because he did not take into account the 54 percent of Californians who voted in favor of Prop. 209. A federal judge, they say, has no business meddling in the interests of Californians.

To claim that Henderson does not have the right to review propositions passed by the state's voters is ludicrous — he evoked the same power which allows the Supreme Court to overturn Congressional actions deemed unconstitutional.

These critics lack a fundamental understanding of the system of checks and balances which provides federal courts the right to examine any law passed by a legislative body or popular initiative. Bottom line — Prop. 209 is invalid if it is not subjected to the same process which affirms the constitutionality of any measure.

Henderson has a solid argument on the questionable legality of Prop. 209. The law will make life much more difficult for victims of discrimination — a very dangerous precedent. In 1972, Affirmative Action was formally created by those who were seeking positive counter-measures to racism. Now, there is no drive towards action; the motive is complacency on the part of state agencies and corporations. For example, the University of California, the nation's largest university system, has every right to be unsupportive towards those who have been historically discriminated against.

If the supporters of Prop. 209 were really concerned about civil rights (the proposition was deceivingly titled, "the California Civil Rights Initiative"), they would have improved upon already existing Affirmative Action programs. That, however, was not the intention. This proposition was a conservative ploy, much like the anti- immigration Prop. 187, to divide the middle class along racial lines, rallying support behind Republican candidates.

The lesson here is to avoid being fooled.

The reality is, racism is alive and well in the United States; not only in the minds of right-wing extremists, but ingrained in our government, economy and social psyche.

Affirmative Action opponents, such as Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, view racism as a sporadic, individualized occurrence, rather than a systemic, oppressive force within society.

There is plenty of evidence in California — and the nation, which proves contrary to Justice Thomas.

A 1995 study by the American Civil Liberties Union is the perfect example of why Affirmative Action was conceived. In Los Angeles county, where the population is two-thirds people of color, only 5 percent of every public works dollar is awarded to a contracting firm owned by a person of color.

The study then turns its focus to the U.S. labor force. While whites compose 45 percent of the working class, they lay claim to a massive 95 percent of all managerial positions.

The recent discrimination suit settled with the Texaco Corporation along with the riots in St. Petersburg, Fla., protesting a racist police department, go even further to disprove the notion that the United States has become a more benign, egalitarian country since the days of the Civil Rights Movement.

These are corporations and civic institutions perpetuating racism — these are not isolated acts — this is the system.

It is a system favorable to Prop. 209 supporters (predominately white men). They have decided society would be better off if the legacies and effects of racism remain ignored, rather than unconvincing themselves and taking productive, affirmative action.

Judge Henderson is, at least, not making the same mistake.

Michael Elliott is a Collegian columnist.

Off Limits

Luke Meredith

You'll be happy to know that the Athletic Department is building itself a Hall of Fame, and boy is it beautiful. Gorgeous new red carpet, mahogany walls and trophy cases, and the University of Massachusetts emblem encased in marble at the center of it all.

But you'll never get to see it.

Why? Because this ravishing little nugget is not where any regular student would ever be allowed. It's in the Mullins Center, suspiciously located between the basketball offices and the athletic director's office, right behind the V.I.P. room. Oh, it's not that hard to find. Just go around to the other entrance, take a left, walk through a set of glass doors, take the elevator on your left up to the third floor, get off and it's on your right. Just make sure Bob Marcum or anybody else doesn't throw you out.

I'm sorry, but this sort of thing flat-out ticks me off. I've woken up before the crack of dawn countless times, waiting for tickets to watch a basketball team that I follow like a religion, freezing my keister off the whole time. I've screamed like a madman for 40 minutes during every home game. (Except, of course, during last year's George Washington game, where strangely enough, I couldn't get tickets. Oh well, at least all those old people had fun in my student seat.) I watch the "Bruiser Flint" show every week, and when it's over I go practice the "Two minute drill" until I get it right.

And you're telling me I can't even look at the Final Four trophy, or Marcus Camby's Naismith award? Am I not privileged?

It's not so much that I object to having a Hall of Fame. Hell, I like the idea. There's nothing wrong with having a place where we can honor our athletic accomplishments. I love this school, and when a team does well, I feel proud to tell people I go here. You all remember how sweet it was to be a UMass student during Final Four week last year. The focus of the nation was on us, and the Boston press had to come west and kiss our behinds (a great feeling).

My objection is this. Half the time I go to class, I find a broken desk or a chair with a coil sticking out. I'd like to know if Bob Marcum or Chancellor Scott ever had to take a class in Mahar, and try to write notes without a desk, or try to take a dump in Baker or Van Meter, where you'll usually find either no door, no toilet paper and showers that just don't work. And what about Bartlett Auditoium, where it's 200 degrees in September and two degrees in December? Or even the Textbook Annex, which is about as efficient and well designed as the Collegian offices, and don't forget about Boyden, which needs no words to describe just how bad it is.

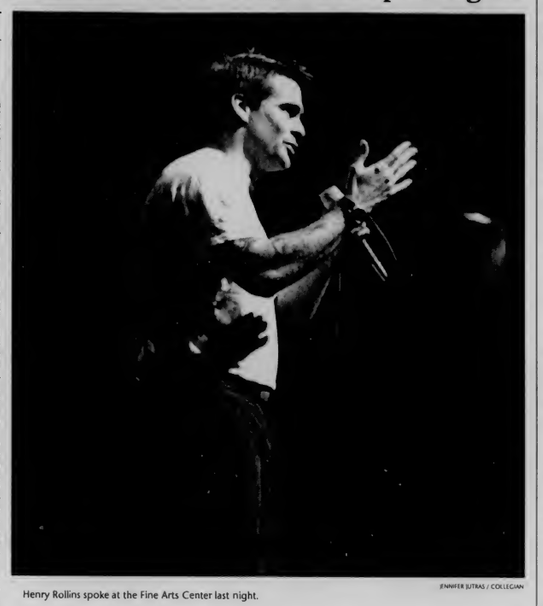
If it's not too much to ask, I'd like to have classrooms I could actually learn in, and facilities that have been updated since the '60s. I'd like to think that the first concern of the Administration of this public (emphasis on public) University was it's students, but I'm not so sure. I wonder if they're aware that we're here to become better educated citizens of the Commonwealth, not just more revenue for the basketball team.

Building a Hall of Fame that isn't meant for the students is a slap in the face to all of us. While we deal with crappy facilities, long lines of inefficiency and an administration that just doesn't seem to care to much about us, they've built themselves an air-conditioned memorial.

When Lou Holtz decided to retire from Notre Dame, he made a speech at the last home game thanking the students. He said that without them, there'd be no stadium, no football team, no university.

Words to live by, Mr. Marcum. Words to live by.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian Columnist.



ATTENTION ALL COLUMNISTS AND STAFF!
Elections for all Collegian posts, including Editor in Chief, Managing Editor and Sports editor are today from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Please vote — you may make a difference in the future of the Collegian. Questions? See Mark McGrath in the office during the afternoon.

Arts & Living

Rollins entertains with anecdotes, not deep thoughts

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

HENRY ROLLINS
1996 Public Insomniac #1
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Dec. 2

Henry Rollins spoke at the Fine Arts Center last night.
JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

"Uneven" might be the best term to describe Henry Rollins' spoken-word performance last night at the Fine Arts Center. Rollins came onto the stage starting without much to say — making small talk, joking about how difficult it is getting into the F.A.C.

Unfurling his many talents like talons into pop culture, Rollins has been-there done that with almost every aspect of our MTV consciousness — from voice overs on ads for Gap to volumes of his poetry.

Clocking in at over two hours, Rollins shared insights and observations to life's many foibles — from the frustrations of waiting in lines at airports to simulating sex in a recording booth with RuPaul doing a cover of "Funkytown."

The monologue revolves around Rollins' near-compulsive need to keep from losing time and taking aim at society's problems, or what he deems to be society's problems — violence, racism and homophobia. Oddly enough, Rollins never seems to consider that his rants about blowing people away who take too long in the airport to be violent.

Thankfully, Rollins is able to move past his trite initial persuasive arguments. No one needs to tell an auditorium of UMass students that these ills are bad. Rollins goes a few steps further, imagining cures for our weary world... very strange cures. A tamer example of his solutions was dyeing eggs and giving them to gang members in Los Angeles — red for Bloods, blue for Crypts.

How do we solve other nation's problems? Instead of bring various world leaders to "grin and grope" at the White House, only to send them packing back to their homelands to fling missiles at each other, Rollins suggests that we lock the dignitaries in a bathroom and refuse to let them out until they "jerk" each other off. Understanding that men bond in unusual ways, Rollins suggests these crackpot ideas with such enthusiasm and humor, it's difficult not to find him charming.

Statements bordering on the pretentious come all too frequently throughout Public Insomniac. Hearing Henry Rollins say that Kafka had the Great Wall of China figured out seems like listening to what would happen if Beavis got a Com Lit degree.

If there is one point where Rollins' takes a true chance with his audience, it is when he relates his experience visiting the city of Auchwitz. Here he runs the risk of alienating the audience, he stops trying to be funny and a brief glimmer of sincerity seems to come through.

On the whole, Rollins' riffs are amusing to say the least, but he seems to confuse spoken word with very angry stand- up comedy. Entire branches of the monologue don't seem to fit into the piece as a whole, tangents which we assume will connect back to Rollins' main theme, but never seem to.

Avant-garde acoustic show with Fahey & Moore tonight

By Michael Burke
Collegian Staff

Forget all that acoustic garbage MTV throws your way under the hype of "Unplugged" — a double dosage of true guitar legends, John Fahey and Thurston Moore, take the stage armed with acoustic guitars tonight at the Iron Horse Music Hall.

While Moore may be the "big name," John Fahey should be the true star of the evening.

In the 1960s Fahey started his own record label, Takoma, in an attempt to capture a new style of guitar music. Fahey led an underground movement, known as "American Primitive"; it also included such finger pickin' obscurities as Leo Kittke and Peter Lang.

The New Rolling Stone Record Guide described Fahey's 1959 debut album, Blind Joe Death, as "the most famous obscure album of recent times." Only 95 copies of the original album remain. Since then he has released more than 40 albums on his own label Tacoma as well as Vanguard, Reprise, Warner Bros. and Tim/Kerr.

Definitely a musician's musician, Fahey has proven to be one of the most respected American artists of recent times — by the few who knew him. Byron Coley, editor of Forced Exposure, praised Fahey in Spin "as monumental and singular a musical talent as any this country has produced... his musical inventions match those of John Coltrane and Harry Partch for sheer transcendental American power."

By combining such distinct styles as classical, folk, blues and indian rage, Fahey has crossed musical and cultural bounds with a sound that has greatly influences guitarists everywhere, including Thurston Moore, the near-legendery guitarist of Sonic Youth.

Since moving to the Pioneer Valley recenily with his wife Kim Gordan (Sonic Youth, Free Kitten), Moore has been very active in the local music scene. Throughout the summer he has helped sponsor an experimental jazz series in Amherst; he performed at the Unitarian Church two weeks ago.

While his ambitious solo work has helped maintain his underground credibility and given him more artistic freedom, Moore is best known for his work in Sonic Youth. Over the past 15 years, the New York outfit has risen from the noise-filled New York Underground to headlining status at Lollapolloza (and Homerpolloza).

Albums such as EVOL, Sister and Daydream Nation remain three of the finest, and most important, albums of the post-punk rock world. Their most recent release, 1995's Washing Machine found the band in old form— especially on the intense 25-minute plus tune "Diamond Sea."

While Sonic Youth's early stuff bordered on nearly unlistenable art-noise (on their first self-titled EP the B-side was the A-side played backwards), Moore's acoustic performance tonight will probably be easier on the ears — Moore will perform in duo with Phil X. Milstein.

Tonight's show is the first of a brief four city tour that also takes Fahey and Moore to Cambridge, Philadelphia and New York City.

John Fahey & Thurston Moore perform tonight at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton at 10 p.m. Tickets are $10 in advance and $12 at the door.

Looking for something to do? Surf the net!
Visit the Collegian online at www.umass.edu/rso/colegain

JANUARY CLASSES
Take a course during Intersession!
You can complete a one, two, or three credit course during January.
(Most classes meet mornings 9 a.m. - Noon)
Classes Begin January 2 through January 21, 1997
Register now through Friday, December 27, 1996
- Keyboarding for Information Processing
- Introduction to Dance
- Computer Literacy
- Introduction to Internet
- English Composition I
- English Composition II
- French Skills Practice I
- Counseling Skills
- Winter Outdoor Recreation
- Practical Nursing Practicum
- Introduction to Professional Nursing and the Nursing Process
- Principles of Psychology
- Contemporary Trends/Issues
- Spanish Skills Practice I
- Spanish Skills Practice II
- Oral Communications: Public Speaking
- Principles of Sociology

For Registration Information Call: (413) 774-3131 extension 272
GREENFIELD
The community's college!

Apple
Holiday Savings!

Macintosh Performa 6400 series, Apple Multiple Scan 14 inch Display, Apple Color StyleWriter 2500
We'll give you $150 to get your work done faster.
For a limited time, you can snag a $150 rebate from Apple® when you purchase a Macintosh® desktop computer with an Apple display (if sold separately) and any Apple printer. Just make tracks for your campus computer store and pick up some of the most innovative technology in existence. Better still, using a Mac means getting stuff done a whole lot faster. Which should open up your schedule for the real important things. Like sleeping.
Power Macintosh® 5400 120 MHz/16MB RAM/16GB/8X CD-ROM/15" built-in display/keyboard Now $1,719
Power Macintosh® 7200 120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/15" display/keyboard Now $1,918
Apple® Color StyleWriter® 1500 Up to 720x360 dpi Now $239
Apple® Color StyleWriter® 2500 Up to 720x360 dpi Now $329
UNIVERSITY STORE
The University Store
Campus Center
Hours: M-F 9-5, Sat. 10-5
545-2619
© 1996 Apple Computer, Inc. Apple, the Apple logo, Macintosh, Performa, and StyleWriter are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Apple mail-in rebate offer valid from November 1, 1996, through January 19, 1997, while supplies last and subject to product availability. To qualify for rebate, printer, computer and monitor (if monitor is sold separately) must be purchased on the same invoice. See participating reseller for further details. All Apple products are designed to be accessible to individuals with disability. For more information in the U.S. only, call 1 800-769-2555 or TDD 1 800-833-6223.

X–Mas specials: the peaks and the pits

By Jennifer Bowles
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES— It's a Wonderful Life turns 50 this year, but that 1946 life-affirming classic starring Jimmy Stewart is just a smidgen of what's in Santa's TV gift bag this year.

As usual, there's something in the bag for every viewer: from the musically inclined "Mrs. Santa Claus," to the saintly Dolly Parton in "Unlikely Angel," to the ghoulish "The Munsters' Scary Little Christmas."

Here is a shopping guide to program highlights on network and cable TV:

"A Hollywood Christmas, Hosted by Jane Seymour," Saturday, Dec. 7, STARZ! A behind-the-scenes look at classic holiday movies over the past 60 years, including A Christmas Carol and Home Alone.

"Teens on Faith: A Spiritual Journey," Sunday, Dec. 8, CBS. Teen-agers from a wide variety of religious backgrounds talk frankly about their faith.

"TV's All Time Funniest Holidays," Monday, Dec. 9, Fox. Ted McGinley shows holiday-themed clips from TV shows.

"Martha Stewart: Home for the Holidays," Tuesday, Dec. 10, CBS. The hostess with the mostest shares ideas for recipes, tree decorating and party planning. Michael Jordan, Dennis Franz and Miss Piggy are featured.

"Christmas in Washington," Wednesday, Dec. 18, NBC. The cast of "3rd Rock from the Sun" host the 15th annual yuletide gala attended by President Clinton and the first lady.

"Christmas Miracles," Sunday, Dec. 22, ABC. Celebrities fulfill the wishes of children and their families from specially selected letters written to Santa.

"How Do You Spell God?" Sunday, Dec. 22, HBO. Children explore some of life's universal questions, thoughts on God and the importance of faith.

"The Magic School Bus Family Holiday Special," Wednesday Dec. 25, PBS. Lily Tomlin and Dolly Parton host this star-studded, animated and live-action field trip aboard the bus. Among other things, the special celebrates recycling, "the gift that keeps on giving."

"Walt Disney World Very Merry Christmas Parade," Wednesday, Dec. 25, ABC. Live from Walt Disney World, Suzanne Somers and Jerry Van Dyke host a two-hour holiday extravaganza filled with elves, dancing Christmas trees, snowmen, colorful floats and marching bands.

"Barbara Walters Presents The 10 Most Fascinating People of 1996," Friday, Dec. 6. ABC. Walters spotlights some of the year's biggest names, including Elizabeth Dole, Dennis Rodman, Rosie O'Donnell, Olympic gymnast Kerri Strug and astronaut Shannon Lucid.

Pakistan and Bulgaria offer new music

After listening to The Sabri Brothers' new record, Ya Mustapha, you may think of religious music in a whole new way. Hailing from Pakistan, the five brothers perform devotional songs in the qawwali Sufi tradition, accompanied by several supporting vocalists and instrumentalists. This album even finds Ray Charles contributing a little sax to the mix.

by Daniel Bodah

Sufiism is a meditative and mystically–oriented sect stemming from Islam. Abandoning the strictness sometimes found in Islamic religious practice, the Sufis have instead developed a highly personal and mystical relationship with Allah. Their focus on ecstatic worship has given rise to a number of famous Sufi poets, as well as the popularity of qawwali, the music of Sufiism. The Sabri Brothers are second in popularity only to the well–known qawwal Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan, and have had hits at the top of the Pakistani charts for as long as five years running.

Imagine a mixture of gospel music's warmth and voicy fullness with the entrancing instrumentation and tonality of Indian classical music, and you're approaching the sound of qawwali. Lyrics are printed in both Urdu script and English translation on the fold–out poster that comes with the CD, so even U.S. listeners can appreciate the stunning imagery of the poems. When the Sabri Brothers sing "oh Breeze, please take the story of this speck of dust to the sun up above. Kiss the floor when you enter the divine presence, and convey my greetings," the transcendent music communicates the message across language boundaries.

Another CD focusing on vocal music is the eponymous Folk Scat, on Music of the World's new Nomad label. Led by founder and director Kiril Ivanov Todorov, Folk Scat works Bulgarian folk music through modern and jazz arrangements, with sometimes interesting results.

Le Mysterie de Voix Bulgares made Bulgarian folk somewhat famous in the States, being the most prominent group to introduce its powerful, almost–dissonant melodies to U.S. audiences. Folk Scat may be able to build on this popularity, but I doubt they would achieve it on their own. One need only listen to the Yale Slavic Choir or Le Mysterie doing their versions of "Bre Pretunko" to know what they're not getting from Folk Scat.

I'm not sure what listeners will find coming from a jazz perspective, however, since this CD straddles the margin between world and jazz. Complicated vocal work and sometimes dizzying rhythms extend the raw folk material into areas of cool technique. While, to my ear, this detracts from the music's folk base, some readers may find value in it.

At least this isn't one of those horrible projects where a U.S. session musician wanders off on vacation, gets into some exotic native music and comes back home to record a dismally overproduced album of sonic fluff using a foreign musical tradition as if it were a new spice. The singers in Folk Scat , beside Todorov, include Mariana Vlaeva, Antoaneta Krumova, Diana Dimova and Todor Gerdjikov—all respected and talented Bulgarian musicians, most with a folk background.

Speaking of folk backgrounds, Nicolae Gutsa brings his musical lineage and long involvement with regional Romanian music to bear on the proudly–titled The Greatest Living Gypsy Voice, released by French label Auvidis Silex and distributed in the U.S. through Harmonia Mundi. Gutsa is a renowned singer of the much–persecuted Rom people and a frequent performer at Gypsy weddings and christenings throughout western Romania.

The music drives a mean rhythm even without drums, using guitar as the main percussive instrument. Gutsa's voice certainly expresses a fiery passion, on songs ranging from wild romps to aching melodies. He sings in Romanian and Romany, backed by sax, violin, keyboard, and accordion. The CD liner notes are primarily in French, with two sets of lyrics and a brief bio translated into English.

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian columnist.

-ANKLE-NOTARY-PENSION-so there! Collegian Graphics

DOMINO'S PIZZA
CHEESE PIZZA SALE

$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME

DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM
Expires 12/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

DAILY COLLEGIAN and ICP present:

The First Annual UMass bandWidth
Spanning Five UMass Bands

Watch here for band listing!

18+ CLUB METRO NORTHAMPTON, MA
Monday Dec. 9th
Doors Open @ 7:00
Bands Start @ 9:00
$5 admission ($4 with this ad)

DON'T GO INTO HIBERNATION ON YOUR WINTER BREAK

Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17

spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell! If you want to move ahead in your educational program, start with college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits if you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break. at UMass Lowell

DAY CLASSES: Monday - Saturday, 9am - 12noon
EVENING CLASSES: Monday - Friday, 6 - 9pm; Saturday 1 - 4pm

Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
• Liberal Arts • Sciences
• Mathematics • Computers
• Social Sciences • Music
• Management

Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit

For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.

Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to: University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.

Name
Address
City
State Zip
Phone ( )
Institution Currently Attending

UMass Lowell UNIVERSITY COLLEGE Division Of Continuing Education

We've Got WilliWear!
Just in time for the holidays.
Printed shirts & patterned vests.
Lush corduroys & terry tops.
Willi's back and we've got him!

J•RICH CLOTHING FOR MEN
22 Masonic Street • Northampton
586-6336 • Open 7 Days

THANG VO/COLLEGIAN

Diaper Dandy
Freshman sensation Kelly Van Huisen and the women's basketball team head to Stanford on Friday to take on the Lady Cardinal.

Olajuwon out of hospital

By Michael Graczyk
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Hakeem Olajuwon, saying he's in good health and has a "very good heart," left the hospital yesterday after a visit from former President George Bush and plans to start working out in hopes of rejoining the Houston Rockets.

For the second time in less than two weeks, the star center was treated for an irregular heartbeat. The problem is not considered career-threatening, but his return to play was not immediately set. When asked when he would be in the lineup again, Olajuwon said, "Hopefully, as soon as possible." Olajuwon remained in Houston while his teammates played in Toronto last night. The Rockets said Olajuwon is to begin workouts today.

Olajuwon spent the night in Methodist Hospital. He spoke before climbing into his white Mercedes and driving himself home. "It wasn't painful," he said of his hospital stay. "I'm in good health. I have a very good heart. There's no really major concern. It's just something I need to learn to live with." Olajuwon, 33, was given aspirin and the drug Lanoxin to deal with the heartbeat irregularity.

The problem resurfaced Saturday night in Washington, where he scored 34 points, his high game this season. Houston beat the Bullets to improve its record to 15-1, tied with Chicago for the NBA's best mark. His 25.8 point average is third best in the NBA. Doctors said aspirin would keep his blood from clotting and the prescription medication would keep his heart from fluttering. "What it basically does is keep it from getting fast," team physician James Muntz said.

"It's uncomfortable for him because your heart is going fast but at no point would the Rockets or any of the doctors let him play if this was something dangerous."

Cardiologist Tony Pacifico, an arrhythmia specialist, had waited to see if the heart corrected itself before bringing it into sync with a defibrillator yesterday morning. About three hours later, Olajuwon was released.

Before departing, however, Olajuwon received a visit from the former president. Bush, who lives in Houston, has a similar medical problem.

"The big guy was laying there looking pretty good to me," Bush said.

Two weeks ago doctors used the electrical shock to correct Olajuwon's arrhythmia, or abnormal heartbeat, after he left the Nov. 19 game against Minnesota at halftime.

At that time, he went immediately to Methodist Hospital, where he remained for two days while undergoing precautionary tests. He was sidelined for a week, missing three games. He had the same heart problem once in 1991.

It's not known why such arrhythmia occurs. Between one percent and two percent of all people are believed to suffer the condition at one time, Pacifico said.

Olajuwon had anemia during the 1994-95 season. Before the 1990-91 season, he was hospitalized with a blood clot in his left leg, which was dissolved by blood thinners.

"I really appreciate the concern, but really there is no need to be concerned," Olajuwon said.

Bowl-less X–Mas may loom for Irish

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Lou Holtz planned on spending the New Year's holiday with his family, watching football. He just didn't plan on spending it at home.

But Holtz's last season at Notre Dame is probably going to end just like his first, with the Irish missing a bowl game. Holtz announced Nov. 19 he's resigning at the end of the season. "We wanted to send coach Holtz out right, but we didn't," Notre Dame quarterback Ron Powlus said.

Hopes for a Fiesta or Orange Bowl bid ended when the Irish lost to Southern California on Saturday, dropping them to No. 18 in The Associated Press poll. Each alliance bowl carries an $8 million payout.

Because Notre Dame doesn't have postseason agreements with anyone but the alliance coalition, second-tier bowls like the Citrus, Cotton or Gator bowls aren't an option, either.

"We've known from the beginning that Notre Dame's involvement [in a bowl] is predicated on us being a very highly ranked team," said John Heisler, Notre Dame's sports information director. "It's not like this is a surprise. No one's changed the ground rules." The Independence and Copper bowls have at-large bids, but athletic director Mike Wadsworth turned both down Monday. The Aloha Bowl remains a possibility, but Notre Dame would probably turn that down, too.

Notre Dame has said all along that it won't accept a bid just to play in a bowl. The Irish want to play in a bowl only if they can improve their ranking. Translation: A team ranked higher than Notre Dame.

For example, when the Irish were criticized for sending an unranked, 6-4-1 team to the Fiesta Bowl two years ago, they justified it because they were playing then-No. 4 Colorado. "Going to a bowl just for the sake of going to a bowl isn't going to do that," Wadsworth said. "Our decision making will focus on whether that opportunity is a significant one for our program... we're probably going to be more stringent in our assessment because we are in a transitional period."

So that leaves Notre Dame at home, ending a run of nine-straight Jan. 1 bowl appearances under Holtz. That's the longest streak in the country, and breaking it in Holtz's last season wasn't what the Irish wanted.

That two of Notre Dame's three losses came in overtime makes missing a bowl game even worse.

"If we do not play in a bowl game, I guess the disappointment is for the seniors," Heisler said. "It's not hard to see how this could be a 10-1 team."

Not getting up to $8 million is bad enough, but missing a bowl also costs the Irish valuable practice time. Only bowl-bound teams are allowed to practice after the season ends under NCAA rules, and everyone else has to wait until the spring.

While Notre Dame knew there were no guarantees when it joined the alliance, Wadsworth said he thinks some changes need to be made. There has to be some criteria for selecting bowl teams, but there should be more flexibility, Wadsworth said.

"I think it would be in the long-term interests of college football," he said. "I think unless there is greater flexibility so that teams of greater interest [can be considered]... you're going to wind up seeing some bowls disappearing."

Check out the Hoop preview this Thursday ONLINE!
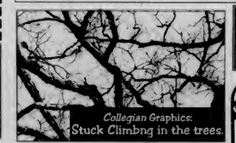
www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

THEFT OF MEDICAL EXAM FOILED IN S.F.
17-year-old With Nonfunctioning Gun Beaten by Students
By H. K. Lee and C. Bowman, Chronicle Staff Writers

A young masked gunman burst into a room full of students taking a medical exam Saturday in San Francisco and demanded a copy of a test section but was thwarted when several outraged proctors and would-be doctors punched him out, police said yesterday.



Police said the youth grabbed a green folder at the front of the room, disappeared into a bathroom and then re-emerged, cursing. He then confronted a proctor, demanding the Physical Sciences portion of the test. As the proctor fumbled for the test section, the youth may have been careless with his gun—the proctor grabbed it, and suddenly the intruder found himself at gunpoint.

The youth then apparently smacked the proctor in the face. Enraged, at least five proctors and test-takers surrounded the suspect and threw punches at him, drawing blood, witnesses said...

The San Francisco Chronicle.
Monday, August 19, 1996

You don't need a gun.
You just need our course
(We've got all the released MCATs, plus 14 more.)
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

TRAVEL SMART!
One Way Roundtrip
LONDON FROM NY, BOSTON or DC
$134 $249
FROM NEW YORK
PARIS $224 $427
ROME $259 $489
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA $235 $446
Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurail passes available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
342 Madison Ave., NY, NY 10173
212-986-8420*
800-272-9676
*In NYC

Praying for Snow. Lots of it.
Collegian Graphics

•Free Estimates
•Lifetime Repair Warranty
•Auto Glass Replacement
•Car & Truck Rental
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

Join the SMITH COLLEGE SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL WORK for INFORMATION DAY
SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1996
2:00 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL AUDITORIUM
SMITH COLLEGE CAMPUS
Presentation by faculty, administration, and students followed by an opportunity to address questions to the panel about the Master of Social Work Program. Call (413) 585-7950/7960 for more information.

UMASS, AMHERST
Earn 9 credits in Spanish !!
Complete your Language Requirement !!
Earn credits towards a minor or a major in Spanish !!

For more Information and Application:
Director, Salamanca Program
Spanish and Portuguese 418 Herter
Tel. (413) 545-4790/2887
Salamanca@Spanport.umass.edu
INFORMATION MEETING
Herter 601
DECEMBER 5, 6:00 p.m.
1997 Summer Program
Salamanca, Spain
July 1- July 30

Do you have what it takes to be a LEADER?
Looking for a great way to improve your resume and help pay for rising tuition?
Next Summer
Run your own business with College Pro Painters.
• Develop business skills - $60,000 - $100,000 business
• Earn a substantial profit - Last year's average manager made $10,714
• Develop leadership skills - hire, train and manage your own employees create and implement an outlet marketing strategy
• Build your resume - Get management experience to set yourself apart.
• Be the Boss - Tired of taking orders? You call the shots now!
1-800-346-4649
We will be in the UMASS Campus Center from 10A.M. - 2P.M. on Tuesday, December 3, 1996. Also, there will will be a presentation in the 12th floor lounge of J.Q.A. at 6:30 P.M. Pizza and refreshments will be served.

EL VACUÑA Bar & Grill
THIS WEEK
✪ Tuesday & Wednesday – LIVE MUSIC ✚ 10¢ WINGS AFTER 9PM
✪ Thursday – LIFT TICKET GIVEAWAY! $3.00 NACHOS AFTER 9PM
✪ Friday – 18+ DANCE PARTY w/ DJ PHIL
✪ Saturday – 10¢ WINGS AFTER 9PM
DECEMBER DRINK SPECIALS
$1 Drafts! ✚ Purple Buddah Shots - $2.50!

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Woman's Long Term Therapy Group Weekly 1 1/2 hr meetings Tuesday night in Amherst. For info, call (413)774-5418

ANNOUNCEMENTS

All University Women invited to Open Rush Sigma Kappa Wed Dec 4, 6:00 to 8:00pm Located behind Hillel. Call Beth at 549-1482 for more information

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Spacious Apartment for rent Jan 1. $525. heat included. 1 mile from campus. pets negotiable 549-3620

AUTO FOR SALE

Blue Volsvogen Golf Excellent condition, born in 1990 $3000 negotiable Call Guy 253-7243

1986 Oldsmobile Delta 88- Great car, low miles. $700. Call Chris 549-0564

EMPLOYMENT

CHRISTMAS/JANUARY BREAK

Earn $10 up to $15/start. International firm has 80 local openings. 2-6 week program. All majors considered. Gain business and communication skills. Scholarships and summer programs possible. Apply now. Begin after finals. On-campus accepting applications on Monday and Tuesday, December 9 and 10 from 9-1 on the concourse in the Campus Center or call (413)736-3230

Abt Telephone Research Center seeks candidates for interesting part-time telephone assignments to collect data on a variety of research topics. Absolutely no selling involved. Computer/typing skills required. Flexible hours Monday-Friday 5pm-11pm, Saturday 11am-5pm, and Sunday 12pm-5pm and 5pm-10pm Must work a minimum of 20 hours per week. Start at $5.25/hour with paid training and earn up to $7.00/hour. Conveniently located in the new Venture Center with free rides on nearby bus lines. Interested candidates, please call (413)587-1807. An equal opportunity employer

EMPLOYMENT

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info: call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals Waterfront houses, Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

Packard Bell P60 8MB RAM, 545 MB HD, monitor, multimedia, modem, software, HP Lazer Jet 4 $1600 00 546-7464

Complete 5 CD Stereo System! 5 band graphic equalizer, dual tape deck and powerful receiver. $250 or B/O Call Craig 546-6811

Floppy Disks- Mad cRAZy Cheap! 546-6963

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center 545-1995

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed $35 (800)776-9503 Doctor Approved

JAZZ BANDS

Jazz Band Needed Experienced or not, Come jam at our party. Will pay. Dec. 6th. Call 253-6520

ROOM FOR RENT

Three females seeking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan 1-May 31. Rent negotiable. Call Jess at 253-1797

2 Outgoing girls seek person(s) to rent large bedroom in uptown apt. Great location, in great condition. Start Jan 1. Contact Tricia/LB 549-3049 ASAP

ROOMATE WANTED

Two female N/S wanted to share double from 1/97 to 5/97, house in Amherst near bus. $165/mo, plus heat. Kim 549-7076

Room Available 5 bedroom house on Sunderland on bus route. Call for details 665-8529

Roommates Wanted: One or two males to share rent at Brandywine Apts. Starts January 1st. Call Bryan 549-4591

SERVICES

Don't abandon your dorm bunny! Rebbit Rescue can help! Will find your bunny a new home. Ellen 367-0105

GORILLAGRAMS Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorilla. We'll go anywhere, anytime!! Student rates available! Call 256-0281

Money for College- Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info.

SERVICES

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Screamn Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TO SUBLET

Teka over our lease 2/97 Large 2 bedroom apt. 5 min. from campus. $900 Call 549-8511

TRAVEL

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info. (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED TO RENT

2 bedroom apt. for Jan 1 within 10 min. to UMass. Call Amy 546-4424

WANTED

Fund-raisers Motivated groups needed to earn $500.00 plus promoting AT&T, Discover, gas and retail cards. Since 1989 we've helped thousands of groups raise the money they need. Call Gina at (800)592-2121 ext. 110. Free CD to qualified callers.

Desperate for Bibliographic Material Must have vigorous book list, textbook, workbooks, and problems for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education) Will pay above $150. My phone may have been defective in previous weeks. Therefore, please notify by mail. Mary Deuwson, 67 Amity Place, Amherst, MA 01002-2255. Don't hesitate, I am correct. Thank you.

Wanted- Tutor for AUTO CAD Realease13 Will pay. Call Rob at 546-8272

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment", call Caroline at 546-5269 for more info. Identity confidential upon request.

Mattress Wanted QUEEN Call Eugene 545-3768

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities	Miscellaneous
Announcements	Motorcycles
Apartment For Rent	Personals
Auto For Sale	Room For Rent
Employment	Room Wanted
Entertainment	Roommate Wanted
For Sale	Services
Found (2 days Free)	Summer Sublet
Happy Birthday	To Sublet
Houses For Rent	Travel
Instruction	Transportation
Lost	Wanted to Rent
Musicians	Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

C	R	E	E	P		A	P	S	O		L	A	I	R
L	A	P	E	L		F	A	W	N		Y	M	C	A
E	M	I	L	E		T	R	I	O		R	E	A	P
A	B	C		D	R	E	A	M		F	I	N	N	S
N	O	S	H		A	R	G		W	A	C
			A	N	N		O	M	A	R		Z	E	N
I	R	A	T	E		O	N	I	T		G	O	G	O
D	E	L	E	T	E	D		S	T	R	A	N	G	E
L	I	E	D		R	I	O	T		C	R	E	S	S
E	N	G		P	I	E	S		F	A	B
			P	A	C		T	R	A		O	V	E	R
M	O	U	R	N		T	R	U	T	H		E	V	E
I	P	S	O		B	A	I	T		A	P	R	I	L
T	I	E	D		I	T	C	H		T	A	S	T	E
T	E	D	S		B	A	H	S		S	W	E	A	T

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Dale's cowboy hubby
4. Flower-power gesture
7. Chaney of horror films
10. It often follows "once"
12. "Rigoletto" role
14. Monopoly, for one
15. Chronicle
16. Frankincense or myrrh
17. Amos of baseball
18. NY restaurant that's a favorite of Woody
20. Moses' burden
22. Move with difficulty
23. Allotted
24. Jeeves, to Bertie Wooster
27. Land of ___
28. Fable writer
32. Remotely
33. Rotating machine part
34. Gaudy
35. Bird's beak
36. Like certain shirts
38. Govt. agcy.
39. Wore away
41. Sonja Henie's homeland: abbr.
42. Docile
43. Antitoxin
44. From ___ Z (2 wds.)
45. Contented kitten sounds
46. Stimulates
48. Enthusiasm
49. Sign of the future
52. Maypo grain
56. Man from Muskogee
57. Dives
59. French pronoun
60. He played Shane
61. Speak publicly
62. Basketball net holders (2 wds.)
63. Alkali
64. CIA's forerunner
65. Mountain road

DOWN

1. Trick
2. Australian gem
3. Mystical exercise
4. Competes
5. High railways
6. Revised copy
7. What procrastinators often are
8. Pass over
9. Criminal-catcher Eliot
11. Carpenter, at times
12. One of the Brady boys
13. Gray's subj.
14. ___ Gate Bridge
19. Filbert, e.g.
21. Box feature
23. Twinklings of an eye
24. Wind indicators
25. Flaming
26. Pregnancy culmination
27. Toddler's timeout
29. 60 Minutes man
30. Playful swimmer
31. Eats chicken-style
33. Scoundrel
34. "___ the fields we go ..."
36. Arizona city
37. Joey's nickname
40. Prepared for the white-glove test
42. Philadelphia parader on 1/1
44. Conductor Toscanini
45. Excavation area
47. Loosen
48. Ming Dynasty relic
49. Opinion survey
50. Slangy assent
51. Get a lift
52. Picks
53. Night author Wiesel
54. Donations
55. To a smaller degree
58. Pals' partners

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20

Strengthen your personal connections this week with a few thoughtful favors. You'll earn the respect of someone who's had doubts about you in the past. An envious person has a difficult time with your recent success.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21

Don't allow all your time to be monopolized by someone who lacks the initiative to broaden their own horizons. Instead, find a way to gently brush them off, and offer them alternatives to choose from.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21

Thinking ahead—even into the distant future—pays off handsomely, as your insight is fairly good. Don't take undue risks, especially when the stakes are high. A job prospect that seemed remote could be heating up.

CANCER
June 22–July 22

Catch up on your letters this week. You could find out some important news from an interesting source. Keep it under your hat until the appropriate time. It will make a big impression.

LEO
July 23–August 23

A friend saddles you with a burdensome secret. Maintain their trust, but take steps to see that you're not taken advantage of. Try to bolster the ego of someone who's been having a rough time. You could earn their undying gratitude.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22

Exposure to new technology increases your value in the job market. Do your best to banish any fears and take all the instruction you can get. You could be in line for an interesting proposition.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23

Although you're feeling prolifically creative, there simply aren't enough hours in the day to complete all your goals. Take copious notes, and you'll be able to come back to the less pressing projects. A friend could surprise you with a secret.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22

Keep your ears open and your mouth shut, or you could be caught in the middle of a violent disagreement. Although emotions are running high, with tact and humor, the storm could subside as quickly as it formed.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21

Dive into the nuts and bolts at work and you'll surprise yourself with your productivity. Don't allow a slick salesperson to talk you out of your hard-earned money. Make yourself step back and take a night or two to sleep on any big decisions.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20

A relationship could germinate from a quick acquaintance. Follow your instincts, but don't mistake loneliness for connection. Review your major goals; some of them may be a bit outdated.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18

Focus on tradition to add strength to a relationship. An emphasis on trust will foster growth as well. You may be ready to make a commitment. Make an effort to pay off any substantial debts you owe.

PISCES
February 19–March 20

Clarify yourself whenever you have a discussion this week to avoid a mixup. A volatile situation is ready to ignite, so take steps to shield yourself from the fallout. A back-up plan might be a good idea.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

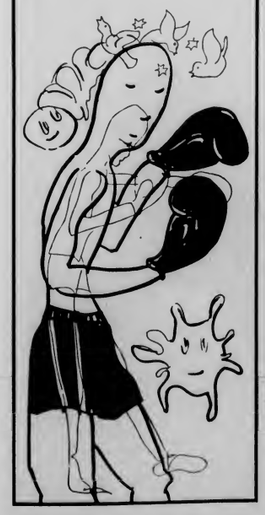
Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

I think I've found a cure for some of these infectious diseases. Follow me closely on this.

When germs go into our bodies they are not reading books. They are eating.



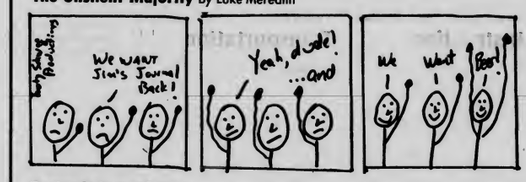
They're eating us.

Maybe on Wednesday they all gather 'round the liver, then on the following Monday thay start on the lungs.....

What if we offered them someting else to eat?....free.

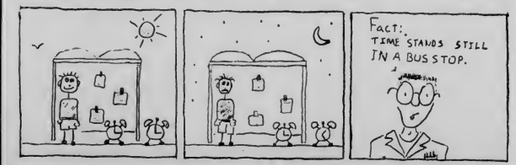
We lure them out of the body with an offer of.... let's say hamburgers .... tiny weeny hamburgers..... with infitesimally small pickles. When they come out, we throw 'em on the floor and step on 'em.

I haven't worked out all the details yet, but I feel very good about the basic concept.



University³ By Frank Cho

CALL (310) 537-7000 TO ORDER THE COMPLETE COLLECTION OF UNIVERSITY³ CARTOONS!



The Unsilent Majority By Luke Meredith

Bastards By Matt & Greg

My Observations By Kenneth W.P. Scott

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

To help them cope, many stay-at-home moms are turning to the new life-size T. Berry Brazelton doll.

Quote of the Day

"I'm discovering the secret of eternal happiness...Through process of elimination."

–Overheard

Forward of the Day

This is a transcript of an actual radio conversation between a US Naval Ship and Canadian authorities off the coast of Newfoundland in October 1995.

US SHIP: Please divert your course 0.5 degrees to the south to avoid a collision.

CANADIAN REPLY: Recommend you divert YOUR course 15 degrees to the South to avoid a collision.

US SHIP: This is the captain of the US Navy Ship. I say again, divert YOUR course.

CANADIAN REPLY: No, I say again, divert YOUR course!

US SHIP: THIS IS THE AIRCRAFT CARRIER USS MISSOURI. WE ARE A LARGE WARSHIP OF THE US NAVY. DIVERT YOUR COURSE NOW!!!

CANADIAN REPLY: This is a lighthouse. Your call.

Today's Staff

Mike Burke
Night Editor

Mark McGrath
Copy Editor

Kenneth W. P. Scott
Photo Technician

Josh Sylvester
Production Supervisor

Mark McGrath
Thang Vo
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH	DINNER
Tacos	Mandarin Chicken
Hamburger	Meatloaf
Hungarian Noodle Bake	Ratatouille
Compost Special	Krabbycake Sandwich

Hampshire

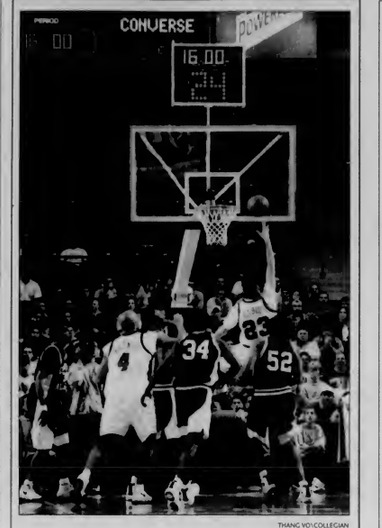
LUNCH	DINNER
Tacos	Mandarin Chicken
Hamburger	Meatloaf
Grilled Chicken Sandwich

Worcester

LUNCH	DINNER
Tacos	Mandarin Chicken
Ziti / Sausage Sauce	Garbanzo Bean & Rice
Veggie Taco	Provencal Pastabilities

Berkshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Tacos	Mandarin Chicken
Broccoli and Cauliflour Casserole	Meatloaf
Veggie Taco	Garbanzo Bean & Rice
	Provencal



Sports

UM out of Top 25 after two defeats

With Massachusetts's two losses in the Maui Invitational last week, the Minutemen have fallen out of the AP poll heading into Wednesday's rematch with Georgetown. A look at this week's Associated Press poll:

	Record	Pts	Prv
1. Kansas (58)	5-0	1,759	2
2. Wake Forest (12)	4-0	1,704	3
3. Utah (1)	3-0	1,572	4
4. Cincinnati	2-1	1,459	1
5. Villanova	3-0	1,442	5
6. Kentucky	3-1	1,370	8
7. Michigan	2-0	1,264	7
8. Indiana	4-0	1,206	20
9. Iowa St	2-0	1,175	9
10. Duke	3-1	1,013	6
11. New Mexico	5-0	954	19
12. Clemson	4-1	869	10
13. Fresno St.	4-0	837	15
14. North Carolina	2-1	831	14
15. Arizona	2-1	756	11
16. Minnesota	3-0	679	24
17. UCLA	0-1	662	13
18. Texas	2-0	612	18
19. Syracuse	3-1	462	12
20. Boston College	2-0	410	23
21. Tulsa	2-1	405	22
22. Arkansas	2-1	323	16
23. Xavier, Ohio	3-0	164	-
24. Stanford	2-1	154	21
25. Virginia	3-1	151	-

Others receiving votes: Louisville 109, Texas Tech 93, George Washington 71,Massachusetts 71, 7Providence 63, Marquette 58, Iowa 52, Georgetown 39, Temple 39, California 36, Illinois 28, Coll. of Charleston 23, Connecticut 21, Oral Roberts 20, South Carolina 19, Washington 14, Alabama 12, UNLV 12, Oregon 11, Rhode Island 8, Missouri 7, Penn St. 7, Evansville 5, Memphis 4, Nebraska 3, Purdue 3, Wisconsin 3, Bowling Green 2, Mississippi St. 2, Virginia Tech 2, Georgia Tech 1, Maryland 1, New Mexico St. 1, New Orleans 1, Southern Cal 1

THANG VO/COLLEGIAN

Mauled in Maui
After two straight losses, the Massachusetts men's hoop team prepare for Wednesday's rematch with Georgetown.

BU Terriers start off sluggish UNH rolls to Gov. Cup wins

Leigh Torbin on College Hockey

It seldom pains me to be the bearer of bad news out of Boston University, and since someone has to write this damn column, I'll just have to give it a shot.

Freshman Dan LaCouture, who had been skating strong at left wing on the Terriers' first line, decided to leave BU for unspecified reasons last week. He'll head off for Switzerland for this year's World Junior Championships (a team BU coach Jack Parker cut him from last year) and then decide where to go from there.

After signing early at BU, the two time Boston Globe All- Scholastic pick has reportedly had a strained relationship with Parker since being cut from last year's team USA squad. A native of Natick and long an international hockey enthusiast, LaCouture dreamed of playing for that team, and a lingering ill-will towards Parker from the cut is hardly inconceivable.

Additionally, LaCouture was not exactly an honor roll student at either Natick High or South Hadley High, where he spent the past two years while playing with the Junior Whalers. Rumors out of the BU bunker on Babcock Street are that the freshman's strong early play on the ice was the antithesis of his classroom work.

This in mind, some expect not to see LaCouture in scarlet after the New Year's tournament, but rather doning the sweater of a professional or Canadian junior team. His older brothers Bill (Chicago) and Dave (Detroit) each have NHL experience. LaCouture was selected early in the second round of last summer's NHL Entry Draft by the Islanders.

• So, how did the Terriers fare without LaCouture this past weekend? About as well as I did last weekend celebrating my 21st birthday, along with much of the day after.

Suffice to say, Parker was not pleased with his team's performance.

"We self destructed, I think," he said. "We have some upperclassmen that are not playing up to their abilities and I think we have to take a good, hard look at what happened this weekend.

"I'm concerned with the whole team's demeanor. They're banging sticks when they don't score goals and mouthing off to the officials when they don't like a call. It's inappropriate behavior, and it detracts from the focus we need to win.

"If it continues we have to make sure we are playing the right guys, even if it means going to two and a half lines. They have to play the game correctly or they won't play."

BU already had a lack of depth at forward, dressing seven defensemen for most games. Players like Chris Drury and Shawn Bates are legitimate All-American candidates, but the team's lower lines, which now must see more ice time, are nothing to write home about. Losing one of its top guns from the early going (six goals in 10 games) leaves a gap up front that was exploited by a pair of ECAC teams.

Friday night the proud Terriers were shutout 2-0 by St. Lawrence at Appleton Arena. The Skating Saints are a fair team, mind you but not exactly the kind one would expect to blank BU in the regular season for the first time since Feb. 24, 1984 by a team other than Maine. Chris Terreri was in goal for Providence that night for crying out loud!

Twenty-four hours later, the Terriers found themselves in Potsdam facing Clarkson, being slain 4-1 by the Golden Knights.

If you thought this is uncharacteristic, try a combined 75 Terrier penalty minutes in the two games, officiated by non- Hockey East refs. Saturday alone Shane Johnson drew a fighting major, while Drury and Mike Sylvia were assessed 10-minute misconducts for arguing with the officials.

Parker, as he alluded to in the quote above, can not stand a lack of discipline and as if a bus ride to Beantown from the outer reaches of upstate New York wasn't already long enough...

BU now travels to Yale Friday without Johnson, who's suspended due to Saturday's fight, John Hynes, who's out until January with a neck injury and Chris Kelleher, who suffered a severe right knee bruise on Saturday.

The Terriers' anticipated tumble in this week's poll is expected to be longer than that bus ride down the Turnpike from Stockbridge to Boston.

• The Governor's Cup (aka the We'll-never-be-able-to-recruit-as-well-as-the-Boston-schools-so-let's-start-our-own-stinkin'-version-of-the-Beanpot), and with it the new Beast of the East crown, now lies in Durham, N.H.

UNH ran wild in what has been dubbed the "Northern New England Beanpot," beating Vermont 8-6 on its home ice and Maine 7-2 in the final. At 11-2, UNH is ready to assume the position of No. 2 in the nation behind No. 1 Michigan (13-1-1) which reassured its stranglehold on the top spot with it's 4-3 win over Minnesota Friday.

Leigh Torbin is a Collegian columnist.

Patriots near playoff berth

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO — December couldn't have dawned much brighter for the New England Patriots.

On the first day of a month when playoff berths are decided, they beat San Diego with one of their most dominating performances in years. Coach Bill Parcells gave his players the second and third days off.

On the fourth day, tomorrow, they begin preparations for the eighth day when they almost certainly will clinch a playoff berth. They'll play the New York Jets, who have football's worst record. Not a bad start to a month that could end with the Patriots enjoying a first-round bye on the final weekend. After all, they have a 9-4 regular-season December record in four years under Parcells.

"All of a sudden, we're not fighting for the wild card," Patriots offensive tackle Bruce Armstrong said, "we're fighting for the division. It's a new experience and a new position and I think we can get used to it."

It was a good day for the Patriots even before Sunday night's 45-7 win over the Chargers, who were coming off a 28-14 win over Kansas City and, at 7-5, needed a win more than New England. Buffalo, Pittsburgh and Miami — all jockeying for AFC playoff position — already had lost.

New England, Buffalo and Pittsburgh are 9-4, but the Patriots have the best conference record of the three. They also lead the AFC East with a better division record than the Bills.

"We felt Buffalo [losing] opened the door and let us in and we had to win this game," special teams star Larry Whigham said. Parcells "said we've got to be ready and we can't fall off against the Jets next week. All we have to do is close the door behind us."

If the Patriots beat the Jets, they'll finish with a 9-3 AFC record which would give them the edge in any tiebreaker involving that. Every AFC team except Denver and New England already has four conference losses.

"You couldn't ask for more than this," quarterback Drew Bledsoe said after throwing four touchdowns to four different receivers. "To have control of your own destiny is what we wanted, and now we have it."

In their first 36 seasons, the Patriots had just 11 playoff games and only one, on the last day of Dec. 1978, was at home. They lost 31-14 to Houston.

If they maintain their current position, second to Denver among the playoff contenders, they would begin the playoffs at home on the first weekend in January.

The Patriots have rebounded from their worst game of the season, a 34-8 loss to the Broncos, with convincing wins over Indianapolis (27-14) and at San Diego.

"We played as badly as a team can play against Denver," said cornerback Otis Smith, who had one of the Patriots four interceptions against the Chargers. "I think we've made up for some of that now."

New England led 31-7 at halftime and scored on offense, defense and special teams. Fumbles by quarterback Stan Humphries and punt returner Brian Still ended in touchdowns by Willie McGinest and Corwin Brown.

"I don't think I've ever been involved in a game where every part of the team did something to win," Brown said.

Even the Patriots were stunned by the extent of their domination.

"None of us could have imagined this," McGinest said. "I had no idea it would be like this," said Chris Slade, who forced the fumble McGinest returned. "But we just made all kinds of plays."

Despite Sunday night's performance that included six turnovers and six sacks, the Patriots defense has been inconsistent. But with the big lead, it could focus on San Diego's passing.

The Patriots overtook Denver and Green Bay and lead the NFL with 27.3 points per game.

And their remaining schedule — one of the easiest among AFC playoff contenders — includes the Jets, Dallas and the New York Giants.

December could get even better.

"The more we play together, the better we're going to get," said Whigham, who forced the fumble Brown scored on. "I know you haven't seen our best yet."

Bearcats set for Jayhawks

By Rick Gano
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Cincinnati's time as No. 1 didn't last long. The Bearcats had no sooner adjusted to the exalted position than they were beaten by Xavier in their second game.

Now, instead of being the nation's top-ranked college basketball team, the Bearcats get to play No. 1.

They face Kansas in Wednesday's final game of the Great Eight, an elite field featuring seven of last spring's top eight finishers from the NCAA tournament.

"I'd rather play them the last game in March," said Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins, whose team is now ranked fourth.

"Kansas is terrific. I've thought all along they were the best team in the country."

The Jayhawks (5-0) shook off jet lag after winning the Maui Invitational to beat San Diego for their fifth straight victory Sunday.

They're off to their fast start even though star guard Jacque Vaughn is sidelined with a broken wrist. Vaughn is probably out until January but coach Roy Williams said Monday there's a slim possibility he could be back at the end of this month.

"The pressure we will face against Cincinnati will tell us where we stand," Williams said.

"I don't think No. 1 really means anything. If it was the first time we've been ranked that would be way more significant... Moving up to No. 1 is just another target on our back. We haven't talked about it to the team or as a staff at all."

The tournament begins Tuesday night at the United Center with Mississippi State (2-1) facing second-ranked Wake Forest (4-0); Purdue (2-1) meets travel weary and No. 6 Kentucky (3-1) in the second game.

The defending national champion Wildcats flew to Chicago after winning the Great Alaska Shootout, arriving Monday with little sleep.

"We can't use that as an excuse," said Wildcats coach Rick Pitino.

On Wednesday night, Georgetown (which took a 3-0 record into a game against Seton Hall on Monday) faces Massachusetts (1-2) before Cincinnati (2-1) and Kansas meet.

Mississippi State made the Final Four last spring but has five new starters.

"I'm not sure that we're not playing the role of sacrificial lamb," said Mississippi State coach Richard Williams. "I wish I had last year's team. We don't."

State goes against Wake Forest center Tim Duncan, who is developing his perimeter game this season in preparation for the NBA.

"I wanted him to expand his game out on the floor more defensively than offensively. I wanted him to be able to go out on the floor and guard people, which I think has been a weakness for him," said Wake coach Dave Odom.

Purdue, the three-time defending Big 10 champion, was upset by Bowling Green.

Heads Up Hoop Fans!

The definitive guide of the 1996–1997 men's and women's basketball teams, The Collegian hoop preview, comes out Thursday, Dec. 5. Check it out for profiles and predictions.

HUI GAO/COLLEGIAN

Shout at the Devil!
The hockey team looks to flame the Friars of Providence College this weekend in a home and home series.

U Magazine
The National Collegiate Magazine

U, with an audience of 6.6 million, is the most widely read lifestyle and entertainment magazine among 18- to 34-year-old college-educated young adults. Editorial content focuses on the diverse interests, activities, attitudes and concerns of students attending four-year colleges and universities. U's constant editors, selected each year from top graduating seniors, read campus newspapers, commission original articles and photographs by the best student journalists, and maintain an ongoing dialogue via the Internet and U's own line with students at hundreds of campuses nationwide.

PUBLISHER & EDITORIAL DIRECTOR
1991-1996
Gayle Morris Sweetland
PUBLISHER & EDITOR
Hanlen Huffman
ASSOCIATE EDITOR
Colleen Rush · Bucknell U '95
ASSISTANT EDITORS
Carrie Bell · Humboldt State U '96
Melissa Gerlo · U of Michigan '96
Amy Helmes · Xavier U '96
James Herbert · U of Texas, Austin '96
ART DIRECTOR
Dave Dreja
ADVISORY COUNCIL
Dr. David I. Adams · Indiana U
W.B. Carey · U of Iowa
Dr. Jan T. Childress · Texas Tech U
Monk Crayton · U of Southern California
Mark Goodman · Student Press Law Center
Dr. Les Hyder · Eastern Illinois U
Kathy Lawrence · U of Texas, Austin
Richard C. Little · Southern Methodist U
Lesley Mariello · Nicholls State U
Dr. Frank Rackley · Oregon State U
Dr. J. David Reed · Eastern Illinois U
Lou Ransick · Associated Collegiate Press
Richard Scarpetti · Past President, CMA
Martha Sprog · Michigan State U
Chuck Stone · U of North Carolina
Laura Wermer · Northern Missouri St. U

ADVERTISING SALES OFFICES
Main Office
Director of Sales & Mktg. · Alexy Goldfein
1900 Century Park East Suite 820,
Los Angeles, CA 90067
Tel: (310) 551-1581
FAX: (310) 551-1659 or 552-0836
New York
U Magazine, 170 E. 61st St., Suite 400
New York, NY 10021
Tel: (212) 980-2800 · FAX (212) 980-2811
Jerry Kanarvon, Eastern Advertising Director
Carole Rinston, Eastern Mktg. Services Mgr.
Midwest & Detroit
Joe Gentner, Peter Guenther
Tel: (312) 335-9001 · FAX (312) 335-4578
Dallas
Phil Gant, Nancy Wilson
Tel: (214) 991-4994 · FAX (214) 991-4995
San Francisco/Pacific Northwest
Peter K. Doyle
Tel: (415) 777-4383 · FAX (415) 777-4385
Entertainment Ad Director
Patricia Goyette
Tel: (310) 846-7808 · FAX (310) 841-6607
American Collegiate Network, Inc.
President · Maria Sperton
Vice President · Thomas F. Mitchell
Vice President · Patty Perry
Operations Director · Kevaleen Ryan
Circulation Manager · Traci Matthews-Herbert
Assistant Controller · Marietty Mercado
Receptionist · Rina Singh

Web site: http://www.umagazine.com
E-mail: Editor: editor@umagazine.com
Ant: Editors: editor@umagazine.com
Advertising: advert@umagazine.com
Contests: contests@umagazine.com
Circulation: circ@umagazine.com

U is published nine times a year and printed in the U.S.A. on recyclable paper. Subscriptions are $18. Copyright © 1996 U Magazine and The National Collegiate Magazine are registered trademarks of American Collegiate Network, Inc. All Rights Reserved.

Please recycle U

ABC

December 1996

U. VIEWS
4 U. Mail, editorial cartoons and (shocker) more poll questions.

QUICKIES
5 Fat-, sugar- and cholesterol- free campus anecdotes.

U. NEWS
6 Buy four years of undergrad education, get your master's in a fifth year for free. Read all about Clark U.'s too-good-to-be-true offer. Or find out how to slam your professors — and get away with it! And, as always, we've got Bits & Bytes, The Buzz on campus and a girl and her dogs' 15 Minutes of fame.

U. LIFE
10 Home / Give Me a Break
Going home for the holidays means more than clean laundry and home-cooked meals. It means curfews, chores and family-bonding time. Are you ready to regress?

10 Class / Staying Power
Whether it's homesickness, school-sickness or just plain burn-out, some freshman won't survive their first year. Find out what schools are doing to keep the freshman spirit alive.

11 Dollars / Scholarship Scam
Take your grandpa's advice: You can't get somethin' fer nothin'. Some students are learning that the hard way after scholarship companies reel them in with false scholarship promises. Don't be the next little fish to fall hook, line and sinker.

11 Etc. / Big Returns on Crime Prevention
You might feel safe in that big academic bubble you've built around yourself, but campus crime is increasing everywhere. It's a big, bad world out there — find out what some campuses are doing to protect their students from it.

COVER STORY
14 Have Change, Will Travel
Pop quiz, wise guy. How much money does it take to travel around the world? More money than you'll ever have? WRONG! Check out our tips for cheap trips and find out how to stretch your meager travel budget. Plus, we've got the scoop on the new hip, happenin' places to travel. Bon marché voyage!

FEATURES
16 The Grade Debate
Since when does an "A" stand for average? According to some grade hounds, the meaning of an "A" ain't what it used to be. Others argue that us students are just getting smarter. Find out what all the grade inflation fuss is about.

20 Back to Schoolhouse Rock
Retro-madness doesn't stop at frosted lipstick or Scooby Doo lunch boxes. Yes, that's right. Your favorite Saturday morning sing-a-long session is making a comeback. Go ahead. Put on those footie pajamas and rock out with the Schoolhouse gang.

R + R
18 Rock
The last and latest from Blind Melon, plus Pocket Band, Our Picks and the U. radio chart.

19 Reel
Hollywood's last-ditch efforts to woo Oscar, plus Reel Deal and a Screen Saver on John Cleese's "equal" to A Fish Called Wanda.

22 Contests
Wanna win big money? Turn to our world-famous contests page now! And find out what little student Grinches want with U. Magazine's annual Holiday Gift Wish List.

WRAP
23 Exit: Stage Dive
Getting felt-up at a concert by a stranger isn't that unusual. But what if that stranger is a hairy, 350-pound security guy? Maximum security isn't an uncommon sight at most concerts these days.

GUEST EXPERTS: Beavis and Butt-Head

Alienated, obtuse, brooding, inarticulate — these are just a few of the adjectives that leap to mind when contemplating our December Guest Experts, Beavis and his longtime socialist companion Butt-head. The iconoclastic duo have been deconstructing bourgeois sensibilities every week on the avant-garde MTV. Following in the tradition of Un Chien Andalou, this month the auteurs offer un-expurgated discourse on our postmodern condition in Beavis and Butt-Head Do America.

Cover Photo by Michael Palmieri, Penn State U.

There's one born every minute.
Page 11

Hitch-free cheap travel plans.
Page 14

Where we all learned to love our grammar.
Page 20

Campus Shots

An ad for Tide? Nope, just boys being boys at James Madison U.

Photo by Melissa Palladino, James Madison U.

U. VIEWS

Miles From Home

Your music reviewers are morons. Fire 'em. In October's "Our Picks," it's written, "An audiophile's dream come true, this six-CD set rocks a jazz-lover's world with Davis' smooth sax solos and...." It would be news to me and to him if Miles Davis played the saxophone.

Paul Brown, graduate student, U. of California, Berkeley

Thanks to Paul and the bazillion other jazz lovers out there who blew the horn on our faux pas. Davis played the trumpet. It was a big mistake that should have been caught, and those responsible will be severely tortured in ways too gruesome to be described. —ed

Kudos

I think your magazine is great. It's always nice to get it with the school paper and read about interesting things going on at other campuses. The October issue had some very interesting, funny tidbits. I enjoyed at least seven of those Quickies, among the other info in the magazine, like the Buzz and Bits and Bytes and so on. Very cool stuff!

Angie F., junior, U. of Kentucky

Politics as Usual

The cover story "Most Likely to Succeed: The Clinton and Dole College Years" (Oct. 1996) was unbelievably slanted towards the liberals. The article attracted my attention because I wanted to know the facts behind their college years, not an editorial biased toward Democrats. The two "pull quotes" and the Hillary/Elizabeth comparisons are prime examples of the obvious slant in political view. If someone is out to slam Republicans, do it in an editorial, not a cover story.

Chris Wu, junior, U. of Texas, Austin

You forgot one important detail in Bill Clinton's "The Boring Stuff" box. He helped pass the largest tax increase in U.S. history in 1993. I think this fact should have been noted for a fair portrayal of him. Remember that he can propose anything he wants to get elected. It doesn't mean he'll do it.

Sarah Longenecker, freshman, Bradley U., Ill.

Teed Off About TAs

Your article "The Trouble with TAs" (Oct. 1996) had a very good point. College students are being taught by people with no training to teach. However, it does not apply just to TAs. What makes you think that faculty members have been trained to teach? It's likely that your second-grade teacher had more education training than your last biochemistry professor.

M. W. Murray, doctoral student, New Mexico State U.

As a fifth-semester junior, I have had many TAs who were just as good as the professors. In fact, the TA for one of my theory classes is a bit more open-minded than the professor for my other theory class. The TA allows us to voice our opinions, and he gives us feedback.

Darcia Scates, junior, Penn State U.

Mixed grades for your story "The Trouble With TAs." I think your article should he commended for helping to publicize the fact that grad students are generally not given very much (if any) training. But the sad truth is that "substandard" teaching takes place just as often, if not more often, with professors at the head of the class as with TAs. Instead of talking about "under*trained* TAs and start rewarding excellence in teaching — both monetarily and with respect — as much as in research. Then college students would get the high-quality teaching they deserve (and pay an arm and a leg for).

Harel Barzilai, graduate student, Cornell U.

Missing Melvin

I appreciated the somewhat simplified overview of black action films ["Nothin' but an O.G. Thang," Sept. 1996]. However, I have a problem with the complete exclusion of the work of Melvin Van Peebles, the man who practically invented the genre. As for the top 10 "Black List," whose idea was it to include "Slaughter," "Cleopatra Jones" and "I'm Gonna Git You Sucka"? You've got to be kidding me! Any list of essential blaxploitation films that doesn't include "Dolemite," "Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song," "The Mack" or "Superfly" automatically declares itself invalid. Do your research next time.

"Lightning" Bob Flasty, senior, Southern Illinois U., Carbondale

Are U For Real?

The article on Bill Clinton and Bob Dole in the October U. was interesting, well-balanced and thorough. I tip my hat to U. Frances Huffman and the rest of the U staff. As the editorial director of a magazine named U., U are the only publisher to whom I can imagine making this initial proposal: since "U" is now an optional, alternative spelling for "you" in the Random House dictionaries, since "U" is a hip spelling, and since "U" is in keeping with U., consider spelling it that way in future issues. Yes, it's something of a crazy suggestion, but if U mull it over, U'll see that it's not that crazy after all. The spelling of contractions (U're, U'll, U've, U'd) is a simple matter and is being done in various other quarters. Otherwise, I can't think of any logistical obstacles. Thank U.

Joe Little, managing director, American Literacy Council

Serving Justice

The story "Justice For All?" (Nov. 1996] stated, "...judicial boards aren't required to provide students with the rights afforded by due process...." While private colleges and universities aren't required to provide due process rights covered by the Constitution, public schools are required to provide minimal due process rights, not including the right to counsel.

U. Polls

Ever been fired?

Are you a smoker?

800/6U-VIEW (688-4397)

Holidays with the family: cheers or tears?

Cheers: 78%
Tears: 22%

Holidays with my family are a d... inite cheers, because they are t... greatest supporters, and the fo... totally rocks! Anonymous

See related story and more poll responses on page 10.

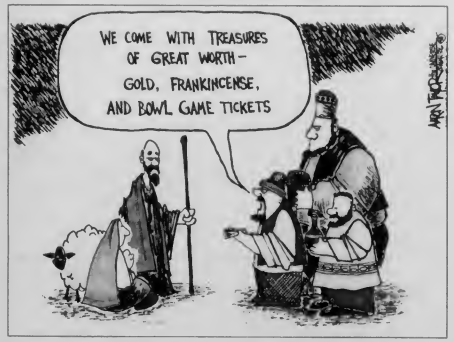
Friends Indeed

When I fell upon free tickets to a taping of Friends, I decided to put my cynicism about that show on the shelf and check it out.

Upon arriving at the studio, blue-blazered employees corralled my fellow assistant editors and me into a line of 170 people. We waited among the mini-backpack-toting, tiny-T-shirt-wearing, trendy-plastic-lunchbox crowd for two hours.

Finally, a towering Swedish woman told us we weren't going to make it in. The blazer brigade gave us coupons to a third-rate Mexican restaurant and shooed us away, telling us we could return later that evening to possibly see the last half of the taping.

So we left to drown our sorrows in margaritas and torment our digestive systems for a while. We returned to the studio only to see most of the cast acting like prima donnas. The knowledge that these six people were making five times my yearly salary in five hours twisted like a dagger in my already upset stomach.



During breaks in the action, the studio audience salivated like greedy swine over the chance to win Friends paraphernalia like Frisbees and mirrored compacts. Two girls in front of us used hand signals to convey their phone numbers to Matthew Perry. Need I go on?

I know I have a bad attitude about the ordeal. It's just that no one told me life was gonna be this way (clap-clap-clap-clap). But not all was lost. What the experience revealed about "friends" is that real ones are often around the corner. We easily bonded and eventually went to dinner with Steve and Annie — the only two people behind us in line that day. Real friends are just everyday folks who don't dance in fountains, start hair trends or frame their peepholes.

By Amy Helmes, Assistant Editor

Illustration by Aaron Taylor, Brigham Young U.

QUICKIES

Illustrations by Chad Strawderman, U. of Arizona

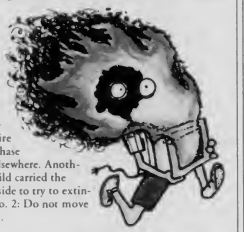
MELLOW OUT
Eastern Illinois U.

Throwing marshmallows may not seem like a capital offense, but the tuba players are getting pissed. Security has been increased at Eastern football games after fans started throwing marshmallows into the marching band's tubas. Several perpetrators were caught, stripped of their student IDs and ejected from the game. Now they face a $50 fine. Next time, try s'mores.

GOT MILK?
Brigham Young U.

Glow Marsha gives it up — big time — and she really knows how to please her man. The three-year-old Holstein is the pride and joy of BYU after setting the national lactation record last year. Glow Marsha produced 5,466 gallons of milk in 365 days. That's 15 gallons a day for you English majors. We think they should rechristen her Flow Glow.

TACO HALL
U. of Nebraska, Lincoln



When one classroom building at Nebraska closed for asbestos removal, most of the classes were moved to other buildings. But five homeless classes were relegated to the local Taco Inn. The former Mexican fast-food restaurant, which had been sitting empty, is now serving up tests instead of tacos, and no, there's no drive-thru or takeout. Despite the faint smell of refried beans, classes are proceeding normally until a new space can be found. Would you like hot or mild sauce with those credits?

ALL IN A DAY'S WORK
Colorado State U.

Student body president Joe Urban gets our "Above and Beyond the Call of Duty" award. This guy's a martyr. First, he was kidnapped, gagged and handcuffed by a group of students in pantyhose masks. He was held hostage until he agreed to ask administrators to allow concerts on the Student Center plaza. Two weeks later, Urban's head was shaved by rival U. of Colorado, Boulder's student president after CSU's football team lost to CU. Urban now sports a mohawk. Of course, we can't tell if Urban is crusading for truth, justice and the American way, or if he's just an incredible ham. Either way, he's got our vote.

BURN-OUTS
U. of West Florida

College is supposed to be a place where you use your brain, right? Somebody oughtta tell that to the student at West Florida who accidentally torched a cafeteria microwave by heating food wrapped in aluminum foil. Lesson No. 1: Aluminum foil in microwave = no-no. Campus police responded to the fire alarm but had to chase down the flames elsewhere. Another student brainchild carried the micro-inferno outside to try to extinguish it. Lesson No. 2: Do not move flaming appliances.

THE DUH FACTOR

The U.S. General Accounting Office reports that tuition at four-year public colleges and universities increased 234 percent between the 1980–81 and 1994–95 school years. That's three times more than the measly 82 percent increase in the median household income. Its conclusion about the increase? "Many students and their families have borrowed more to finance the cost of college." Duh. And it took researchers to figure that one out?

SUNNY DAYS AT SCRANTON
U. of Scranton, Pa.

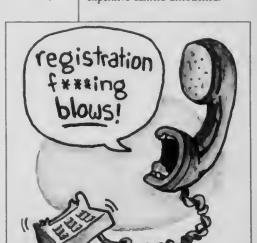
Kermit's commencement address at Long Island U. must have started a trend. Another Sesame Street veteran is serving as a visiting professor at Scranton. Loretta M. Long, who played Susan (Gordon's wife) on Sesame Street, is teaching an undergrad course on multicultural education. She teaches the course using old tapes of the show. Students reportedly sit cross-legged on the classroom floor, eat PB&J with the crusts cut off and guess which person is doing their own thing. Only students who take the prerequisite course, Fuzzy Muppet Creatures 101, are eligible for Long's class, which is sponsored by the number "12" and the letter "W."

FOOD FLIGHT
U. of West Florida

Don't get mad — throw condiments? A West Florida student was a tad peeved to find that her room had been burglarized, so she decided to vent her anger. Campus police apprehended her after students in the courtyard below her window noticed it was raining condiments. The burglary victim was seen chucking bottles and sugar packets from her window. Looney as her actions may be, the woman is consistent. Dorm residents saw her pouring syrup on the stairs earlier in the day, and her previous violent outbursts included breaking a coffeepot over her body.

SMALL-TIME BACKPACK BANDIT
U. of Georgia

A thief is leaving a northbound trail across the U. of Georgia's campus. He steals unattended backpacks, then leaves them in place of the next ones he nabs, carving a traceable path from south campus to north campus buildings. The thief leaves the backpacks with all valuables — except cash — inside. But he might want to revise his not-so-lucrative stealing strategy. He robbed one TA of her change purse, which contained a whopping 75 cents, and left her expensive camera untouched.



GO, CHEESERACER, GO
West Virginia U.

Freshman engineering students at West Virginia can have their design projects and eat them, too. The 45 students were asked to build small cars capable of cruising down an incline. Piece of cake, you say? The cars also had to be (gulp) edible. Students turned in everything from a bell pepper with pepperoni wheels to a block of cheese with Oreo cookie wheels. And the professor was serious about the edible part — students who couldn't stomach their projects would receive no grade. Does that mean that engineers are what they eat?

KARATE CHOPIN
U. of New Mexico

He was kung fu fighting, but not fast as lightning. A UNM student was accosted in a men's restroom by a man claiming to know martial arts. The robber, who was carrying a concealed weapon, demanded the student's money, but was miffed to find out his victim had only $1.50. After such a letdown, the karate kid turned in his white belt, hoping for a more lucrative future in piano playing. The Beethoven bandit headed for a piano practice room in the building, where he tickled the ivory until his arrest.

IF YOU'RE PISSED, PRESS ONE
Florida State U.

A student at Florida truly reached out and touched someone. Frustrated by the phone registration process, the clever student hacked into the registrar's voice mail and changed the message. Subsequent students who called to register for classes heard this message on the other end: "If you're calling with questions about registration, then you probably already know that registration f—king blows. My advice to you would be to transfer to another school."

U.NEWS

Fifth-Year Freebie

ASK COLLEGE FRESHMEN EMBARKING ON FOUR years of higher education if they'd like to take five and you'll get a resounding "No!" It's not surprising, considering the cost of tuition, books, room and board.

But some motivated students are saying "Yes!" to five years. If students earn their undergrad degrees in four years at Clark U., Mass., or Lehigh U., Pa., they can get their master's in a fifth — and the universities will pick up the tab.

Too good to be true? There's a catch. Students need a 3.25 overall GPA to be eligible for Clark's program and a 3.5 for Lehigh's. Still, "fifth year for free" programs get students a master's degree for the price of a bachelor's — in less time, since graduate degrees are completed in one year instead of two.

"We believe the incentive of a tuition-free fifth year will motivate students to earn the necessary grades," says Timothy Boulay, media relations officer at Clark.

Fifth-year Clark student Laura Oriente, who's earning an MBA, says it's worth it for the savings. "I would never have pursued a master's if it hadn't been for this program."

According to Boulay, students save $23,000 in tuition, room and board for the sixth year they won't need, and $19,600 in waived tuition for the fifth year. Eighteen students took the university's offer this year.

The value exceeds mere tuition dollars, says Jody Bernstein, a master's candidate at Clark. "A high school diploma used to be the most important thing, but now you need a master's to get most jobs."

Lehigh U., whose tuition also nears $20,000, used Clark's program as a model. Seventy-one students enrolled in it this school year.

Julie Farrah, a Lehigh neuroscience student, took the extra year to decide what to do with her life. "You'd be crazy to pass that up," she says.

By Michele Besso, U. of Delaware/Illustration by J. Thurston, Auburn U., Ala.

What a bargain...

Reporting For Class, Sir!

U.S. ARMY CAPT. RICH STEELE WAS IN charge of 125 men in an airborne division this time last year. Now, as a graduate student at Marshall U. in West Virginia, Steele takes orders from a 20-year-old editor at the Daily Parthenon.

"Coming out of a command environment, being on a subordinate level, is a big change," Steele says.

Steele, along with Michelle Martin, Stanford Angion, Kit Kassela and Jeffrey Dean, is going back to school as part of an Army re-education program. After eight years, U.S. Army duty officers are assigned a functional area — the five at Marshall are training to be public affairs officers — and receive graduate training at universities across the country.

Martin says the return to academia was a big adjustment. It's been eight years since she graduated from Youngstown State U., Ohio, with a bachelor's in communications.

"I feel considerably older, like a fish out of water," she says. "It's hard getting back in the niche of being a student."

Angion doesn't feel out of place, but he says school is different this time around.

"It's a great opportunity to do things I never got to do as an undergrad," he says. "The big difference now is that this is my job, and I know I'll be back in the Army soon."

Journalism professor Richard Turner, who has had all five captains as students, says their Army background helps everyone involved.

"They are some of the very best students. They upgrade the level of the class, promote good discussion and come prepared."

Steele says before he came to Marshall, he was one of the media's biggest critics.

"I was always complaining about the spin the media puts on issues like politics. School has really helped us understand First Amendment rights and the role they play in democracy. It gave me a new perspective — the media is not the enemy, but part of the big picture of society."

By Rob Hart, U. of Southern California/ Photo by Rick Haye, Marshall U., W.Va.

A few good students...

For Kids' Sake

EVER WONDER HOW YOU BREAK INTO SHOW biz? Just pick up the phone and call. At least that's how it happened for California State U., Los Angeles, senior Maria "Cida" Goncalves, who scored a deal to organize and direct a public service announcement for UNICEF.

The road to stardom started as an assignment for a broadcasting class. Goncalves called various nonprofit organizations to volunteer her cinematography skills. Her third call led her to UNICEF, a division of the United Nations that helps children all over the world.

"I can't believe I did it," Goncalves says. "Most students would never have a chance to do this kind of work. It was far beyond what my professors expected. One said it was like graduate level work."

After a flurry of letters, outlines and "begging calls," she gathered enough volunteers and equipment to impress UNICEF officials in New York and Los Angeles.

"Her work is very good ... was very well-qualified," ... Dominique Ransay, a UNI... development officer who gets ... eral offers a day for volunteer ... jects of this magnitude.

Her background didn't hu... either. Goncalves worked as a ... host for six years with the Brazil... Consulate and spent a few weeks ... a foreign correspondent for th... 1996 Olympics. That was enoug... to catch the eye of companies lik... Kodak and General Motors, who... forked over sizable contributions ... the UNICEF project.

The donations helped, but the project wasn't easy, according to Goncalves. Despite some potential sponsors falling through and a ream of script changes, she finished the 60-second spot, which dramatizes some UNICEF programs and solicits donations.

"You have to know how to work with people, especially if they are doing it for free," she says.

That's easier said then done when you have two days to shoot 40 crew members to work with and a score of children — some of whom wouldn't let go of her legs — to direct.

The fruits of her labor aired this fall on Fox, ABC and NBC as well as on several independent and cable stations.

Girl on film.

By Darren Gabriel Brown, California State U., Los Angeles/Photo by Wayne Baldasso, CSULA

The Buzz

- The USA Group Loan Service, one of the largest student-loan administrators, released a study that shows that the typical student loan borrower now accumulates more than $10,000 in education debt. In 1996, the average Stafford loan balance was $10,146 for undergraduate students. That average is 15 percent higher than the 1995 balance of $8,858.

- Kent Ahrens, the trader responsible for losing $136.7 million in college investments for the Common Fund, agreed to plead guilty to one criminal charge of wire fraud and other civil charges. Ahrens also agreed never to work as a trader again and will pay $182,000 in restitution.

- College isn't just for 20-somethings anymore. A new study reports that the number of college students who are 40 or older doubled from 1970 to 1993. In 1970, students 40 and older made up 5.5 percent of enrollment. By 1993, that number had jumped to 11.2 percent, or 1.6 million 40-and-older students.

Breaking tradition

Students use any excuse to have a party.

Cricketfest, Southwest Texas State U. — Millions of crickets swarm campus every October, and students hold a festival to celebrate their arrival.

Beer Bike — Rice U., Texas — Every year teams of students compete in a bike race after chugging as much beer as possible. If that weren't enough, on the 13th of every month, students run naked through campus wearing only shaving cream for the Baker 13.

Turkey Bowling — North Idaho College — Near the end of November, students try to knock down two-liter bottles using a frozen turkey as the bowling ball. If they get a strike, they get to keep the tenderized turkey for Thanksgiving dinner. →

For a Good Class, Call...

"IF YOU WEAR A SHORT SKIRT, IT'S AN EASY 'A' in Professor Smith's class." "Professor Smith talks way too fast — perhaps to compensate for always being late."

Ouch! Did that hurt? Well, as examples from the Slam Tables, they're supposed to.

At the U. of Texas, Austin, students don't rely on word of mouth or student evaluations to spread the word on teacher performance. Rather, the Slam Tables are set up on campus during registration periods to aid students in choosing their courses.

"They represent a very coarse means of feedback ... but they do give a very direct and unfiltered view of student reactions," says astronomy professor Craig Wheeler, who once found "Wheeler is God" written on the tables.

Covered with butcher paper and divided into education subjects, the tables serve as an anonymous forum for those wishing to write uncensored editorial about their classes. But believe it or not, some professors are less than enthusiastic. Roderick Hart, a professor of communication, says he has several reasons for not reading the tables.

"One, I see these messages as privileged communication among students. Two, I don't have much respect for anonymous commentary. And three, I'm told the Slam Tables are horrifically negative," he says. "For what it's worth, my colleagues who regularly read the Slam Tables are the most insecure people I know."

Communications junior Alan Densmore liked the tables so much, he launched an online version for a class project.

"This university is huge," Densmore says. "Maintaining a sense of community is essential to our spirit and our success."

Although he says student reaction has been uniformly positive, some professors who were trounced online didn't appreciate the tables' advancement into cyberspace.

"One said the page was a vehicle for defamation. Another said the information on the page was equivalent to writing on the bathroom wall," Densmore says.

Let's hope professors don't make their own Slam Tables.

Slamming, U. of Texas, Austin, style.

By James Hibberd, Assistant Editor / Photo by Kobbi Risser, U. of Texas, Arlington

Students to the Rescue

IT'S THURSDAY NIGHT, AND A COMPETENT MEDICAL team is working to stabilize a patient. No, it's not ER. It's EMERG, the new emergency response bike team at George Washington U.

The school has joined the ranks of almost 150 other universities with student-run emergency medical services on call to deal with anything from splinters to seizures.

"We are set up to get to the scene as quickly as possible," says junior Elan Waldman. "We can be there with most of the equipment that an ambulance has within about two minutes, whereas it can take an ambulance almost 20."

Syracuse U. also has a full-time ambulance team, made up of about 90 student volunteers. Like most other campus EMTs, the Syracuse volunteers undergo intensive life-support training and certification.

"The majority of our volunteers are not pre-med majors," says Syracuse senior Kelly Hirsch. "We have a whole slew of diverse students involved."

Hirsch says that in crisis situations, it's sometimes easier for the student ambulance squad to get information out of the victims, especially in cases involving alcohol. "I think it puts them at ease that we're students, too," she says.

The EMT group at Penn State U. responds to almost 600 emergency calls dispatched by campus police and the county 911 system each year.

Senior Matt Funderburk, who is applying to med school, says his experience with the campus EMT helps keep his skills sharp.

"The majority are alcohol- or drug-related calls, but we do see a lot of orthopedic injuries with sports," Funderburk says.

This week, saving lives — next week, the Tour de France!

Although George Washington's EMERG program isn't nearly as extensive as other universities' medical teams, students like sophomore Melissa Jaffe feel safer knowing the bike team is on call.

"It's great to know that the city's traffic won't halt emergency treatment anymore," she says.

By Jamie Harris, George Washington U./Photo by Dave Fintzen, George Washington U.

Two for One

WHEN GRADUATION ROLLS AROUND, students fret that they won't have enough tickets for all of their family and friends. But the U. of California, Davis, has a remedy and a celebration of ethnic diversity — all in one.

African-American, Chicano/Latino, Filipino and Native American students hold gatherings at some California schools to celebrate both heritage and graduation. The receptions don't replace traditional commencement — but they're open, so entire families can go.

"I feel it's significant because there are so few African-American students [at Davis]," says Leah Hoggins, a '96 Davis grad who helped organize the African-American celebration.

Although African-American students make up only 3.7 percent of the Davis student body, John Ortiz Hutson, retention coordinator at Davis, says 90 percent of its African-American students attend the ceremony. Activities range from guest speakers and entertainers to a gift exchange.

The Native American graduate ceremony at Davis lets students know they are moving from one phase of life to another, says Steven Crum, associate professor of Native American Studies. "Rites of passage are something Native Americans have carried out for generations."

Some people dispute the value of ethnic-specific celebrations. UC regent Ward Connerly led a campaign that helped to pass Proposition 209, which eliminated race- and gender-based policies in California. He questions the $11,300 that Davis allocated for the ceremonies last year.

Connerly told The California Aggie, "If we are in favor of an integrated society, how can we justify segregated events?"

Even if the UC system yanks funding for ethnic celebrations, participants say that they'll continue.

"The celebrations probably just won't be as elaborate," says Joaquin Galcan, staff adviser for the Davis Chicano/Latino celebration.

By Melissa Grego, Assistant Editor and Sean Scott, U. of California, Davis

U.LOSE

Tooting His Own Horn

On his student evaluations, Ohio U. finance professor Dwight Pugh garnered such praise as "Deserves to be a UP (university professor)-4-life" and "The greatest! Even better than I'd heard."

But Pugh's students didn't write the lavish acclaims. He did.

Pugh has admitted to falsifying his student evaluations, which leaves administrators in a delicate position. Students caught cheating on exams at Ohio U. are given an automatic "F" for academic misconduct. But what about professors cheating on their exams?

"I felt kind of embarrassed, considering this is a professor in my college," says senior Carrie Rundio. "And I was shocked, because a lot of people in my business fraternity talked highly of him."

Particularly mysterious is why Pugh would have falsified evaluations at all. Evaluations are used to decide faculty pay raises and tenure, but Pugh has been named university professor five times and runs a variety of businesses outside of his teaching job.

"The evaluation process has been corrupted by a need for the administration to have controls on faculty," says associate journalism professor Joe Bernt. "When I was a college student, evaluations were for students so they could know what teachers to avoid."

Pugh says he meant his doctored evaluations to work as a control group to check whether the student evaluation system of the College of Business was working properly.

Since Pugh didn't violate any university policies when he falsified the evaluations, which ranked him as one of the best-rated professors in the College of Business, he will continue to teach at the university.

Senior Keith Johns wanted to see Ohio U. make an example of the finance professor.

"It's ridiculous," he says. "If we cheated, it would be a big deal. He cheats, and he hasn't broken any rules."

By Jessica Wehrman, Ohio U.

Jumping Jack Fest — Northern Arizona U. — Students compete in traditional lumberjack activities like log rolling, ax throwing, pie eating, root beer chugging and human Chinese checkers.

Slope Day — Cornell U. — On the last day of class in the spring, about 5,000 students skip school and congregate on a huge slope in the middle of campus to celebrate in the usual student fashion.

Spree Day — Clark U., Mass. — On an unannounced spring morning, fire alarms go off in every dorm at 8 a.m. to start the festivities. Classes are canceled, and the entire campus spends the day partying.

Boar's Head Dinner — U. of Rochester, N.Y. — Medieval pageantry abounds at this traditional holiday dinner in December. The event is inspired by the ancient tale of a young philosophy student who warded off a dangerous wild boar by stuffing his book of knowledge down its throat. →

Byte me

Alter-Net Ego

FINALLY, MICE AROUND THE WORLD HAVE AN OPPORTUNITY TO roar. But these mice aren't of the white, fuzzy variety. They're students in chat rooms on the Internet. Three senior psychology students at Haverford College, Pa., are studying students on the Internet and finding that they're more bold and agressive than in real life.

Cara Kupperman, Julie Wolf and Michele Munoz are working on a research project addressing the social implications of the Internet, and they say there's a big discrepancy between personalities on screen and off.

"In general, an IRCer [Internet user] seems to take on an exaggerated persona to become the person that he/she wouldn't otherwise be for fear of rejection," Kupperman says.

Kupperman describes people she has met in what she calls "RL," or real life, as less flirtatious than they are online, as well as less bold.

"One of the aspects [of the Internet] that we found most fascinating was the amount of anonymity and the ability to re-create oneself by choosing an alternate mode of self-expression," Munoz says.

The students have found themselves at the forefront of Internet study. "We've found nothing in terms of past research on Internet use, but there's tons of research going on now, so there will be a big boom in research in a year or so," Wolf says.

Doug Davis, adviser for the project and professor of psychology, says the students are studying the personality differences among IRCers as a way to figure out what the Internet does for and to them.

The trio's hypothesis is that a certain type of person is drawn to spend a lot of time on the Internet. Although they're still in the early stages of the project and won't know the outcome of their study until the spring, Wolf says they have two theories about the personality type of the frequent IRCer: It could either be an introvert who doesn't like face-to-face interaction, or someone who seeks constant interaction and uses the Internet when there's no one to interact with.

Just think how Cyrano de Bergerac could have worked a chat room.

By Sherri Eisenberg, James Madison U., Va. / Illustration by Jeff Nelson, Moorhead State U., Minn.

World Wide Wake

FIRST THERE WERE DRIVE-THRU FUNERALS. THEN TALKING HI stones. What's next: Funerals on the Internet? Absolutely! T latest craze to hit the bereavement business is an online serv that allows mourners to pay their respects via their personal comput

"Some people may be hesitant to the idea at first, but this isn't something I intended to insult ple's traditions," says Jack Martin, president of Simplex Knowledge Co. and cyberfuneral devel

Here's how it works: A digital camera hooked up to a PC sends live pics of the funeral serv online viewers. Cybermourners can view the images, "chat" with other mourners and even click on icons to send flowers, shiva baskets and sympathy cards.

Ed Cosgrove, owner of Cosgrove and Sons Funeral Home in New Jersey, says he plans to offer the cyberfuneral service.

"This isn't just another fad, like the drive-up funerals, because it's done with taste," he says. "What if someone lives in Australia and someone they know dies in the U.S., but he can't afford to come here? This gives people contact with friends and family during a very sad time."

Patricia Dixon, funeral director for Abbey Funeral Home in Tallahassee, Fla., says she has mixed emotions about the cyberfuneral.

"On one side, I can see the excitement," Dixon says. "But for many people, funerals have very firm traditions, and trying to broadcast something like that on the Internet might violate their sense of dignity."

Buying the whole cyberfuneral setup costs $6,500, but it can be rented for $295 per day.

Computer science major Craig Paxton, a sophomore at the U. of Miami, predicts that cyberfuneral profits will go through the roof.

"If people will go for cybersex, how could they turn down a cyberfuneral?" he says.

By Adam Miller, Florida State U. / Illustration by Seth Thompson, James Madison U., Va.

Sites for Sore Eyes

1. Pee-Wee Worship Page
http://www.seanet.com/Users/wezel/playhse.html
Today's secret word is funky Web site. AAAAHHHHH!

2. Center for Online Addiction http://www.pitt.edu/~ksy/
Online help for those addicted to the 'net. Isn't life ironic?

3. The Court of Last Resort
http://www.sandbox.net
Judge real small-claims cases without that annoying Doug Llewellynn.

4. Mr. Cranky Rates the Movies http://internet-plaza.net/zone/mrcranky/
No movie escapes the wrath of this student cynic.

5. Seusaville
http://www.randomhouse.com/seusville
Cooli Hipi Better than Cat in the Hat nip!

Bits & Bytes

• Don't get mad; get into their Web site. Defendants in a Swedish hacker case broke into the CIA's Web site and renamed it the Central Stupidity Agency. The hackers also linked the page to a variety of sex, music and Scandinavian hacker sites. The modified page was left posted for a full 12 hours. This may be the new cyberfad. A few weeks prior to the CIA scenario, anonymous hackers altered the U.S. Department of Justice home page to read U.S. Department of Injustice.

• California governor Pete Wilson announced that the state will not join 10 other western states in creating a regional online college. Instead, California will start its own virtual university. According to a spokesperson, the tentatively named Western Governors University will continue to develop plans for the online school.

• Lights, camera, Jennifer Aniston… Steven Spielberg… Quentin Tarantino. These and other famous Hollywood names are on Steven Spielberg's Director's Chair, a new CD-ROM from Knowledge Adventure that lets players create their own blockbusters. This close encounter of the cyber kind allows you to do everything from honing the script to choosing special effects.

• The abacus. Then the slide rule. Then the adding machine, the pocket calculator … and now: The integrator! At Wolfram Research's new Web site (http://www.integrals.com), a computer program called Mathematica will crunch any calculus problem you have and spit out the solution. Next up: The Bard! For translating those pesky Shakespeare verses.

• Network Event Theater is rolling out the red carpet at more than 33 U.S. campuses. It wires on-campus theaters with satellite dishes and digital-sound systems for free and beams in the laser-disk quality premieres at no cost to students. The company also offers screenings of pay-TV events.

Kissing the Boar's Head — Oglethorpe U., Ga. — Based on the same tradition, every December inductees of an honor fraternity ceremoniously smooch a real boar's head.

Tortilla Tossing — Texas Tech U. — Until recently, football fans spun tortillas on their fingers and flung them onto the field during home games. Southwest Conference officials curtailed the tradition this season by penalizing the team 15 yards every time a tortilla landed on the playing field.

Moo Poo Bingo — Embry-Riddle Aeronautical U., Fla. — Students "buy" square plots on a field where a cow roams and grazes. People watch and wait with bated breath for the cow to do her thing. The owner of the first pooed-on square wins.

Hot Dog Day — Alfred U., N.Y. — Students who wish they were an Oscar Mayer wiener gather for this weekend street carnival in the spring.

Oxygen	Fluorine	Chlorine
O	F	Cl
15.999	18.998	35.453

Hydrogen	Neon	Argon
H		Ar
1.0079	$9,895	39.948

It's a gas.

Plymouth Neon $9,895* (For starters.) We've managed to bond together all the elements of fun—sporty looks, plenty-o-room, a 16-valve, 132 horsepower engine and an optional AM/FM stereo with cassette or CD player. It's hotter than a Bunsen burner. For more information on the Plymouth Neon sedan or coupe, stop by your friendly Plymouth dealer, call 1-800-PLYMOUTH or visit us on the Web at www.plymouthcars.com.

One clever idea after another. That's Plymouth.

*Neon Highline Sedan $12,770 nicely equipped. MSRPs include destination and $1,000 rebate, exclude tax. One mole of any gas occupies about 22.4 liters.

U.LIFE

Staying Power

A FEW MONTHS AGO, Anne Upturch wanted nothing more than to go to college.

The 18-year-old freshman entering the U. of Nebraska, Lincoln, dreamed of an escape from the chains of living at home, along with a wealth of new social and educational experiences.

CLASS

But that was a few months ago. Now Upturch wants to go home.

"It's what I expected, but I guess it's just not enough to make me want to stay," Upturch said in late September, only five weeks into what she had expected to be a four-year college career. "I'm ready to go home."

Upturch's attitude may seem strange to the millions of students at schools nationwide, but to university administrators, she's all too common. According to a report published in July by American College Testing, about one-fourth of all college freshmen do not return for their sophomore year.

The reasons for dropping out are many: money, grades, homesickness or a combination of any of the above. But the result is always the same — students don't come back.

"You look at the numbers, and the numbers say we have a problem," says James Griesen, vice chancellor for student affairs at the U. of Nebraska, Lincoln. "It's up to us to fix that problem."

And that's exactly what universities are trying to do.

At Nebraska, a three-credit class called University Foundation lays down the basics for success in college — time management, study skills and student involvement are just a few. In addition, Freshman Learning Communities puts students in small groups who live on the same dorm floor, take the same classes and get together for study sessions.

West Virginia U.'s Operation Jumpstart takes freshman retention a step further by recruiting professors to live in residence halls and serve as mentors.

Richard Schreiber, a professor of journalism at West Virginia, and his wife are two of those mentors.

"The whole objective of the program is to let freshmen know from the beginning that the faculty is here for them," Schreiber says. "It makes the idea of being one out of thousands of students a little less overwhelming."

Although no program will guarantee that freshmen will stay on for another year, Griesen says universities shouldn't give up on the students.

"If it's set in their minds that they want to leave, then they'll leave," he says. "But we'd at least like to have them think about it a little harder before they do and give them a few more reasons to stay."

By Jeff Randall, U. of Nebraska, Lincoln

Sophomore Jinx

Freshman dropout rates at four-year colleges and universities (percentage of enrolled freshmen who didn't return for their sophomore year).
Source: American College Testing

	Public	Private	All
1986	29.5	24.0	25.6
1987	29.3	24.3	25.8
1988	29.6	23.5	25.5
1989	29.3	23.6	25.3
1990	28.9	23.8	25.2
1991	28.3	23.8	25.1
1992	28.4	23.8	25.2
1993	28.1	24.0	25.2
1994	28.3	24.8	25.9
1995	28.8	25.1	26.2
1996	29.0	25.9	26.9

Give Me a Break

STRESSED-OUT college students eagerly wait for winter break to bring joy to their worlds. But for some, after living in a relentless, curfewless and ruleless environment for several months, returning home for the holidays can induce a different kind of trauma — and an insatiable appetite for Grandpa's potent eggnog.

HOME

"As much as I love going home and spending time with my family, I think they sometimes forget that I'm used to doing what I want, when I want," Brandeis U. junior Aura Twersky says.

Twersky, who's been through the transition from college to home front several times, complains that whenever she returns, the same argument ensues.

"When I drive somewhere alone at night, my parents give me a curfew of 11:30 or 12," she says. "I know they're just worried about my safety, but at school that's what time we leave to go out. At school, I don't have a mommy and daddy to be overprotective of me."

Students may also be ill at ease about going home if they face problems there. Robert Berlin, director of the Brandeis Psychological Counseling Center, says families have to figure out the best method of dealing with each situation.

"Apprehensions can come from real issues," Berlin says. "Students need to know the limits of what they can tolerate and lay those limits down."

Berlin suggests that students be clear with their parents and that parents in turn "show some restraint" when interacting with their returning tenants. "They need to respect the boundaries of separation and privacy," he says.

Returning home makes some students' spirits bright — those whose parents have adjusted to the change in lifestyle and whose watchful eye has grown lazy.

"I love break," says U. of Michigan junior Jon Von Samek. "I can do whatever I want to at home. And there's more time to have fun, see my friends and party."

That is, after he unloads the dishwasher, visits Grandma, cleans out his closet, helps his dad get the decorations from the attic, rides bikes with his baby sister, sets the table for dinner, makes his bed and... oh yeah... decks the halls.

By Miriam Heller, Brandeis U., Mass./ Illustration by Jennifer Dresser, Hofstra U., N.Y.

Guest Experts: Beavis and Butt-Head

On holiday fun:
BH: "There's this kid, Stewart, and his family gives him all these Christmas presents, and me and Beavis try to see who can be the first to break them. Huh huh huh."
BV: "Yeah. They're usually pretty cheap. Heh heh."

Continued from U. Views, page 4.

Spending the holidays with the family is cheers. We've always had a good time. DJ Menuet, junior, Louisiana State U. • Holidays with the family are definitely cheers. Always have been, and hopefully always will be. Matt Honnold, senior, Eastern Illinois U. • Holidays with the family are definitely cheers. As college students, we don't get to spend a lot of time with our families because of work and homework and studying. It's nice to be able to kick back and spend time with my parents and my sibs and just have a great time. Delana Orr, sophomore, Eastern Michigan U. • Definitely cheers. I believe that the holidays are an important time for the family. There aren't too many times that the family can actually get together and be a unit. There are so many people ignoring each other and not paying attention to family values. So yes, I think it's absolutely important. Amy Edgar, senior, Florida International U. • I hate to say tears about going home to be with my family, but at my school we have a full month off for Christmas break, which can be a little too long if you ask me. Jeremy Campbell, junior, Auburn U., Ala.

$cholarship $cam

HOW MUCH ARE you willing to pay for free cash?

The question doesn't make much sense, nor do the five scholarship organizations the Federal Trade Commission is currently prosecuting.

DOLLARS

Companies such as Career Assistance Planning, Inc., Christopher Ebere Nwaigwe, Student Assistance Services, Inc., College Assistance Services, Inc. and Student Aid, Inc. have gained much notoriety in the past few months by playing on students' financial strains with flyers and ads guaranteeing thousands of dollars in scholarships in exchange for "small processing fees."

"Generally, this area of scams has been growing. We know that from consumer complaints that have been logged with the Fraud Information Center and with scholarship-related Web sites," says Heather Hippsley, Project Coordinator of the FTC's Project Scholarship $cam — a program designed both to stop current hoaxes and to educate potential victims.

Sassan Masserat, a senior at California State U., Northridge, called the FTC after a group named Academic Investment Money took funds directly out of his bank account without his permission and subsequently lied about giving him a refund.

"I feel abused. I'm furious. But I am happy that the government got involved. At least now we have some kind of back-up," says Masserat, who has tried everything from a barrage of certified letters to filing a small claims suit to get his money back.

Lynn Beller, a senior at U. South Florida, Tampa, sent $10 to the Higher Education Scholarship Program and never received a response. Her father, Jeffrey Beller, fought back by sending a letter to his local postal inspector. The matter was eventually brought to the FTC's attention.

"For $10, it was a gamble and I lost. I hope its the worst thing in my life that I should lose. But I am satisfied that somebody out there is listening," Lynn Beller says.

Although the assets of the companies are now frozen while the trials proceed, it's not clear how much money the victims of scholarship scams will receive in restitution.

"Fraud artists usually spend the money as fast as they can," Hippsley says. "The victims will just have to wait it out."

For a free Web database of scholarship info, see http://fastweb.com.

By Elisabeth Morse, Stanford U. / Illustration by Judy Tsai, Harvard U.

Big Returns On Crime Prevention

BELLS CLANG, lights flash and armed security guards are summoned. No, you haven't won big at the Las Vegas slots. You pressed an emergency button in Texas A&M U.'s fortress-like parking garage, where crime-fighting technology is the name of the game.

FTC.

Because college crime rates have been rising in the past five years, schools have started betting on inventive crime-prevention programs.

"There are always traditional methods like arrest, but we are trying to stay steps above by being creative," says Vanderbilt U., Tenn., crime prevention officer Marlene Hall. "I see this trend across the country. This is a tough, lengthy and expensive solution, but it gives the community a lot of benefits."

The A&M garages are equipped with emergency stations connected to 24-hour monitored booths. When a student hits an alarm, cameras roll, additional lights turn on and two-way communication with police begins.

"Being proactive with prevention has stalled criminal activity," says A&M Lt. Bert Kretzschmar. "The amount of incidents has dropped dramatically."

Oakland U., Mich., and Vanderbilt also had bright prevention ideas. Oakland installed the "brightway" — paths lit up like night football games. Vanderbilt color coded walkways based on degrees of safety.

Vanderbilt is also developing personal alarm technology to connect students with campus cops via a key-chain transmitter. Victims will be able to push a button to alert police of the crime and send vital information, like name and a photograph, as well as the location of activation.

A U. of Tennessee fraternity helped students reach out and touch someone with discounted cellular phones. The phones could be used to contact police, and part of the proceeds from their sales went toward the Rape Aggression Defense program.

Other campuses are trying to increase awareness about individual risk.

• San Francisco State U., Calif., places posters across campus after an incident, outlining facts about the crime and asking for tips.

• The U. of Minnesota uses a fax network to alert campus offices, businesses and police departments statewide the minute a crime is reported.

• Marshall U., W. Va., sells bar codes to attach to property that might be stolen so the owner can be identified.

• U. of Oklahoma has a pilot program to "brand" automobile parts with identification numbers.

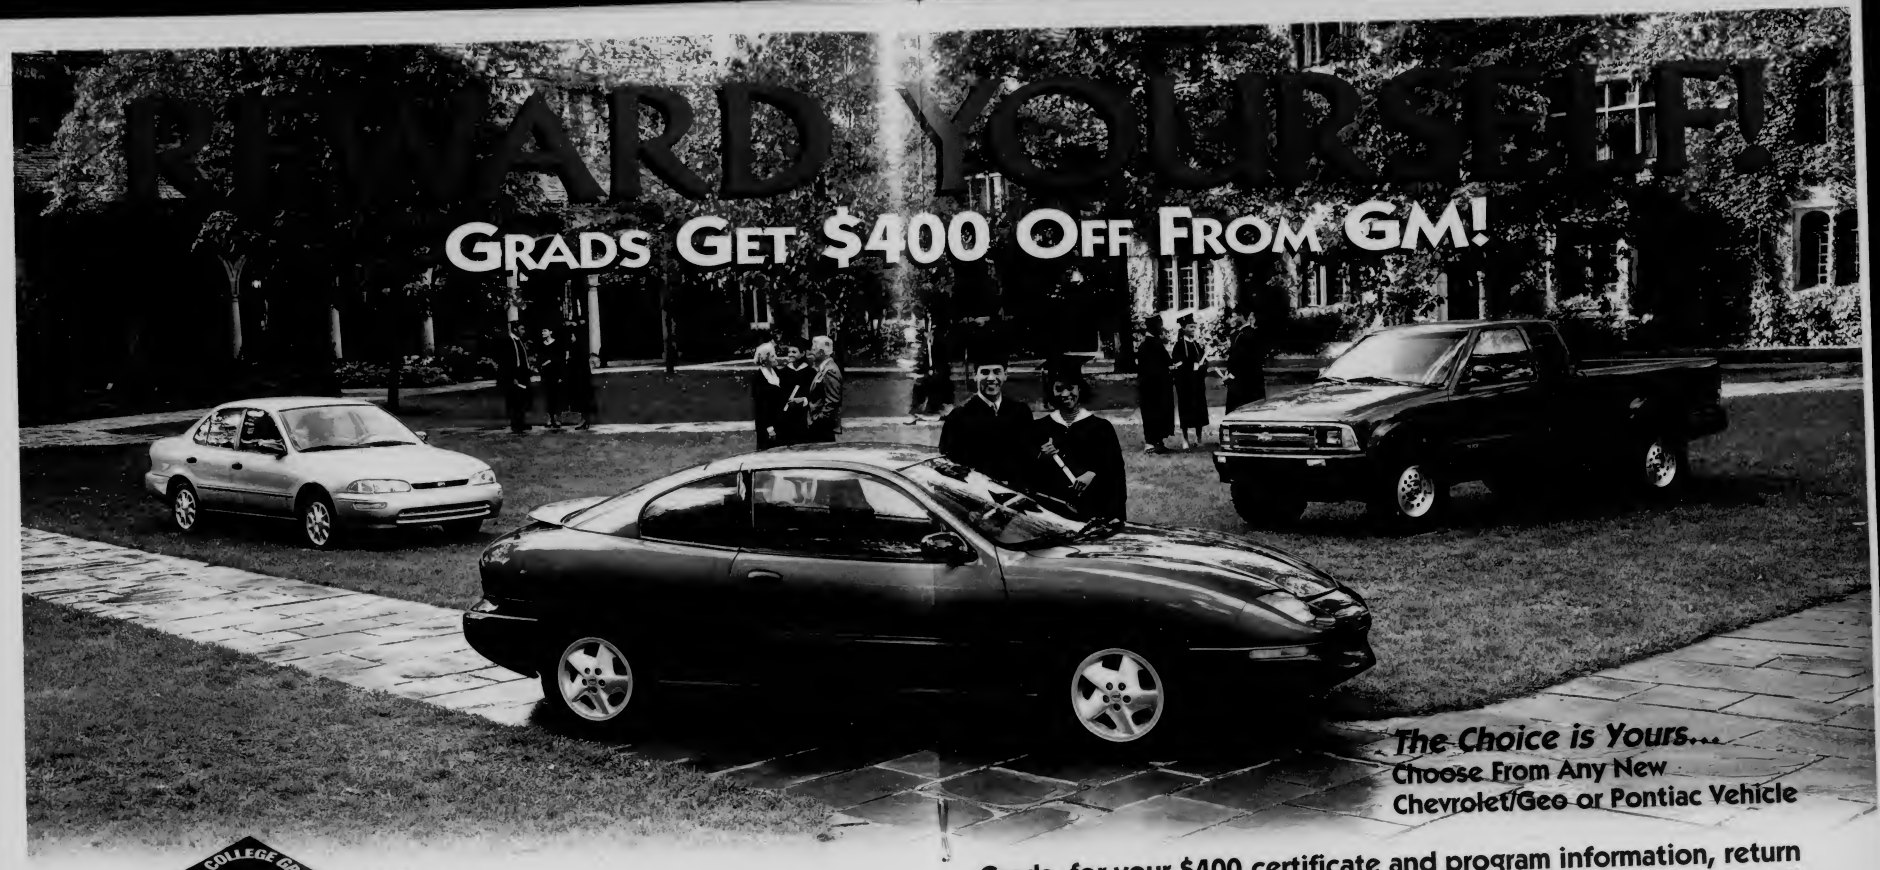
"The [branding] program has a western flavor, because in the Old West people branded horses and cattle," says Oklahoma public safety director Joe Lester. "Now we are branding cars."

Although testing new programs usually carries a high price tag, many campuses say the lower crime rate is worth it. It's certainly worth it for U. of Montana students to get involved in its new program. They get rewards for helping to solve a campus crime. Maybe Johnny Law is wrong: Sometimes crime does pay.

By Samantha Levine, College of William and Mary, Va. / Illustration by Masheka Wood, Syracuse U.

48-Hour Dance Marathon — Penn State U. — For the past 25 years, nearly 600 students rock around the clock for two days to raise over $1 million to fight cancer.

Pig Toastal — U. of Notre Dame — Shhhh. It's not sponsored by the school, but thousands of students know that the swim team usually plans this grand pig roast to party and celebrate spring.



Potato Bowl French Fry Feed — U. of North Dakota — More than 2,300 pounds of spuds are served up at this weeklong festival and football game.

Little 500 — Indiana U. — Move over, Mario Andretti. Indiana students train all year for this annual bike race held in April. →

Nude Olympics — Princeton U. — Brrrrr. During the first snowfall of every year, 300 to 400 sophomores run laps around campus in the buff.

Happy Loopy Day — U. of Kansas — At 11:45 p.m. every Thursday night, students come out of their dorms and sing "Happy Loopy Day!" to wish their neighbors a good Friday morning. This relatively new tradition is usually followed by a water fight.

Crawfish Day — Nicholls State U., La. — Students spend the day feasting on more than 900 pounds of Cajun-cooked crawdaddies. Sho' is good cookin', ah ga-run-tee!

Plus...

- No Downpayment When You Purchase
- Special Easy Financing For Grads

Grads, for your $400 certificate and program information, return the postage-paid reply card enclosed in this publication, or call:

1•800•964•GRAD

CHEVROLET. Geo. PONTIAC. GMAC FINANCIAL SERVICES

See your participating Chevrolet/Geo or Pontiac dealer for details. ©1996 GM Corp. All rights reserved.

Have Change, Will Travel

Roam if you want to on a student budget

BY JULIE BLAIR
Northwestern U., Ill.
Photos by Michael Palmieri, Penn State U.

To starving students, taking an exotic vacation or even a four-day road trip might seem about as likely as being offered a six-figure salary the day after graduation. ➢ But the strapped-for-cash need not be doomed to National Geographic specials, savvy travelers say. ➢ If you know where to find bargains, you can flex your Greek history minor at the Parthenon, revel in Indian art or sip frothy margaritas on the Gulf Coast — all on money made from hustling tables at Denny's.

Catchin' air

One of the biggest travel expenses is getting to your destination — a cost that can be slashed by 70 percent or more if you fly as an air courier, says Steve Lantos, editor of Travel Unlimited.

Air couriers escort packages on commercial airlines for shipping companies like Federal Express and DHL when their fleets are unavailable to fly the goods. The companies will get you a seat for cheap in exchange for your baggage space. Most companies require travelers to buy a round-trip ticket and stay a specific number of days. And packing light for courier flights is a must — you're only allowed to take luggage that fits under your seat or in the overhead compartments.

Elisa Busto, a freshman at Palm Beach Community College, Fla., has flown as a courier seven times and saved thousands of dollars on air fare. Her round-trip flights to Singapore, London, Spain, Mexico and Peru ranged from $50 to $150.

"I look into being a courier every time I fly," she says. "It's not just that it's cheaper. Sometimes, if the airlines knows you're a courier, they treat you nicer."

One catch to courier traveling is that companions can't travel together, as shipping companies usually reserve only one seat per trip. With planning, however, your companion can be a courier for another company shipping the same day, or reserve a flight for the next day.

Flying as a courier may sound like spy novel material, but Jennifer Basey, author of The Air Courier's Handbook: Travel the World On a Shoestring, says the business is legit.

"Everyone always jokes [that] it's drugs [you're carrying]," Basey says. "Anybody interested in taking a courier has to be prepared to take that joke, but it is simply not true."

The goods are mostly boring stuff — like documents — and you aren't held responsible for delivering them or ensuring their safety. Your only obligation is to meet a company representative at the airport before the trip to pick up your ticket.

"The only time I was nervous was when I went to Singapore and they announced that bringing drugs into the country is punishable by death," Busto says. "But that's why it's good that you never come in contact with the package."

Hitchin' for a place to go.

Globetrotting

If you're a true globetrotter seeking adventure on a teeny fortune, you can visit Big Ben, the Sphinx and the Great Wall of China all for one airfare on an around-the-world ticket.

Much like a cruise trip, you specify a final destination and the number of stops you would like to make along the way. There's just one catch: You can only fly in one direction.

"I can go around the world from Los Angeles to Bangkok to New Delhi to Milan to London," Lantos says. "I've continued in the same westward direction. The fare costs about $1,100."

For those who find planning the details of a trip about as thrilling as yard work, Airhitch with Whole Earth Travel is the way to go.

Whole Earth buys unused seats to and from Europe on commercial airlines and sells them at the last minute. Travelers register a list of desired destinations and dates to travel, and the company locates the seat. The company only sells seats on a one-way basis, so you have to make return flight arrangements while you're traveling.

If you leave from an East Coast hub, like New York or D.C., tickets are around $169 one-way. Departing from West coast hubs, like Los Angeles and San Francisco, tickets cost around $269.

It's a great deal if you're traveling to and from major international cities, like New York, Los Angeles, Paris and London. It's not such a bargain if you're trying to reach more obscure destinations. You also have to prepay for the ticket and be willing to fly when called.

> "Sure, sometimes you'll be sleeping next to someone's feet, but it's worth it."
>
> Luke Metzger, junior, U. of Southern California

Cheap tricks

A European vacation probably sounds like the hip, backpacker thing to do right now, but think again, says Bruce Northam, author of The Frugal Globetrotter. Asia, Latin America and Turkey are hot spots right now.

"I was in Europe this summer," Northam says. "It was jam-packed and pricey. Save the countries in Europe for when you're old and feeble and have no immunity. You'll want to knock out India and China while you're young and robust."

Paying more than $20 a night is ridiculous on a college budget, he says. Strive to make it on $3 to $10 instead.

Still don't think you have enough for a quick trip? Employing creativity can take you far, far away from exams and dorm food, says Jamie Jensen, author of Road Trip USA: Cross-country Adventures on America's Two-Lane Highways.

"Look for off-season or shoulder-season rates," Jensen says.

Now 34, Jensen became a road warrior after a six-week hiatus from the U. of California, Berkeley, metamorphosed into a two-year-long lifestyle.

Jensen says much of the time he survived by trading work for lodging. He even rented hammocks for $1 a night.

"The key is to go with the flow," Jensen says. "I ended up sailing boats and following harvests."

Head out on the highway.

On the road again

If you have a little more time to explore, hitting the road or the rails is a cheap but slowww way to go.

Green Tortoise Tours offers an au naturel traveling experience, and slow is the only way it moves.

The San Francisco-based company does both short and long jaunts aboard buses that convert into bedrooms on the move, says Steven Brophy, an employee of Green Tortoise and frequent Tortoise tourist. Travelers sleep during the night drives and, during the day, cook, serve KP and sightsee together.

For a fee of $400, Green Tortoise will take your pioneering spirit on a nine-day expedition into the Grand Canyon. One month in Alaska costs $1,500 — airfare included. There are also trips to Seattle, Portland and Yosemite and a Northern Migration trip from Mexico to San Francisco.

For a little more than $100, Luke Metzger took the Tortoise to Seattle and back from Los Angeles. The U. of Southern California junior says he'd take the weeklong journey again in a heartbeat.

"Sure, sometimes you'll be sleeping next to someone's feet, but it's worth it," he says. "There's just a great vibe on the bus, and it's filled with young people and international kids who are traveling around."

Hit the road, Jack

If you're running out of excuses to travel, try the old standby of job-hunting. Matt Krukin and Kim Giblin, '96 grads of the State U. of New York, Oswego, spent two months traveling across the United States while interviewing for jobs.

For a mere $1,800, the couple trekked through some 10 national parks, zoomed down the steepest roller coasters in the nation, appeared in the television audience of the Dating Game, jogged the Golden Gate Bridge and went wine tasting.

To cut costs during the trip, they cooked on a kerosene stove, purchased beverages in bulk and took advantage of national park passes that give discount rates at campsites.

"When we couldn't find a place to sleep, we slept in the back of the truck," Giblin says. "We did a lot of roughing it. The majority of the time we did a lot of hiking and things that didn't cost much."

Lampoon-esque student travels, national or international, are part of the learning experience, says Kevin Potchnr, founder and manager of Degrees of Freedom Travel.

"The greatest thing is to see and experience things you normally don't," he says. "Traveling gives you a unique and interesting perspective on the world. The whole sense of adventure is exciting."

And hey, with travel this cheap, you might even be able to afford a map.

For more information on Airhitch with Whole Earth Travel, call 1-800-326-2009.

Julie Blair could fly all the way to Chicago and back on the money she made from writing this story.

Guest Experts: Beavis and Butt-Head

On traveling cheaply:
BH: "We usually just walk."
BV: "Yeah, and sometimes we ride our bikes."
BH: "Oh yeah. And sometimes we take the bus to school."
BV: "Sometimes we don't even bother going to school."

Home, Home On The Road

Whether it's by plane, train or amphibian bus, let's just say you've cashed in enough cans for transportation funds. You buy the ticket and hit the road. You're where you want to be, but now you're broke again.

Not to worry. The friendly folks at the nearest youth hostel can cut you a deal.

National and international youth hostels provide separate men's and women's dormitory-style accommodations and cost a few dollars, says Lisa Diekmann, promotions manager for Hostelling International.

Stephannie Tallent, a grad student at Texas A & M College of Veterinary Medicine, traveled Europe alone for four weeks and stayed in hostels the whole time.

"I was always in rooms with other people, and I was traveling by myself, so I made the effort to meet people," she says. "I visited Venice with a woman from Australia and wandered through Florence with a woman from New Zealand."

Here's the good news about hostels: Price tags for lodging range from $8 to $22 a night. Lockers to store belongings are available, as are single and double rooms, for a few dollars more. If you pack your own dinner, you can cook in the hostel's kitchen and keep costs down.

Here's the bad news about hostels: Depending on the size of the hostel, you could find yourself bunking with between 15 and 460 other travelers. Some call it charming, others call it seedy. It all depends on how you view your traveling experience.

"Some are seedy, some are nice," says Margarethe Olsson, a senior at Virginia Tech. "It all depends on the area and the people running them. But some of the seedier hostels are the most fun. The really nice ones tend to be more restrictive, less friendly and less open."

Olsson has toured a handful of hostels across the United States — from Atlanta and Savannah, Ga., to San Francisco and New York. For a few bucks a night you get more than just a roof over your head, she says. Many hostels are restored old buildings that reek of local history.

Like the Miami Beach hostel. It was once Al Capone's hangout but was later converted into a hostel. One hostel in New York City provides walking tours of Harlem for travelers who want the anti-tourist tour of the real city. And a Seattle hostel was once the checkpoint for immigrants coming to America.

The bottom line? If you want to be pampered, fed, well-rested and clean during your travels, avoid the hostel experience. It might be worth it to cough up the extra bucks for a traditional hotel. But if you're looking for interesting fodder for your travel diary, and you don't mind cold showers and funky-smelling clothes, hostels are the way to go.

For information about national and international hostels, call (800) 444-6111.

The GrAde DebAte

Are colleges really pumping up grades?

BY DANIELLE NEWMAN
U. of Maryland, College Park
Additional Reporting by Melissa Grego, Assistant Editor
Illustration by Shawn Trimble, U. of Kansas

YOU LEARNED YOUR ABCs long ago, but alas, they're no longer quite what you remember (and you worried about retaining chem formulas!). Experts say college coursework that used to earn a "C" grade now pulls in grades that look more like "B"s, leaving some schools shaking in their boots over their reputations.

Garden of even

Author Louis Goldman's "The Betrayal of the Gatekeeper: Grade Inflation," in The Journal of General Education says the trend of giving higher grades began in the late '60s and early '70s. He says professors gave students higher grades because they were trying to keep students in class and out of the draft.

John Cooper, a chemistry professor at Bucknell U., Pa., disagrees about grade inflation's origins. He says grade inflation occurred because some departments in the humanities traditionally contain classes not required to graduate, so they had to compete fot students to take the classes.

"[The draft excuse] is a cop-out," Cooper says. "If you go back and actually look at grade distributions across the country in-depth, the sciences and engineering were much slower to inflate grades."

If at first you don't succeed...

Other evidence points to second chances as the reason for a grade boom. The student government at Louisiana State U. has been trying to pass a Repeat/Delete policy for five years. The policy would allow students to retake a class for a higher grade. No marks would be deleted from students' transcripts; only the higher grade would be calculated into the GPA.

Senior Paul Estes, student government president, says he supports the policy because of new demands on students, like the highet cost of education. Since more students work, study time is harder to find.

"It should be no problem to give students a second chance," Estes says.

But the faculty senate has decided not to vote on the issue again. "The major reason I object is the devaluation of the degree," says John Collier, president of the faculty senate.

Several schools — including the U. of California, Berkeley, Tennesee's Vanderbilt U. and New Jersey's Rutgers U. — have adopted some form of the policy. At Rutgers, students can repeat up to 12 credits of failed coursework. The policy was adopted because GPA requirements for graduation were raised from a 1.8 to a 2.0.

"I spend a lot of time speaking to students encouraging them [to repeat for an 'A']. I don't encourage students to get a 'C' to raise their GPA," says Shawn Johnson, assistant dean for academic standing and readmission at Rutgers.

Dropping the bombs

Contrary to popular belief in academia, says Cliff Adelman, a senior research analyst with the Department of Education, grade inflation doesn't exist. A study he cited in a New York Times editorial shows that the percentage of "A"s fell from 27.3 percent between 1972 and 1982 to 25.2 percent between 1982 and 1992.

Adelman explains GPA increases by noting the various ways students can drop a class before a poor grade makes it on a transcript.

Until the 1995–96 school year, students at Stanford U. could drop a class the day of the final exam and not be penalized. Students at Brown U., R.I., can still drop a class until the last day of class. And at most state universities, just weeks before the end of the semester, a student can withdraw without receiving a "W."

> "'A' students today can't begin to do what 'A' students could do 20 or 30 years ago, but the grades keep going up."
> JOHN COOPER, CHEMISTRY PROFESSOR, BUCKNELL U., PA.

Adelman says the media lead people to believe grade inflation exists by focusing on Ivy League schools, which historically give high grades. "Stanford, Harvard and Amherst are glitz, and that's what [the media] report. That's not reality. They're not the average place where American kids are going."

Cooper disagrees. He says that while on a yearlong sabbatical at Cornell U., he noticed that the grade inflation there was not as flagrant as at Bucknell.

Many colleges bear similar stances to LSU on grade inflation — they see that it exists and want to take action.

Phil Ayres, a senior at Vanderbilt, says that two years ago, Vanderbilt's average grade was a "B–." Since then he has noticed that grading has gotten harder — and he's glad. "The average grade is now more like a 'C.' It makes sense for those going on to professional school. It doesn't look as good doing well at a school whose average grade is a 'B–' as it does from one with a 'C.'"

Harry Cleaver, an economics professor at U. of Texas, Austin, says that UT used to unofficially record which professors were "inflators" and "deflators" by tracking average grades in classes. Being an "inflator" counted against a professor in pursuit of tenure or promotion. "Deflators" got raises.

A history of failure

Rather than abolishing failing grades, as many schools have done in the past, Stanford is adding them — or at least one old favorite. Since Stanford abolished the "D" and the "F" grades in 1970, the school went 25 years without giving a failing grade. That ended when officials brought back the mark of failure to be noted as "NP," for "not passed," last school year.

During the 1968–69 school year, 35 percent of students at Stanford received an "A" and 1 percent received an "F," according to a June 1994 article in the Chicago Tribune. The number of "A"s had jumped to 51 percent by the 1992–93 school year.

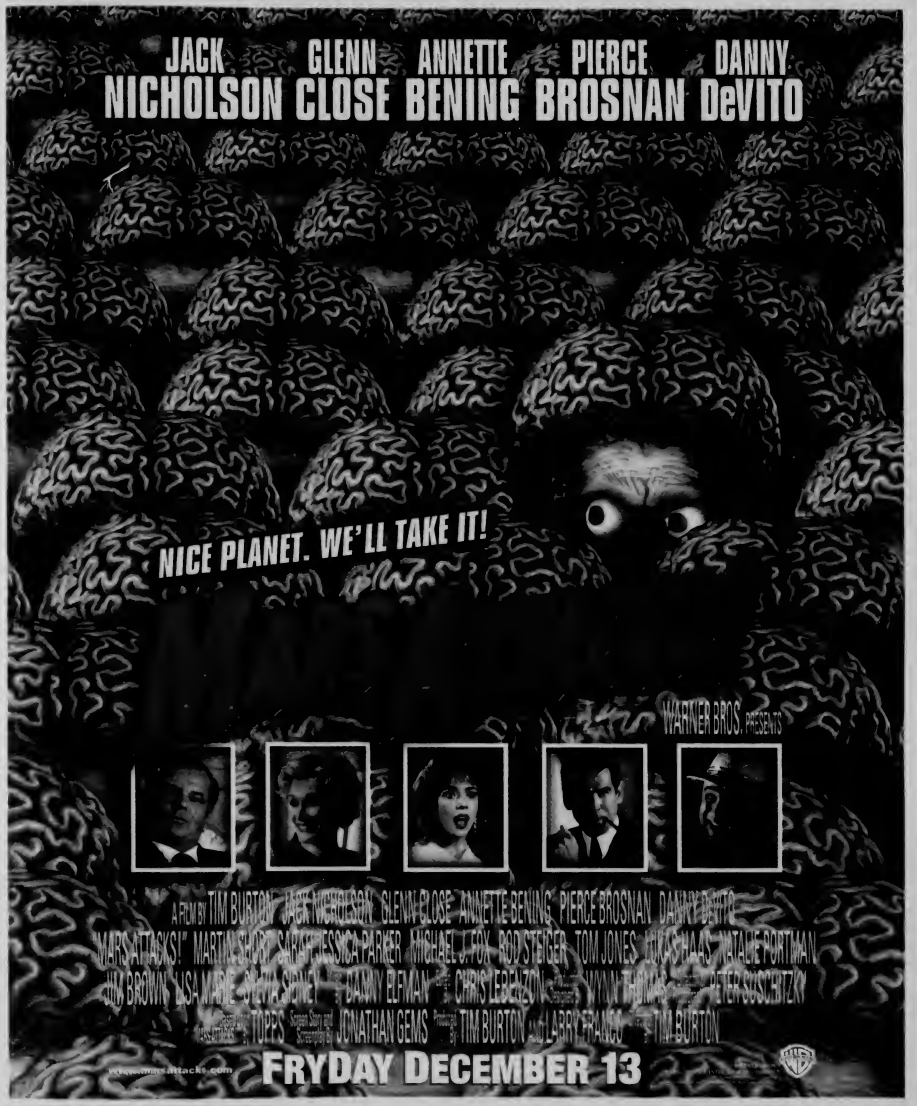
As of two years ago, Dartmouth College, N.H., includes on its transcripts — in addition to grades — the size of the class and the average grade for the class. This change came after its overall GPA jumped from 3.06 in 1976–77 to 3.23 in 1993–94.

So could today's students survive on grading scales of the past?

"'A' students today can't begin to do what 'A' students could do 20 or 30 years ago," Cooper says. "But the grades keep going up."

Ayres disagrees. "I'd say now it's more challenging, and it's better than ever."

We may never know if grade inflation is an actual phenomenon. Maybe the only important question is: Are you better off now than you were four years ago?



Danielle Newman spends so much time in the news room, she doesn't have a clue what her GPA is.

Guest Experts: Beavis and Butt-Head

On grade inflation:
BH: "Uhhh... what?"
BV: "Yeah, really. I thought inflation had to do with money."
BH: "Oh yeah. In that case, I'd probably go, 'Uh, give me all your money and, uh, an "A," asswipe!" Huh huh huh."

Rock

BY MELISSA GREGO

Rating System
★★★★★ Candy cane
★★★★ Eggnog
★★★ Chestnuts
★★ Figgy pudding
★ Fruitcake

Pocket Band

Tibbetts Street

"When we were playing in a small place, by the end of the night, people were on tables — when we'd play a polka or something," says Ryan McMaken, guitarist/ vocalist for Tibbetts Street.

This pack of former high school buddies attracted an audience by charging $1 per person at the Taco Stand in Athens, Ga. But their eclectic, personality-filled shows lured fans to bigger shows.

Tibbetts Street's CD one seventy features complex ballad grooves — just right for stretching out on a velour chaise longue — as well as beer-chug jams. Every bit is reminiscent of '70s rock, complete with guitar solos, flutes, tingling triangles, and, of course, keyboards.

The CD is somewhat chaotic and similar to typical college-band Grateful Dead imitations. But Tibbetts Street is getting more organized. "Things are becoming less jam-oriented, with more emphasis on song writing," McMaken says.

"It's friendly music — not thrash or anger," says keyboardist/vocalist Mark Ross.

When band relations do get strained, Tibbetts Street have a sure-fire method to settle disputes. "We wrestle, and whoever wins is right," says drummer Charlie Whitney.

For more info, call Mark LaClaire at East Coast Entertainment at (800) 876-0016.

Blind Melon
Nico
Capitol
★★★

SOME FAMILIES HIGH-TAIL IT TO Olan Mills to capture the early smiles of their first kid. They order a million copies of the portrait and send it off to their friends. But Shannon Hoon got it backward — his bandmates/buddies made a portrait of Blind Melon and dedicated it to his daughter, Nico Blue.

Inside this scrapbook-like album, fans will find new treasures. There are outtakes and never-released tracks, including the last two recordings of Hoon before his death from a drug overdose. Nico displays the band's ironic vitality — evidence of what Blind Melon and its singer/songwriter were and could have been.

"Letters From a Porcupine" is a message from Hoon on guitarist Christopher Thorn's answering machine. Songs like eerie "No Rain" [ripped-away version] foreshadow Hoon's fate. Here's proof it's not too late to get to know the band that connected new- and old-style rock as effortlessly as it combined hope and despair.

RADIO, RADIO

1. Archers of Loaf, All the Nations Airports, Alias
2. Luscious Jackson, Fever In Fever Out, Grand Royal
3. Jon Spencer Blues Explosion, Now I Got Worry, Matador
4. Cardigans, First Band on the Moon, Mercury
5. Butter 08, Butter, Grand Royal
6. Ditch Croaker, Secrets of the Mule, In Bloom/Reprise
7. Silver Jews, The Natural Bridge, Drag City
8. Sebadoh, Harmacy, Sub Pop
9. The Wedding Present, Saturnalia, Cooking Vinyl
10. East River Pipe, Mol, Merge

Chart based solely on college radio play. Contributing radio stations: WYBC, Yale U.; WRAS, Georgia State U.; KUOM, U. of Minnesota; KBVR, Oregon State U.; WSBU, St. Bonaventure U., N.Y.; KRNU, U. of Nebraska, Lincoln; KTRU, Rice U.; WMSV, Mississippi State U.; WRUV, U. of Vermont; WCBN, U. of Michigan; WUTK, U. of Tennessee, Knoxville.

Get the groove on U.'s music page: http://www.umagazine.com/rocks

Tricky
Pre-Millennium Tension
Island
★★★★

Don't call it trip-hop. Tricky hates that expression, and, from the sound of this record, you don't want to be on his bad side.

It's rapturous to hear Martine Topley-Bird again on Tricky's latest — in fact, it's hard not to want more of her shards-of-glass voice. It's her singing that cuts soul-deep, not Tricky's. But he's the mastermind of this strolling, dark record.

This stuff is scary — not in the thrashing Marilyn Manson or gonna-shoot-you G-rapper sense, but because it's real and raw. You can feel Tricky's personal madness like 36-grit sandpaper on your soul. Chilling, not painful.

When Tricky's lazy, garbled lyrics bubble above the mesmerizing beats of "Tricky Kid," he sings, "They used to call me Tricky Kid. I lived the life they wish they did." That's when you know he's all truth.

Engine 88
Snowman
Caroline
★★★

Ever sit around letting every irritation and regret creep up on you until you want to scream?

Okay, it's not the most cheerful way to spend your time, but listening to singer Tom Barnes do it is kind of cool. At least that's what he sounds like he's doing. There's so much energy on this release that, even on the subtlest tracks, a sense of voluntary desperation emerges.

Set to post-punk guitar, Barnes' brooding easily translates into robust pop refrains. Eric Knight's bass guitar playing stands out as it threads the imaginative tunes together with consistent confidence.

Guitar-driven alterna-alhums abound these days, but this record is cleaner than most without sacrificing aggression. Engine 88 know that passion doesn't have to mean drawn blood or broken instruments.

Tony Toni Toné
House of Music
Mercury
★★★

"I've been looking, I've been searching, I've been walking and talking," sing Tony Toni Toné in "Thinking of You." But they've really been writing and producing since their 1993 album Sons of Soul.

House of Music marks the trio's return to its own soulful blend. Tony Toni Toné's sounds, lyrics and moods sweat, seduce, bump and sway together freely like no other group's can, whether they're doing sultry R&B or digging into horn-backed dance tracks.

Tony Toni Toné pull off striking, stripped-down ballads, but they also succeed where hip-hoppers often fail — in merging lots of cool sounds. Funky "Let's Get Down" is their best compression of varied hits of sentiment and style. They get away with it because they're not just plain ol' hip-hop artists. They're about rap, funk and traditional R&B, too. The Tonys do it all at once… quite well.

Our Picks

Various Artists
A Classic Cartoon Christmas
Nick at Nite

Remember getting to stay up late in your footie pajamas to watch the Grinch, Frosty and Rudolph? Whether you prefer the Muppets or good ol' Charlie Brown, these timeless cartoon classics are a must-have. If you don't want this CD, your heart must be two sizes too small.

John Pizzarelli
Let's Share Christmas
RCA

Dreaming about snuggling under the comforter with the cooing of a sexy big band singer? Try warming up with John Pizzarelli. Each song captures the magic of Christmas like it was in the good old days, but there's nothing dusty about this slick, young Sinatra-ite!

Various Artists
Celtic Heartbeat Christmas
Celtic Heartbeat/Atlantic

Ethereal sounds enchant with this seasonal collection, which highlights centuries of beautiful folk music from around the world. Scottish, German, Irish and American musicians contribute soothing vocal and instrumental alternatives.

Various Artists
A Country Christmas
Nashville/Arista

Country music stars do favorite Christmas classics and guitar-by-the-fire originals. Start grinning, cowboy, because these carols remain recognizable, unlike the many Christmas compilations that inject overdoses of genre. You'll smell the chestnuts roasting before the first track is over.

R2-D2 and C-3PO
Christmas In The Stars
Rhino

For the first time on CD, this long-out-of-print kitsch classic of beeps, blips and Jedi jigs helps create a holiday that's out of this world. The best track is "What Can You Get a Wookiee For Christmas (When He Already Owns a Comb)?"

Various Artists
Festival Of Light
Six Degrees/Island

You'll want more than eight days to enjoy this musical Hanukkah celebration. Vocal and instrumental work and tradition and modernism mix peacefully. Didgeridoo, hymn-like lyrics, tablas, trip-hop beats and old-fashioned R&B light up the festivities.

Various Artists
New Wave Christmas
Rhino

Can't get enough of '80s schmaltz? This compilation should help with tracks by XTC, Squeeze, the Pretenders, David Bowie (with Bing Crosby), Wall of Voodoo, They Might Be Giants and friends. Pass the synthesizer and the eggnog.

It's time to wade through this season's zillion mistletoe-toting albums! But really — the U. editors are only trying to help.

Reel

BY CARRIE BELL

DECEMBER REMINDS FILMGOERS of just what lengths Hollywood players will go to in hopes of taking home a little gold statue named Oscar. Courtney Love sheds her clothes, and Madonna keeps them on. Whoopi Goldberg stops being bogus. Laura Dern gets fat, while Kenneth Branagh goes mad with method acting. Sarah Jessica Parker even doubles down for a nomination. And, as the saying goes, if you can't win with something new, recycle.

Mars Attacks!
Warner Bros

It's a real nightmare before Christmas when Tim Burton introduces martian mayhem from the Oval Office of President Jack Nicholson and first lady Glenn Close to the swank Las Vegas strip. Lots of A-list cameos and plenty of chintzy effects, monsters and big hair.

Ghosts Of Mississippi
Columbia

Rob Reiner hopes moviegoers will stand by his sure thing about the murder of a civil rights worker. Racist Byron De la Beckwith (James Woods) is brought to justice for the murder 30 years later by a young district attorney (Alec Baldwin). These few good men are joined by Whoopi Goldberg as the victim's widow.

Evita
Hollywood

Don't cry for this material girl turned first lady of Argentina, Eva Peron. She spent weeks on location next to Antonio Banderas and Jonathan Pryce with Andrew Lloyd Webber as a musical backdrop. Peron rose from poverty to marry the president and hypnotize a nation before her death at 33.

Shine
Fine Line

Director Scott Hicks sheds some light on the troubled life of pianist David Helfgott. It dramatizes how love rekindled his lust for life after a retreat from the classical music limelight in his early 20s. Lynn Redgrave stars as the match.

One Fine Day
20th Century Fox

This is one hellish day for George Clooney and Michelle Pfeiffer to get up close and personal. The single mom and weekend dad are brought together for romance after a series of mishaps. Could be just what the doctor ordered.

Hamlet
Castle Rock

Hours (and we mean hours) of entertainment about one of the world's first dysfunctional families. Kenneth Branagh, who can't get Shakespeare off the brain, assembles Billy Crystal, Jack Lemmon, Julie Christie, Robin Williams, Gerard Depardieu and Kate Winslet for this sordid tale of jealousy, madness and the Oedipus complex.

The Evening Star
Paramount

For sure holiday cheer, go see this sequel to Terms Of Endearment. Shirley MacLaine reprises her role as Aurora Greenway, now grandmother to three troubled individuals, played by Juliette Lewis, George Newbern (Father Of The Bride II) and Mackenzie Astin (Iron Will).

Citizen Ruth
Miramax

Newcomer Alexander Payne gives birth to a satirical look at the abortion debate. Laura Dern (Jurassic Park) is the pregnant, glue-sniffing nobody in Middle America who becomes a media-circus pawn. May be operation rescue for the careers of Burt Reynolds and Swoosie Kurtz (TV's Sisters).

The People vs. Larry Flynt
Columbia

Woody Harrelson is born to be wild in his role as Hustler head honcho and First Amendment activist Larry Flynt. With only a sixth-grade education, he takes on an assassin, Jerry Falwell, the Supreme Court and Courtney Love.

The Substance of Fire
Miramax

Sarah Jessica Parker and Timothy Hutton try to save their father's publishing business after their brother/firm partner gets tired of playing by the book. Ron Rifkin is the obstinate dad who'd rather print a history of Nazi crimes than a best seller.

Scream
Dimension

Wes Craven goes out on a limb to direct a scary movie. The catch is that it's a spoof of sorts in which all of the victims love horror flicks but can't remember the genre's formula to save their lives from a psychopath. Drew Barrymore, Neve Campbell (TV's Party of Five) and Courteney Cox star as the token chesty screamers.

Night Falls on Manhattan
Paramount

Sidney Lumet (Serpico, Prince Of the City) directs a movie about cops, corruption and lawyers. Hard to believe, but true. Andy Garcia portrays an idealistic policeman turned district attorney who discovers life isn't all roses at the top. He faces personal letdown, professional betrayal and Richard Dreyfuss.

Rosewood
Warner Bros

Director John Singleton travels to Florida, but don't expect any Mickey Mouse ears. Jon Voight and Ving Rhames (Pulp Fiction) lead the rescue mission when whites burn down a prosperous black town after false accusations of assault are made.

You'll find everything but the Raisinets on U.'s movie page: http://www.umagazine.com

Screen Saver

Fierce Creatures

Someone once told John Cleese that the hardest type of film to market is an original one. His own rule of thumb is to never work with animals, children or Kevin Kline.

Of course, in the spirit of Monty Python, he ignored all mantras and started writing an "equal" to the 1988 smash, A Fish Called Wanda.

Fierce Creatures* reassembles Wanda's cast — Jamie Lee Curtis, Kline, Cleese and Michael Palin — and puts them in an unrelated setting with new on-screen egos.

"This is a strong comedy team, but they aren't funny enough to distract the audience's attention away from me," Cleese says. "Despite how difficult they are, I thought it'd be fun to work with them again. But I couldn't make a sequel. They almost never measure up to the first one."

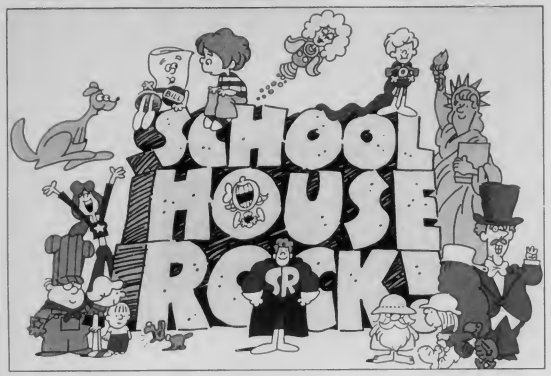
This time the fabulous foursome is at a zoo acquired in a corporate takeover. Each has a different idea of how the zoo should be run to bring in more revenue. Cleese — who loves filming with animals, especially ring-tailed lemurs — dedicated the film to a personal zoo keeper hero.

"Animals are a treat to work with. You never know what they're going to do, so they keep you and your comedy on your toes."

The Reel Deal

Just Write

Five out of five dentists from Wisconsin prefer investing in independent films, especially since Just Write is the dream of a fellow cheese state native. So when Heath McLaughlin set out to produce a film, he called his people for financial backing and a root canal.



"It's a leap of faith for everyone involved, but it will work because it's being done the way filmmaking should be — with integrity," McLaughlin says.

Sound too confident for a first-time producer 11 days into filming? Well, not without good reason. Stars like Sherilyn Fenn, Jeremy Piven, Jo Beth Williams and Costas Mandylor deemed the story worthwhile enough to take parts. Everything is accounted for in the under-$1 million budget, and the industry is buzzing with early media coverage. A spring release is planned, although a distributor still needs to be found.

But no one seems to be worried about that on the night of the century's last lunar eclipse, when a gala party scene is unravelling at a Malibu mansion. The timing couldn't be better for a romantic comedy about a tour-bus driver (Piven, TV's Ellen) so smitten with a starlet that he pretends to be a famous screenwriter.

"It's a very Capresesque, big-hearted movie. The main characters are the last of the innocents," Piven says. "It's rare that movies are about the underdog. This is sort of like my character's coming-out party."

BACK TO

Retro craze proves knowledge is still power

BY CARRIE BELL
ASSISTANT EDITOR
CARTOONS COURTESY OF RHINO AND ABC

PICK ANY SATURDAY morning in the '70s or early '80s. The house is quiet. Beds are empty and unmade. Cereal is being smacked. Do you know where all the children are?

It's a good bet they were in front of the TV watching one of ABC's Schoolhouse Rock segments. And from the looks of the new programming and a rash of merchandise, the kid in them has come out to play once again.

College students are waxing nostalgic over the crude animation and jazzy tunes. Humboldt State U., Calif., senior Morgan Sayler often comes home to the familiar sounds.

"You'd think my roommate was trapped in the fourth grade — stuck at the Conjunction Junction," Sayler says. "He watches his videos so much, I'm learning the songs again."

The guilty-as-charged Mikel Edillion, a senior, says watching Schoolhouse helps him relax. "They resonate a time when you were less vulnerable, when you didn't have to think about landfills or nuclear proliferation. You worried about 'My Hero, Zero' instead."

At the heart of the rekindled interest are new segments airing Saturdays this fall after a seven-year hiatus. This set deals with the financial woes of adulthood. The songwriters are also working on a series tackling the gruesome topic of geography.

"The generation that grew up on Schoolhouse Rock is taking over positions of power in the industry," says an ABC spokesperson. "They remember how fun they were, so they say, 'Let's bring it back.'"

And back the educational cartoons have come, in several forms only possible in the decade of marketing.

Read all about it

How many Emmys did the series win? Do you know which song was written first? Don't worry if your mind is blank because these questions and more are answered in Schoolhouse Rock! The Official Guide (Hyperion, $9.95).

The trivia book was written by the creators of Schoolhouse, McCaffrey & McCall Advertising's George Newall and Tom Yohe. As the story goes, Newall was frustrated because his son could sing along with all the Rolling Stones' songs but couldn't memonze his multiplication tables. He called in studio musician Bob Dorough and begged him to put the tables to music.

Dorough, who was all too familiar with the monotony of the tables, knew he had a challenge ahead of him.

"I thought I was being called in for a jingle. Imagine my surprise when they told me what they had in mind. They liked it so much, they decided the songs might benefit all children."

And so the educational series was born. As ABC became more interested, the creative team grew, and it scrambled to think of interesting stories to teach lessons on math, grammar, American history, science and computers.

"People would be surprised how much research went into the songs before I even came up with the music," Dorough says. "'Rufus Xavier Sarsaparilla' [pronouns] was the toughest to push into a pleasing melodic form."

Music to the ears

After all the hard work, ABC closed the Schoolhouse doors in 1985. (A small revival occurred with Money Rock in 1992.) The music tapes were stored in David McCall's son's barn and long forgotten until Lava/Atlantic Records produced Schoolhouse Rock! Rocks, a tribute album with revamped versions of the classics.

> "These pieces made a big impression on me musically."
> ROGERS STEVENS, BLIND MELON GUITARIST

Musicians like Skee-lo, Better Than Ezra and Moby were given free reign on which song they wanted to perform and how. But for Blind Melon there was one obvious choice.

"When we first started, we had videotapes of the songs our drummer taped off TV. These pieces made a big impression on me musically. We were covering 'Three Is a Magic Number' for years," says guitarist Rogers Stevens. "Our style fit that song well."

The cover of "Three" was the last thing the band recorded before the drug-related death of vocalist Shannon Hoon.

"These songs are catchy, clever pop songs that are actually hard to play, so we were nervous. We hadn't played it in years, but in the studio, it all just came back," Stevens says.

It wasn't long before ABC decided to milk the pop-culture cash cow. Representatives approached Rhino Records and decided to release the original music. The subdivision, Kid Rhino, jumped at the chance to put out a four-CD comprehensive set in a denim-covered, three-ring notebook.

"Kid Rhino's goal is to release music not just for kids, but for the kid in us all," says vice president Torrie Dorrell.

The show must go on

For the past three years, producer Nina Lynn and director Scott Ferguson have made the cartoons come to life for more than 100,000 fans in Schoolhouse Rock, Live! off-Broadway.

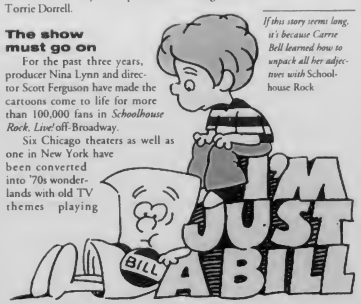
Six Chicago theaters as well as one in New York have been converted into '70s wonderlands with old TV themes playing overhead and Pixie Stix and Pop Rocks filling concession stands.

"We've worked hard to be honest to the material. We're not just cashing in. We just fell in the middle of the retro craze, but we are looking for a life after it as well," Lynn says.

Lynn says they started the show because the songs work well with original fans and new ones.

"They knew how to write a good song, how to take complex ideas and break them into jingles. You don't get bored — no matter how old you are."

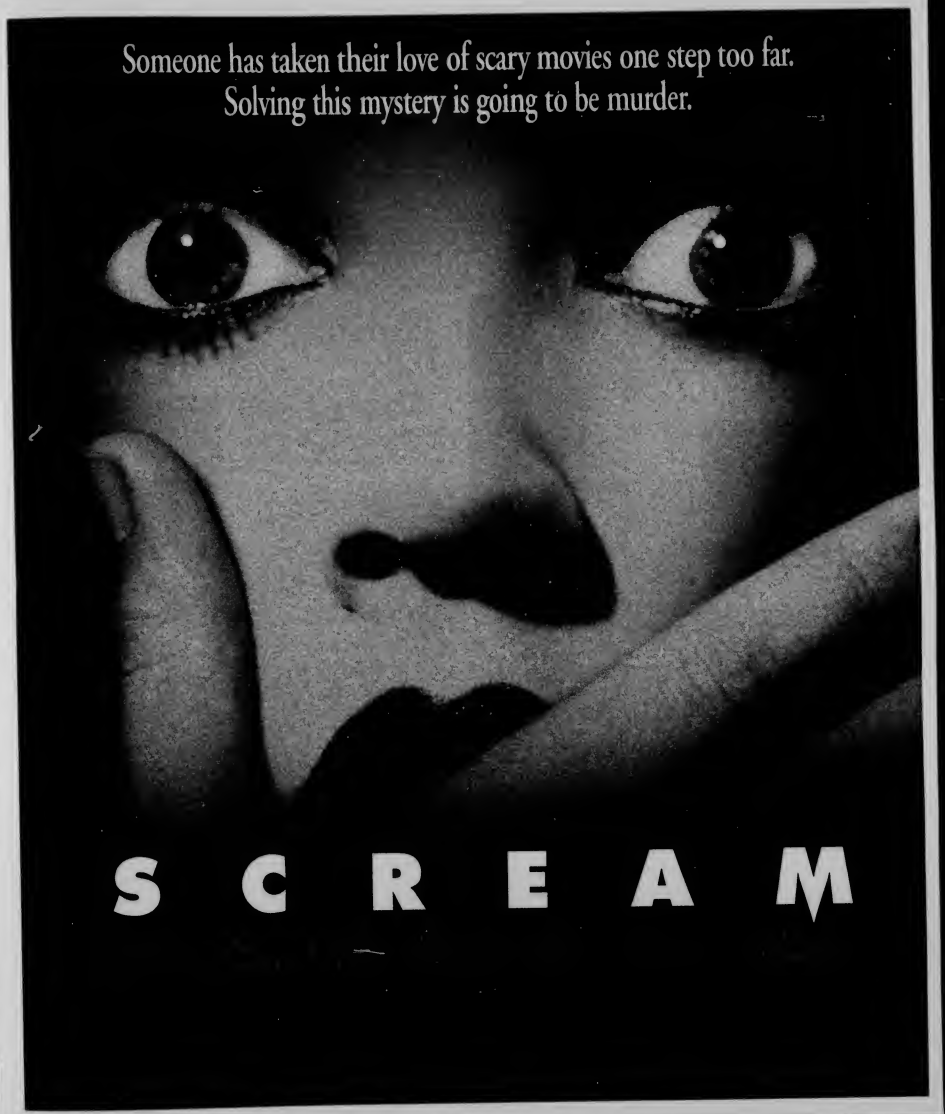
Stay tuned for possible visits to San Francisco, Boston and Los Angeles.



Melting pot

The buck doesn't stop there, either. Creative Wonders, a software company, designed a math CD-ROM, and others are in the works. Stores are also filled with T-shirts, key chains and plastic figurines inspired by the show. Enough to make Interplanet Janet leave her head in the stars.

"When I was selling T-shirts [in Berkeley], I couldn't keep anything related to that show in stock. Kids my age just eat that stuff up," says U. of California, Berkeley, grad student Monica Kirby.



As for those involved in the many projects, the popularity is nothing but expected.

"Kids were so saturated by it, I figured the tunes would last forever. So many college kids come up to me after a performance and say, 'Your voice sounds so familiar,'" says Dorough. "I reply, 'Conjunction Junction?' and they give me a knowing look and say, 'What's your function?' It's kind of like being a rock star."

If this story seems long, it's because Carrie Bell learned how to unpack all her adjectives with Schoolhouse Rock

Someone has taken their love of scary movies one step too far.
Solving this mystery is going to be murder.

SCREAM

CONTESTS

4TH ANNUAL U. CAPTURE THE NIKE SPIRIT CONTEST

Win $1,000 AND have your entry published with a Nike national ad!

Wherever you go, climb, hike, raft, spelunk, skydive, parasail, hang glide, bike, jump, explore, or kick back, take your camera and Capture the Nike Spirit — those unforgettable experiences in sports and everyday life.

Maybe you and your Nikes will hike to the most awesome place on earth, climb the biggest mountain or rock, catch big air, bungee jump off a bridge or rappel (or leap over) the tallest building on campus. Or maybe you own the World's Oldest Living Pair of Nikes, or you can get the most pairs of Nikes (with the most people attached to them) in one photo. You decide and JUST DO IT!

Each month, the best entry will be published in U. and the winners of the month will receive $50 cash.

Eric Endelman, U. of Michigan
"Just Did It in a cap and gown."

The Grand Prize winner will receive $1,000, and the winning photo will be published with Nike's ad in the January/February issue of U. AND every month this fall, the best entry will be published in U. and on our Web site (http://www.umagazine.com).

Send your entries on color print or slide film, labeled (gently) on the back with your name, school, address, phone number (school and permanent) and a brief description of the Nike spirit you've captured (who, when, where, doing what, etc.). Deadline for entries is December 16, 1996. Entries cannot be returned and become the property of U. Magazine. There is no limit on the number of entries you can submit.

Mail your entries to
U. MAGAZINE
CAPTURE THE NIKE SPIRITCONTEST
1800 Century Park East, Suite 820
Los Angeles, CA 90067-1511

Chad Martin, Texas Tech U.
"Hangin' out at Enchanted Rock."

5TH ANNUAL U. PHOTO CONTEST FOUR $1,000 GRAND PRIZES

Here's your chance to win big money! U is offering four $1,000 cash grand prizes for the best photo entries submitted in four categories: Campus Life/Traditions, All Around Sports (mud to varsity), Road Trippin' and Funniest Sights. PLUS, for each entry published in U during the year, we'll pay you $50.

Photos can be of anyone or anything on or off campus, from normal (whatever that is) to outrageous. For best results, keep the faces in focus and the background as light as possible.

Winners of the month will be published in U. and on our Web site at http://www.umagazine.com. The four $1,000 Grand Prize winning entries will be featured in U.'s May 1997 issue in our fifth annual College Year in Review special section.

Send entries on color print or slide film, labeled (gently) on the back with your name, school, address, phone number (school and permanent) and info on who, when, why, what and where the photo was taken. Include names of people in the photos if possible. Entries cannot be returned and become the property of U. Magazine. Deadline for entries is March 14, 1997.

Mail your entries to
U. MAGAZINE PHOTO CONTEST
1800 Century Park East, Suite 820
Los Angeles, CA 90067-1511

Bryce Kunimoto, U. of California, San Diego
"Breaking down cultural barriers in Zimbabwe."

Thi Duong, U. of South Florida
"Bird watching on a camping trip during exam week."

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

48 National Parks are hiring now. Thousands hired using this data. $19.95 + $2.50 S&H to NPED-U, Box 435, Grand Canyon, AZ 86023 (520) 779-5300.

Peer Counselors needed at SuperCamp, an exciting academic and personal growth summer program for teens in CA, MA, IL, CO. Salary, room/board. Provide own transportation. Call 1-800-527-5321.

NANNY SERVICES

BOSTON NANNIES: Experience scenic, historic New England. Excellent salary, benefits, friendship, support. Year commitment. 1-800-456-2669.

ENTERTAINMENT

Cable descrambler kit $14.95. See ALL the channels. Free Shipping for mentioning U. Magazine. 1-800-752-1389.

U. WANTS YOU!

ASSISTANT EDITORS
Wanna JOB? Join the elite ranks of U. The National College Magazine's assistant editors on fellowship. If you're a graduating student-journalist looking for a career in writing and editing, call or write for an application.

Frances Huffman, Publisher & Editor
U. The National College Magazine
1800 Century Park East, Suite 820
Los Angeles, CA 90067-1511
310/551-1381

Holiday Gift Wish List

U.* asked 675 college students at 25 schools what they want this holiday season. The top five answers in the survey:

Tech Tools
1. computer
2. CD-ROM drive
3. software
4. printer
5. subdem

Communications
1. cellular phone
2. fax machine
3. online account
4. cordless phone
5. beeper/pager

Audio Equipment
1. CD player
2. mini CD player
3. headphones
4. speakers
5. blank cassettes

TV/Video Equipment
1. camcorder
2. TV
3. TV/Video game system
4. VCR
5. blank videos

Entertainment Accessories
1. CDs
2. movie videos
3. movie tickets
4. concert tickets
5. books

Photography Equipment
1. film
2. digital camera
3. instant camera
4. 35mm camera
5. camera lenses

Transportation — 4-Wheelers
1. car
2. truck
3. sport utility vehicle
4. van

Transportation — 2-Wheelers
1. mountain bike
2. touring bike
3. motorcycle
4. scooter/moped

Vehicle Items
1. car stereo
2. tune-up
3. car alarm
4. car phone
5. tires

Sports/Fitness Gear
1. athletic shoes
2. hiking boots
3. camping gear
4. workout clothes
5. in-line skates

Clothes/Accessories
1. jeans
2. shoes
3. shirts/blouses
4. jacket/coat
5. sweaters

Personal Care
1. perfumes/cologne
2. hair care products
3. contact lenses
4. glasses/sunglasses
5. cosmetics/skincare

Survival Gear
1. cash
2. luggage
3. backpack
4. car insurance
5. microwave

Charities/Churches/Causes
1. children
2. homeless
3. environmental
4. AIDS-related charities
5. cancer-related charities

In Your Dreams
1. A real job after graduation
2. Rich aunt pays your tuition
3. Ability to read minds
4. A car that never breaks down
5. Free/ample parking on campus

If You Only Had One Holiday Wish
To get everything on their list
To be an extra in new Star Wars prequels
Have someone else take my finals
Paid trip around the world
To meet Jesus and ask him a few questions

SCHOOLS USED: U. of Southern California; Colorado State U.; Calif. Polytechnic State U., San Luis Obispo; William and Mary College, VA; Northern Arizona U.; U. of Texas, Austin; James Madison U.; Florida State U.; U. of Houston; State U. of New York, Buffalo; U. of Nebraska; U. of Oklahoma; Western Michigan U.; Michigan State U.; Penn State U.; U. of Delaware; Northern Kentucky U.; U. of Cincinnati; Xavier U., Ohio; U. of California, Los Angeles; Appalachia State U.; U. of California, San Diego; U. of Maryland, College Park

wrap

Double Take

After the glut of touchy-feely, pseudo-philosophical, coffee table, look-at-what-I've got-behind-my-toilet books, along comes the refreshing Satan's Little Instruction Book by Carmine DeSena. It features "devilisms" to use...

On your grandparents:
- Start off every conversation with "Don't you remember we talked about this?"
- Mouth words without speaking.

On your kids:
- Tell your kids you love them as if they were your own.
- Tell each sibling the other is your favorite.

On teachers:
- At the next assembly meeting, stand next to your favorite teacher and scream, "I told you not to touch me like that!"

On students:
- Place short students in the back.

On blind dates:
- Ask if they believe in love at first sight. If they say yes, show them your genitals.
- Tell them you give great personality.

In department stores:
- Fake a seizure in the crystal department.
- Laugh at people getting makeovers.

EXIT: STAGE DIVE

Remember when concerts were fun?

BY JAMES HIBBERD
Assistant Editor
Illustration by John Greuel, U. of Wisconsin

First you go through the metal detector. Then you empty your pockets onto the table. Any contraband (cigarettes, lighters, insulin, etc.) is confiscated and not returned. Next, an eager guard pats you down... searching... searching ("hey!") to make sure you're not holding back.

While he's feeling you up, you spot the sign: "Moshing, slam dancing or stage diving is cause for immediate EJECTION!"

Wait a minute. This ain't Sing-Sing. This here's the maximum security level of Lollapalooza.

But it wasn't always this way.

Many, many years ago, young Jeem Moree Son of the primitive Apollonia tribe accidentally wandered on stage during the celebration of the spring harvest. The clumsy Son tripped into the red-hot campfire and hopped around, yowling and cursing to the beat of the tribal drums.

To his surprise, the crowd was delighted. Later that night, even though Son possessed no land, had no survival skills and was strikingly unattractive, two village girls happily followed him back to his cave.

Son began performing his howling and jumping show every night, and even traveled to neighboring villages. As his popularity grew, Jeem Moree Son fashioned tight pants out of cow skin, shortened his name to "Son," and launched the Son God Tour. The young tribesman who formerly couldn't be trusted to light his own fire — let alone light anyone else's — was given more food, clothing and women than any man could consume.

Although Son died from overeating mind-altering mushrooms, many others stepped forth to carry on the tradition. And for thousands of years, the delighted audience, the idolized performers and the unscrupulous tribal concert promoters all basked in the harmonious glow of rock and roll and fire.

Even in recent times, rock concerts were cause for celebration. Watching the video from the original Woodstock is viewing some serious fun: No time limits on the sets, free admission, beer flowing like... wine, ugly nekkid people running around, huddled figures trying to keep warm — indisputable proof we hadn't lost that primitive spirit.

But fast forward to modern rock fests and you'll see that the only thing remotely primitive are the pierced body parts — the one tribal custom that never should've become popular again. The sex tents in primitive times turned into the LSD recovery tents of Woodstock, which in turn became the AT&T "Try a cellular phone for FREE" tents of today. Truly a step backward in evolutionary priorities.

So I ask you: Where is the joyous, unfettered spirit? Where is the sense of communal harmony? Where, for Chrissake, are the nekkid people?

Metal detectors, security guards and dancing restrictions. It's positively... barbaric.

Don't let him fool you: James Hibberd loves to be searched at concerts.

4C, Kevin Craven, Northern Illinois U. — Strip Tease

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 62 | New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 | Wednesday, December 4, 1996

No lemons in the lemonade

The Lemonheads played at Pearl Street Monday night. Check out what the Collegian thought of the show (see Arts & Living, page 8).

UMass tangles with Hoyas in Great 8

The Minutemen will start their climb back into the Top 25 with a tough contest against foe Georgetown. Check out the preview (see Sports, page 12).

WORLD

Doctors: Mother Teresa won't recover energy

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Mother Teresa will recover, her doctor said Tuesday, but the 86-year-old nun will not regain the energy that allowed her to travel the world serving the poor.

A few days ago, doctors were saying she could soon return to work. But her recovery has been complicated by lung and kidney problems linked to the poor functioning of her heart.

Though angioplasty last week to remove blockages in two major arteries improved blood flow to her heart, her other organs have been slow to rebound.

"She will have to be taken care of for a long time," said

Tarun Praharaj, one of the doctors treating Mother Teresa at the B.M. Birla Research Center. He said she would be hospitalized for at least two more weeks.

"At her age, with this problem, it will be difficult to go back to the active life she led," Praharaj told reporters.

NATION

NY teenager killed while roller skating

NEW YORK (AP) — A teen-ager skater who hitched a ride to a bus was killed when he fell under the vehicle.

Jonas Fredonis, 15, was dead on arrival at a hospital Monday afternoon, police Officer Gerry Varson said.

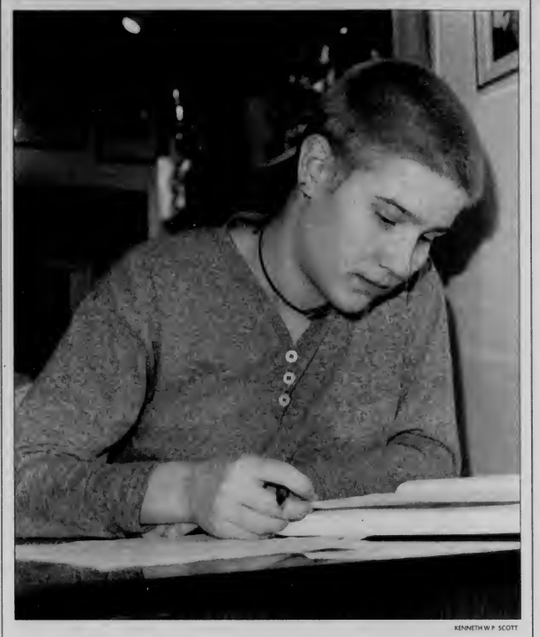
Fredonis and some friends were "skitching," roller skating and hitching a ride on a moving vehicle, when the accident occurred in the Bronx borough.

"To all you kids who think skitching is fun, it's no fun when you lose a friend," 14-year-old Bill Ortiz said.

Another skater, Ruben Ayala, 17, was holding the bus' bumper when he saw Fredonis slip.

"There were sparks coming from one of his skates because he had no wheels and he was trying to get back up," Ayala said.

"When he hit the ground, everyone skitching on the back of the bus fell over him," Ayala said. "The bus kept going, and when we got up, I saw blood all over Jonas' face."



Police believe the bus driver didn't know what happened, the New York Post reported yesterday.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 34 LOW: 20	HIGH: 40 LOW: 25	HIGH: 45 LOW: 30

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics.....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial.....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 12

KENNETH W P. SCOTT

Study till ya drop!

Ginny Vose, 18, an Amherst college student, studies for her upcoming finals at the Pioneer Valley Coffee Co.

Breast cancer-abortion link possibly too biased

By Paul Recer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Women should not let fear of breast cancer influence decisions on abortion because studies inking the two probably are in error, says a new study, the latest in a politically volatile dispute.

Research in the Netherlands that showed an increased risk of breast cancer among women who had had induced abortions may have been biased because many of women inaccurately reported their abortion history, according to a study being published Wednesday in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

The question of a link has led to searing debate. At least five studies have found that having an abortion increases breast cancer risk, while six others have found no such linkage. Still another study found a negative association — that abortion lowered the risk of breast cancer.

Now a study led by Matti A. Rookus of the Netherlands Cancer Institute in Amsterdam finds that one reason for the confusion may be that women don't always tell the truth about their abortion history, particularly if they live in an area where abortion is less accepted.

Rookus said the problem, called "recall bias," exists in studies where researchers gather data by interviewing women about their reproductive history and then use this data to draw statistical conclusions.

"It is a problem that is underestimated in many studies," she said, and that could be significant since some found only a small increased risk for cancer among women who had had abortions.

Rookus and her colleagues interviewed 918 breast cancer patients and a like number of healthy women. They asked both groups about their reproductive history — the number of pregnancies and the outcomes — and about their use of oral contraceptives. The researchers then compared the rate of breast cancer versus the rate of abortion.

The result showed that women across the country were 1.9 times more likely to have breast cancer if they had had abortions.

However, the figure was 14 times more likely in southeastern regions of the Netherlands that are predominantly Roman Catholic or conservative Protestant. In less conservative regions, the rate of breast cancer among women who had had abortions was only 1.3 times greater.

Rookus said that difference between the regions suggested a reporting bias among the healthy control group.

To test this, the researchers then compared the women's responses to questions about oral contraceptive use with medical records that reflect the true use of these drugs.

Rookus said the researchers found that women in the conservative areas were likely to underreport their use of contraceptives.

Dr. Douglas L. Weed, a National Cancer Institute researcher, said the Rookus study was important because "this is one of the first pieces of hard evidence that recall bias is actually present."

Many researchers, said Weed, have been concerned about the possibility of reporting bias in the abortion-breast cancer studies.

"If it is true, then the results are systematically biased," said Weed. "They would show an increased risk when there is none."

He said it was reasonable to use the proven underreporting of contraceptive use as a measure of underreporting on abortion.

Olivia Gans, an official with the National Right to Life Committee, said the study does a disservice to women because it suggests there is no connection between abortion and breast cancer while this disconnection has not been proven.

Protesters demonstrate against Pres. Milosevic

By Julijana Mojsilovic
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Authorities muzzled two independent radio stations Tuesday and lashed out fiercely at the growing opposition to Slobodan Milosevic, even as more than 100,000 protesters rallied against the Serbian president and sharpened their demands.

Demonstrators hurled snowballs at the state-run media buildings in the 15th straight day of protests against Milosevic and his decision to annul Nov. 17 local elections that appeared to have been won by the opposition. Police still kept their distance, but one report said reserve police officers were being mobilized nationwide.

Milosevic's propaganda machine, which at first ignored the protests, went on the offensive, dismissing the demonstrators as terrorists, vandals and a "handful" of desperate people.

Minutes before the protesters were to begin their march through the capital Tuesday, independent radio station B-92 and the student-run Radio Index went off the air.

A government ministry statement said B-92 had been shut down for operating without permission. The station, always critical of Milosevic's autocratic rule, had applied several times — without success — for an official frequency.

Authorities began jamming B-92's signal more than a week ago.

Radio Index, which could only be heard in central Belgrade, had its signal jammed on Tuesday.

The two stations had been the only ones to broadcast direct reports of the anti-government protests. Their silencing left many Serbians dependent on foreign short-wave services for independent reporting on the demonstrations.

"Now Serbs are under a total media blockade," said B-92's news director Veran Matic. "Milosevic is afraid of the truth, and he'll try to hide it as long as possible."

The station used its own Internet site to report the shutdown, and Matic said workers also would print leaflets and set up loudspeakers to get out the news.

The station is negotiating with the Voice of America and other international broadcasters to carry its programming, he said.

Opposition leaders chose to interpret the action against the radio stations as a victory — evidence that in their stand-off against Milosevic, the Serbian strongman had been the first to blink.

"Milosevic is provoking the whole world. He has lost his mind," opposition leader Vuk Draskovic said.

The opposition said its demands — until now they wanted original election results reinstated and Milosevic ousted — will now include freedom for the few remaining independent media in Serbia.

State-run TV has broadcast only brief coverage of the protests, followed by commentaries labeling the opposition foreign spies and enemies of the state.

The state-controlled newspaper Ekspres Politika accused demonstrators of calling for "terrorism, arms, bombs and rocks," while the Vecernje Novosti accused them of throwing Molotov cocktails.

The state-controlled news media is prone to editing the words of opposition leaders, sometimes taking them out of context.

"Those who haven't been at the demonstrations and get their news only from Serbian TV are likely to believe it," sociologist Dragana Babic said of the government's version of the protests.

"And they may soon organize themselves and move against the demonstrators."

Milosevic spokesman Ivica Dacic accused the opposition of "working against Serbia and its people." He called the protests "destructive and violent."

Though Milosevic has threatened a crackdown, police so far have refrained from taking widespread action. Police announced Monday that more than 30 people had been arrested for damaging property.

Police were deployed Tuesday in parks and side streets but stayed away from the protesters.

The independent Nasa Borba newspaper said reserve police were being mobilized across Serbia. The official Serbian police force numbers about 80,000 policemen.

Opposition leader Zoran Djindjic said Tuesday that Milosevic has tried to move against the demonstrators, but that police and the army refused to follow his orders. His claim couldn't be verified.

Several Supreme Court judges have lent support to the protests, publicly distancing themselves from court rulings annulling the local elections.

UMass alum to save the wolves

By Liz Anderson
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts alum, Rick McIntyre, a National Park Ranger and wolf specialist, will present a slide lecture on wolf restoration conducted in southwestern parts of the United States, including Yellowstone National Park and areas as far as Japan. The lecture will be held tonight in room 231 of Herter Hall at 8 p.m.

Rick McIntyre

"Rick McIntyre's lecture is an excellent way for people to learn about wolves," said Sara Lupis an environmental science major at UMass.

She added, "If more people become informed about wolves, then their preservation will continue to grow strong."

The lecture will include a one hour slide presentation in which McIntyre will discuss ecological issues concerning wolves covered in his books: A Society of Wolves: National Parks and the Battle of the Wolf and War Against the Wolf: America's Campaign to Exterminate the Wolf.

According to a press release issued by the UMass Wildlife Society, the first third of the lecture will focus on wolf behavior based on McIntyre's research and observations over the past 20 years as a national forest ranger in Alaska, Montana and Yellowstone National Park.

McIntyre will use the middle third of the lecture to examine the attitudes human beings have had towards wolves throughout the history of North America. He will also explain the reasons and methods behind efforts to exterminate wolves in the United States, the press release stated.

The lecture, according to the press release, will conclude focusing on the reintroduction of wolves into their native environments throughout the United States, especially Yellowstone.

McIntyre has worked extensively on the reintroduction of wolves in Japan and has served as a consultant for the Japanese wolf reintroduction project.

A graduate from UMass, McIntyre received his Bachelors in Science degree in Forestry in 1971. He has worked as a park ranger for 22 years in the native lands of Yellowstone, Denali, Glacier, Big Bend, Sequoia, Joshua Tree and Death Valley National Parks. He has also been a forest ranger in New Hampshire, Arizona and a state park ranger in California.

McIntyre currently works in Yellowstone National Park during the summers and Big Bend National Park during the Winters as a park wolf interpreter and a specialist in educating the public about the park's wolf restoration project.

The UMass Wildlife Society is sponsoring the lecture and encourages all students to attend, learn facts about wolves and stop believing their fierce stereotypes.

Both of McIntyre's books will be on sale at the lecture as well as Wildlife Society tee-shirts.

RICK MCINTYRE

Rick McIntyre lectures tomorrow about his new book "A Society of Wolves" which details the near extinction and reintroduction of wolves to the wild.

For Your Information

PIIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an PIII, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Wednesday, Dec. 4

Craft Fair — A Holiday Craft Fair, sponsored by the Student Union Craft Center will be held from 9 a.m.–4 p.m. at the Campus Center Concourse.

Discussion — Religion and Identity Series presents a discussion on "What distinctions can be made between religion and spirituality? How do these distinctions impact the way in which 'religious people' and 'spiritual people' relater to each other?" at 7:30 p.m. in Butterfield main lounge. All are invited to attend. Questions, call 546–5174.

Film — A screening of Fires in the Mirror will take place at 3:30 p.m. in the Hillel House Recreation Room. The Jewish film class invites all to watch the film.

Meeting — The Student Health Advisory Board (SHAB) will hold its last meeting of the semester in room 304 of UHS from 5:30–6:30 p.m. All are invited to attend.

Poetry — The UMass Poetry Society will have its meeting in Campus Center room 804 at 7:30 p.m. For more information, contact Tim at 546–0562.

Thursday, Dec. 5

Performance — University Dancers will perform Thurs. Dec 5 through Sat. Dec. 7 at Bowker Auditorium. Reservations may be made by calling 545–2511. Tickets are $7/general admission, $4/students, and $2/seniors and children. UMass students free. Reservations are recommended.

Reading — Lisa Alther will read and discuss excerpts from her new work Five Minutes in Heaven at 7 p.m. at Third Wave Feminist Booksellers in located in Northampton. Admission is free.

Seminar/Lecture — A meditation and Yoga seminar/lecture introducing yoga and meditation practices will hold its final meeting in the first floor lounge of Butterfield at 8 p.m. The event is sponsored by the UMass Ananda Yoga Club.

Test Taking Workshop — A workshop, offered by the Learning Resources Center from 3:30–5 p.m. on the 10th Floor of the W.E.B. DuBois Library. Free. Call 545–5334 to register.

Saturday, Dec. 7

Bazaar — Grace Church will hold its annual St. Nicholas Bazaar from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Parish Hall, 16 Spring St., Amherst. For more information, call 256–6754.

Religious — A free Hanukkah party will follow the 6 p.m. menorah lighting at Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. Donations of gifts for the needy will be accepted and greatly appreciated.

Notices

AIDS Day — UMass is participating in the global observance of World AIDS Day which will take place from Nov. 25 through Dec. 6. You can get HIV/AIDS information and a red ribbon to pin on yourself or on our "Remembrance Tree" at the Campus Center Concourse table each day. Visit the Faces of AIDS art display and the Five College AIDS Quilt at Earthfoods. Watch Boys on the Side on HSCN. Activities will culminate with a candlelight vigil on the Student Union steps at 5 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 6 and a march to the First Congregational Church on Main St. in Amherst for a gathering of Remembrance and Hope. Refreshments will be served. After that, there will be a poetry/prose reading followed by an open mike at 8 p.m. at Claudia's Cafe. For more information, contact Health Education at 577–5181.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol-free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584– 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

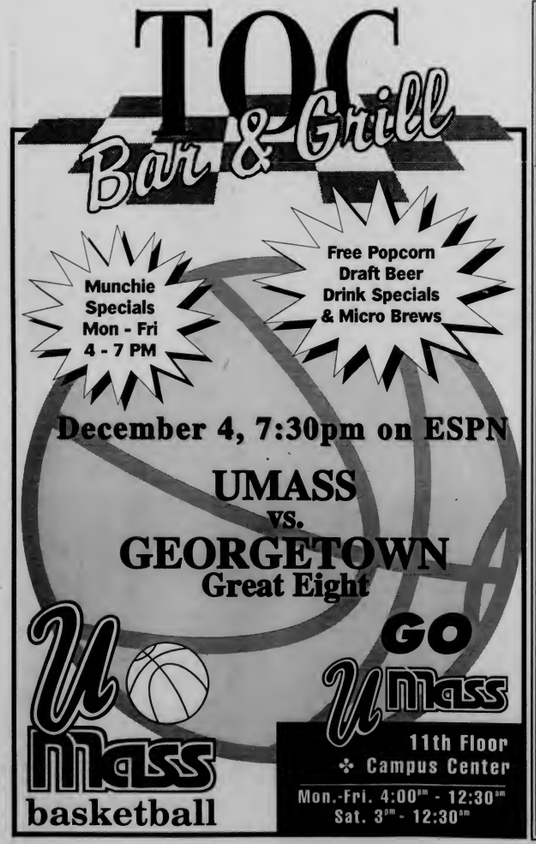
Menorah Lighting — All are welcome to attend the lighting of the 6–foot menorah in front of the Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at the following times: Thurs. Dec. 5 at 5 p.m.; Fri. Dec. 6 at 4 p.m.; Sat. Dec. 7 at 6 p.m.; Sun. Dec. 8 time TBA; Mon. Dec. 9 at 7 p.m.; Tues. Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.; Wed. Dec. 11 at 8:30 p.m.; Thurs. Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in photo, layout, copy and marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.



Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

KENNETH W P. SCOTT

Look Ma, no tape!

Walter Kupis, an employee of John Payer, Inc., finishes up what is to be the new SIS bank building in downtown Amherst.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS DINING SERVICES
INVITES ALL UNIVERSITY FACULTY, STAFF AND STUDENTS TO:

EASTSIDE GRILL NIGHT
EASTSIDE GRILL
STRONG AVENUE DOWNTOWN NORTHAMPTON

Thursday December 5, 1996

4:00 pm - 7:00pm
at Berkshire, Hampshire, Franklin and Worcester Dining Halls
Cash Price: $7.00 per person (if not on board plan)

Menu

Chicken Margherita
Shrimp Alfresco/Bow Tie Pasta
Pasta Shells with Tomato Basil Broth*

Garlic Mashed Potatoes
Fresh Broccoli Flowerettes
Whole Baby Carrots

Gorgonzola Garlic Bread

Praline Sauce with Vanilla Ice Cream/Frozen Yogurt

*Vegan (Vegetarian) Entree

Drawing

Eight $25.00 Gift Certificates, compliments of Dan Yacuzzo, owner of the Eastside Grill Restaurant in Northhamton, MA
• No Purchase Necessary •
Each Dining Hall will have two drawings:
One for board plan members
One for non-board plan members

For additional information, Fax: 545-9673
or e-mail: d_sutherland@auxwor.aux.umass.edu

KENNETH W P. SCOTT

UMass' No. 1 Fan!

Mentos, a member of New Horizon, braves the cold to play for the people. Claiming to be UMass' No. 1 fan, he has faith that UMass basketball won't disappoint us.

COLLEGIAN NOW HI

The Collegian news department is currently accepting applications for Spring 1997. These paid positions offer interested students experience. Associates typically cover the most pressing stories and within the state and throughout the country.

Interested students should contact Michael Elliott or Chris Conner at 545–1851, or stop by the office to pick up a application at 113 Campus Center basement.

Bomb on train kills 2, injures 28

By Joseph Schuman
Associated Press

PARIS — A bomb exploded on a commuter train in a station in the heart of Paris during the evening rush hour yesterday, killing at least two people and injuring 28.

Police said there was no immediate claim of responsibility for the blast on the edge of the city's famed Latin Quarter. French television said the bomb was made from a gas canister similar to those used in the 1995 wave of bombings claimed by Algerian militants.

Officials said the explosion occurred at 6:05 p.m. at the Port-Royal station, an underground station on the RER regional line used by thousands of commuters in and out of the French capital. A witness told France Info radio she heard a large boom and could smell something like gunsmoke.

"There was a sort of detonation and a strong odor like on a firing range," she said.

A few minutes later, the wail of ambulances filled the area around the station between the Boulevard St. Michel and the Boulevard Montparnasse.

"There was an explosive device that was put in a subway car," Prime Minister Alain Juppe told reporters.

He said officials put back into effect an emergency vigilance plan activated after France was hit last year by eight deadly subway bombings. Algerian Islamic extremists claimed responsibility for most of those bombings involving gas canisters, packed with nails, nuts and bolts.

Interior Minister Jean-Louis Debre said France was tightening its borders as a precaution, and train stations and airports across France were on alert.

Today's blast was close — about a half-mile — from the worst of the bombings, a July 25, 1995, explosion at the St. Michel station that killed eight people and wounded 84. Seventy-six others were wounded in the bombings.

Witnesses said today's scene was one of panic, of thick black smoke, the chilling wail of ambulances, and paramedics frantically carrying away thrashing wounded on stretchers.

"I saw lots and lots of smoke and I heard a big boom," said a man who gave his name only as Jean-Francois. "People were crying and in a state of shock."

Police sealed off the neighborhood.

The first ambulances were on the scene within two minutes, a witness said. The wounded were rushed to a nearby military hospital specializing in trauma victims.

Smoke could be smelled blocks away from the station. Dozens of ambulances, fire trucks and at least 30 buses carrying silver-helmeted riot police surrounded the station. An anti-terrorist squad was on the scene.

An emergency medical station was set up in the lobby where passengers purchase their tickets.

Officials said the bomb exploded on the second car of a long commuter train as it was pulling into the station. The train was en route to the southern Paris suburb of St. Remy les Chevreuse. The subway car was a burned-out hulk of wreckage, its doors blown off by the force of the blast.

A police officer on the scene told The Associated Press that two people were killed and 28 others were seriously wounded, seven of them critically. About 50 other people were slightly hurt.

Judge rules against denying marriage license

By Bruce Dunford
Associated Press

HONOLULU — A state judge Tuesday barred Hawaii from denying marriage licenses to gay couples, a decision certain to be appealed.

The first word of the decision by Circuit Judge Kevin Chang came from Kirk Cashmere, an attorney for three gay couples who sued the state.

An appeal by the state would send the case back to the Hawaii Supreme Court. It ruled in 1993 that denial of marriage licenses to same-sex couples amounted to gender discrimination under the state constitution's Equal Rights Amendment. But it sent the case back to a lower court to give the state a chance to show a compelling public interest in allowing such discrimination.

Copies of Chang's ruling were to be distributed later Tuesday. Chang "in a nutshell ruled that the sex-based classification in the state's marriage law is unconstitutional," Cashmere said.

The judge said the state had not shown any compelling state interest to deny gay and lesbian couples the right to marry, the attorney said.

Two gay men and two lesbian couples sued in 1991 for the right to marry, to the dismay of some national gay rights organizations that feared backlash from a legal move some considered premature.

The Hawaii case prompted Congress to approve a law PresidentClinton signed in September, saying the federal government will not recognize gay marriages, and allowing states not to recognize such marriages licensed in other states.

If the Hawaii ruling is upheld, gay activists would then sue to overturn the national law, called the Defense of Marriage Act, said David Smith, spokesman for the Human Rights Campaign, a gay rights group based in Washington, D.C.

"This is a tremendous victory, but the battle's not over. A major bridge has been crossed, but the battle will continue," Smith said.

Chang "made the only decision that he could, given the evidence in this case," said Daniel Foley, also an attorney for the three couples who sued when they were denied marriage licenses in 1991.

"This decision is not only historic, but of vital personal consequence to the couples who want to get married."

Rick Eichor, the deputy state attorney general who handled the state's case, was not immediately available for comment.

Both sides had said they would appeal if Chang ruled against them.

The 1993 state Supreme Court decision ordered the state to show compelling public interest in refusing to allow marriage between couples of the same sex. The state then argued during a two-week trial in September that the welfare of Hawaii's children was at stake.

Eichor argued that Hawaii's marriage law is intended to promote the best environment for the procreation and rearing of children who thrive best when raised by biological parents. He also contended that legalizing same-sex marriages would open the door to demands that the state also license bigamy, polygamy and consensual incestuous relationships.

The trial featured conflicting testimony from a parade of expert witnesses on family and child development.

State lawmakers failed to agree this year on either a proposed constitutional amendment to ban gay marriages, or domestic partnership legislation giving gay and lesbian couples many of the legal and financial benefits of married couples.

Power Macintosh® 7600
132 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM
15" display/keyboard
Now $2,558

Work faster with it.

Simplify your life with it.

Communicate to the world with it.

Power Macintosh® 7200
120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM
15" display/keyboard
Now $1,918

Have fun with it.

Apple® Color StyleWriter® 2500
Up to 720x360 dpi
Now $329

Get $150 back with it.

Check out Apple's Holiday Savings.
Right now Apple Computer is it, offering a $150 rebate when you purchase a Macintosh® personal computer and an Apple® printer. Fact is, your timing couldn't be better to get your Mac®, a machine that features some of the world's most innovative technology. And it's easier to use than anything you'll encounter in your class schedule. So get to your campus computer store and pick out your Mac. It'll help keep you ahead in your classes (or at least tied). And right now, you'll come out $150 ahead on the price.

Power Macintosh® 5260 120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/14" built-in display/keyboard Now $1,559
Power Macintosh® 8500 150 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/17" display/keyboard Now $3,548
Macintosh® Performa® 6400/CD 180 MHz/16MB RAM/16GB/8X CD-ROM/15" display/keyboard Now $2,198
Apple® Color StyleWriter® 1500 Up to 720x360 dpi Now $239

UNIVERSITY STORE
The University Store
Campus Center
Hours: M-F 9-5, Sat. 10-5
545-2619

©1996 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo, Mac, Macintosh, Performa, Power Macintosh and StyleWriter are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Apple mail in rebate offer valid from November 2, 1996, through January 19, 1997, while supplies last and subject to availability. To qualify for rebate, printer, computer and an Apple monitor (if sold separately) must be purchased on the same invoice. Offer good on only Macintosh desktop computer with any Apple printer. Void where prohibited by law. See participating resellers for further rules and details. All Macintosh computers are designed to be accessible to individuals with disability. To learn more (U.S. only), call 800-600-7808 or TTY 800-755-0601.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Michael Elliott News Editor Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor Marty Puppo Classified Advertising
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Society's not racially blind

Sam McAfee

Last month the Massachusetts Board of Education, led by John R. Silber, unanimously passed a resolution to require all graduating 12th graders to take the General Educational Development (GED) test. Failing the test would not hold them back, but the results would allow policy-makers to see which schools are teaching students and which are deficient in this respect. The resting would provide a superficial look at best into the problems in public education, which run much deeper than Silber and his cronies will wish to address.

It is already quite evident that schools in the inner cities are in worse shape than those in the more affluent suburban and rural areas. This is due primarily to the fact that funding for public schools is proportional to the taxes collected on the property of that area. Quite often, the urban schools are populated by a high percentage of black and Latino youth who suffer disproportionally from the inferior services provided in absolute dollars per student.

So, does racial discrimination cause economic underdevelopment or is it the other way around? It appears as though the two phenomena, at least in the United States, have developed side by side, each contributing to the persistence of the other. After slavery was legally ended, massive migration of former slaves to northern cities resulted in ethnic communities which were consistently marginalized because of race. Black entrepreneurs were excluded from the credit market and effectively prevented from developing self-sustaining economies in poor communities, and thus lower property values. These communities, like Roxbury, where I am from, have historically been characterized by high levels of unemployment and, as a result, higher crime, drug abuse and domestic abuse rates. Even as schools were legally segregated, they were kept at unequal levels by the system of funding.

Today there still is little development in poor communities, resulting in scant funds available for education. Students who grow up in this environment are not only disadvantaged by the inferior services in urban schools, but must also cope psychologically with all sorts of situations that suburban students only see in Boyz 'N the Hood. In fact, life in the ghetto can make concentrating on school work profoundly more difficult, resulting in lower standardized test scores and thus lower college acceptance rates. Given this condition, it appears that not only are Affirmative Action programs still necessary, but they are far from enough.

Conservatives are quick to blame the victim in this case, assuming that it is the way "those people" live that prevents them from rising through the social strata. Also ignored by conservatives like Silber is the fact that the raw exploitation of the black, Latino and, indeed, poor white community (to a degree) has provided the relative privilege to which many middle class whites have become accustomed.

It is counterproductive in the struggle for equality for liberal whites to sit around and feel guilty for conditions created before they were born. It is imperative, however, for them to recognize the discrimination to which they contribute and equally important for them to work to refuse the privileges that come with light skin.

Racism does not exist exclusively in the minds of few individuals still living in the past. It is part of the institutional organization of our society and is perpetuated by the actions of individuals living in the present. As long as we pretend that our society is racially blind except for a few "bad apples," we turn our back on large sections of the body politic who have been consistently disadvantaged, marginalized and oppressed.

Sam McAfee is a Collegian columnist.

The semester of my discontent

Henry J. Brier

So here I am, a sophomore at the University, hating school and longing desperately for a break. For whatever reason this semester has left me with a particularly scurrilous feeling towards my higher education.

I'm sick of nasty-arse food, deplorable classroom conditions and rude fudged-up people who walk around the campus like they have a stick up their arse.

But at least there are a few things to look forward to. In fact, my friends and I have devised quite a few interesting and oddly dangerous winter sporting activities to pass the time.

> "With the long range effects of Chernobyl uncertain, it is plausible that at some point in the future, children will be forced to play with radioactive snow."
> Daniel E. Levenson

Before I go into detail, however, I must warn you, don't try any of these at home. The descriptions are provided solely for entertainment purposes and neither I nor the Collegian assume any responsibility for any results of attempts to perform these activities. Drugs and/or alcohol should never be used while engaging in these activities.

Sled Attack: This is one of the most interesting death- defying snow dependent activities known to man. And it's easy too! All you need are a few people with sleds. As soon as one person heads down the hill follow behind them and try to smash into their sled. It's fun for the whole family!

Deck jumping: A lot of snow is required to perform this wintry feat of stupidity. This is another no-brainer: after there is a lot of snow on the ground go out on the deck of your house and jump off. If there is not enough snow or the deck is too high YOU WILL GET HURT and/or INJURED!

Frozen Lake Firewood relay: All you need is a frozen lake, a dura-flame log and three people. Two people try to start a fire with the log, when it doesn't work, another person runs over, steals the log and runs away with it, the other two people pursue the log-runner and attempt to take it back. The sport of kings!

Snow Mountain Biking: OK, OK, so I didn't invent this one, but it's still fun. I may not be the Ned Overend of Winter, but at least I'm willing to give it a go.

Why do it? Two words: No brakes!

Well, that's pretty much all the winter sports invented in years past, but with the millennium approaching, I can see a whole new generation of dangerous winter activities on the horizon. Step into the time machine...

Nuclear radioactive snowball eating: With the long range effects of Chernobyl uncertain, it is plausible that at some point in the future, children will be forced to play with radioactive snow, and what could possibly be more intelligent that eating radioactive snow. No more watching out for yellow-, dog-produced patches of snow, kiddies of the future will have to wear lead snow pants and carry around miniature Geiger counters implanted in their necks. The child that can eat the most radioactive snow will get to be the "Radioactive snow-eating emperor."

Penguin Basketball: With global warming completely reversed, the new millennium will see an increase in world- wide penguin populations. This event will coincide with a shortage of basketballs, forcing the NBA to start using semi- conscious flightless birds in place of the proper equipment.

International ice football, featuring penguins: Instead of footballs, players will use penguins to pass and punt, bringing new meaning to the game. Since it will be played entirely in the winter, players will have to set them selves on fire to stay warm.

Daniel E. Levenson is a Collegian columnist.

Shyness isn't so bad

Amy Lounsbury

I always used to think that being quiet was a curse. I was introduced to new people as "the shy one," a phrase that still makes me cringe. What a way to make an obviously embarrassed child's face an even deeper shade of red!

I have always hung back in class, never really hopping willingly into discussions and debate. To this day I hate speaking in large groups, be it family, friends or complete strangers. For years, I have fought an internal battle, scolding myself for not being more vocal. I told myself I would be a much better person if I was just a little more outgoing.

People are always handing out advice about how to overcome that shyness. Just pretend you're talking to one person, they say. Just make yourself speak out more. Just be yourself, they say. OK, but... being myself means being shy. When friends give you advice like this, they are only trying to help. The problem is, they have no idea what it is like to be shy. Unless you come by it naturally, it is a hard thing to understand. Your face turns red when called on in class, your heart beats ten times faster and you suddenly forget everything you wanted to say.

Recently, I have decided that there is nothing wrong with being shy. I am a good person whether the whole world knows it or just one person. I don't need to be "cured of my shyness." It's not a disease. It's a part of my personality. I do have a loud side to me, as well as many others. These things all come together to make me who I am. It would be wrong to tell myself that I need to change something that really isn't such a terrible thing. If I become more outgoing as the years go by, great. But it is nothing to stress myself out about.

If everyone in the world was exactly the same, where would the excitement be? Try to picture a world where everyone is outgoing and everyone throws each and every little idea out there. There would be too many people trying to push their way into the limelight for anyone to really get anywhere. This homogeneous world would get old. Real fast.

The world we live in requires all types of people. We do not expect everyone to have the same haircut, the same clothes, the same interests. Why should we expect them to behave the same?

Being quiet does not equal "I have no thoughts or feelings." Quite the contrary. Most shy people express themselves through channels other than voice — writing has always been a way for me to get some of my thoughts out. I often get the impression that people think I have nothing relevant to say or that I am stuck-up. I do have things to say, I just don't wish to say them to the whole world all at once. I am in no way anti-social and I do know how to have fun.

Without quiet people, who would all of the aspiring comedians use as their audience? Who would be happy working in the library? And who would everyone be attracted to if opposites really do attract?

To all of you who are shy, don't let them tell you it's wrong. There are definitely worse things you could be doing. Keep being yourself and be proud of it. That's all you can do. And who knows? Maybe the meek really will inherit the earth.

Amy Lounsbury is a Collegian columnist.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Battling the AIDS epidemic

Martin F. Jones

It's been nearly 15 years since the medical community first began warning the public about a strange and previously unknown disease called AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome). Now believed to be caused by a virus known as HIV (Human Immune-deficiency Virus), AIDS has emerged over the years as a major catastrophic health crisis of epic proportions.

There is currently no known cure for the fatal disease which to date has claimed 6.4 million lives worldwide. More alarming is the increased rate at which the disease is spreading, as nearly one quarter of the deaths caused by AIDS have occurred just within the past year.

As elusive as the cure for AIDS is the answer to its cause. Some conspiracy theorists have claimed that AIDS was created in a U.S. government laboratory in Maryland, with the goal of eliminating "undesirable elements" of our society. There is currently no known evidence to support such a theory, but it is a fact, however, that biological warfare research is currently being developed in the U.S. and in many other countries around the world. And while it can be disputed whether AIDS was in fact created in a laboratory, it is much more difficult to dispute whether or not the technology exists to create a microbe similar to the HIV virus. The truth of the matter is that it does.

On a global scale, the AIDS virus has posed the greatest threat to developing nations in the Third World, with the overwhelming majority of global AIDS cases diagnosed in Africa and Asia. Poor living conditions, insufficient medical facilities and a lack of public health education has proved lethal to people living in those areas. It is in these regions of the world in which AIDS has had the most devastating impact on human life.

Despite statistics far to the contrary, AIDS is still commonly associated with gay white men. Early AIDS education focused almost exclusively on identifying affiliations with selected "high risk groups" which were routinely listed as male homosexuals and intravenous drug users. Now it is clear how tragically misguided were these classifications, which had a fundamental impact on the formulation of government policy towards AIDS.

Richard Marlink, the executive director of the Harvard AIDS institute acknowledges that the AIDS epidemic is in all reality an epidemic of the poor and people of color. According to Marlink, the average person infected with AIDS is a person of color, with the infection rate among African Americans being five times higher than among whites (Newsweek, Dec. 2, 1996). The Centers For Disease Control (CDC) in Atlanta stipulates that as of June, 1996 more than a half-million Americans have been stricken by AIDS. Out of that number constituting men afflicted, 237,236 are white, 143,000 are black and 79,808 are Hispanic. Among the number of women afflicted by AIDS, 39,225 are white, 45,417 are black and 16,805 are Hispanic.

When the same numbers are presented proportionately as the number AIDS cases per 1,000 population, a stark picture is painted around who is really being the hardest hit by the AIDS virus. As it stands, black and Hispanic men have the highest rate of infection by the HIV virus, with black men constituting 9.0 cases per 1,000 population, and Hispanic men constituting 5.6 cases per 1,000 population. White men, who are most likely to be profiled as victims of the disease, by comparison constitute 2.2 cases per 1,000 population.

Among U.S. women the trend is strikingly similar. White women constitute 0.2 cases per 1,000 population compared to 2.6 cases per 1,000 population cases for black women and 1.2 cases per 1,000 population for Hispanic women.

So what does all of this really mean? There is a lot of talk that AIDS doesn't discriminate, but apparently it does. Currently, the various new treatment drugs that extend the life of AIDS patients are too expensive and out of reach for many afflicted in poor communities in the U.S. and throughout the Third World. And Congress is still dragging its feet on providing adequate funding to research a permanent cure for the disease. Meanwhile, a multitude of these recently developed treatment products are emerging into a full-scale commercial enterprise for the pharmaceutical industry.

In a May 1994 interview with Barbara Walters, Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan went so far as to accuse the World Health Organization of spreading the AIDS virus throughout the Third World and poor minority communities as part of an evil conspiracy to exterminate people of color. Unfounded as this charge may be, there is a compelling rationale behind it. There is a history of Europeans using disease as a weapon against people of color. One of the most telltale of these genocidal campaigns was the practice of distributing blankets contaminated with the smallpox virus to Native peoples living in colonial Massachusetts and across North America (It should be noted that much of this activity was conducted by Lord Jeffery Amherst, a British military commander after whom the Town of Amherst is named).

In commemoration of the annual Dec. 1 World AIDS Day, a bonanza of AIDS awareness activities are being showcased this week to educate the public on how to prevent the spread of the disease and to raise money for treatment and research. Unfortunately as the public's perception disease shifts to poor and minority communities, support and interest in the cause may begin to wane. A number of high profile celebrities such as Liz Taylor, Michael Jackson, opera singer Jessye Norman and Motown Records CEO Andre Harrell all have made significant contributions towards raising money and awareness towards fighting AIDS, but in the end these efforts still fall far short of what needs to be done. The battle against AIDS is much more than the best cause celebre. It is a battle for survival by the human race. Sadly enough, it seems that the greatest obstacle in winning this war is our own fragmented view on the value of human life, which turns out to be one which continues to favor the lives of the wealthy and affluent as more precious and worthy of preservation than those who do not share such privileged status. Hopefully, those leading the fight against AIDS will soon establish a more universal standard of what is considered an acceptable loss in this epidemic, and one which doesn't comfortably write out of existence the poor and colored peoples of the world.

Martin F. Jones is a Collegian columnist.

Keep the trail dark

Christopher Hassett

I remember the lunar eclipse. I took an experienced blonde and a charming brunette out along with Bubba, my blanket, to go watch the eclipse. As the nearly full moon grew dimmer and dimmer, the stars drowned out by the strong moonlight came out. It was, in a word, beautiful.

Another benefit to going to school in Amherst is that we are away from the heavy light pollution of Boston or New York. I can enjoy a past-time I do not get to indulge in enough, stargazing.

My roommate ended up dating two people I had claimed first. One person I had only flirted with so I guess I can't bitch on that one. However, the second person, a cute, thin blonde, darn it, we were making out on my bed, and the next thing... my roommate is glowing about his budding romance with her (it lasted a week both times). It reaffirmed my belief in karma when my roommate brought a tall, beautiful (and I mean beautiful), intelligent brunette home. They totally antagonized each other, and now, this weekend, I am looking forward to a wonderful three days with the said brunette.

Said brunette needed a break from the antics of my roommate, so I took the above-mentioned blonde, brought out Bubba again and we all went to go stargazing. I saw a shooting star! The moon was behind a front of clouds floating in and the light behind them was breathtaking. It was frigidly cold, however, and we did not last long outside. Where did we all go to gaze at the wonders of the heavens? We went to the darkest place I know of on campus, the ever-popular "rape" trail.

The rape trail is an unpaved, unlit path connecting the Orchard Hill and Sylvan residential areas. Instead of taking the paved and lit path from Orchard Hill to Northeast and then taking a right, the would be traveler would save about five minutes by taking the direct route over this treacherous passageway.

With concern for individuals who opt for this route, the UMass security department patrols the trail with pairs of supervisors. There is a call box located at the observatory near the midway point of the trail.

Apparently, some people feel additional lighting is needed to ensure the safety of those who walk on the trail. The biggest concern is violence against women, hence the name of the trail.

I am probably one of the biggest supporters of women's rights. I am disgusted by violence against women or bullying, the stronger acting sadistically on the weaker, of any kind. If the trail were the only path or if the existing path were several times longer I would support the lighting of the trail.

There is an existing safe, short and maintained path from Orchard Hill and Sylvan. The rape trail is the closest dark space on campus. I could certainly not find such ideal viewing conditions, say, in the Northeast quad.

Some people reading this may feel that this editorial is balancing a woman being raped against stargazing, hardly a comparison. I do not feel that lighting the rape trail will necessarily equal less violence against women. What it will do is save those going home at night from either residence area a few minutes walk.

In a discussion I had with someone previous to writing this column, I was reminded that women have the right to movement on public property anywhere and anytime, and the women who told me this was absolutely correct. However, this column is not claiming women should not walk the trail, it is asking that a special and peaceful place that I enjoy visiting not be invaded and have that one thing that makes it special taken away — its darkness.

Christopher Hassett is a Collegian columnist.

Life's not so good living in the dorms

Eliza Berkowitz

I do not appreciate being woken up at 2 a.m. by the sound of a water fountain being smashed to pieces and ripped out of a wall. I do not think it's fair that my R.A. was threatened by a resident simply for doing her job. I hate waking up in the morning to broken beer bottles, chocolate pudding and cheese doodles thrown all over the floor in my hallway. I detest the smell of the puke that is repeatedly spewn on the men's bathroom door across the hall from my room. I just don't understand why I'm faced with these obstacles on a daily basis. They are not necessary and should not be a part of dorm college life.

Listen, if you can't handle your liquor, don't drink. It's as simple as that. Please do not use your drunkenness as an excuse for why you broke the water fountain, yelled at the R.A., threw your garbage down the hallway or puked on a door. Is it really that necessary for you to get piss drunk on a Tuesday night? I don't think so. Am I the only person who has work to do? I still don't think so.

Don't get me wrong. I have nothing against a little social drinking every once in a while. I just think that problems arise when people cannot distinguish between social drinking and a drinking problem. It seems that some people see college as an opportunity to get hammered every night of the week. It's not. I swear. Isn't anyone in college to learn something? While I'm sure that there are many people in this university who are taking full advantage of their education, these people are hard to find.

By living in a dorm, you agree to abide by the rules and regulations that this University has laid down for you. Honestly, I live in a dorm and everyone knows that it's easy to get around most of the rules. This is why I just can't understand people who get repeatedly written up for stupid things.

For those of you who do get written up often, I have three words of wisdom for you: Close your door. Isn't that simple? Pick your loud, drunk butt up off the couch and close your door. You'll be doing your floormates and yourself a favor. They won't have to listen to your crap and you'll be less likely to get in trouble. Got it? Good.

Listen, if you can't respect your floor and the people who live on it, you shouldn't be in college. Unfortunately, they let anyone live in the dorms. There should be some kind of interview that you have to go through before you get accepted into the dorm. There is no application to fill out. There is no test that shows how mature you are. If you get into the University, you're automatically guaranteed on campus housing. In fact, you have to live on campus for two years. That sucks. The truth is that many people aren't mature enough to handle living on their own. They belong at home with mommy and daddy.

I don't mean to sound bitter or bitchy. It's just that I have as much right as the next person to fully enjoy dorm life and I feel that there are people that are restricting that right. These people live on practically every floor in every dorm. You might even be one of these people. Now, I'm not saying that drunk people are bad people. I am saying that people who are violent, destructive and loud when they're drunk should learn to control themselves. Take responsibility for your actions and grow up. You'll be doing yourself and everyone else a favor.

Eliza Berkowitz is a Collegian columnist.

Eighteen and life

Seema Gangatirkar

Amy Grossberg and Brian Peterson Jr. should be looking forward to the rest of their lives.

In fact, at the tender age of 18, they should be hanging out with friends at their respective colleges or enjoying everything life has to offer before getting on with the real world.

Except for this couple, the future now offers at best life behind bars or at worse, the death penalty.

Grossberg and Peterson are guilty of murdering their son, just minutes after he was born.

Murdering babies soon after birth is not an uncommon crime. Newsweek reports that 207 babies less than a week old were murdered in 1994.

What sets this pair apart is that they didn't fit the profile of the poor, young single mother acting alone. They came from wealthy families, were reportedly well-adjusted and when they murdered, they were together.

In fact, Grossberg and Peterson had more options than most people caught in this situation. They could have opted for an abortion early on when Grossberg discovered she was pregnant or adoption after the child was born.

What they didn't do and should have done, was tell someone. If not their parents, then someone whom they trusted enough to confide in.

Perhaps the shame of an unwanted pregnancy prevented the couple from telling anyone their secret. Perhaps the attitudes in their privileged society didn't allow for the pregnancy.

When she left for college to begin her freshman year at the University of Delaware, Grossberg was six months pregnant. It seems almost ludicrous that Grossberg, who stands a little over five feet and weighs just 100 pounds could conceal her pregnancy from so many people.

Especially her parents. How could they not have noticed their size-one daughter was pregnant?

It is easy to speculate that Grossberg and Peterson were aware that their parents would disapprove and would be disappointed in them. Maybe there was something in their home lives that made telling risky.

Whatever their reasons, Grossberg and Peterson kept their silence.

And when Grossberg gave birth in a Comfort Inn Motel in the early morning hours of Nov. 12-13, rather than tell anyone then or seek help, Peterson put the 20-inch-long, six pound baby boy into a plastic bag and deposited the healthy infant in the dumpster behind the motel.

They almost got away with it.

Grossberg collapsed later that evening in her dorm and when rushed to the hospital, she confessed she had given birth and that her boyfriend had disposed of the baby.

An autopsy performed on the child revealed that he had died from multiple skull fractures and injury to the brain.

It was a cold and calculated move. How Grossberg and Peterson could simply murder their child after he was born is simply unthinkable.

Perhaps in a panic state, they lacked the ability to think straight. Maybe they didn't realize the consequences of their actions. But probably, they thought they'd get away with murder and no one would ever know.

The thing is, we do know now and unfortunately, it's hard to feel pity for Grossberg and Peterson. The image of Grossberg commanding Peterson to get rid of the child shortly after giving birth is almost too grotesque for words.

It's probably only now that Grossberg and Peterson have the time to contemplate their actions. What they feel can only be speculated at.

Whatever Grossberg and Peterson felt about letting down their families and communities before, they know for sure that they have disappointed and shocked an entire nation.

And their actions are bigger than concealing an unwanted pregnancy.

Because the victim was under the age of 14, Delaware will seek the death penalty against the teenagers.

So now instead of planning for the future, Grossberg and Peterson will now try to find a way to avoid death row.

Seema Gangatirkar is a Collegian columnist.

"HE WANT'S TO BORROW A CUP OF NUTRASWEET!"

Finding more than multiculturalism

Henry J. Brier

It should not take a stint as one of these pages' associate news editors, maintaining close contact with this University's administrators and trustees and other talking heads for someone to understand and derive how hard this University reams home the multicultural and diversity mission.

Virtually every official document released by this institution, whether it be a press release or a classified ad or the like, includes a disclaimer: "The University of Massachusetts is an Affirmative Action/ Equal Opportunity institution."

As defined by a high-ranking UMass administrator (note: this brass, particularly its leaders, is heavily-laden with white males), the people for whom equal opportunity is provided are "individuals from under-represented groups."

This clearly indicates the University's efforts, and whether or not one wants, the chance to diversify and multiculturalize oneself endlessly abounds here. However, a question that begs an answer is how does someone whose appearance is that of a white male, thus not under- represented, diversify and multiculturalize himself?

As stated, at our institution of higher learning, where hundreds (if not thousands) of different facets of life's mosaic are represented, opportunity to work and become acquainted with walks of life that greatly differ from oneself abound, and one need not look too hard to appreciate this.

So, without further adieu, the following examples could be some of one writer's more pronounced experiences with multiculturalism at UMass.

***

The most productive days I have had at this University have begun with 8 a.m. workouts, alongside hundreds of different people from all different cultures.

For me, the gym has reaped amazingly beneficial results, while I have sported and received spotting from people originating from all over this world we currently inhabit.

Something about seeing excruciating facial expressions upon the faces of people from many different countries in the Far East, the Pacific Rim, the Middle East, Africa and South America (to name but a few examples) indicates to me the help and assistance that a spotter offers during an individual's most trying time when they exert dire effort.

Never did it ever matter to me while I assisted others, nor did it ever seem to matter to others while assisting me, what sort of ethnic, nationalistic or religious background one holds while a bar embellished with iron plates threatens suffocation.

And, suffice it to say, never in the future while assisting one during a time of dire effort will one's background ever matter to me.

***

The newsroom's deafening silence late Friday afternoon, Feb. 10, 1995 abruptly came to a sudden end when the phone rang while I was tying up the week's loose ends.

My original plan was to meet my sister, and then head over to Hillel House for Shabbat services and dinner.

"Did you know there's a protest at Franklin Dining Commons now?" a woman's voice asked into the phone.

In response to a racist remark uttered by an elderly dining commons worker, students of all backgrounds, most prominently African-American, were protesting the University's slow disciplinary response.

It was my responsibility, as a news associate, to cover this event, effectively negating and sacrificing the early part of my plans for that night.

That was one of the biggest stories I wrote, and I am proud of my combined efforts in writing this story which occurred during the semester that Black-Jewish tensions seemed to begin to diffuse.

***

English being my native tongue, I would now like to bring to consummation the two additional languages I speak reasonably well.

The benefits of being bi-lingual are unbelievable, and they heavily overshadow any detriments (of which there are none).

To anyone even remotely interested in communication with that many more world inhabitants, or if one desires a way of opening the mind to totally different ways of thinking, study foreign languages.

***

A college education, for which I am extremely thankful and fortunate to have had, has great potential to immensely benefit those who go out of their way to maximize.

It is not one's responsibility to dictate to others how to so experience, as one great lesson about college is learning how to make opportunity happen.

Henry J. Brier is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

PVTA responds to complaints

To the editor:

For the past several months, the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority has displayed paid advertisements for Pro-life and Pro-choice groups on buses owned by it as part of a transit advertising program. PVTA has received numerous complaints from passengers and other persons regarding the placing of such advertisements on PVTA-owned buses.

PVTA is authorized by statute to lease advertising space on its buses. First Amendment rights, in general, provide for freedom of expression without regard to subject matter. Consequently, in this instance, PVTA has no legal right to refuse to accept and display these types of advertisements.

In view of the foregoing, PVTA will continue to accept paid advertisements from various organizations, including those registered with the Commonwealth of Massachusetts as non-profit organizations, so long as such advertisements are consistent with applicable law. The contents of these advertisements are not intended to reflect the opinions of the PVTA or the entities with which it contracts to provide transit.

Michelle Goldberg
PVTA Director of Marketing

The real ski scoop

To the editor:

In response to the Wednesday Nov. 23 article by Liz Anderson on ski resorts' supposed deals, let's go over some of the real facts. First off, half of the article was a huge plug for Berkshire East ski area, the very same place where the author rues and is on its team. Secondly, the "market rate" for ASC's seven mountain pass is $650; the offer of $475 is only made through Sunday River and Sugarloaf mountains. The Ski Club has the lowest price available at $425. Many ski areas offer great deals on the surface, but they tend to be window dressing for new corporate structure plans. As college students, we can get away with some good deals for now, but God bless those outside of our environment who want to ski affordably. Check out the real deals offered by clubs and shops who have been doing business with these areas for a while first before you drop any cash. All skiers and snowboarders want to slide for next to nothing, just be wary of those taking advantage of the fact.

Scott Conlin and Arik Colbath
Mill Valley
Dan Aronovitz
Sylvan

Romeo speaks

To the editor:

I recently went to see the movie A Mirror Has Two Faces with my girlfriend. Before I entered the theater, I understood it was going to be a sappy movie, with lots of romantic scenes and mushy dialogue. Although I do like watching the occasional "girl" movie, none has affected me quite as much as this one, as I sat there holding my girlfriend's hand. I'll keep her name out of this, otherwise she'll kill me. I realized that she is everything I've ever wanted. Without mentioning all her qualities that I love, it comes down to one thing: the way my heart pounds when I see her. It's been almost eight months and every time I see her the feelings get stronger.

Although I'm terrible with expressing my feelings, she is the first girl I can just stare at and look in her eyes and feel so unbelievable. It doesn't take much for us to have fun. We've done everything from laying on the beach on a rainy day to kissing in an elementary school playground. You know it's love when you can't leave her apartment without kissing her 100 times and basically can't get her out of your mind. I believe that everyone truly wants to feel this and I get irritated when I see people getting treated so terribly. My girlfriend has been treated so badly in the past that it sickens me when I think of what she must have gone through. I want nothing more than to treat her like she's a person, a beautiful, caring, funny and unbelievable person.

Why am I writing this? It's not so all of UMass can realize I have a great relationship because I'm sure no one really cares. I'm writing this so that people who are in a relationship can look in the mirror and truly ask yourself if you're happy with your relationship. If you feel your heart pounding, if you feel like crying every time you're with her/him because you're so happy, that's a beautiful thing and don't ever forget it. It is so important that we all have relationships in which we can be happy with our partner, still be ourselves and, most importantly, smile. If the person you're with makes you genuinely happy, then it should be automatic that a smile forms on your face. You know what, right now I'm smiling!

Pete Cooksor
Amherst

Moral standards are important too

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the two articles printed in last week's Collegian regarding a convicted sex offender living on campus. I am personally appalled that this individual, now a sophomore, was admitted into this University with the Admissions Office having full knowledge that he pleaded guilty to raping a girl with Down's Syndrome repeatedly for three years. I was further shocked to discover that this same individual had been accorded on campus housing privileges.

The Housing Office has done a tremendous disservice to the students of this University by allowing a convicted sex offender to live in its residential halls alongside women who are unaware of his past criminal activity. Although Housing acted in accordance with University policy, it is time that this policy be amended.

Considering that approximately 80 percent of sex offenders are prone to commit subsequent acts, this policy places the entire student populous at risk. Last year, there was a plethora of incidents of rape involving women on campus and this year the safety of women remains a provocative issue.

Furthermore, although I recognize the rights of all individuals to seek higher education, I believe that those given this opportunity should be in accordance with both high academic and high moral standards. When I met University President William Bulger last year at the Phi Beta Kappa induction ceremony, he adamantly stated the need to increase academic standards at UMass. I became excited when he discussed the need of this University to prioritize its goals, making academic excellence its primary objective.

How can students learn in an environment in which they feel threatened? Moreover, how can this University attempt to raise its academic standards for admission when it fails to place moral provisions on those it accords acceptance? I will call upon my elected representatives in the state legislature to expand the provisions of the Massachusetts State Sex Offenders Registry Law (enacted Oct. 1, 1996). It is time that this University take a pro-active stance on protecting its students, rather than waiting for more of its students to become victims.

Bill Ramsey
Amherst

A few overlooked women

To the editor:

With respect to the editorial of Nov. 26., "Where are the prominent women?" I should like to reply to the writer, Michelle Hillman, that the apparent lack of prominent women may lie in the eye of the beholder. There are in addition to Ms. Hillman's nominees of Marcellette Williams, Deputy Chancellor; Patricia Crosson, Provost; and Field Hockey Pam Hixon, the following women, who by anyone's scorecard are prominent and highly regarded on this campus: (in no particular order) Joyce Hatch, Associate Vice Chancellor for Budget Planning; Beverly Wood, Associate Chancellor for Campus Planning and Space Managment; Esther Terry, Chair, Department of Afro-American Studies; Patricia VandenBerg, Assistant Vice Chancellor for Communications and Marketing; Lee Edwards, Dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts; Charlena Seymour, Dean of the Graduate School; Linda Slakey, Dean of Natural Sciences and Mathematics; Susan Pearson, Associate Cancellor; Melanie Dreher, Dean of Nursing, now alas recruited to the University of Iowa; Linda Seidman, Head of Special Collections at the Library; Jaymie Chernoff, Director of Economic Development; Elaine Sortino, Associate Directore of Athletics; Barbara Burn, Associate Provost for International Studies; and Lila Gierasch, Head of the Chemistry Department.

Other women, such as Betty Siersma, Director of the University Gallery; Nina Scott, Professor of Spanish and Portugese Language and Literature; Mary Spellicy of Community Relations and Special Events; Susan Whitborne, Professor of Psychology; Martha Smith, Manager of Planning and Architecture, Katja D'Errico-Hahn, Director of Student Business; Ruth Miller, Athletic Department; Joanie O'Brien, Women's Head Basketball Coach; Nancy Garrabrants of Plant and Soil Sciences; and Nigar Khan, Special Assistant to the Dean of the Graduate School; contribute daily to the quality and elegance of life at UMass Amherst. These are women with whom I happen to be acquainted; I do not pretend to know or to have mentioned all the prominent women on campus. The University has in addition just appointed Margo Crist the new Director of Libraries, like others not an invisible position.

I hope that Michelle Hillman will take time to contact or to learn about these women. If they and others like them are not "known," the fault does not lie with them. By comparison with a number of other universities with which I have been directly or indirectly associated, I continue to be impressed with this University's regard for and record in the advancement of women.

Kathleen Scott
The Chancellor's House

Analysis of Revolution inaccurate

To the editor:

For such a proud American citizen, Jeff Hirshberg (Letters, Dec. 2) doesn't know his own country's history too well. Those who came to America, colonists, not "colonialists," were provoked not by "over-taxation," but "taxation without representation" and "a history or repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States."(Declaration of Independence) Yet these freedom loving colonists' idea of freedom was restricted only to those who happened to agree with their notion of it. Let us not forget that the American Revolution was also a civil war that forced 3 percent of its population into exile and that the Constitution adopted by this new nation enshrined the institution of slavery. His beloved Minutemen were fully grown militiamen, not drummer boys, so called because of their ability to mobilize quickly. They became immortalized back at the Battle of Lexington/Concord on April 19, 1775, where eight died and 10 were wounded in a confrontation with British soldiers in what was then considered a colonial dispute, and independence was still disowned as a patriot aim.

As for Mr. Hirschberg's assertion that "Regardless of what the feminists want to believe, there were no women involved in our proud country's quest for freedom," I beg to differ. For starters, there is at least one documented case of a woman disguising herself as a man to fight in the Continental Army. Furthermore, action during times of war is not restricted solely to the battlefield. Women often singlehandedly maintained homes, farms and families while their men were away fighting and if they never came back. They were also indispensable in army camps both on the British and American sides. To claim that no one took part in the Revolution except white men demeans the contribution of women, blacks and Indians who fought and received scant rewards for their labors. If he believes that the Minutemen were the ones who allowed women's suffrage, he ignores the efforts of women the world over to achieve justice, a battle that continues today. If the Minutemen were so keen on women's rights, why did the 19th Amendment not get passed until 1920, after those tyrannous Brits, as well as other European nations, had given women the vote?

Sarah Jillings
Southwest

To the editor:

I feel compelled to write in response to Jeff Hirschberg's letter to the editor which appeared in Monday's Collegian (Dec. 2) First, I must correct his inaccurate Eurocentric history. The colonists came to America for economic advancement, not to escape religious persecution. They went to Holland for that. And these "respectable and courageous men" who risked their lives in order to gain freedom for their families and fight for the "American cause" are the same white men who, along with their descendants, slaughtered nearly 12 million Native Americans in their first four hundred years on the continent and enslaved 45 million Africans, only 15 million of whom survived the horrific conditions of the Middle Passage.

Mr. Hirschberg goes on to say that, "Regardless of what the feminists want to believe, there were no women involved in our proud country's quest for freedom." I take exception to this statement. The American Revolution would have failed were it not for the contributions of women. Women have fought in every war in the history of this country. However, this often goes unnoticed because many of these women were forced to dress as men in order to be allowed to enlist. And those women who weren't on the battlefield were raising money to support the war effort, sending food to nourish the soldiers, giving medical treatment to the wounded who otherwise would have died and contributing in countless other ways.

Our "founding fathers" are not the people who fought for the benefits we have today. They fought in favor of exploitation, capitalism, slavery, genocide and cultural imperialism. Their vision of a perfect America was equality for all white males who owned property. Women, people of color, civil rights activists, labor union organizers, gays and lesbians and all other social reformers fought for the benefits we have today. These are the people who deserve credit for what we have come to know as American freedoms. And it is these people who I feel the need to stick up for, not the dead, white male slave-holders who all too often receive credit for building this nation.

Tina Cincotti
Northeast

Arts & Living

Lemonheads fail to meet expectations at Pearl St.

By John Hendrickson
Collegian Correspondent

LEMONHEADS
Pearl St.
Dec. 2

Northampton — "Here's that cup of coffee you ordered, Mr. Dando."

Odds are nobody uttered that phrase Monday night at Pearl St. Headlining WHMP's Snow Show '96, Boston's Lemonheads failed to live up to the hype and promise of their latest album, car button cloth. Now fronting a quartet, head Lemon Evan Dando seemed to literally sleepwalk through their performance — saying nothing, hardly moving, and generally appearing to be in a state of chemically- induced catatonia.

Which is really too bad, because the current Lemonheads roster could be their most accomplished yet. From guitarist John Strohm's squalls of feedback to Murph's relentless drumming, the band, to put it bluntly, rocked. The pleasant country twang of the Lemonheads' recent albums has been ditched in favor of a deafening, garage-rock roar. Bassist and Captain Lou Albano–look–a–like (remember him from all those old Cyndi Lauper videos, kids?) Bill Gibson's lively playing, tasty harmonies and head–banging antics added to this mix perfectly, yet unfortunately Dando Calrissian's lethargy overshadowed the excitement generated by his bandmates.

Not to say the entire show was a disaster, though. The band reached pop nirvana with the opening one–two punch of "It's All True" and current single "If I Could Talk I'd Tell You." However, the remainder of the set was far more inconsistent. The songs, mostly taken from car button cloth, soon became almost indistinguishable from one another; too many mid–paced rockers drowned out by a murky mix of guitars.

The band shined when they escaped this formula, though. Highlights included the morbid country standard "Knoxville Girl," the introspective "Hospital" and the metallic crunch of "Style" and "Secular Rockulidge." Nevertheless, these diversions weren't enough to save the overall performance from becoming uninspired and eventually boring.

A big part of the reason the Lemonheads seemed so dull was the opening set by California's Goldfinger. The ska– punk quartet proved to be the big hit of the evening, whipping the crowd into a sweaty, bouncing frenzy with their adrenaline–fueled, radio–friendly power–pop.

The fun Goldfinger was obviously having coupled with their affection for the audience led to a truly explosive show. The band, when not maniacally romping around the stage themselves, were happy to share the spotlight and microphone with their fans, at one point encouraging one to swan–dive off of the PA system. Goofy stage antics coupled with ace covers of songs by Joe Jackson and The Cure fully won the crowd over, and the explosive finale of "Here In Your Bedroom" and "She's The Bomb" left them wrung out and wanting more.

Superdrag, though, were completely unremarkable. Their generic appearance and cookie–cutter mall–ternative rock paled in comparison to the hyperactive Goldfinger and even the underachieving Lemonheads. At least they had the good sense to poke fun at their aggravating hit "Who Sucked Out The Feeling."

KENNETH W P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Goldfinger was among the bands playing at Pearl Street on Monday night.

KENNETH W P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Evan Dando, lead singer for the Lemonheads, played a disappointing set at Pearl Street Monday night.

Bradbury releases collection of stories

By Dorian Benkoil
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ray Bradbury may be the best-known science fiction and fantasy writer alive, but he flinches when reminded he's famous.

It's not the fame, or the money that has motivated him to write 500 short stories, dozens of screenplays, help design Disney's Epcot Center and consult for city planners. It's "love," he says. And, the best thing about his latest book tour, he says, is the "love" he gets from fans.

"You write so that people will like what you do, and come up to you on the street and say, 'I love you,'" he said.

Bradbury's latest book, Quicker Than the Eye, is his first collection in more than eight years and has spurred him to take his first nationwide book tour in 64 years of writing.

The 21 stories he's written in the book paint a whimsical, fantastic and sometimes terrifying portrait of memories from Bradbury's 76 years of life.

"Exchange" tells of a young man who, like Bradbury, went back to his hometown library to visit the "friends" he'd made in the books he borrowed, 10 at a time.

In "Another Fine Mess," two women hear ghosts whose voices belong to Laurel and Hardy, the slapstick actors who enthralled Bradbury on a trip he made to Ireland 40 years ago.

In "Dorian in Excelsus," an amorphous blob absorbs the evils of beautiful men in a "gymnasium," actually a sex palace that greatly upset Bradbury when he went to see it with a friend 30 years ago.

Bradbury first gained widespread notice in 1950 with The Martian Chronicles, a series of vignettes about rapacious Earthmen destroying the red planet. It has sold more than 3 million copies.

He gained even wider attention from Fahrenheit 451, his book on censorship and book-burning, when director Francois Truffaut made it into a movie in 1966.

Since then, he's won some of the most prestigious awards in his field, including the Hugo and Nebula, and is the "world's greatest science fiction writer," he said.

He then abashedly disavowed the remark, and said he'd been joking.

"It's the work that counts, not any reputation," he said. "My solution to the problem is not knowing that I'm Ray Bradbury."

Quicker Than the Eye, comes from one of its stories, about a magic show reminiscent of one that excited Bradbury's imagination when he saw it at age eight while growing up in Waukegan, Ill.

In the book's afterword, Bradbury writes that, "frozen with awe" for hours, he discovered what to do with his life.

"I knew I must become a magician. That's what happened, isn't it?" he asks. "I pretend to do one thing, cause you to blink, and in the instant seize 20 bright silks out of a bottomless hat."

Indian film focuses on the empowerment of women, human rights & revolutions

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

Regardless of the fact that the nation of India produces more films per year than any other country in the world, Indian cinema is rarely viewed in the United States. On Thursday the Five College community will have the opportunity to witness a new film made in India about an extremely important recent issue in the country's history. When Women Unite is not only an accessible means for students and faculty interested in viewing international cinema, but also a chance to become introduced to several controversial topics regarding political revolutions and women's rights.

Co–Director Shabnam Virmani has established her career as a prominent filmmaker choosing to explore the topics of several social concerns including human rights and women's development. A graduate of Cornell University's Development Communications program, When Women Unite marks her sixth feature length film.

Turn to INDIA, page 7

☆ NEVER thought i'd have this much fun! ☆ Collegian Graphics

Book reveals truth about original Superman

By Ted Anthony
Associated Press

NEW YORK — He could change the course of mighty rivers and bend steel in his bare hands. But, disguised as actor George Reeves, Superman — the 1950s incarnation — proved both sad and sadly mortal.

Reeves died in 1959 of a gunshot wound to the head, a demise that went down in Hollywood's annals as self-inflicted. He'd been depressed at being typecast, conventional wisdom went. But a husband-wife investigative reporting team have dug into old files and old jealousies and unearthed a different story.

Hollywood Kryptonite: The Bulldog, The Lady and The Death of Superman, by Sam Kashner and Nancy Schoenberger, suggests that Reeves was the victim of Eddie and Toni Mannix. Eddie was a hood turned Hollywood studio enforcer; Toni, his wife, was having an affair with the erstwhile Man of Steel.

Along the way, the book provides illuminating glimpses into the seamy side of 1950s Hollywood, into what it means to portray a hero and the mindset that ruined many movie actors who did TV work.

"It had always bothered me and my friends, watching the show endlessly on reruns," says Kashner, 42, who most recently co-wrote a book on Oscar Levant with Schoenberger.

"Here was this guy, standing up to the bad guys with hands on his hips, bullets bouncing off his torso," Kashner says. "To know he was dead and had died under a cloud was disquieting for kids growing up."

Employing a wonderfully over-the-top Raymond Chandler style ("She was a handsome woman with a brooch where her heart should have been"), the couple has uncovered enough information to make Lois Lane proud.

"We wanted to write about a pure product of American culture, and we wanted to make it an homage to the hardboiled detective genre," says Schoenberger, 45. "But they were all straight out of Central Casting anyway. The characters in the story are so wild — almost too wild to be true."

This is gripping (melo)drama, complete with shadowy figures, hang-up phone calls at midnight, mistresses, tainted evidence, a possessive mother and gunshots in the night.

The narrative, too, is fascinating: It unfolds in an intricate manner while revisiting June 17, 1959, the night of Reeves' death, several different times from differing perspectives. The authors' ability to shift the lens — and view the death from all angles — lends credence to their ultimate charge of murder.

"I really believe our conclusion," Schoenberger says. "You couldn't take this to court because there are no living witnesses and the forensic material was so incomplete to begin with. But we tried to make the most compelling circumstantial case that we could."

The B-movie characters:

-Toni Mannix, aging, elegant glamour girl. She saw Reeves not only as a classically handsome boy toy but also as a man who would give her the affection that her husband wouldn't.

-Leonore Lemmon, socialite with a wide wild streak and, apparently, an even wider mean streak. She was living with Reeves when he died and resented Toni Mannix's meddlings. Her initials were "LL" —the initials of all the comic-book women Superman has ever loved.

-Helen Bessolo, Reeves' controlling mother. She wanted to believe her son was a big-time movie star even as he lamented the Superman typecasting. She refused to allow his body to be buried until her crusade to prove a suspicious death ran out of gas.

-Jack Larson, today a successful producer ("Urban Cowboy," "Bright Lights, Big City") but in those days the young man who played Jimmy Olsen, Daily Planet boy reporter. Larson, a good friend of both Reeves and Toni Mannix, has said he believes Reeves' death was suicide. Though he cooperated with the authors, he didn't subscribe to many of their conclusions. And there is a supporting cast of dozens — producers, moguls and strangely tangential figures who may or may not have played parts in the mysterious death.

Reeves, of course, is the main character, and he comes across as a schizophrenic — not clinically, but as a hard-drinking, manipulated man who loves life dearly and also feels consistently beaten down by it.

"He was fighting the myth. He was fighting with Superman," Kashner says. "It's the Superman imprisonment, and he was trying to break out of it but couldn't."

But in the end, Schoenberger says, "he may not have had the career he wanted, but he became a mythic figure instead." They're all dead now except for Larson, and perhaps the truth died with them. But people are still wary.

"When we talked to a contemporary of George Reeves who was involved in that night to some extent or another, they would actually say to us, 'Who's still living?'" Schoenberger says.

"They're out there in nursing homes and they wanted to know who's left and who's missing. The specter of the Mannixes was so great that they were at first a little hesitant to talk to us."

So if you're interested, grab your remote control, flick among the higher cable channels and look for a 1950s show featuring a strikingly handsome man who's either wearing a gray suit and mild-mannered glasses or tights with a big "S" on the chest.

That's Superman — not the one who lived on in Christopher Reeve and Dean Cain, or the one whose new stories come out in comic-book form every month, but the one who met an unhappy end, swallowed by a cliched and unfriendly place called Hollywood.

Maybe this new book finally reveals the truth. Maybe it doesn't. But it certainly is convincing. And it certainly is fascinating.

"It was kind of a crushing notion that none of us in the schoolyards wanted to accept — that Superman killed himself," Kashner says. "And now we don't have to accept it anymore."

Hollywood Kryptonite: The Bulldog, the Lady and the Death of Superman is available from St. Martin's Press. $21.95.

■ India

continued from page 6

The other director, Nata Duvvury has also had a prominent career involved with social issues in India. She is most known for her work and leadership in creating technology that serves safe, practical purposes as opposed to contributing to human kinds demise. Together these two intriguing individuals have cooperated in creating a film that will ideally serve to open Western awareness to the conflicts that occur in other parts of the globe.

When Women Unite is in part documentary and part re- enactments of the struggles that occurred in the Indian state of Andhra Pradesh in 1992. The government attempting to exploit its citizens, sold inexpensive alcohol to the village males. This decision on the governments behalf, to make money through these sales, resulted in the destruction of many families. The men who had little money to begin with, spent what they had on the alcohol and neglected their responsibilities to their wives and children. Another major problem became apparent when the alcoholism erupted into domestic violence.

The central aim of this film demonstrates oppressed individuals uniting together to overthrow their exploiters. When the village women bonded with the hope to bring about positive change, their struggles ended and their goal was realized. For three years the women rallied against the government's sale of alcohol and in 1995 a prohibition was instated in Andhra Pradesh.

When Women Unite is an ideal example of the importance film can have in describing the conflicts of social and historical ills. By providing a means of raising knowledge and awareness, a film such as this can both educate the public and hopefully prevent future situations that invoke negative actions against others.

When Women Unite is playing this Thursday night at 6 p.m. in Thompson 102. Following the screening there will be a discussion with the filmmakers. For more information contact Maya at (413)546-4571.

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE DISCOUNT OIL
Northampton / Holyoke
584-4112 • 535-1888
SAME DAY DELIVERY

Go Ahead, Card Me.

Talk about your great deal...the Okemo College VIP Card. For just $25, your first lift ticket (Mon.–Fri.) is FREE, then ski or ride for 1/2 price on weekdays and get $10 off on weekends and holidays for the rest of the season. Snickers, Mountain Dew and HMV Record Stores are throwing in special deals, too! So c'mon up to Okemo - it never felt so good to get carded.

OKEMO
MOUNTAIN
THE SOUND

Okemo InfoLine: (802) 228-4041 • 24-Hour Snow Line: (802) 228-5222 • http://www.okemo.com

Now College Season Pass just $419 - Ski or Ride everyday

Holiday periods are 12/25/96-1/1/97, 1/17-19/97, 2/17-21/97. For the season pass, present your college I.D. and proof of full-time student status at the Okemo Main Administrative Office.
*The prices of the College Card and Season Pass include Vermont 5% sales tax

THE UMASS THEATRE GUILD PRESENTS
THE PAJAMA GAME
A MUSICAL COMEDY
Dec. 5, 6, 7, 1996
8PM IN THE STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
Saturday Matinee at 2pm
Tickets:
$4 students/seniors
$6 general public
Tickets may be purchased at TIX Unlimited or at the door

Want to see discrimination in action?
Come to Pruddy's Tropical Bar & Grill town meeting and see Amherst's self - appointed vigilantes try to close another business in town.
We need you to support and speak the truth about at the Bangs Center, thursday night at 7:00 pm.
PRUDDY'S
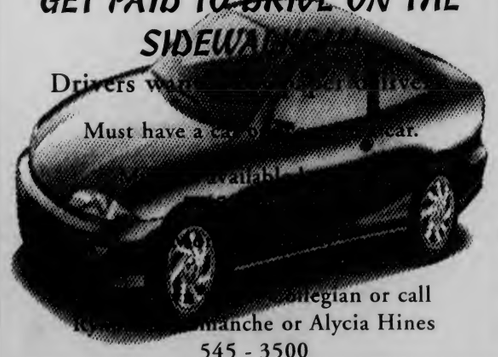
paid for by Friends of Pruddy's



DISTRIBUTION MANAGER
WANTED FOR SPRING SEMESTER
Must be available between 7:45am and 11:00am Monday through Friday

Come to the Collegian to apply, or call Ryan Courtemanche or Alycia Hines at 545-3500

DAILY COLLEGIAN and ICP present:
The First Annual UMass bandWidth
Spanning Five UMass Bands
Watch here for band listing!
CLUB METRO NORTHAMPTON, MA
18+
Monday Dec. 9th
Doors Open @ 7:00
Bands Start @ 9:00
$5 admission ($4 with this ad)

PRUDDY'S PRESENTS:
DJ Chevas International Club Night.
Some of you have heard him at Limelight in NY. Some of you have heard him at Avalon in Boston. Some of you have heard him around Europe. Now hear him in Amherst.
Featuring the best club music from the USA, Europe and around the world.
Only at Pruddy's - nowhere else in the valley.
PRUDDY'S
9:00 pm to 1:00 am
• FOOD • TROPICAL DRINKS • FRIENDS •

GET PAID TO ~~DRIVE~~ ON THE SIDEWALK
Drivers wanted, part or full time.
Must have a [illegible] year.
[illegible]

[illegible]egian or call
[illegible]anche or Alycia Hines
545 - 3500

The Magic Lantern
THE BEST IN ADULT ENTERTAINMENT

Amateur Night
Wednesday, Dec. 4th
8:30pm
Come See The Top Female Amateurs From New England Compete For $500 Cash
Runner Up Prizes
Free Admission With Ad.
Interested Contestants Call 283-9275
Giveaways & Audience Participation
Only 30 Minutes from the UMass Campus: Rte. 9 east, to Rte. 181 south, to Rte. 20 west for 1.5 miles
Open 6 days - Closed Sundays 12 pm to 1 am Boston Rd. - Rte. 20 - Palmer, MA 413-283-9275

DOMINO'S PIZZA
CHEESE PIZZA SALE
$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM
Expires 12/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

Collins sorts out his personal life

By Kira L. Billik
Associated Press

NEW YORK — After two tumultuous years, which included the breakup of his 14-year marriage to his second wife, Jill, singer Phil Collins is ready for some happiness.

He left Genesis, which he had been with for 25 years, he fell in love again and he put out an upbeat new album — his seventh solo effort, Dance Into the Light.

Collins intended the title song to be about the people of South Africa finding freedom after decades of oppression and fear. But he found a more personal definition of freedom in it.

"It could easily be a song about me," he said in an interview at Atlantic Records' New York headquarters. "(It's) not freedom from a marriage, not freedom from this or that, but just coming out into the light again out of having been in the woods."

His divorce made him front-page fodder for the rapacious British tabloids, which hounded him throughout the tour supporting his last record, Both Sides.

"I did wish that I wasn't who I was, because if I wasn't who I was, this wouldn't be on the front page of a newspaper — I'd just be able to deal with it in private," he said of the ordeal. "I would have given up anything. Nothing that I had was worth it."

On that tour, he met his 23-year-old girlfriend, Orianne, who he's been with for 2 1/2 years. Collins left his native England after the press fiasco; the two now live in Switzerland. He wrote a good portion of Dance Into the Light on the road while holed up in hotel rooms.

"When the tabloid hell started, I was very, very happy. I was sad at what had happened, but happy at the prospect of my future," he said. "That is what these songs represent."

Part of his future plans include slowing down. "Occasionally, I feel like mutinying," he said. "I still love what I do; believe me, this album was great to make and I'm very, very proud of it. But the thought of going on the road for three months does not make me jump up and down for joy like I might have done 10 years ago, five years ago.

"(It's) just trying to get a balance in my life that, apart from the most recent year and a half, two years, I've never had," he said.

He says he'd love to do an entire album of sweet, innocent pop songs similar to "That's What You Said (Spirit of '65)" and "It's in Your Eyes" on the current record.

At 45, Collins looks trim and fit. He wore jeans and a navy silk shirt, and slightly round glasses emphasized his roundish, expressive face. He is more sedate than his public persona would indicate; his sense of humor pops up more sporadically than one might expect.

He did the record without using drum machines. He had gotten a lot of flak for using them on his last few albums, but argues that they were what that particular material sonically needed.

"Sometimes the drum machine sounds create the atmosphere of the song," he said. "Take that away and you may not have something very special at all. I don't feel threatened being a drummer having a drum machine."

He also wanted to prove to himself that he could still physically play the drums. He has a broken bone in his wrist that cannot be repaired because the bone is dead. His doctor couldn't guarantee that Collins would maintain his mobility if the bone were removed.

Collins did some session work and the wrist was fine. But to really prove to himself that he was OK, he took his big band side project on the road after Dance Into the Light was finished.

"(It) was a huge mountain for me to climb," he said. "Not only was I having to play all the time, it was a different style. We did two shows in one night in Montreux and it was great — I didn't hurt at all."

Genesis did a charity show in England while Collins was working on Dance Into the Light, and it was then that he realized he had to end his creative relationship with keyboardist Tony Banks and guitarist Mike Rutherford.

"I felt like an actor," he said. "Out of the four or five songs we did, I'd written the lyrics for (four). I was singing songs which I couldn't say, 'If you don't like this, then you don't like what I'm doing.' (It was), 'If you don't like this, I know, but that was his idea.'

"I really enjoyed some of the time in Genesis; I enjoyed most of it. But the older you get, you figure, I don't want to waste my time doing anything that I can't stand up and say, 'This is me.' I had great fun for 25 years — now I'd like to have great fun doing something else," he said.

Some of that "something else" is working on the score for the upcoming Disney movie Tarzan. Collins is an animation vet, having supplied the voices of the twin polar bears Muk and Luk in the film Balto.

"I remember sitting watching cartoons with my daughter and thinking, 'Wow, I'd like to do this, because then my daughter can watch it and that'd be me,"' he said. "It's about songwriting, it's not about being hip or unhip — it's writing a song that is going to last forever."

His daughter went to see Balto not knowing about Collins' vocal contribution.

"(She was) watching it, and suddenly these two polar bears came on the screen and she shouted out, 'That's my dad!"' he said. "It was a fantastic moment — that's what I always wanted her to do."

Biography chronicles traditions

Nigerian professor describes clash of cultures & ideology

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

DYMPNA UGWU-OJU
What Will My Mother Say
Bonus Books, Inc.

In recent years, the subject of female circumcision has been making headlines around the world. In What Will My Mother Say, Dympna Ugwu-Oju, a woman born and bred in Nigeria, takes on that subject and more.

What Will My Mother Say is a serious look at Ibo culture. The Ibo tribe is just one of several major groups in Nigeria, so it's important to keep in mind that Ugwu-Oju's book is not representative of all groups in Africa.

Ugwu-Oju starts her autobiography with a story of her mother, Rose, who at the age of 14 marries a man she hardly knows. Rose refers to her husband as "Master," walking two steps behind him and never making eye contact. When her husband dies, Rose is left with seven children to raise on her own and in a society where a woman is valued for only the sons she will give birth to.

Ugwu-Oju tells of her strong Catholic upbringing and her natural ability at school. Unfortunately, Ugwu-Oju's schooling was interrupted by the Nigerian-Biafran war, a war which threatens everything her family owns and holds dear. After the war, Ugwu-Oju is sent to the United States to obtain her degree.

In the U.S., Ugwu-Oju discovers a new way of life. After spending five years in the States and obtaining a masters degree in journalism, she returns to Nigeria to marry the traditional Ibo man her mother has chosen for her.

While traditional in her marriage, Ugwu-Oju becomes the first woman to become a professor in mass communications at any Nigerian university.

Ugwu-Oju, who currently lives with her family in California, discusses these issues with equanimity. Her writing style is conversational, as if she is saying, "This is the way it was, this is the way it is and this is the way it always will be."

What Will My Mother Say is an eloquent testament to Ugwu-Oju's mother and other strong women. It is also the perfect example of that eternal conflict that occurs when radically different cultures collide. A

Robin Leach celebrates American heroes on new show

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The rich and famous have lost their allure. Just ask Robin Leach, who now is banking on the virtuous and unsung. He starts tonight on "Heroes America," a one-hour special airing at 8 p.m. EST on the USA cable network. It could return as a weekly series come spring, Leach adds, "depending on the amount of noise the special makes."

Should make plenty. From the thud of viewer's jaws, anyway, at the sight of Leach forgoing "champagne wishes and caviar dreams" in favor of the Salt of the Earth.

Meanwhile, cover your ears as the Zeitgeist screams through an abrupt about-face. Greed and ostentation — sanctified by Leach for 14 seasons on "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" — now succumb to altruism.

For the new show he pledges "a quieter Robin Leach," but even that's a matter of opinion. Behold the British-born Leach at the top of the show, the U.S. Capitol dome over his shoulder, declaring his subjects "taRUE-baLUE paROOF" of America's greatness.

Not that he doesn't make a good case for his slate of a half-dozen "homespun heroes."

A varied and inspiring lot, they include an 84-year-old washerwoman who saved a quarter-million dollars, then donated much of it to set up college scholarships. A teen beauty-queen who, for the past three years, has focused her energies not on runways and tiaras but on feeding Baltimore's inner-city homeless. A former Pittsburgh Steeler who now runs a "tough-love" retreat for troubled youngsters.

"Heroes America," in short, is a feel-good hour that dwells refreshingly on people who are more than what they own, on things money can't buy.

So "Heroes America' will either work and be very, very successful — or, at least, it will be a beautiful epilogue," Leach said.

WRITE FOR ARTS

Chabad House opens kosher pizza restaurant tomorrow

By Sarah Kimmel
Collegian Staff

A new restaurant is coming to town. No, it's not the Hard Rock... it's Chabad Rock. Located at the Chabad House at 30 North Hadley Road in Amherst, this eatery is prepared to serve up some tasty treats.

The all kosher pizza joint is having its grand opening Thursday at 5 p.m. The evening will begin immediately after sundown and the start of Chanukah. There will be Chabad Rock T-shirts as promotion and for sale. Each order will come with free chocolate Chanukah gelt and hot, freshly baked rolls. At 8 p.m. there will be a Chanukah celebration commemorating the start of the holiday.

Chabad Rock is the brain child of Rabbi Chaim Adelman. He saw the need for a place that serves kosher food for the student community. He hopes "to have place where students can hang out and have a kosher pizza."

The restaurant is run by the members of the Chabad House. Director of Programming at the Chabad House, Yonah Blum, has tasted the pizza several times in the process of developing the recipe. He says that it "just keeps getting better and better each time."

Toppings for the pizza include mushrooms, peppers and olives, to name a few. The restaurant not only has a brand new pizza oven but also has an oven to bake Challah. This traditional Shabbat bread as well as hot rolls will be for sale at the restaurant.

Members of the Chabad House are anxiously awaiting the opening of this new eatery. Rabbi Adelman feels that there will be a great turnout on Thursday.

For more information about the Chabad Rock Cafe call (413) 549-4094.

U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd.
North Amherst, MA
549-RENT
Weekend Special
Noon Friday to Monday AM - Starting at $59.95
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/ Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co..
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS?
If you want to earn some money during your holiday vacation, come to work for the Barnes & Noble College Division. To determine which of the more than 20 college bookstores in Massachusetts will be closest to where you will be spending your holidays, please call Barnes & Noble Regional Office at (508) 934-6428.
Full and part-time jobs, immediate hires, flexible scheduling, friendly work environment, and store discount up to 35%.
We are an equal opportunity employer.
BARNES & NOBLE COLLEGE DIVISION

DON'T GO INTO HIBERNATION ON YOUR WINTER BREAK
Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17
...spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell. If you want to move ahead in your educational program, and earn college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits. If you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break - at UMass Lowell
DAY CLASSES:
Monday - Saturday,
9am - 12noon
EVENING CLASSES:
Monday - Friday,
6 - 9pm
Saturday 1 - 4pm
Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
• Liberal Arts • Sciences
• Mathematics • Computers
• Social Sciences • Music
• Management
Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit
For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.
Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.
Name
Address
City
State Zip
Phone ( )
Institution Currently Attending
UMass Lowell
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
Division Of Continuing Education

Super student value
Introducing
Collegian Classifieds
HALF PRICE
THURSDAYS!
Only For Students
Only at the Collegian Newsstand
10am - 2pm
On the Campus Center
Concourse

■ NHL

continued from page 12

Bowman and his mates went on to Hall of Fame careers. Cherry and Cheevers (sounds like a Ben and Jerry's flavor, huh?) went on to... television careers.

I remember that game like a hazy stain that will never wash from the fabric of my soul. That was 18 years ago. I don't remember what I did or said yesterday, but I remember that game. In the web-like tapestry of a Boston sports maniac mind, this episode takes up a major section (along with the Curse of the Bambino, etc.), and is in a way... "home." Pathetic, isn't it?

All this came back to me on Monday as I read the latest chapter of the Cherry-Steve Kasper battle. From his microphone on Canadian television, the creator of the "Rock 'Em-Sock 'Em" hockey videotape series has been socking it to Kasper for benching Rick Tocchet last week.

Nothing new. Cherry has been on Kasper since his non-appearance for the L.A. Kings due to a concussion in the playoffs a few years back. He got on him again last year when Kasper benched Cam Neely (ouch) and Kevin Stevens (don't care), who both curiously do not play anymore for the Bruins due to circumstances beyond my control, of course.

Anyway, Kasper got his chance to strike back last weekend, saying that Cherry had his chance to coach, and that he was called for a bench minor (i.e. too many men).

Gee, when Kasper does strike, he can hit a soft spot.

That one hurt, especially from a normally soft-spoken man. Even I felt it.

Maybe Plaid Man should shut his mouth, because it is true. You can't outrightly blame the coach on a referee's call like that, but still it happened. In the end, the coach is responsible. But Cherry won't shut up, he gets paid big money to blab. Kasper won't regret his decision, but defend it. During his playing days, he was one of the best defensive forwards in the game. Ask Wayne Gretzky.

I don't know what pissed me off more: Cherry further giving us media types a bad name by running his mouth off, or Kasper for his choice to sit a teamer like Tocchet.

No, it was the memory of that game. I have to go against Kasper on this one, as if that is a surprise. He brought it up.

•In the "you may ask yourself, 'Am I right-am I wrong?'" department, I continue the autobiographical tone of this column with another one of the worst experiences in my life. It was last June, and I was longing for "real" hockey (not the proper British style) after returning from a year- long exchange to England.

I was at home. The TV flickered before me (feels like we've been here before), showing a Cup named after a Lord... on a beach. ON A BEACH! I almost freakin' fainted.

The reason why was the Florida Panthers had made the Finals, and ESPN felt that the sunset gleaming off of Lord Stanley's punch bowl would be "oh, so cute!" Bah-humbug. Florida got to the ultimate goal in the NHL on an adrenaline rush through the best of the Eastern Conference, beating Boston, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. But the train stopped at Colorado, as the 'Lanche swept them in four games.

Being an Original Six-er (not Philadelphia, please!), which basically means I'm an old-time hockey fan, I really do not favor hockey being played where water does not freeze. I don't want sand in my Baucrs, as much as I don't want sand in my shorts. The only thing I want cold on a 90 degree day is the air conditioned living room I am parked in, and the cool, frosty treat I am guzzling.

I did not want to give the Panthers any credit.

"Fluke!" I screamed. "Fllllluuuuuukkkkkke!!!!!!!"

But my exhortations to the skies were in vain. Once again, the hockey gods shook their golden sticks in concerted indignation at me. I was alone in my refusal to recognize a team from below the Mason-Dixon line.

Not anymore, the Panthers are for real. Florida (16–3–6, 38 points) is at the top of the NHL, with no fluke called on the play. A team-wide, center-ice checking philosophy has brought the Panthers success, as the stars on the team aren't offensive in nature, but defensive.

Starting goalie John Vanbiesbrouck (11–2–4, 1.75 GAA) is only three one-hundredths of a point behind Detroit's Chris Osgood in the NHL goaltending race, and backup Mark Fitzpatrick (5–1–2, 2.28 GAA) can start anywhere. None of their forwards are in the Top 20 in scoring. But anyway, the Panthers' future does not lie in players like forwards Scott Mellanby and Ray Sheppard, but in a Bourque–ian defenseman like Ed Jovanoski.

It hurts me to talk about warm weather–ice hockey teams. Period. But I have to grow up... nah.

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

■ NFL

continued from page 12

the Patriots do lose because of this, all the long TD passes given up after Jacksonville, Baltimore and Buffalo were beaten are going to hurt really badly.

The Patriots managed to avoid that in San Diego by continuing to play aggressive defense, which will hopefully boost that squad's confidence and let them continue that level of play through the last three games.

To put this all in a little more perspective, the Patriots have only ever hosted one playoff game. On Dec. 31, 1978 they lost the AFC Divisional Playoffs to a visiting Houston squad, 31-14.

• Only two teams have clinched a playoff berth so far — Denver and Green Bay — and in a possible Super Bowl preview, they'll meet next week on the frozen tundra of Lambeau Field.

As good as Denver is, Green Bay has some definite advantages here. Besides playing at home and possibly getting TE Mark Chmura back, they should have more motivation.

Denver has not only just gotten into the playoffs, but have a bye and home field advantage throughout. Even if they lost the next three games, they hold the tie breakers over the three teams that could possibly tie their record (the aforementioned Patriots, Steelers and Bills). Conventional wisdom, however, says that Green Bay has to get home field advantage if they want to get past Dallas in the playoffs. After losing to them on Monday Night Football, the Pack (10–3) has to have a better record than the 'Pokes (8–5). They've got to be hoping Denver coach Mike Shanahan uses this game to let some of his guys get some extra rest.

Green Bay/Denver isn't the only possible Super Bowl preview coming up. There's a host of games between AFC and NFC contenders, some of which could end one side's season before January ever rolls around. Some of the better matchups in the next three weeks include: Philadelphia/Indianapolis tomorrow night on ESPN; New England/Dallas and San Francisco/Pittsburgh a week from this Sunday; and Pittsburgh/Carolina on the last week of the season.

One of the other most important games coming up next week shouldn't be as good as the previously mentioned ones, but could be as important. Atlanta (2–11) meets New Orleans (2–11) to find out who will likely be numbers two and three in the April draft.

Number one, of course, is once-again the New York Jets.

Jacob W. Michaels is a Collegian columnist.

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Runnin' with the Devil!

That might just help the Minutemen's chances this weekend against the Friars of Providence College.

■ polo

continued from page 12

It doesn't seem plausible that anyone on the team wants the national championship more than Staudenbaucr, a California boy who grew up in the Mecca of water polo. This quest for the NCAA title brings Marc back home, back where he very nearly stayed to play collegiate polo at Cal– Santa Barbara.

But, one trip out to the historic Bay State hooked the sport management major on the Pioneer Valley.

"I came here on a recruiting trip; I was definitely going to Santa Barbara, I loved it, I went there on a trip. I thought it was great," Staudenbauer said. "And, I came out here — I just really liked UMass, I loved the campus. Russ was great, he just convinced me about the program and I was sold on it. It was a real tough decision."

Two and a half years after that tough decision, he has settled into UMass, and into his new role on his powerhouse water polo squad.

"Last year, I was still kind of like the younger brother, like to Luvi [John Luviano], because we're a lot like brothers on this team, now I feel like the older brother. It took a little while to get used to, but I'm liking this role."

Free Loaner Car
OOPS!
•Free Estimates
•Lifetime Repair Warranty
•Auto Glass Replacement
•Car & Truck Rental
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

Dont just sit around.... read the Collegian!!

Kick Butts
QUIT SMOKING
Support Group
Ongoing support group every Wednesday night starting October 23 from 7 - 8PM at the UMASS Campus Center. Room number posted at elevator.
Are you thinking about quitting smoking?
Have you quit and felt it difficult to stay quit?
Do you want to help other people quit and stay quit?
Come to your quit smoking support group.
Get professional advice and counseling, peer counseling and proven quit tips and techniques.
FREEDOM FROM SMOKING FREE OF CHARGE
For more information call Steve at: 577-5181
Jointly sponsored by: University Health Services Health Education Division The Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts and The Massachusetts Tobacco Control Program.

$16 STUDENT TICKETS ON SALE NOW!
Miss Saigon
THE CLASSIC LOVE STORY OF OUR TIME
$16 STUDENT TICKETS
Available for all performances Dec. 12-22 only, except Sat. eves. Must present valid ID at box office at time of pick-up.
Balcony seating. Subject to availability & prior sale.
CALL (860) 246-6807 or Tele-charge® (800) 233-3123
Tickets also on sale at The Bushnell box office.
THE BUSHNELL
Hartford, Connecticut

THE "U" GAME
UNDERGRADUATE LOTTERY TICKET APPLICATION
UMASS v. UCONN
DECEMBER 27, 1996
HARTFORD CIVIC CENTER
$20.00 PER TICKET
LIMIT TWO TICKETS PER UMASS UNDERGRADUATE
DEADLINE TO ENTER IS MONDAY, DECEMBER 9
NAME:
LOCAL ADDRESS:
CITY: ST. ZIP:
LOCAL PHONE:
CHECKS PAYABLE TO: UMASS ATHLETICS
CC: VISA, MC, DISCOVER
EXP.
LOTTERY WINNERS AND LOSERS WILL BE NOTIFIED BY MAIL AFTER DECEMBER 9. RETURN APPLICATIONS TO THE CURRY HICKS BOX OFFICE BY 5:00 PM, MON., DEC. 9. NON-WINNERS WILL HAVE APPLICATIONS WITH PRE-PAYMENT RETURNED. A VALID UMASS STUDENTS ID WILL BE NEEDED WITH TICKET TO ENTER THE HARTFORD CIVIC CENTER.

EL WACUÑA
Bar & Grill
THIS WEEK
✪ Tuesday & Wednesday –
LIVE MUSIC ✣ 10¢ WINGS AFTER 9PM
✪ Thursday –
LIFT TICKET GIVEAWAY!
$3.00 NACHOS AFTER 9PM
✪ Friday –
18+ DANCE PARTY w/ DJ PHIL
✪ Saturday –
10¢ WINGS AFTER 9PM
DECEMBER DRINK SPECIALS
$1 Drafts! ✣ Purple Buddah Shots - $2.50!

TONIGHT
Retro Night
MUSIC OF THE 70'S
Weekly Drink Specials
Captain Morgan & Coke $2.00 16oz.
Grape Crush $2.00 16oz.
Red Dog 16 oz. Drafts $1.50
1/2 PRICE APPETIZERS & NACHOS
3-5 PM WED. TO SAT. 7-11 PM
No Cover Charge
fun•food•spirits
THE PUB
uptheast
PLAY KENO
Smoking 9 to 1
15 EAST PLEASANT STREET

Commonly Unbearable.
Dangerously Believable.
Subsequently Fatal.
#1 Cause of Suicide
UNTREATED DEPRESSION
http://www.save.org

Want to write about poetry, film, theater, music, books, travel, food or anything else?
Then write for the Arts & Living Desk.
Come down today!

TRAVEL SMART!
One Way / Roundtrip
LONDON
FROM NY, BOSTON or DC
$134 $249
FROM NEW YORK
PARIS
$224 $427
ROME
$259 $489
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA
$235 $446
Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurailpasses available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
342 Madison Ave. NY NY 10173
212-986-8420*
800-272-9676
*In NYC

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Women's Long Term Therapy Group Weekly 1 1/2 hr meetings Tuesday night in Amherst For info, call (413)374-5418.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

All University Women invited to Open Rush Sigma Kappa Wed Dec 4 6:00 to 8:00pm Located behind Hillel Call Beth at 549-1462 for more information

AUTO FOR SALE

'87 Grand Am 4dr 52K miles, cruise, A/C, no rust $7995 Day 545-2040 Night 549-6825

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Blue Volsvagen Golf Excellent condition, born in 1990. $3000 negotiable Call Guy 253-7243

1986 Oldsmobile Delta 88- Great car, low price. $500 Call Chris 549-0564

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS OVER BREAK- Work with Sierra Club to protect wilderness. $275-$375/wk. Fun atmosphere! Call Terri at 256-6434

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING BREAK '97! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, and Florida EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH Call (800)700-0790.

CHRISTMAS/JANUARY BREAK

Earn $10 up to $15/start Invemhorhoal firm has 80 local openings 2-6 week program. All majors considered. Gain business and communication skills. Scholarships and summer programs possible. Apply now. Begin after finals. On-campus accepting applications on Monday and Tuesday, December 9 and 10 from 9-1 on the Concourse in the Campus Center or call (413)736-3230.

Abi Telephone Research Center seeks candidates for interesting part-time telephone assignments to collect data on a variety of research topics. Absolutely no selling involved. Computer/typing skills required. Flexible hours: Monday-Friday 5pm-11pm, Saturday 11am-5pm, and Sunday 12pm-5pm and 5pm-10pm. Must work a minimum of 20 hours per week. Start at $5.25/hour with paid training and earn up to $7.00/hour. Conveniently located in the new Venture Center with free rides on nearby bus lines. Interested candidates, please call (413)587-1607. An equal opportunity employer

EMPLOYMENT

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals Waterfront houses. Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

Packard Bell P60 8MB RAM, 545 MB HD, monitor, multimedia, modem, software, HP Lazer Jet 4 $1600.00 546-7464

Complete 5 CD Stereo System! 5 band graphic equalizer, dual tape deck and powerful receiver $250 or B/O Call Craig 546-6811

FOUND

Found Men's Movado Watch on 12/2 on campus. Please call 546-2501

MISCELLANEOUS

Rental Problems Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed. $35 (800)776-9503. Doctor Approved.

JAZZ BANDS

Jazz Band Needed Experienced or not. Come jam at our party. Will pay. Dec. 8th. Call 253-8520.

PERSONALS

MARK SNOW-MAN Happy Holidays from your estranged Seven O's friends!

ROOM FOR RENT

Looking for female to share 2 bdr. apt. in Sunderland on bus route. Datas- Jan./Feb. 1- Aug. 31. Call 665-9056

Looking for female roommates to share 4 bedroom apt. Spring '97 on bus route. Must see!! Cheap!!! Call ASAP. Ask for Laura 253-9823

ROOM FOR RENT

Three females seeking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment. Jan. 1-May 31. Rent negotiable. Call Jess at 253-1797.

2 Outgoing girls seek person(s) to rent large bedroom in uptown apt. Great location, in great condition. Start Jan 1. Contact Tricia/LB 549-3649 ASAP.

ROOMATE WANTED

Three friendly females looking for roommate to share Mill Valley Apt. $150 including heat and hot water. Call Sarah at 256-8780

Female Wanted to share bedroom in Puffton Village beginning Jan. 1 or ASAP. Call 549-4748

Two female N/S wanted to share double from 1/97 to 5/97, house in Amherst near bus. $165/mo. plus heat. Kim 549-7076.

Room Available 5 bedroom house in Sunderland on bus route. Call for details. 665-8229.

Roommates Wanted: One or two males to share rent at Brandywine Apts. Starts January 1st. Call Bryan 549-4591.

SERVICES

Don't abandon your dorm bunny! Rabbit Rescue can help! Will find your bunny a new home. Ellen 367-0105.

GORILLAGRAMS Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorilla. We'll go anywhere, anytime!! Student rates available! Call 256-0287.

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info.

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Screen Savers 549-0083.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 548-1906.

TO SUBLET

1 bedroom apartment on bus line. Available 1/97-9/97. $550/mo. or best offer. Call 665-3860.

Take over our lease 2/97. Large 2 bedroom apt. 5 min. from campus. $500 Call 549-8511.

TRAVEL

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info. (800)426-7710.

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150.

WANTED TO RENT

2 bedroom apt. for Jan 1 within 10 min. to UMass. Call Amy 546-4424.

WANTED

Desperate for Bibliographic Meteriel Must have vigorous book list, textbook, workbooks, and problems for Stanines 111 (School of Continuing Education) Will pay above $150. My phone may have been defective in previous weeks. Therefore, please notify by mail. May Deuwson, 67 Amity Place, Amherst, MA 01002-2255. Don't hesitate, I am correct. Thank you.

Wanted- Tutor for AUTO CAD Release13. Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272.

WANTED

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "Creative student employment", call Caroline at 546-5269 for more info. Identity confidential upon request.

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

R	O	Y			V	E	E					L	O	N
U	P	O	N		G	I	L	D	A		G	A	M	E
S	A	G	A		R	E	S	I	N		O	T	I	S
E	L	A	I	N	E	S		T	A	B	L	E	T	S
		L	U	G		M	E	T	E	D
V	A	L	E	T		N	O	D		A	E	S	O	P
A	F	A	R		C	A	M		O	R	N	A	T	E
N	I	B		T	A	P	E	R	E	D		F	T	C
E	R	O	D	E	D		N	O	R		M	E	E	K
S	E	R	U	M		A	T	D		P	U	R	R	S
		S	P	U	R	S		V	I	M
P	O	R	T	E	N	T		O	A	T	M	E	A	L
O	K	I	E		D	U	M	P	S		E	L	L	E
L	A	D	D		O	R	A	T	E		R	I	M	S
L	Y	E			O	S	S				E	S	S

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Silkwood of Silkwood
6. Before circle or sweet
10. Handy with one's hands
14. Of a piece
15. Learn (of)
16. Test
17. Shangri-la's locale
18. Ancient Peruvian
19. Retread, e.g.
20. Aye!
21. Three, in cards
23. Tidy up
25. Too bad!
26. Caron role
27. Biblical language
30. Police networks
34. Elk with twisted horns
35. Young and O'Casey
36. Asian people: var.
37. Grow dim
38. Gamers
39. Temporary calm
40. After zeta
41. Starr of the West
42. Pendleton Roundup, e.g.
43. Assuages
46. Break in legal proceedings
46. The ___ knees
47. Abundant
48. Advanced medical student
51. Power
52. Sound like a stepped-on puppy
55. Precious
58. Accoutrements
58. Endangered atmospheric layer
60. "Hi ___, Hi Lo"
61. Orphan who loved Rochester
62. Help for ashen cheeks
63. Colleague of Dinah and Sarah
64. Studies
65. Madder

DOWN

1. "___ Bell" (Stephen Foster song)
2. "I cannot tell ___" (2 wds.)
3. Lung protector's
4. Make do
5. Vexed
6. Moves suddenly
7. Counting out word
8. Big
9. Middle Easterners
10. Hinder
11. Depart
12. Bus rider
13. Certain Feds
22. "The ___ and the Cookie" (Levi-Strauss)
24. Easter Bunny's goodies
25. Eliza composer
26. Part of a cluster
27. Rail-splitter, for example
28. Fill with glee
29. Hackneyed
30. Emulates Donald Trump?
31. Chopin composition
32. Legends
33. Farm structures
35. Monica of tennis
36. Sought retribution
39. Inverness lagoon
41. Order at Cheers
42. Church functionaries
44. Part of Europe
45. Reason to discard hose
47. Involves in difficulties
48. Vain
49. First name in NASA history
50. Lanky
51. Shoot
52. Swing ___ Lady (Bogart film)
53. Little Shebe's creator
54. ___ Gym
57. Feature of a needle
59. Bronx attraction

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Although you have figured out most of what's going on in a touchy situation, there still could be something that you've missed. Continue to play the waiting game, at least for the time being.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
Going your own way with a friend beats following a large herd of people. The peace and quiet means you might learn something very special. Be wary of trying to share your knowledge, though—others may not be ready to hear it.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
A sudden burst of insight helps you piece together information that's been accumulating for awhile. A romantic partner may be having a rough week, so offer some extra love & tenderness, even if they don't seem to deserve or appreciate it.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
Your skills at avoiding arguments will serve you well this week, especially at work. Confrontation with an influential someone could be particularly costly. Try to see the whole picture before making a decision.

LEO
July 23–August 23
A period of financial constraint spurs you to discover new ways to amuse yourself and friends. A gathering turns into a brainstorm session if you make an effort to discuss your goals.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
A good laugh reduces the tension at a meeting or discussion. Try not to be the jokester yourself, though, unless you know your audience intimately. Plant seeds today for a great harvest later.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23
If you're feeling impoverished, rethink your situation. There are always more blessings to be counted. Rely on a trusted companion to help you handle a difficult situation.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
Sifting through an attic or basement may yield exciting treasures. Save some things for a garage or yard sale in the spring, and send the rest to a worthy charity. You'll feel much richer afterwards.

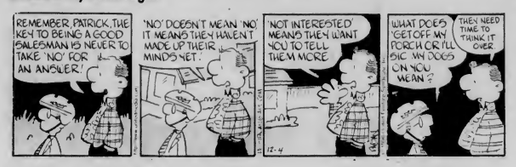
SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21
Investing your extra money may feel about as safe as buying lottery tickets. Consult with a knowledgeable older relative and you can't go wrong. Avoid impulsive purchases.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20
Planning ahead may mean being able to see trees where others see acorns, but this week you've got extra insight in that department. Organize your thoughts before making a request from someone powerful.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18
Inviting your friends to a potluck dinner could be an opportunity to try a new dish as well as meet someone new. Make it an open invitation, and be prepared for a houseful.

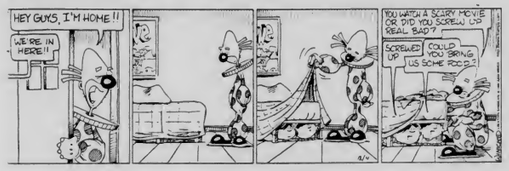
PISCES
February 19–March 20
A demanding relationship may require that you step back and recharge for a time. If you are tactful and loving, this should present no problem. If it does, then you need to examine the connection more closely. Is it as healthy as you think?

For Entertainment Purposes Only

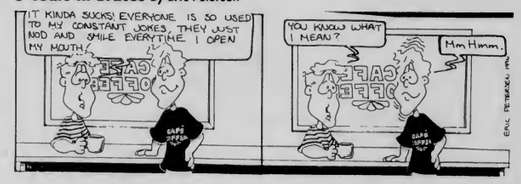


Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Robotman By Jim Meddick



Drabble By Kevin Fagan



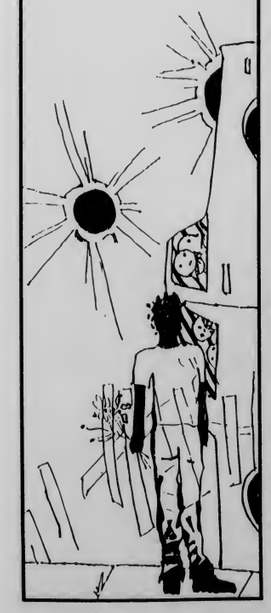
Dilbert By Scott Adams

Frumpy the Clown By Judd Winick

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

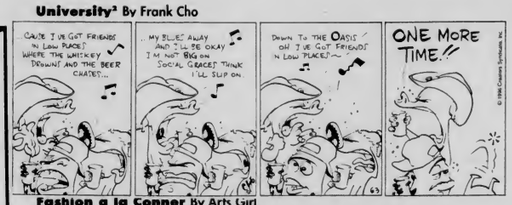
Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

My friend Wallace is a mellow smart guy.



He's an African American graduate student.

He studies audio phyics at the university.



He thinks it's amazing that.....

...when he is standing on a street corner and a fancy car pulls up, even though the windows are closed tight he can still hear all four automatic door locks click.

He used to think he was invisible around fancy cars.

University² By Frank Cho

Fashion a la Conner By Arts Girl

Social Norm By Mr. K

LeoDoo By Dybicki

Close to Home By John McPherson

"You're just more affected by Novocain than most people, Mr. Cromley. You should regain full use of your legs in a day or two."

Quote of the Day

"Hit me again! Please?"

–Zangief

Quote of the Night

"Don't worry. Perfection isn't for everyone."

–Rolento

Today's Staff

Tara MK Connelly
Night Editor

Seema SF Gangatirkar
Copy Editor

Kenneth KI Scott
Photo Technician

David VF Voldan
Production Supervisor

Mark WH McGrath
Tony FF Morse
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

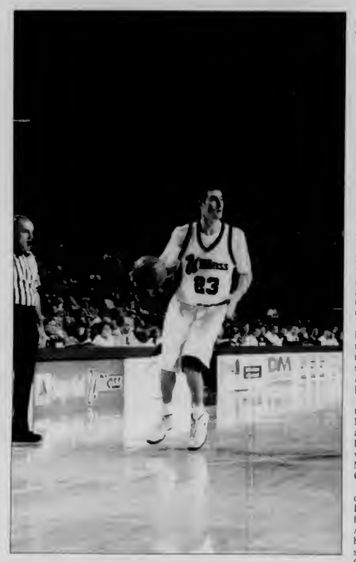
Franklin

LUNCH	DINNER
Grilled Chicken	Veal Parmesan
Corned Beef	Turkey Divan
Ravioli	Veggie Pocket
Vegan Ravioli	Quarter Pounder

Hampshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Hamburger	Veal Parmesan
Chicken Puck	Turkey Divine
Mac and Sneeze

Worcester



LUNCH	DINNER
Grilled Chicken	Veal Paremesan
Fettucinni	Tempeh Stir Fry
Ratatouille	Pastabilities
(What is that, anyway?)	Tri-Colored Tortellini

Berkshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Grilled Chicken	Veal Paremesan
Fettucinni	Tempeh Stir Fry
Ratatouille	Pastabilities
(Really! What is it?)	Tri-Colored Tortellini

Sports

Minutemen try to get back on track against Hoyas

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Freshman Mike Babul, and the UMass men's hoop team, travel to Chicago to play Georgetown in the DirecTV Great 8.

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The last time the Massachusetts and Georgetown men's basketball programs faced each other, then–sophomore guard Allen Iverson hung his head dejectedly and prepared to face the media during the losing team's half of the post–game press conference.

In the other locker room in Atlanta's Georgia Dome, the Minutemen cheered the victory that sent them to the Final Four.

Fast forward to the present, and tonight's rematch of the East Regional final at the DirecTV Great Eight at the United Center in Chicago (7:30 p.m.) does not at all resemble last March's game.

Gone from UMass is over half of last year's starting line– up, including the NBA's second overall draft pick, Marcus Camby, who had 22 points and seven rebounds in the Georgetown game. Gone too, is Coach of the Year John Calipari.

Missing from Georgetown's line–up is Iverson (23 points and 2 rebounds in last game), the Hoyas' marquee player and first overall selection at last summer's entry draft. Also gone are Othella Harrington and Jerome Williams.

But the team's personalities are not the only things that are different. Neither team is currently ranked, although both are listed in the Also Receiving Votes category of this week's AP Top 25 poll. Massachusetts received 71 votes, Georgetown 39.

The Minutemen are coming off of a disappointing showing at the Maui Invitational in Hawaii, where they finished fourth after a 1–2 showing. After narrowly beating Division II host Chaminade, they dropped two straight to unranked Virginia and California.

Georgetown, meanwhile, downed Big East foe Seton Hall Monday night, 55–51.

Tonight's game features a battle–tested guard corps against a relatively new tandem. Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso, seemingly suffering from the weight of preseason expectations, have faltered in the early going of the young season. By the numbers, Travieso appeared to have broken out of his scoring slump during the final Maui contest, ripping off 19 points to lead the team.

Victor Page has the burden of leading the Hoya offense this season, but his partners in the backcourt don't have much experience. Jerry Nichols and Joseph Touomou are both expected to see time at guard this season.

In the frontcourt, UMass' clearcut leader has been Tyrone Weeks. The senior forward was a clutch performer for the Minutemen in the first two games in Hawaii, scoring career highs in each.

UMass has seen several minutes from Inus Norville, Winston Smith, Mike Babul and Ajmal Basit.

Georgetown's frontcourt is, as one reporter put it, a public address announcer's nightmare. With Boubacar Aw, Ya–Ya Dia and Godwin Owinje, the Hoyas have definite name recognition.

There will be a lot of meat at the post, when Lari Ketner (6–foot–10, 270) and Jehidi White (6–foot–9, 270) tangle. White has the unenviable task of replacing Harrington's offensive output. Ketner, meanwhile, has the unenviable task of replacing Camby's offensive output.

While it should take a while for Ketner, who sat out last year as a Prop 48 casualty, to readjust to the college game, he has played well in his first action.

• • •

For the first time since the 1992–93 season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team is without a spot in the AP Top 25 poll.

The poll, which was released Monday, recognized UMass as a member of the Also Receiving Votes category with 71 votes.

UMass finished that 92–93 campaign 24–7, 11–3 in conference, and with an A–10 regular season title, an A–10 tournament title, and an appearance in the NCAA Tournament. The Minutemen bowed out of the NCAAs in the second round that year, losing to Virginia.

Fellow Atlantic 10 member George Washington also fell out of the rankings and into the depths of Also Receiving Votes with 71.

The Colonials were bumped from their spot at No. 25, after a home loss to Texas Tech this weekend.

In sharp contrast, A–10 member Xavier made its season debut in the poll, after last week's victory over then–top ranked Cincinnati, at No. 23.

Collegian Sports Staff Predictions

Chris Stamm
UMass 70, Georgetown 68

Casey Kane
UMass 62, Georgetown 55

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
UMass 63, Georgetown 61

Luke Meredith
UMass 84, Georgetown 57

Leigh Torbin
UMass 412, Georgetown 3

Jorma Kansanen
UMass 68, Georgetown 84

Jeremy R. Adams
Georgetown 81, UMass 52

Jonathan M. Place
Georgetown 75, UMass 58

Cherry chastised; Kasper counters old coach's jabs

Jorma Kansanen on the NHL

Glad to have you all back... damn, glad to have me back. After serving a week–long suspension of physical and emotional well–being for a fighting major (the flu), I am back off the disabled list.

For all of you fellow puckheads out there, if you have had this debilitating and dreary debacle of diurnal doldrums, I feel your pain. It's worse than a knockout punch from one of the Brawling Bruins, like Troy Mallette. If you doubt that, go and ask the Canadians' Murray Baron, he might be able to tell you, if he is conscious yet, that is.

Now everyone, I am still a little foggy right now, so I am going to need your help. Click your Bauers' together three times, and slowly chant in a hushed tone after me: there's no place like home... there's no place like home...

• One score minus two years ago (1978), I was at home. The TV flickered before me, showing a place that was called the Forum; on a street named for a Saint (Catherine); and, a man dressed in black and white stripes had just blown his whistle.

Raising his arm, he then slowly lowered it, pointing to the bench with the men robed in Black and Gold on it. Behind them, the coach dressed in plaid from his toes to his teeth begins to flip out. His team had been called for one of the most heinous crimes in the game: too many men on the ice. The team in the bleu, blanc et rouge then went on a power play, scoring the winning goal just seconds later to win a Cup named after a Lord (Stanley).

If you don't know by now, the losers were the Bruins, and the winners were the Canadians in that 1978 Stanley Cup Final. The man in plaid was Don Cherry, with his rival coach Scotty Bowman taking the glory, and doing so for many years to come at the expense of the Bruins. Forever polk–a–dotted Gerry Cheevers was beaten one–on–one by the sacerdotal Guy LaFleur. The man on the opposite end of the ice, Ken Dryden, went on to complete a stellar career between the pipes for Les Habitants.

Turn to NHL, page 9

Staudenbauer brings presence to UMass polo

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

Humility is a virtue not often associated with athletes in today's hyper–marketing world of superstars, super contracts and super egos.

In sharp contrast, Marc Staudenbauer is a model of humility, intelligence and athleticism, a breed of person rarely found in the halls of a gymnasium or locker room.

Being referred to and regarded as a team player is a phenomenon in sports that seems to have died with the days of Bird and Magic, but Staudenbauer seems to humbly carry on in the mode of a star who doesn't want to be a star.

"I want people to say that I was a good teammate and a good friend, and that he'd be someone you'd want to talk to after you're all done here, that I contributed and helped keep the team on track," he said.

Still, Staudenbauer largely remains nameless. He toils on a team and for a sport that is starved for attention on the scope of basketball or football. He quietly strives to master his craft on a team that quietly has become one of the most dominant in the entire University of Massachusetts athletic program.

Staudenbauer is a junior on the four–time defending Eastern Champion UMass water polo team, which is heading to its second straight NCAA final four appearance.

"For me, especially this year, [NCAAs] are so important because it is my season," said Staudenbauer, who broke his right thumb following through on a shot three weeks into the season. "I played in Easterns, but I wasn't back in full shape, my thumb was still hurtin'. Right now, I feel a lot better than I did."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Marc Staudenbauer is a humble presence in a generation of "me" athletes.

This is a special season for Staudenbauer, and the rest of his mates, as last year they suffered the tragic loss of water polo and swimming standout Greg Menton.

Menton meant so much to everyone who knew him, and left a lasting impact on Staudenbauer.

"Greg was what UMass water polo was basically all about: fighting hard, never giving up. He just had such a great influence on my career, I respected so much how he worked in and out of the pool. He was such a leader and such a motivator on this team.

"We do miss him; there's not a practice that goes by, or a game that goes by that I don't think about him. He's a real special part of my time at UMass."

Menton contributed in so many of the ways that Staudenbauer does. He was a fierce competitor, a player not afraid to do the dirty work. He was an all–out water polo player, an undeniable presence in the pool, and in large part Staudenbauer is a product of Menton's ideals.

"Last year when we were playing Cal [–Berkley in the first round of the NCAA tournament] and we were down 10–6, and there were guys on the bench who hadn't played, and Russ wanted to get into have a chance to play," said Staudenbauer, almost anxious to talk more of his friend. "There were 30–35 seconds left in the game, so it would have been a miracle for us to come back and do anything in that game.

"All of a sudden you hear Greg go, 'No! Let's stay in, go for a two–pointer right now.' Russ kept everyone in. That kind of showed how much fight Greg had, and that's the kind of attitude we're going to have to have this year."

And that never–say–die attitude is evident in the way Staudenbauer feels about going back home to California and competing for a national championship.

"We're sick of people saying, 'Oh, you did so good,'" Staudenbauer said. "We don't want to be the team that did so good and almost won anymore. I think it's time for us to emerge.

"We joke around about how people get rings for A–10 Championships and stuff, but I think we've come to realize the way we're going to get our ring is by winning the whole show, the national championship," he said. "And everyone wants that right now."

Turn to POLO, page 9

Pats battle with Broncos, Bills and Steelers in AFC

Jason W. Michaels on the NFL

After Dan Marino managed to win almost every major passing record last year, and lose every game in which he did so, he had to start wondering whether the two were linked.

We might have gotten part of the answer on Thanksgiving, when Marcus Allen not only broke Walter Payton's all–time rushing TD record, but led his Chiefs to victory. But it wasn't just his team that should be happy at the news the two records aren't linked, but the Dallas Cowboys as well, because their future Hall of Fame running back could soon have the record.

Emmitt Smith, after scoring three TDs, is close on the heels of Allen's "borrowed record." In fact it's not inconceivable that the two could not only trade it back and forth throughout the rest of the season, but if their timing is right, it could be traded back and forth on an hourly basis.

• Speaking of inconceivable, after an 0–2 start the Patriots could not only win their division, but get a bye in the first round of the playoffs. With Indianapolis giving the Buffalo Bills their fourth loss of the season, and New England routing San Diego for their ninth win, the Patriots move back into first place in the AFC East, by virtue of having a better conference record than Buffalo. It also leaves them tied with Pittsburgh, who lost to the Ravens on Sunday.

With the Pats playing the Jets, at Dallas and at the Giants, they should go 2–1. That means the Bills, playing at Seattle, at Miami, and against Kansas City, would have to win all three games to win the division.

Perhaps the most intriguing aspect, however, is Pittsburgh, who has tough games against the Chargers, San Francisco, and then at Carolina, which has become one of the hardest places to win in the NFL.

Assuming the Pats go 2–1, the Bills don't go 3–0, and Pittsburgh can pull off the upset against either San Fran or Carolina, that should leave all three teams tied at 11–5.

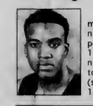
Which means it comes down to tie–breakers. The Patriots already have the tie–breaker against Buffalo by virtue of splitting their head to head games and having a better division record.

That means against Pitt it should come down to the best won–loss record in the division. The Patriots are currently 6– 3 in the AFC, while the Steelers are 5–4, with losses to Jacksonville, Houston, Cincinnati and Baltimore. Both teams have one more game against AFC opponents, which both should win.

Another possible scenario, though, is that New England could lose, Pittsburgh win and both teams still end up with the same record. In that case it comes down to the record against common teams. This season both teams have played Buffalo, Miami, Jacksonville, Baltimore, and San Diego. The Pats split against the Bills and Dolphins, and beat the Jags, Ravens and Chargers. the Steelers split against the Jags and Ravens, beat the Bills and Dolphins, and for this scenario to happen would have to beat the Bolts.

Which brings us to the next tie–breaker: best net points in conference games. It's bad news for the Patriots in this case. They're currently behind the Steelers by 14 points, and to get to this scenario it would be worse due to their loss to the Jets and the Steelers victory over San Diego. Nonetheless, it puts Bill Parcells' decision to go for another touchdown late in the Chargers game in perspective. If

Turn to NFL, page 9



The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 63 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Thursday, December 5, 1996

Lighting the menorah

Tonight marks the start of Chanukah, the Jewish Festival of Lights.Look inside today's Collegian to learn more about this ancient holiday (see Arts & Living, page 5).

Not so Great Eight

Last night freshman Ajmal Basit notched nine points and grabbed 13 boards in last night's 58–53 loss to Georgetown (see Sports, page 18).

WORLD

Boutros Boutros-Ghali suspends nomination

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Faced with unrelenting U.S. opposition, U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali suspended his candidacy for a second term yesterday, opening the way for new nominees for the top U.N. post.

Boutros-Ghali emphasized he still remains an official candidate, however, and supporters were said to be urging the Egyptian diplomat to stay in the race. The United States cast the lone veto against him in a first-round vote in the 15-member Security Council on Nov. 19.

"I'm still a candidate and still the only candidate for Africa," Boutros-Ghali said, adding he was merely asking the Security Council "not to vote again on my name until I will present my name" again.

In Washington, White House spokesman James Fetig welcomed Boutros-Ghali's move, saying "that will allow for other well-qualified African candidates to be forwarded to the U.N. Security Council for consideration."

By U.N. tradition, Africa should get two consecutive terms for its representative as secretary-general.

NATION

Hawain judge orders stay on gay marriages

HONOLULU (AP) — A day after issuing the first ruling in American history that allows gay marriages, a judge put the effects of his decision on hold while the state appeals to Hawaii's Supreme Court. The stay will remain in effect until a ruling by the state's highest court, which ruled in 1993 that Hawaii's ban is unconstitutional unless the state could show a compelling government interest in preventing gay marriages.

Circuit Judge Kevin Chang agreed there would be confusion if gay couples got married and then the high court overturned his ruling. The stay means gay couples won't be able to marry in Hawaii for at least a year.

"We kind of expected it, but we're not happy with it," said Joseph Melillo; who sued along with his partner, Pat Lagon, and two lesbian couples.

On Tuesday, Chang said Hawaii failed to show any compelling state interest in denying gay couples the right to marry. He ordered the state to begin issuing them licenses. It was the first such ruling by a judge in the United States.

The dispute prompted passage of a federal law signed by President Clinton that says the U.S. government will not recognize gay marriages and allows states to refuse to recognize such unions licensed in other states. In addition, 16 states have passed laws denying recognition of gay marriages.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 30	HIGH: 35 LOW: 25	HIGH: 35 LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 16
Comics.....page 17
Crossword .....page 16
Editorial .....page 4
FYI .....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 18

University Board of Trustees votes to cut tuition by 5 percent for the second time in two years

By Raghuram Vadarevu
Collegian Staff

For the second year in a row, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted to cut tuition for the UMass system by 5 percent for the upcoming 1997–98 school year, yesterday in Worcester.

"The tuition cut is a good thing. It will make UMass more affordable for more people," said Maurice Caston, president of the UMass Student Government Association (SGA).

"The Board of Trustees took into account the cost of pricing people out of a UMass education," said Caston. "The tuition cuts will put more money in the hands of the parents."

The 5 percent tuition cut will result in a $100 savings for in–state residents who attend one of the five UMass campuses located in Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and Worcester.

"This is not a substantial amount of money, but it could pay for about one semester's worth of books," said UMass President William Bulger.

"Some students are working one or two jobs and are struggling to make ends meet," Bulger said.

UMass campuses in Amherst and Boston will have a net lowering of tuition to $2000 and the Dartmouth and Lowell campuses' tuition will be lowered to $1656 and $1700, respectively.

The decrease in the amount of tuition collected will result in a loss of $3 million from the state legislature, according to Sean Carter, student trustee representing the Amherst campus.

The tuition cut was recommended by the state's Board of Higher Education which makes recommendations in areas such as university admission standards and tuition rates.

Although the tuition cut, recommended by the Board of Higher Education, passed unanimously in the Board of Trustees, it still has to pass a vote in the Massachusetts State Legislature that will make it effective starting in the Fall 1997 semester.

Recently, the Board of Higher Education, in a similar recommendation, proposed a 5 percent tuition cut for state and community colleges in Massachusetts.

Amidst excitement among students over the tuition cut, many at the Amherst campus are apprehensive over the cost of fees.

"Was tuition itself overpriced? No. But was it too expensive overall? I'd say yes," Carter said.

He added, "tuition isn't the only issue. Fees are also a concern.

"Fees are more than 50 percent of the cost [at UMass now]," Carter said.

"We would try to work with the chancellors, administration and the state legislature to keep the cost of UMass stable and have students pay their fair share," he said.

According to Carter, the only way to maintain the current fee levels is if Bulger holds to his recommendation to keep fees at their current level.

Bulger made this recommendation to the chancellors of each of the five campuses, Carter said.

Some students, like Zoe Rudner, senior psychology and women's studies major, said that there "should be an option to waver certain fees specific to the individual" so that students do not have to pay for what they do not use.

Although the tuition cut is favorable to in–state residents, some students at the Amherst campus feel that students from out of state should also be given a tuition cut.

"I think that [the tuition cut] is great, but I think that it is unfair that they don't give tuition cuts to out–of–staters who pay more than in–staters," Rudner said.

The Associated Press contributed to this article.

Radio shut-down sparks protests

By Jovana Gec
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Protesters held their noses because the "lies stink so much" as they passed buildings housing state-run media loyal to the Serbian president today in the largest demonstration yet against Slobodan Milosevic.

About 150,000 demonstrators marched through the capital to protest the annulment of Nov. 17 elections in Belgrade and 14 of Serbia's largest cities that the opposition appeared to win. So far mostly peaceful, two weeks of protests have nonetheless turned into a major political crisis in the country and the biggest threat to Milosevic's eight years of rule in Serbia.

Earlier in the day, about 25,000 students carried banners of support through downtown for an independent radio station that was forced off the air by authorities for its critical reporting. A small group organized by an independent trade union marched in the morning with the students, symbolically banging empty plates and spoons.

One worker had a paper box on his head with a slogan critical of the pro-Milosevic state media: "Switch off Serbian TV and turn on your brains."

In the afternoon rally, some protesters pinched their noses as they passed buildings housing state-run TV and the Politika daily, both loyal to Milosevic, when opposition leader Vuk Draskovic told them to do so "because their lies stink so much."

"We are the future of Serbia and Milosevic is the past," another opposition leader, Zoran Djindjic, told the rally. "In another 10 to 20 days, we'll get rid of him forever."

In the latest indication that even some in the state are turning against Milosevic, 90 judges demanded the re-examination of the annulment rulings.

"Our goal is to protect the honor and dignity of the court," said the judges, in a letter published by the weekly Telegraf. Some of the judges signing the letter were from the court that annulled the election results, indicating some split in the judiciary. Several Supreme Court members expressed criticism of the annulments on Tuesday.

The same local court that decided on the annulments, however, today rejected an appeal on the vote by the opposition coalition Zajedno.

The students warned Milosevic of more unrest unless he rescinds the annulments. Others have called for his resignation.

"The decision is up to you," the students said in an open letter to Milosevic. "You have the power and influence to lead our Serbia out of this crisis with dignity."

But, the students added: "The regime you represent has crushed our votes. Do we have to fight for that right in the streets?" Once the crowd reached the Serbian presidency building, one of the students placed the letter on its doorstep, along with a round loaf of bread, a traditional sign of goodwill.

"Come out, Martian!" the crowd chanted, alluding to Milosevic's isolation from the people.

There was no sign of Milosevic, the Serbian leader accused of fomenting the 3 1/2-year war in Bosnia that ended last year. Milosevic has generally ignored the protests with the exception of arresting some 30 people for destroying property. But his aides and state-run media have sharply criticized his opponents. Milosevic has so far refrained from calling on police and army units to crush the demonstrators, as he has done in the past. But on Tuesday, he shut down three independent radio stations - two in Belgrade and one to the southeast - in an attempt to squelch any reporting on the demonstrations.

Radio B92, the most popular of the stations, was ordered off the air, along with a station in Pozarevac, a town 35 miles southeast of Belgrade. The third station was jammed.

The United States and several allies have criticized the annulments, talked about reimposing economic sanctions and warned against force to disperse the demonstrators.

The European Union said it "notes with dismay that the Serb authorities seem determined to ignore calls from the international community."

Vendors hope sales pick up at craft fair

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Laurien Santos, a senior marketing major, looked at pottery at the Craft Fair, on the Campus Center concourse, yesterday afternoon.

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

Students looking for inexpensive gifts this holiday season should visit the Holiday Craft Fair in the Campus Center Concourse.

Sponsored by the Student Union Craft Center, the fair's second day will take place from 9 a.m.–4 p.m. today.

Many vendors agreed that there were browsers, but not many buyers yesterday, the first day of the fair.

"Today is going really slow," said Chris Carner, co–owner of Dogdaze in Palmer. "Many people are looking today and saying they will buy tomorrow."

Dogdaze, whose other owner, Deb Kracht is a UMass alum sells "ornamental but functional artwork."

"The picture frames and light covers are handmade and hand drawn, but they are also functional as well," said Carner.

Janis Sommers of Hedgerow Studio in Provincetown also said her table has been receiving many browsers.

"Many students are looking and browsing and saying they will come back later. Everyone is nice, but most students seem to be dazed, probably from too much school work," she said.

Sommers, who is participating in the craft fair for the first time said she is looking forward to today's business.

Hedgerow Studio has been selling flower landscape plaques, milkweed–seed suncatchers, and all natural vegetable soaps for 20 years.

According to Hedgerow studios the flower plaques, which are handcrafted use a variety of dried flowers, including American bamboo, purple, yellow, white and German status, Queen Anne's lace, straw flowers, money plants and milkweed seeds.

When milkweed seeds emerge from the pod, they are protected by a coat of oil. This oil refracts the sunlight, creating a rainbow. These seeds have been placed in iridescent bulbs, which can be placed in windows that receive a lot of sun.

The studio's merchandise prices range from $5– $10, with a couple of exceptions of the larger things that are being sold.

Tanya Joubert, from A Touch of Glass is also participating in the craft fair for the first time.

"It seems that many people didn't know about the fair today, so a lot of people said they will be back tomorrow."

Coasters, earrings and picture frames are among the items being sold from A Touch of Glass. Everything is handcrafted from stained glass.

"Overall I am very happy with today and I expect tomorrow to be much better," said Joubert.

One vendor familiar with the craft fair, Joy Friedman has been selling her hand crafted pottery for the past ten years. Her company, Joy Friedman Pottery is located in Leverett.

"Business tends to get a little better every year, but also every year is different so it's hard to compare. It's nice to have my work on display so people know what hand crafted pottery is all about," she said.

Friedman said that her morning had been slow and hopefully business would pick–up today.

Overall, there are 22 vendors, including one from the Craft Center, selling their hand made crafts.

Turn to CRAFT, page 2

JENNIFER BJTRAS / COLLEGIAN

The Ultimate game
Bill Burke, a senior psychology major, played Frisbee on the grass outside the Student Union yesterday.

Islamic group suspected in bombing

By Elaine Ganley
Associated Press

PARIS — Clue by clue, a shadowy network of Algerian militants emerged yesterday as the prime suspect in a deadly Paris subway bombing.

A gas canister. Black powder. Nails to cut flesh. All were hallmarks of a wave of bombings last year claimed by Algeria's Armed Islamic Group. All were present at the scene of Tuesday's attack, which killed two people and seriously wounded 35.

The black powder mix was the same. So was the timing and the target: evening rush hour on a train line shuttling thousands of suburbanites to and from Paris.

And, investigators note, despite dozens of arrests and 14 months of peace, an Algerian thought to be a ring-leader of the 1995 bombing wave remains at large.

There has been no claim of responsibility for the bombing at the Port Royal station. But the evidence in hand forced investigators to focus on the theory that a network of Algerian radicals, thought to be all but decimated, had been reborn.

The bombing shares "great similarities" with those of the summer of 1995, when eight people were killed and 160 were wounded, Premier Alain Juppe told lawmakers.

Killed in Tuesday's attack were Lucien Devambez, a 41-year-old Frenchman, and an unidentified Canadian woman, French radio reported.

Rabah Kebir of the Islamic Salvation Front — Algeria's banned opposition movement — condemned the bombing yesterday night, saying it "doesn't serve the Algerian cause."

But judicial sources said the black powder that filled a gas canister contained the same explosive mix as that used in the 1995 attacks.

The canister, hidden in a bag packed with nails, was tucked under a seat in the fourth car of the train. It exploded as the doors shut before departure.

The Port Royal station is just two stops up the line from the site of the July 1995 bombing at St. Michel, the first and most deadly in the wave of attacks that put France on edge for months.

"We're scared because we know there's danger, here or in the Metro (the subway)," said Dominique Chapuis. "I take the Metro every day and who knows what can happen."

Juppe tried to allay fears.

"All means," the premier told lawmakers, will be used to capture the criminals and protect the population from "the blackmail of fear and violence."

Hundreds of police and soldiers armed with assault rifles were deployed in airports, train stations, subways and high-risk areas from Paris to Marseille.

France closed some border crossings with Belgium, Germany and Luxembourg, and said it was temporarily suspending its participation in the accords that opened borders across much of Europe.

Investigators, who kept the Port Royal station sealed yesterday, were examining all hypotheses, including Basque, Corsican and Moroccan connections. More than 30 Moroccans are to go on trial Monday for trying to destabilize the North African monarchy. But Algerian Islamic militants, who claimed responsibility for the 1995 bombings as well as the deadly Christmas 1994 hijacking of an Air France flight, quickly surfaced as the prime suspects.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Thursday, Dec. 5

Performance — University Dancers will perform Dec. 5 through Dec. 7 at Bowker Auditorium. Reservations may be made by calling 545–2511. Tickets are $7/general admission, $4/students, and $2/seniors and children. UMass students free. Reservations are recommended.

Reading — Lisa Alther will read and discuss excerpts from her new work Five Minutes in Heaven at 7 p.m. at Third Wave Feminist Booksellers in located in Northampton. Admission is free.

Seminar/Lecture — A meditation and Yoga seminar/lecture introducing yoga and meditation practices will hold its final meeting in the 1st floor lounge of Butterfield at 8 p.m. The event is sponsored by the UMass Ananda Yoga Club.

Test Taking Workshop — A workshop, offered by the Learning Resources Center from 3:30–5 p.m. on the 10th Floor of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. Free. Call 545–5334 to register.

Friday, Dec. 6

Lecture — The Geoscience Lecture Series will present Pierre Biscaye in a talk entitled "Particles and Ice Cores — What Can We Learn From the Paleoclimate from the 'Dust on the Balance?'" at 3:30 p.m. in Morrill II, room 131.

Discussion — Kate Hoffman, a traditional Reiki master/teacher will discuss the "Reiki — Usui System of Natural Healing," which is based on a 2500 year old Buddhist healing technique, at 7 p.m. at Third Wave. Admission is free.

Saturday, Dec. 7

Bazaar — Grace Church will hold its annual St. Nicholas Bazaar from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Parish Hall, 16 Spring St., Amherst. For more information, call 256–6754.

Religious — A free Chanukah party will follow the 6 p.m. menorah lighting at Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. Donations of gifts for the needy will be accepted and greatly appreciated.

Notices

AIDS Day — UMass is participating in the global observance of World AIDS Day which will take place from Nov. 25 through Dec. 6. You can get HIV/AIDS information and a red ribbon to pin on yourself or on our "Remembrance Tree" at the Campus Center Concourse table each day. Visit the Faces of AIDS art display and the Five College AIDS Quilt at Earthfoods. Watch "Boys on the Side" on HSCN. Activities will culminate with a candlelight vigil on the Student Union steps at 5 p.m. on Dec. 6 and a march to the First Congregational Church on Main St. in Amherst for a gathering of Remembrance and Hope. Refreshments will be served. After that, there will be a poetry/prose reading followed by an open mike at 8 p.m. at Claudia's Cafe. For more information, contact Health Education at 577–5181.

Training — Applications for the Mediation Training workshop from Jan. 13–17 are available in Campus Center room 823, and are due back on Dec. 6.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584–8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — POWER, the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights, holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

Menorah Lighting — All are welcome to attend the lighting of the 6–foot menorah in front of the Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at the following times: Dec. 5 at 5 p.m.; Dec. 6 at 4 p.m.; Dec. 7 at 6 p.m.; Dec. 8 time TBA; Dec. 9 at 7 p.m.; Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.; Dec. 11 at 8:30 p.m.; Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Usama at 256–8482 or Lalli at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy, and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

Campus Police Log

Accident — Property Damage

Dec. 2

There was a two–vehicle accident on Massachusetts Avenue. One operator complained of neck pain.

There was a minor two–vehicle accident on Commonwealth Avenue.

A bumper was damaged on a vehicle in parking lot 43.

Dec. 3

A parked vehicle was struck by another vehicle in parking lot 49.

Dec. 4

There was a minor accident in parking lot 44.

Annoying Behavior

Dec. 3

There was a report of some individuals harassing residents of Prince Residence Hall.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering

Dec. 3

The cluster office was broken into in Gorman Residence Hall. A telephone was stolen.

Larceny

Dec. 2

Staff from McNamara Residence Hall reported that a TV was stolen from the lounge.

Dec. 3

An individual reported that her purse containing jewelry was stolen from the Curry Hicks Cage.

Sean M. Miller, 18, of 57 Prospect St., New Hartford, Conn., reported the theft of a tail light cover to police, then was found to have an outstanding warrant and was arrested.

License plates were stolen from a vehicle parking lot 22.

Vandalism

Dec. 3

Graffiti was written on a door of Kennedy Residence Hall.

Past damage to a vehicle in parking lot 13 was reported.

A vehicle in parking lot 49 was damaged.

craft

continued from page 1

Many members of the craft center are selling projects they have been creating throughout the semester.

In order to participate in the fair, each professional vendor had to pay $90 a table for the two day fair. Students pay $40.

The fair serves at the Craft Center's fundraiser. The Center receives the money that vendors have to pay for a table.

"A big chunk of our money is coming in from the fair," said Marah MacRoslie, fair coordinator. "It is our only fundraiser, but we do also get money from the University and the sales we take in the [register] drawer."

Craft Center materials and equipment are paid for through register sales.

"The key is to have lower priced items. The higher priced items will eventually sell but usually not until the next day," said MacRoslie, a freshman.

"Students are looking for good deals because most students do not usually have a lot of money to buy presents with," she said.

As for the Craft Center this semester "we started off with a slow start," she said. "Every year we have to re–establish ourselves. There are so many new people coming in every semester and so many people leaving every semester. Not every one knows about us."

Membership at the Craft Center is free to all UMass students, faculty and staff. There is a $10 charge for five–college students per semester.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian works harder than a team of oxen to bring you the most comprehensive news department of any New England university.

We Want YOU to come join us!

For more information, call Michael Elliott at 545–1762, or stop by the super–swell Collegian office at 113 Campus Center.

TRAVEL SMART!

One Way / Roundtrip
LONDON FROM NY, BOSTON or DC	$134 $249
FROM NEW YORK
PARIS	$224 $427
ROME	$259 $489
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA	$235 $446

Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurailpasses available.

Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs–immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.

PRISM TRAVEL
342 Madison Ave., NY, NY 10173
212-986-8420*
800-272-9676
*in NYC

Drop some color on your presentation while helping us choose a color copier

The Print Shop will be testing the Xerox Majestic Color Copier on a trial basis until December 19, 1996

Campus Center Print Shop
2nd floor, Campus Center
Phone: 545-0371

MON-THUR: 9 AM-8:30 PM; FRI: 9 AM-5 PM

STUDENT SPEAKER
UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT

Is there something you would like to say before graduating? If so, you are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as Student Commencement Speaker.

Who is Eligible:	Graduating Amherst campus seniors (Class of 1997).
Subject Matter:	Substance should concern higher education and be relevant to the University and your experience(s) here.
Format:	Submit up to three word-processed or typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of 3-5 minutes speaking time.
Selection Process:	Authors' names will be deleted (by a non-voting staff person) after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the proposals. 3-5 individuals will be invited to "audition" before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.
Deadline:	Wednesday, February 12, 1997, 4:30 p.m.
Submit Proposals To:	Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 305 Whitmore (545-3464).

Student Affairs Special Services

UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT
BACHELOR'S DEGREE CANDIDATES
- Preliminary Information -

The following information has been prepared to assist seniors and their parents in planning for Undergraduate Commencement.

DATE: Sunday, May 25, 1997
(May 24, 1998
May 23, 1999
May 21, 2000)

TIME/PLACE: 10:30 - 11:45 a.m., at McGuirk Alumni Stadium (rain or shine)

ELIGIBILITY: Seniors, who have paid the Graduating Fee, and whose degree requirements are or will be completed in February, May, or September, 1997, are eligible to participate. Immediately contact a member of the "Senior Staff", Undergraduate Registrar's Office, 207 Whitmore (5-0555), if you are unsure of your academic status or have questions in this regard! Only Seniors of record as of April 1, 1997, will be listed in the Commencement Program.

GENERAL: There is no Commencement rehearsal. A brochure with general Commencement information will be mailed to seniors and their parents in March. An update, with details about the ceremony, will be distributed with caps & gowns (in May) and in one of the last issues of the "Collegian" in the spring. It is very important that the brochure and subsequent information be reviewed, and retained for further reference in May.

Included will be information about on-campus housing; Announcements; caps, gowns, & tassels; Disability Services; Food Services; parking and shuttle services; seating chart for seniors; suggested routing; videotape orders; when and where to assemble; and yearbook orders.

TICKETS: Tickets are NOT required, and there is no limit on the number of guests you may invite. Guest seating is unreserved.

HOUSING: Sufficient residence hall space has been reserved the night before Commencement to accommodate prepaid guests. Details will be in the brochure.

STUDENT SPEAKER: Those interested in being considered for Student Speaker are advised to watch for ads in the "Collegian" concerning this competition. The deadline for proposals is February 12, 1997. Contact 5-3464 for further information.

INFORMATION: Please call the Visitors Center at 545-0306.

Congratulations to all concerned, and good luck with Finals.

World AIDS day at UM; number of events planned

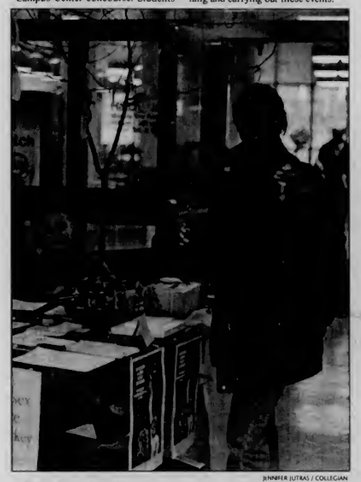
By Daniel E. Lavenson
Collegian Staff

Beginning on Nov. 25 and ending on Dec. 6, the University of Massachusetts Health Education Division will be sponsoring a series of events to call attention to the AIDS disease and its devastating effects, as part of World AIDS day.

The "Faces of AIDS" art display, as well as the Five College AIDS Quilt, will be displayed throughout the two week period of the celebration, at Earthfoods.

The Not Ready For Bedtime Players, a theater group, will be performing in the Campus Center on Wednesday evening.

The main education and awareness efforts of the group are shown through tables which are set up in the Campus Center concourse. Students can learn about AIDS and HIV, the disease that causes AIDS, by picking up information at these tables.



There will also be "condom-grams," lollipops, red ribbons, buttons and pins available at the tables.

On Dec. 6 Rev. James Munroe, who created the "Faces of AIDS" art project will be speaking at the beginning of a candlelight vigil in front of the Student Union steps at 5 p.m.

Later that evening, at 8 p.m. there will be a poetry and prose reading at Claudia's Cafe in Amherst.

UMass Health Education offers a variety of AIDS/HIV related services including anonymous HIV antibody testing and peer counseling for AIDS and other health issues.

According to the group there have been many students involved in planning and carrying out these events.

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Bunmi Abdul, a sophomore pre–med major, received a condom from Jenn Brown, an undecided freshman, at the World Aids Day table in the Campus Center.

Police arrest suspect in local pastor's murder

BRIMFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Authorities said yesterday morning they made an arrest in the murder of the leader of a tiny religious order who ministered to ex-convicts and others with troubled pasts.

Ray Feyre, a spokesman for the Hampden County district attorney, said the suspect was expected to be arraigned later today in Palmer District Court. He identified the suspect as Ron Leftwich, 40, a follower of the ministry.

Meanwhile, at the monastery he led, other members and friends of the ministry were agonizing today over the irony of their gentle leader's slaying.

"This is a guy who wouldn't even hurt a fly," said a member of the order's congregation who identified himself only as Guy. "He probably wouldn't defend himself."

The former Catholic priest, Rev. Martin-Henri, established his own religious order at a monastery in this rural town about 60 miles west of Boston.

His body was found in a wooded area off Dunhamtown Road at about 10:30 a.m. Tuesday by a resident who was walking by.

The Union-News in Springfield reported today that Leftwich, who had lived at the monastery, was released in 1992 from a state facility in Bridgewater for the sexually dangerous. He had been committed to the facility following the 1977 rape of a woman on Nantucket.

The newspaper also reported that state police had seized a van parked at the monastery belonging to Strawberry Productions, a Chicopee company that puts on puppet and clown shows for children. Leftwich had worked as a road manager for Strawberry Production, the newspaper said.

Guy said three brothers had been living at the monastery, which also held weekly services for the surrounding community. He said they could not even begin to mourn properly yesterday with investigators swarming over the property. He said he wasn't aware of Martin-Henri fearing violence from anyone in recent times.

Brimfield Police Chief Donald Norton told the Union-News of Springfield that authorities believe Martin-Henri was beaten to death.

Martin-Henri "took a hell of a beating" about the head and shoulders, Norton told the Telegram & Gazette of Worcester. Norton said authorities "took a lot of plaster castings of footprints and tire prints. And they had chemists taking blood samples."

Norton and state police Lt. Peter Higgins said bloodied items found at the Brothers of Bethany Holy Trinity Monastery indicated Martin-Henri was killed there and dumped at the brookside. The items included the bishop's glasses, found in the driveway, Norton said.

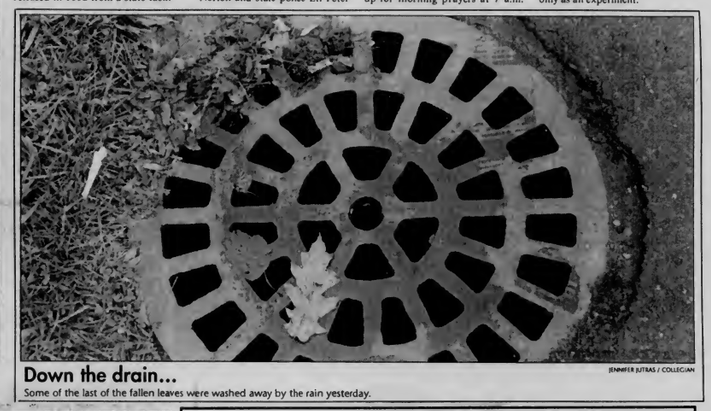
A resident walking his dog discovered the body, moments after the dog discovered a black sneaker, according to the Telegram and Gazette.

An autopsy by Hampden County Medical Examiner Loren Mednick was scheduled for late yesterday.

Martin-Henri, who left the Catholic church in 1992, founded the Brothers of Bethany religious order in 1988. The order is affiliated with the Bethany Cares Charismatic Catholic Church. Police on Tuesday were releasing few details of the 57-year-old's death. Hampden County District Attorney William Bennett called the case "suspicious," and said his office was investigating it as a homicide.

State Police Lt. Peter Higgins said Tuesday night, "We intend to follow leads we have developed in the daytime and into the night."

Martin-Henri was last seen after an 8 p.m. service Monday. He was reported missing after not showing up for morning prayers at 7 a.m. Tuesday.



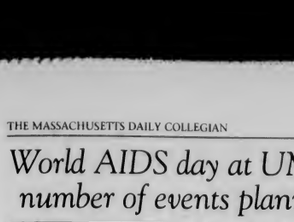
He had been ordained into the Catholic church by the Diocese of Bridgeport, Conn., in 1985, diocese spokesman Rev. Christopher Walsh said. At the time, Martin-Henri's name was Donald Bassford. According to Walsh, Martin-Henri was given permission by the church to start his own religious group in the Springfield area in 1988.

However the avowed church "radical," who ministered to prisoners at the Hampden County Jail, proved too controversial for the Springfield diocese.

In July 1992, Bishop John Marshall, who had just taken over the diocese with a call for reasserting family values, ordered the monastery to disband. He said Martin-Henri's group had failed to establish a stable membership and kept the diocese in the dark about some of its activities.

Martin-Henri, a former actor and nurse, had accepted into his monastic order ex-convicts, drug addicts and others trying to overcome personal turmoil.

Marshall ordered Martin-Henri to return to his home diocese in Bridgeport, Conn. At the time, church officials said they had allowed the community to form only as an experiment.



JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Down the drain...
Some of the last of the fallen leaves were washed away by the rain yesterday.

Campus Activities at the University of Massachusetts Presents

Something Every Friday

A weekly series of FREE special Events

Comic Improv Group
Scared Scripless
Bluewall Café, 8:00pm
December 6, 1996
Followed by the hit movie
"Trainspotting"

Choose Life. Choose a job. Choose a starter home. Choose owner insurance, leisure wear and matching luggage. Choose a future. But why would anyone want to do a thing like that?

CHECK OUT N.Y.C.'S BEST IMPROV COMEDY!

UMASS Student Opener
Pele's Desire

PolyGram Music Giveaways!!

Check out our website:
www.umass.edu/campact/events/calendar.htm

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

This series is made possible by a grant from Auxiliary Services and the Vice-Chancelor for Student Affairs

Change Lanes
NEW ROUTE OPENED
40
Some U-Turns
THE UMASS CAREER CENTER
Where the Present Meets the Future
RETURN TO SCHOOL ZONE
DETOURS
30
No Limits
NO ONE WAY
20
CONSULT MAPS

GIVE YOURSELF A PRESENT THAT WILL LAST A LIFETIME!!!

SPRING semester CO-OPS and INTERNSHIPS STILL AVAILABLE!!!!

All Majors!!!

Companies such as:

Uniroyal
The Boston Globe
Fidelity Investments
Disney Magazine

Experience!
References!
Explore the World of Work!

Field Experience Office
University Career Center•Mather Building•
413-545-6265

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Renée LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Michael Elliott News Editor Maureen Mazerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Don't bear Right

Bob Dunn

John Salvi died in prison last week.

Some people cheered, some people cried, everyone tried to lay blame on someone besides Salvi. "It's the prison system's fault!", "It's the court's fault!", etc. etc. I'm sorry, but Salvi is the one who decided to strap the Zip-Loc over his head and cash his check early; blame him.

However, what should one expect at the culmination of a story that raised the art of finger pointing to a new level, displaying a level of digital dexterity that would make Liberace blush?

What strikes me as odd is the one group who has been able to duck the fickle finger of fate thus far is the one where blame ought to be laid. The Religious Right.

The Religious Right have been spreading their sanctimonious guano across the political landscape for years now and Salvi was the product of the hatred that they've sown.

Am I suggesting that good, honest Christians endorse Salvi's actions? Absolutely not. I'm not talking about good 'ol God-fearing Joe and Jane lunch-box out there who are simply looking for comfort in a scary world where the bad guys win sometimes. I'm talking about the pious pinheads roaming the free range carrying versions of the Bible that read "Love thy neighbor unless..."

The Religious Right practice the religion of exclusion inside the church of the close-minded, and Salvi took those messages to heart and ran with them. What they fail to understand is that people wrote the Bible, not God and people are sometimes petty, thoughtless boobs with nothing better to do than promote their own agendas.

I believe that the heart of any organized theology must be one of tolerance and acceptance, yet the Religious Right insist on wasting most of their time and breath talking about who they don't want hanging ferns in their little clubhouse. Don't they think if the Bible was actually the word of God, there would be no room for debate? I think if God can create an entire universe in less than a week, he can make sure he's not misconstrued.

Another thing that fascinates me about the Religious Right's silence on these events is that, somehow, they're not convinced that their message is one of hate and intolerance in the first place, but that those messages had nothing to do with Salvi's actions. Remember, these are the people that just a few years ago were convinced that Satan himself had nothing better to do than do back-up vocals for hair-spray metal bands.

I mean, think about it, how can these people honestly convince anybody that messages of hate and despair were not only recorded backwards onto record albums but convinced some teenaged metal fans to bang their heads right into the open end of a loaded shotgun and their messages of hate and despair broadcast overtly in any number of media have no effect? Now the "lone nut theory" makes sense?

"Oh those kids who killed themselves? They were influenced by Ozzy Osbourne records and hateful messages they get from television. John Salvi? Oh, he's just a nut."

John Salvi committed a horrible crime. He put two young women into early graves because he had a head full of bad wiring and they happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time. He was sick to begin with and it didn't help that he put full faith in those who do nothing but promote zealotry and hatred while posing as God's personal spokespeople.

The Religious Right need to realize that it is not their job to pass judgement on any of the rest of us earth-bound mortals; it's the job of the God that they purport to speak for. They need to sit down, shut up and mind their own business before they convince someone else to ring up a tab on God's Visa card.

Bob Dunn is a Collegian columnist.

Ride 'em Cowboys!

C. Taylor Conner

Most of us hardly batted an eye when we heard the news: Leon Lett, coke, suspension.

Gee, that's nice. Wonder if Dick Trickle won the Tallahasee Redneck Derby.

Ten years ago, this sort of scandal might have shocked the American public; in 1996, our first reaction is to flip stations since there were no hookers or would-be assassin renegade cops involved.

Are the Dallas Cowboys really America's team?

Their big-time wide receiver, Michael Irvin, missed the opening five games of the season due to his much publicized escapade involving both hookers and would-be assassin renegade cops. Oh, yeah, and there were some powdered coca leaves on the premises as well.

Good thing Mike had himself some slick lawyers and megastar status on his side— how else can you plead no lo contendre and get off the hook with a limp slap on the wrist as he did? And just how do you explain this sort of fiasco to the arresting officers, your wife and your children?

It plays out like a bad episode of Three's Company with Irvin and the trial judge in the John Ritter and Don Knotts roles, respectively. You can almost imagine the athlete manically squealing, "Mr. Furley, it's not what it looks like! Janet and Chrissy were just dressed like hookers, and I thought this heap of dope was flour for my cooking class!"

Eerily enough, however, the situation did resolve itself in that unsettlingly syrupy-sweet sitcom fashion, with Irvin's return to the Boys being heralded as the saving grace of his team.

Does this mean, in turn, that the average Cowboy fan also welcomes the return of other philandering cokeheads to the streets after they, unlike Irvin, have served time?

I don't think so.

But hey, the Cowboys are America's team, right?

While their players are busy trying to remove the white lines on the field via nasal passages, owner Jerry Jones and coach Barry Switzer remain out of the heat for the most part. Consider that Jones has, by virtue of having more green than The Sound of Music in widescreen, circumnavigated the NFL's reasonable advertising limits, turning Texas Stadium into a Mecca of corporate propaganda.

This guy would sell ad space on jock straps just on the off-chance it might be caught on camera during a post-game locker room interview.

Meanwhile, Jones' main man, Switzer, violated so many rules and regulations during his tenure at Oklahoma that the NCAA has debated changing the name of its handbook to "The Barry Switzer Book of Bad Stuff." It seems fitting that trouble has followed him to Big D, since coaches, while not omniscient, should be held somewhat accountable for the actions of their players, both on and off the field.

Yet, Switzer has oft been characterized as the phoenix rising from the ashes rather than the weasel who burned the dreams of many young collegiate athletes.

If the kitchen gets a little too heated in Dallas, perhaps he might consider returning to the ranks of higher ed — not as a coach, but rather in a 100-level ethics class.

And this is America's team?

What of the good guys on the squad like Troy Aikman. Emmitt Smith and even Deion Sanders, the gridiron lovers who just want to compete and carry little baggage other than the requisite wooly mammoth-sized egos and contracts. They get caught on a team that places more emphasis on winning than on character; on endorsements than on substance; and on saving face than on purging themselves of damaging elements.

Cynicism holds that perhaps the Dallas Cowboys do indeed personify the perfect team for America; their pop cultural appeal as hollow as the center of Super Bowl rings.

C. Taylor Conner is a Collegian columnist.

Looking backward

David K. Chan

I was saving this type of column for May 1997 — my graduation date. But I realize that there are seniors who are graduating at the end of this semester as well. So I've decided to write it now, but it will also be continued next May.

I've always said, "I love college, and I hate school." That line could not be truer for someone who is suddenly faced with the reality of leaving college. I am close to the end of my rope of being a student for the last 16 years. Don't ever forget what college was really about.

College is about...

• The time you came to freshman orientation and met the people that would be your initial friends. Whether or not they're still your friends now doesn't matter. You'll always remember who they are.

• Walking around campus with a map on your first week of college. Remember trying to figure out the Fine Arts Center? Or Machmer Hall? Remember the first time you asked somebody for directions?

• Being overwhelmed by the large volumes of people at Whitmore, the Textbook Annex, the dining commons.

• Remember those cold mornings waiting outside The Cage for basketball tickets.

• All the times at the dining commons when you grumbled about the food. You never thought you'd eat so much cereal in your life.

• The first friends you met in your dorm and in your classes. Some of them are still your friends now. They became your family.

• The times you stayed up all night talking with your friends about anything and everything. The times you've cried and the times you were laughing so loud that the RA had to tell you to be quiet.

• All those all-nighters you had to pull for exams and papers because you were putting them off. While wired on caffeine you would always say that you'd never do it again, but deep down you knew you were kidding.

• All the times you spent trying to find yourself. What to major in. Who to vote for. What to do with your life. Republican or Democrat? What's politically correct?

• The times you had to assure your parents that you knew what you were doing. Convincing them that your major is meaningful and your friends are great people.

• The first boy or girl that you had a crush on and hoping each day to see that person somewhere on campus. Remember looking up that person's number in the directory?

• All that money that you and your friends put into the Amherst pizza and calzone industry. Remember the messed up orders and the late deliveries.

• Those hot sweaty days in early September when you had to move out. And again in May when you have to move out.

• The times you felt like a packed sardine while sitting in class in Mahar, Thompson, and Hasbrouck. To keep from falling asleep, you'd read all the enlightening graffiti on the desks.

• The times you couldn't stand your roommate and wished hurtful things upon that person.

• The times you felt like a tiny fish in the sea, and felt like your life couldn't get worse. You never felt so lonely in your life.

• And the times when you felt like you knew everybody and life could do no wrong.

• The time when you were heartbroken and just wanted to give up.

• And the time when your heart fluttered and the days were beautiful.

• The times when you thought you aced that exam, but were later disappointed.

• And the times when you knew you failed, but was later surprised.

• All the times when you shared those moments with your friends. You felt like you knew everything about them.

• The times when you were supposed to stay up late studying with your friends but instead you all just talked about your lives and your secrets.

• And college is about the day when you realize that you are leaving with more irreplaceable memories than you'll ever have.

David K. Chan is a Collegian columnist.

You can't live with 'em...

Jeremy Hurewitz

"Are you taking a class over winter session, Hurewitz?" Steve asked.

"Yeah, I have to if I want to graduate in May. What's it like up here during winter session? Is anybody around? This summer was dead."

"It's not too bad. There are more people than in the summer but people tend to hibernate."

"Well, I don't mind my solitude but when I go into town I like to see some ladies and some life, ya know?"

"This summer there were no girls around here," interjected Phil.

"It was hurtin' but as soon as the semester started all of 'em flooded back in," I said enthusiastically.

"You know what it is," said Phil with a devilish grin. "The library is a giant phallic symbol and women flock here because of some kind of primal pull."

"WHAT!?"

"I'm serious, man! You try to explain why there are so many beautiful women at UMass. I mean, I fall in love almost everyday walking around campus. Some of the girls that walk around here are like walking sculptures, all curves and divinity..."

We all sighed pensively.

"If there are so many gorgeous women here at UMass, why are the three of us sitting here without any of them in your stinking apartment."

Odd silence.

Steve was grumbling about his stomach and he got up and made his way to the bathroom.

"I know what you mean about walking around campus love-struck and confused," I began. "I see all these girls and I start wondering why the contour of the face or the length and shape of her legs or what parts curve in or out can make me double up in agony because it looks so good."

"Its the condition of man," Phil replied, leaning forward in my easy chair. "The human male is one of the most futile and sorry creatures you can ever find. We're all obsessed with sex but when a woman shares our sentiment we ostracize her as a slut. She is put forth in relief against women of chastity because men are obsessed with domination and purity. The virgin is one of the most enticing things in existence but it's absurd because it's a one shot deal and then its allure begins to wear off. Once conquered, the capricious mind of man begins to wander. It's the same reason why men who actually love the women that they're with wind up cheating on them."

"That's why prostitution should be legalized," I ventured. "To satisfy that dark, festering side of mankind that craves debasement and hedonism. I think it would save marriages, lower incidences of rape and, if regulated, generally be a release valve for some of the problems that are plaguing our society that sex can mollify. St. Thomas said 'Prostitutes are to a kingdom what sewers are to a palace.' Very true."

"I agree with you, but Shopenhauer said 'Prostitutes are human sacrifices on the altar of monogamy.' Won't people claim that women are being exploited?"

"And that is where the true irony is, because it's the woman who is counting her wad of cash as the dude walks out the door with a stupid grin on his face. The only reason people say they're being exploited is because society views them as fallen women. If the world's oldest profession wasn't so demonized, that notion would pass away into the annals of history."

"But what about AIDS?" Phil asked.

"Ah, now that's the real problem isn't it? This AIDS business really sucks. Sex in the '90s is a tough time. I talk to my uncle who got to funk through the '70s and he just shakes his head and feels bad for us. When I think about that era I feel like I got short changed. It bums me out just thinking about it."

"I know, I know. People just aren't having as much sex as they did. And when sex does happen, you're crazy not to use a condom, and condoms suck. I mean, you're either a two pump chump or you can't feel anything. It feels completely ridiculous to make love to someone you care about with that plastic inhibitor over your gherkin."

A loud rumble came from the bathroom and Steve came out.

"Oh man, Mexican food wrecks me. But I guess that's what I get from eating two burritos for dinner last night. What are you guys talking about?"

"Women."

"Oh yeah?! Did I tell you about this girl in my biology class? I want her to be the mother of my children. Long, dirty blond hair, green eyes; she's got curves. Oh my God!, and the way she walks..."

Jeremy Hurewitz is a Collegian columnist.

We want you–for the Daily Collegian!

Applications for Associate Ed/Op Editors and columnists for next semester are now being accepted. Questions concerning the upcoming semeter should be directed towards Mike Burke.

Film • Music • Theatre • Lifestyles • Books • Art
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Thursday, December 5, 1996
Weekend Edition • Volume CVI • Issue 63

Schedule of Menorah lightings

Menorah lightings at the Hillel House located at 388 N. Pleasant Street in Amherst will take place at different times each evening and are open to the public.

- Thursday, Dec. 5 at 5 p.m.
- Friday, Dec. 6 at 4 p.m.
- Saturday, Dec. 7 at 6 p.m.
- Sunday, Dec. 8 TBA
- Monday, Dec. 9 at 7 p.m.
- Tuesday, Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.
- Wednesday, Dec. 11 TBA
- Thursday, Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

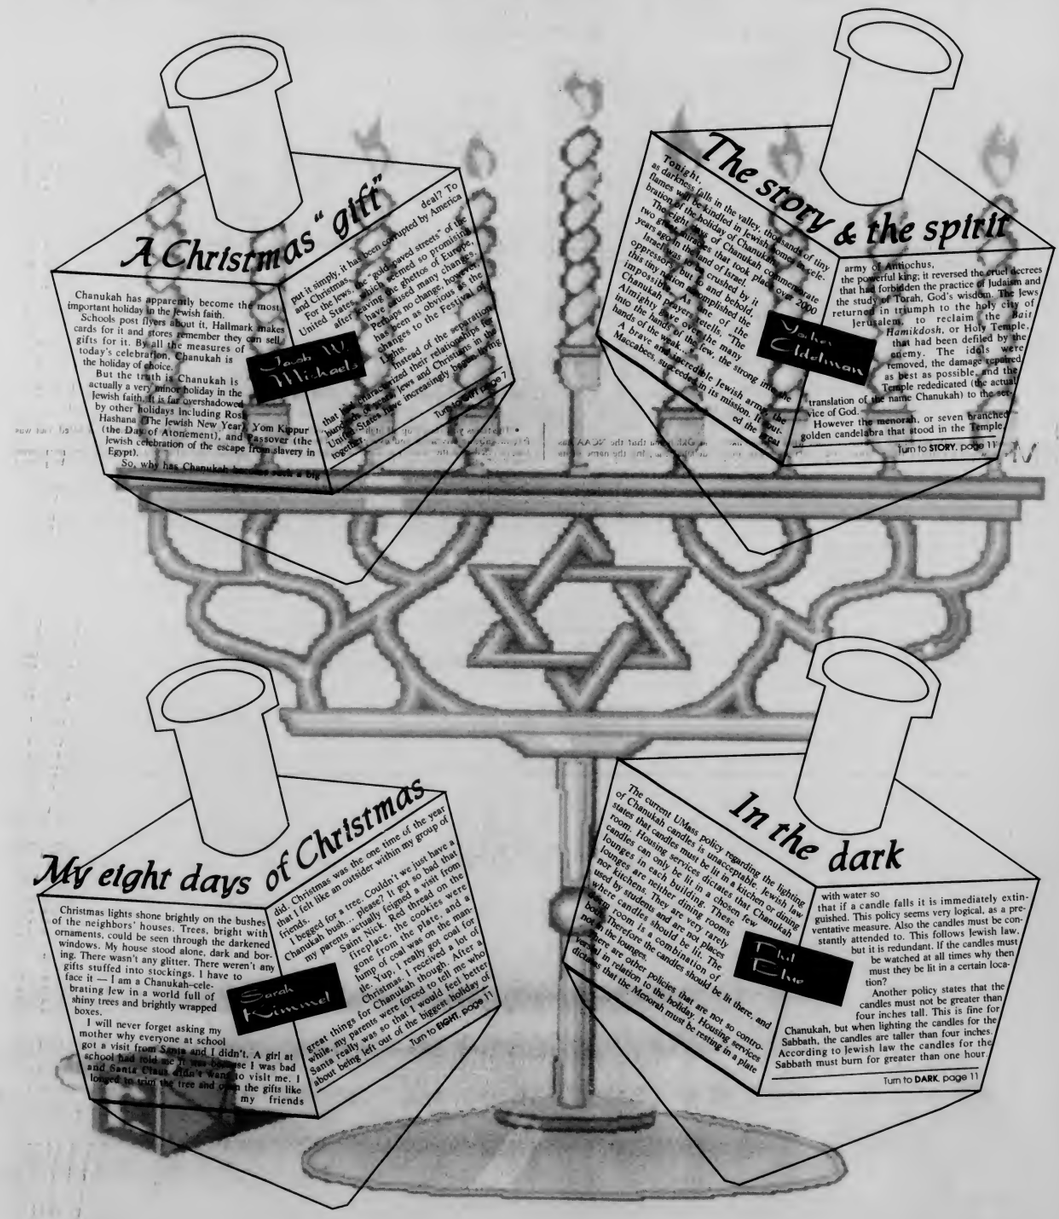
For more information contact the Hillel House at 549-1710

Tonight the Chabad House is sponsoring a Chanukah party for the community at 8 p.m. The Chabad House is located at 30 N. Hadley Road in Amherst. For more information call 549-4094.



There will a public menorah on display in front of the community room at the Hampshire Mall. This menorah will be lit each night of the holiday.

On Dec. 9 the Chabad Student Coalition and the Chabad House at Amherst will sponsor a UMass public menorah lighting and anti-opression rally at noon on the Student Union lawn.

A menorah will also be lit each night of Chanukah on the Town Common in Amherst. On Dec. 12 Rabbi Chaim Adelman, the director of the Chabad House at Amherst, will host a short program after the lighting with refreshments and information.

All of these events are free and open to the public.

A Miracle Remembered

Turn to STORY, page 11

Turn to EIGHT, page 11

Turn to DARK, page 11

'Trek cast takes off to new heights

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

Patrick Stewart finally feels happy with the Star Trek: First Contact. The film, which opened up Nov. 22, has not only made money, but it has garnered higher critical praise than any "Star Trek" film of late.

"As with the last movie, Generations, two years ago, I came out of the screening and within 10 minutes was talking about what elements I wanted to be emphasizing [in] the next movie because I had very strong feelings about what we had not given Picard to do in Generations," Stewart said.

"I was very quickly aware of it again in this movie and when I try to persuade people that I do have a long term commitment to this series, no matter what else is happening, it's partly because there are very few actors that have the opportunity to make a $50 million movie and say 'Okay, next time I want to change this and this and this…'

"We may be looking at another four, five, six movies and so this is a little more like doing a series in a much grander and more extended form, so already, I'm fascinated by the shifts that we can bring into the next script because we made a lot of shifts from Generations," he said.

Brent Spiner, "The Next Generation's" Data, seems more hesitant about the series as a franchise and his role in it.

"The writers have been really kind to me through the years, and they continue to evolve this character, which makes it continually interesting to play," he said. "If I was still doing what I was doing in the first season of the series, I don't think I'd be around.

"I loved playing the scenes with Alice [Krige, the actress who plays the Borg Queen]. She was spectacular. They were also the most challenging — on the page we really didn't know if those scenes were going to work, or even, frankly, if we'd find someone capable of playing the role. Alice came in and just brought so much to the role and had such a grasp of it," Spiner said.

Michael Dorn is in a more unique position. Since Generations, Dorn has taken the character of Worf onto the television show "Star Trek: Deep Space Nine."

"It was great coming back to work with this cast," Dorn said. "It still is odd to be involved on a totally different show. I was telling the guys earlier, 'there's a script waiting for me at home, and you're reading through and you go, 'It's not 'next generation,' you know… but okay…' It is interesting. If anything, doing something like this helps in some ways, you learn something from this."

Like Dorn, Marina Sirtis, who plays counselor Deanna Troi, looks little like her character, though it is somewhat surprising, as unlike with Dorn, one wouldn't think she'd look so different. Sirtis is tanner than her cinematic alter-ego, and has shorter hair, having always used a wig on the show. When asked a question, she almost invariably comes back with an immediate witty retort. Or maybe it just sounds witty — out of character, her accent is in full bloom. In this latest film, Sirtis is able to cut loose from all of her Betazoid empath mumbo-jumbo and have some fun — her character gets drunk doing tequila shots in the film.

"I don't know where they came up with it. What on Earth possessed them and gave them the idea that Deanna Troi would be funny, because I've tried to make her funny over the years and it had never worked; I have no clue where it came from. I'm thinking did I get drunk one night, did they see me drunk and think 'that's really cute, we'll put this in the movie.'? But I'm delighted that they came up with the idea," Sirtis said.

Now that the film has opened, what is the cast planning on doing? Well, Burton is celebraing his thirteenth season as host on PBS's "Reading Rainbow."

Stewart is continuing to act on-stage and on-screen.

"I'm reviving my one-man show [Dicken's A Christmas Carol] here in Los Angeles, and then this movie came up that I'm involved in now, Conspiracy Theory, with Julia Roberts and Mel Gibson. It was irresistible, there was no possibility of me not doing this movie. And so now I'm doing the movie and the stage play at the same time," he said.

Other cast members are pondering the next Star Trek movie.

Spiner said, "Is there going to be a next movie? It's a question of profit whether there's going to be a next movie. All this movie-making business is a big business and so generally the deal is that if the movie makes a profit then we make another one, and if it doesn't, we don't."

"We all like the Klingons. I also think that maybe the next movie should be about the Klingons," said Dorn, who plays a Klingon. "The way they treated this movie, if they did the same thing with the Klingon story, then I think it would be just… I mean, you'd see some stuff — special effects and stories and interactions, they're really good with that stuff. So, hopefully the next one will be that."

Director Jonathan Frakes on the set of Star Trek. First Contact.

COURTESY ELLIOTT MARKS

Dr. Crusher treats Lily as Capt. Picard and Data look on.

COURTESY ELLIOTT MARKS

Come Be an Arts Associate

See Jeremy Brothers at the Collegian for details

Dancers take over center stage

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

The University Dancers will present a three night concert beginning tonight in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. There will also be performances Friday and Saturday evenings at the same time.

The Dancers will perform "Get on the Ride," a piece that moves to empower women and highlight breaking the gender barriers. The dance was created by New York based choreographer Megan Brazil and her partner, Dan Weltner.

Brazil has made her mark on the world of dance by choreographing pieces that are characterized by intensity, sensuality and extreme physicality. For example, in some pieces, Brazil turns the tables and has women lifting the men. However, Brazil choreographs in such a way that the men still retain their strength.

Tonight's program will include a variety of modern, jazz and ballet–based works by choreographers in the Five College community.

University of Massachusetts Professor Billbob Brown choreographed a jazz piece, "Run," set to the music of Ronny Jordan. "Run" is an energetic piece spoofing track and fields sports.

UMass Professor Andrea Watkins' contribution is in the form of "Notturno." Set to a string trio composed by Franz Schubert of the same name, Watkins focused on the using of contrasts as the guiding force in creating a piece for eight women.

Other pieces included tonight include a ballet piece by Mount Holyoke College faculty member and quirky modern piece by UMass senior Gretel Schatz.

Tonight marks the first concert appearance of the University Dancers Improvisation Group. Accompanied by drummers and led by undergraduate Katherine Hopper and Brown, this group has been seen performing in various locations around campus. Because they are not restricted by a special dance floor or concert hall, this ensemble has performed everywhere from grassy knolls to concrete buildings in warm or cold whether.

Tickets are $7 for general public, $4 for students and $2 for senior citizens. UMass students admitted free with valid ID. Tickets can be purchased at the door or in advance at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Please call 545–2511 for ticket information.

The University Dancers will perform in Bowker Auditorium Dec. 5–7 at 8 p.m.

COURTESY DEPT. OF MUSIC & DANCE

■ gift

continued from page 5

This, along with the ever–increasing commercialization and secularization of Christmas, has lead to the growing "importance" of Chanukah.

In the past, Chanukah was celebrated by lighting the menorah, playing the dreidle and eating latkes.

However, once the two groups — especially children in the schools — began mixing, things began to change.

Each year, Christian children got more and more gifts for Christmas, the celebration of Jesus' birth. And each year, Jewish children saw their friends and peers getting all these gifts, and, like all children, felt left out.

These children's parents, seeing how their kids felt, of course wanted to make them feel better. And what better way to do that then to give them gifts of their own? And when better to give them their own holiday?

And so it was that Chanukah, the Jewish celebration of a military victory over the Greeks and a miracle of one day's worth of oil burning for eight days, became a gift–giving holiday.

While at first glance, it may seem like a harmless tradition, there is a reason some Jews are getting upset about the new tradition.

There is a fear that if one Jewish holiday, and the traditions surrounding it, can be changed just because of its proximity to Christmas, how can we be sure that the same won't happen to other holidays or traditions?

The real answer is we can't be sure. The trade off of being physically secure in America is the danger of assimilation. Chanukah is just one of the most obvious examples of what can happen when the majority group's values and traditions are imposed on a minority. And while the change itself is not necessarily bad, what it indicates could be…

Jacob W. Michaels is a Collegian columnist.

Coming to the rescue

www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

IRON HORSE
MUSIC HALL
20 Center St. Northampton

ALL AGES
ALL THE TIME

thursday, december 5 • 10 pm
SCHLEIGHO & E.D.O.
what finals? • $5

friday, december 6 • 10 pm
PERCY HILL
$5 • great grooves • $5

saturday, december 7 • 7&10 pm
theNIELDS
great acoustic rock • $12

tuesday, december 10 • 7 pm
MARSHALL CRENSHAW
cynical girl rocker • $14.50

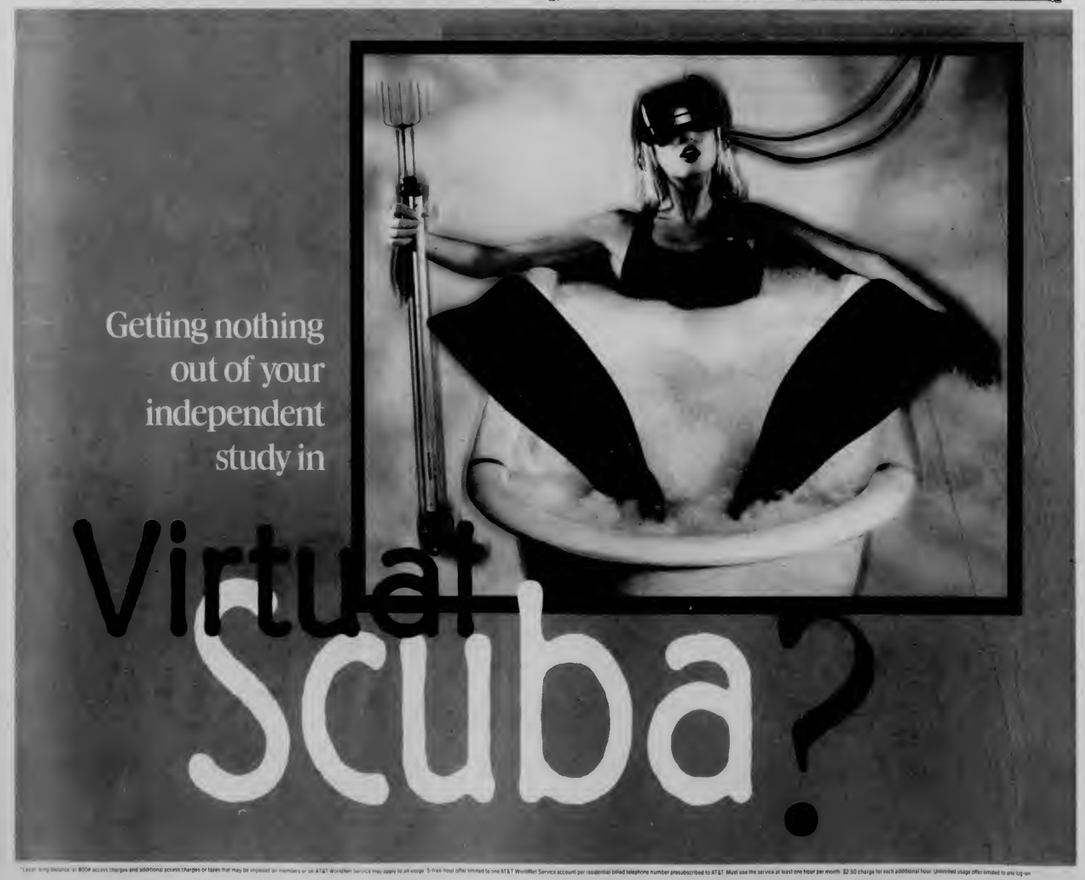
thursday, december 12 • 7 pm
BOILED IN LEAD
celto-garage-world-beat • $10

thursday, december 12 • 10 pm
JIGGLE the HANDLE & E.D.O.
forget yer finals, come out & dance • $5

friday, december 13 • 10 pm
yeP! & SNAPPIN' GOMEZ
very funky grooves • $7

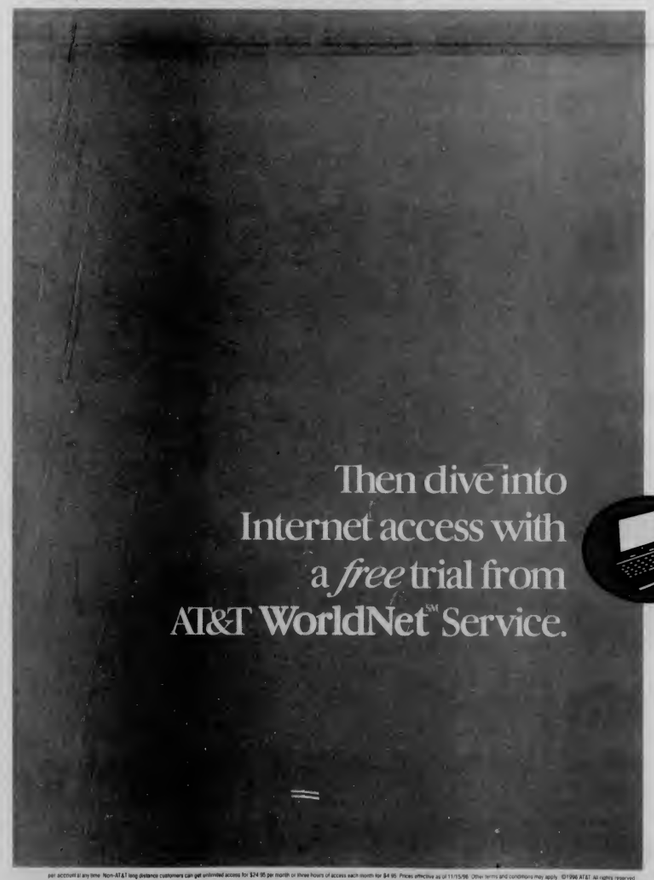
saturday, december 14 • 10 pm
SPACE pussy
P-TOWN's finest gay/glam/punk • $6

monday, december 16 • 7 pm
THE BACON BROS.
featuring KEVIN BACON
the movie star rocks



weds & thurs, dec. 18 & 19 • 7 pm
ARLO GUTHRIE

MUSIC SEVEN NIGHTS A WEEK



Coming: Chris Whitley, Leon Redbone, Jorma Kaukonen's Xmas show, NRBQ

TICKETS: At the door, For the Record in Amherst, at the Northampton Box Office or call 586-8686 to charge by phone

24-hour Concert info:
413.584.0610

Getting nothing out of your independent study in Virtual Scuba?

Then dive into Internet access with a free trial from AT&T WorldNet℠ Service.

Life's a day at the virtual beach if you're an AT&T long distance customer. 'Cause we give you the first 5 hours of Internet access free every month for a whole year with AT&T WorldNet Service. Or get unlimited Internet access for just $19.95 a month.*

AT&T WorldNet Service makes the Net easy to access and easy to use. It's updated daily and comes complete with leading search directories and global e-mail. And the software is free!

This is a limited-time offer, so call now.
1 800 654-0471, ext. 32189

AT&T
Your True Choice

http://www.att.com/college

*Local long distance or 800# access charges and additional access charges or taxes that may be imposed on members or an AT&T Worldfer Service may apply to all except 5 free hour offer limited to one AT&T WorldNet Service account per residential billed telephone number presubscribed to AT&T. Must use the service at least one hour per month. $2.00 charge for each additional hour. Unlimited usage offer limited to one log-on per account at any time. Non-AT&T long distance customers can get unlimited access for $24.95 per month or three hours of access each month for $4.95. Prices effective as of 11/15/96. Other terms and conditions may apply. ©1996 AT&T. All rights reserved.

English Patient a beautiful love story

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

THE ENGLISH PATIENT
directed by Anthony Minghella with Ralph Fiennes, Willem Dafoe, Kristen Scott Thomas
Playing at Mt. Forms Four Theater

The English Patient is a beautifully crafted character study exploring the priorities which people choose to place on their lives. Emotionally filled and charmingly displayed, this intriguing epic story describes one man's journey through the years surrounding the Second World War and serves as a chronicle of the choices which he has made.

Ralph Fiennes plays the title role of Count Laszlo de Almasy, a man who has a made his career mapping the unknown regions of the great Sahara desert. When he is first introduced we know nothing of his character other than he is severely burned and all alone. Fiennes depicts his character with bitter sensitivity and we eventually realize that the desert's haunting loneliness is the perfect representation of Almasy.

The mapping expedition is joined by a wealthy aristocratic gentleman named Geoffry Clifton (Colin Firth) and his beautiful new bride Katherine (Kristen Scott Thomas). Despite their attraction for one another, Katherine and Almasy try to remain distant in order to stay safe from dangerous desire. What eventually occurs is an erotic and passionate love affair that forces Almasy away from the comfort his desert provides and towards the harsh world of betrayal, conflict, and war. Ultimately Almasy must compromise everything he knows and understands to maintain Katherine's life.

The film begins during the recent aftermath of World War Two. When the English Patient is found burned and nearly dead, he is sent to Italy where he is cared for by a young Canadian nurse named Hana (Juliette Binoche). She believes she suffers from a disturbing curse which results in the death of everyone she allows herself to become close with. The mysterious patient who has no memory of his past serves as a one last chance for Hana to obtain redemption by helping him in his few remaining days of life. She removes herself from the world taking only her patient with her to partially destroyed cathedral. There Hana helps Almasy to put together the missing pieces of his life and saves him from the loneliness he once knew.

The solidarity that Hana attempted is often disturbed but always with positive outcomes. A former ally spy (Willem Dafoe) enters the monastery and adds a new faction to our understanding of Almasy. He blames him for betraying him and his country and at this point the film centers on explaining how this situation came to be. Hana also finds the affection of another stranger who is sent to defuse the land mines that infiltrate the scenic landscapes.

The two separate love stories combine together to create an overall intense narrative. Almasy and Katherine's affair does receive far more screen time than that of Hana and her lover Kip. The reason is that Almasy and Katherine — within the film's narrative — are dependent upon each other. Hana serves another service by being the link between the story's present day and the events that are being told through flashbacks.

The end result is a complicated historical story that although beautiful, at times loses itself in its epic nature. The English Patient attempts to capture so much spirit that at times it seems too confined within its nearly three hour time frame. Despite the fact that one should be familiar with the story beforehand to ease the confusion, this is still perhaps one of the finest performances by each of the leading performers. This is a film that will stay with the viewer long after leaving the theater. B+

COURTESY PHIL BRAY

Ralph Fiennes and Kristin Scott Thomas star in The English Patient.

SORORITY RUSH '97
"The only thing missing is you!"
Registration: Dec 9th -13th
in Campus Center Concourse
All University Women are Welcome

Pack Your Bags!
Go Skiing!
Go to the Beach!
Go Home!
DON'T PAY RENT WHILE YOU'RE GONE!
Need to Sublet Your Place?
USE US!
Collegian Classifieds

DAILY COLLEGIAN and ICP present:
The First Annual UMass bandWidth
Spanning Five UMass Bands
Watch here for band listing!
CLUB METRO 18+ NORTHAMPTON, MA
Monday Dec. 9th
Doors Open @ 7:00
Bands Start @ 9:00
$5 admission ($4 with this ad)

Change Lanes
NEW ROUTE OPENED
40 Some U-Turns
THE UMASS CAREER CENTER
Where the Present Meets the Future
RETURN TO SCHOOL ZONE DETOURS
30 No Limits
ONE WAY
20 CONSULT MAPS

WE HAVE MORE JOBS THAN GRADS TO FILL THEM!!
SO.....Jump-start Your Career!!!
Tune-in and tune-up for Spring Recruiting by attending one of these special
✪"ON CAMPUS"✪
Employment Options Workshops
Thursday, December 5th
3:00 pm
Campus Center Room 803
and
Wednesday, December 11th
5:00 pm
Campus Center Room 904-908
You will get important info on:
- Campus recruiting and electronic resume referral systems.
- Accessing the Career Center's automated Job Line.
- Who gets hired and what makes the difference
- Interview tips to make you stand out from the crowd

Don't delay!! Spring recruiting is just around the corner!!
University Career Center
Mather Building
413-545-2224

Dress in style for holiday, but hurry to get best buys

Besides the bringing of lots of gifts, the upcoming holidays are sure to offer an abundance of parties to celebrate this joyous season. The question that should be coming to mind is what are you going to wear?

With all the excitement this season brings, this seems to be the issue that is left to be dealt with at the last minute. Don't just put it off because soon the racks will be empty and last year's ensemble is what the procrastinators will be searching their closets for. Besides, most of the major department stores and small boutiques are having their after Thanksgiving day and Pre-Christmas sales now. A bargain on the perfect party dress or jacket and tie is just waiting to be discovered.

Lauren Lobik

While searching the mall for the perfect look, many are to find that this winter brings many new and different styles from what was seen the year before. As for the woman who wants to look her best at the up-coming holiday gala, either long or short, go for a gown with an empire waist. This high waist band makes any body type look slimmer by creating the illusion of a long, lean torso. Long gowns look best on the taller ladies and minis flatter those who are vertically challenged. As for the fabrics and colors to look for, velvets and satins in metallic hues of gold and silver are sure to make a bold statement and to turn some heads. Head to toe accessories can also be found to match. Strappy pumps and dainty hair clips to hand-held purses and flowing scarves can be used to make the outfit complete.

For the males, don't just rely on the same old dress shirt and tie that you've worn for every other formal occasion. Try something new. A great new look that has been seen throughout the pages of the latest male fashion magazines contain not only a shirt and tie, but a tailored vest. They can be found in many different colors and fabrics. For the less formal occasion try a knit look, but if you're going all out try a stunning wool or silk in a flashy print. No matter what style you prefer, a vest will make any look unique.

What about the shirt that's worn underneath? Well, that needs to be something new and different also. Instead of going with the trusty old button down, try a shirt with no collar or one in a different fabric. After all, these festivities come but once a year. Make it a time to remember.

The big sale events are going on now. Many of the local malls and stores in the area are offering great steals at discount prices. Some buys for women can be found as low as $50 for a complete outfit. An elegant party dress can be purchased at Filene's for $40 and the matching shoes can be bought for only $10. The men will probably have to pay a little more depending on if it's designer brands on their minds.

Don't wait much longer because the clothes are being ripped from the racks faster than you can say, "Happy Holidays."

Lauren Lobik is a Collegian columnist.

Moore duo & Fahey bring odd sounds to Iron Horse

By Daniel Bodah
Collegian Staff

THURSTON MOORE DUO / JOHN FAHEY
Iron Horse Music Hall
Dec. 4

Last night's Iron Horse appearance of John Fahey, and Thurston Moore with Phil Milstein, was shot through with fascinating moments but overall a disappointment.

Fahey has the single most bizarre stage presence I've ever encountered. Curiosity about this critically-acclaimed and obscure figure was only increased by his eccentric mumblings, dark sunglasses, and apparent disinterest in whether or not he had an audience. Add to that rumors about a $200 cab ride from Providence to Northampton and a very large bearded, balding and sunglassed man wandering town with a guitar slung over his shoulder all day, and as Alice said, "curioser and curioser!"

He began the set playing an eight-stringed guitar made, he said, from World War II airplane parts. It was difficult to distinguish where his tuning ended and performance began, a characteristic of his playing which persisted throughout the half-hour to 45 minute set. He then approached a standard six-string acoustic guitar, seemingly surprised that it was there. At first, his playing was lackluster and semi-coherent.

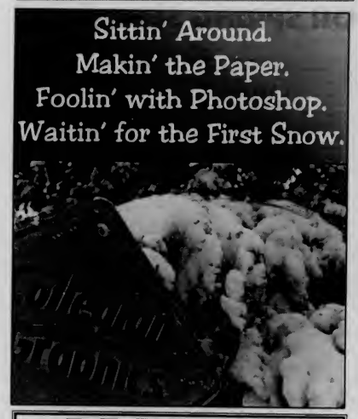
One audience member was heard saying "sounds like me when I'm too stoned to play."

There's a fine line between some of the freer forms of experimentation and plain bad music. Fahey began slowly working his way from the bad side of that line onto higher ground. What at first was a guitar-picking version of a drunken stumble gradually developed an odd rhythmic grace — it was really a remarkable transformation to see. Fahey might have been acting as if he was alone in his living room, futzing around on the guitar, but it seemed more as if he'd been busier about performing in public and gradually started enjoying it and putting in some effort.

The last half of his set hinted at why Fahey has such a good reputation. Sounding more clearly like recognizable blues, these few well-executed songs were full of weird tonal and rhythmic improvisations which Fahey easily brought back into his main themes. It's too bad that as soon as he seemed to get into playing, this mystery man stopped cold and left the stage.

Moore, best known as lead guitarist of Sonic Youth, and Phil X. Milstein proceeded to flush a good deal of the crowd out of the Iron Horse with their ear-splitting improv noise work. The few who'd brought their kids were the first to take off, but numerous others were close behind.

Moore did everything including playing his guitar. At times slowly moving it in front of the amplifier from zone to zone of feedback, sometimes attacking it with a drumstick while jerking the tremolo bar. Moore dredged bursts and long drones of sheer noise from the instrument. Milstein's contributions were mostly in the form of tapes, often with manipulated voices and other obscure



Turn to MOORE, page 12

COURTESY DAVE MARKEY

Thurston Moore performed Tuesday night at the Iron Horse.

Sittin' Around.
Makin' the Paper.
Foolin' with Photoshop.
Waitin' for the First Snow.

Jonathan Reid LTD
THE COMPLETE MEN'S STORE
HAMPSHIRE MALL, HADLEY, MA
We Specialize In Dressing Men for Interviews, Banquets or any Casual Outing, with Prices to Fit ANY Budget.
When Appearance Counts, Count on JONATHAN REID LTD.
We Pride Ourselves on Friendly, Professional, and Courteous Service.
Bring in This AD When Purchasing any Suit or Sport Coat and Get 20% OFF ALL Accessories.
exp. 3/30/97
Buy 1 Suit ✪ Get 1 Free

The UMASS Theatre Guild presents
The Pajama Game
A Musical Comedy
Dec. 5, 6, 7, 1996
8PM in the Student Union Ballroom
Saturday Matinee at 2PM
Tickets:
$4 students/seniors
$6 general public
Tickets May be purchased at Tix Unlimited or at the door

COME TO LIQUORS 44 AND SAVE A LOT OF "DOUGH! DOUGH! DOUGH!"
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink and Drive

Miller Lite 12 PACK
LITE, LITE ICE BEER, MILLER BEER CASE OF 30-12 OZ. CANS $15.49 + DEP.
BECK'S BEER 12 PK. BOTTLE $8.99 + DEP.
SAM ADAMS LAGER 12 PK. BOTTLE $8.99 + DEP.
SARANAC ALL FLAVORS 6 PK. BOTTLE $4.29 + DEP.
NATURAL LIGHT & ICE CASE OF 2-12 PK. CANS $8.99 + DEP.
Coors 12 PACK
EXTRA GOLD CASE OF 30-12 OZ. CANS SALE 11.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -5.00 FINAL COST $6.99 + DEP.
ROLLING ROCK REG. & LIGHT CASE OF 24-12 OZ. BAR BOTTLES $12.99 + DEP.
PETE'S WICKED WINTER BREW & ALL FLAVORS 6 PK. BOTTLE $4.99 + DEP.
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LT, BUD ICE, LITE, MICH, MICH LT., MICH AMBER BOCK, RED DOG, ICE HOUSE $39.99 + DEP.
COKE - DIET COKE SPRITE - DIET SPRITE CANADA DRY 2 LT. 99¢ + DEP.

WINE OF THE MONTH
JEKEL VINEYARDS CHARDONNAY, CABERNET SAUVIGNON 750 ML $7.99
WINE OF THE MONTH
FETZER EAGLE PEAK MERLOT 750 ML $7.99
CARLO ROSSI ALL FLAVORS 4.0 LT. $6.99
RENE JUNOT RED & WHITE 1.5 LT. $5.99
SUTTER HOME WHITE ZINFANDEL, SOLEO, SAUV. BLANC, ZINFANDEL 1.5 L SALE 6.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST $4.49
GEORGE DUBOEUF BEAUJOLAIS - VILLAGES, 1996 NOUVEAU 750 ML $5.99
FREIXENET CORDON NEGRO BRUT & EXTRA DRY 750 ML SALE 5.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -1.50 FINAL COST $4.49
MARTINI & ROSSI ASTI SPUMANTE 750 ML SALE 7.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST $5.99
HARVEYS BRISTOL CREAM 750 ML SALE 9.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST $7.49
MOET & CHANDON WHITE STAR CHAMPAGNE 750 ML $19.99
COLUMBIA CREST SEMILLON-CHARDONNAY 750 ML $4.49
JACOBS CREEK MERLOT 750 ML $4.99

SMIRNOFF VODKA 1.75L $13.99
Canadian Club 1.75 LT. SALE 15.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -5.00 FINAL COST $10.99
BACARDI RUM LIGHT & DARK 1.75 LT. SALE 13.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST $10.99
CROWN ROYAL 750 ML $12.99
AMARETTO DI SARONNO 750 ML $14.49
DEWARS WHITE LABEL SCOTCH 1.75L $26.49
KAHLÚA COFFEE LIQUEUR 750 ML SALE 12.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST $9.99
BAILEYS IRISH CREAM REG. & LIGHT 750 ML $14.49
COURVOISIER V.S. COGNAC 750 ML $17.49
CANADIAN MIST 1.75 LT. SALE 10.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -4.00 FINAL COST $6.99
JIM BEAM 1.75 LT. $13.49
DRAMBUIE 750 ML $16.99
Seagram's 7 1.75 L SALE 12.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST $9.49
JOSE CUERVO GOLD TEQUILA 750 ML $9.99
The GLENLIVET SINGLE MALT SCOTCH 750 ML $19.99

We Accept Cans and Bottles for Redemption
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 12/5/96 THRU WEDS. 12/11/96
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS

Forget moonboats, snowshoes are here to stay

Alfresco News with Liz Anderson

Depressed by the cloud of final papers and exams that has recently accumulated over your head? Snap out of it now is a perfect time to start preparing for a fun snowy winter.

Don't be fooled by this week's rainy warm temperatures, because winter is coming back to the Pioneer Valley, and by the end of this week snow will be in the area.

Ignore Mother Nature's shoe sucking mud puddles, (although when walking from class to class your feet may be sinking in mud and not snow), and picture yourself dancing through the Pioneer Valley on a pair of snowshoes this winter.

With a minimum of 6 inches of powder snowshoeing is a sensational winter sport. The basic action of the snowshoe is called tracking, and entails dragging the tail of the shoe on the snow, while lifting its toe in the air. The objective of snowshoeing is to be able to simply lift each foot and shove it forward with confidence that the snow will follow precisely.

One of mankind's oldest form of transportation, snowshoeing is divided into three categories including: fitness running, recreational hiking and backpack mountaineering. The shape of a snowshoe affects its handling characteristics and can be classified into four basic styles; Yukon, beavertail, bearpaw and western.

The Yukon or trail snowshoe is about 10 inches wide and from 42 to 62 inches in length. Most have a high "toe turnup" of six to eight inches. Traditionally, Yukon snowshoes perform the best in open country and deep powder.

The beavertail ranges in size from 9x30 inches to 20x44 inches. Generally the beavertail is a flat shoe and has a long tail. The flat toe is excellent for kicking steps over rugged steep mountainous conditions.

Bearpaws are short and wide with rounded tails. Sizes range from 12x24 inches to 19x26 inches. The most common bearpaw snowshoe is 12 or 13 inches wide and has a flat toe which makes them excellent for kicking steps through the snow.

First developed in the '50s, western snowshoes were modified in the '70s and have become a favorite with many snowshoers. They are the smallest snowshoe and usually have a high "toe turnup" with a short toe section. This unique toe is a real asset in soft snow.

Western snowshoes are light weight because their frames are made with aluminum and a synthetic decking. This high- tech decking is laced or riveted to the frames.

Sizes of western snowshoes typically range from 8x22 inches to 9x38 inches. Their light weight combines with excellent binding and snow traction to give outstanding maneuverability over snowing hill sides and steep rails.

Thanks to some crafty engineers and high-tech materials you can now walk or jog around ungroomed forest trails where no Nordic or Alpine skier can go without learning a series of complex skills. A few current popular snowshoe and binding systems are Tubes, Sherpa and Atlas.

No one knows for sure when the first snowshoe was devised. Archaeological evidence indicates that the forerunner of today's snowshoe was a solid slab of wood. The earliest examples of "solid slab snowshoes" are from Central Asia.

Snowshoes spurred the earliest migrations from Central Asia north into Siberia and Scandinavia. When these aboriginal people set out on their long trek across the Bering Straits to North America they did it on snowshoes.

The first Europeans who settled in North America learned how to hunt, trap, and explore on snowshoes from the Native Americans. Snowshoeing became a very popular form of transportation among savvy European trappers, hunters and explores when they mapped out North America.

Snowshoes have a wonderful history of bringing together people from all over the world. Before the invention of snowshoes vast regions of the world were virtually unreachable. This winter pull a group of your friends together with a pair of snowshoes and explore the wild nature trails of Pioneer Valley.

Liz Anderson is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY RHONDA FARNHAM

Jam, Jam, Jam

Percy Hill, New Hampshire's answer to Phish, will play at the Iron Horse tonight at 10 p.m.

DOMINO'S PIZZA

CHEESE PIZZA SALE

$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA — LIMIT 10 AT A TIME

$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA — LIMIT 10 AT A TIME

$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA — LIMIT 10 AT A TIME

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST 256-8911
OPEN TILL 4AM

Expires 12/30/96
NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS DINING SERVICES
INVITES ALL UNIVERSITY FACULTY, STAFF AND STUDENTS TO:

EASTSIDE GRILL NIGHT
EASTSIDE GRILL

Thursday December 5, 1996

4:00 pm - 7:00pm
at Berkshire, Hampshire, Franklin and Worcester Dining Halls
Cash Price: $7.00 per person (if not on board plan)

Menu

Chicken Margherita
Shrimp Alfresco/Bow Tie Pasta
Pasta Shells with Tomato Basil Broth*

Garlic Mashed Potatoes
Fresh Broccoli Flowerettes
Whole Baby Carrots

Gorgonzola Garlic Bread

Praline Sauce with Vanilla Ice Cream/Frozen Yogurt

Vegan (Vegetarian) Entree*

Drawing

Eight $25.00 Gift Certificates, compliments of Dan Yacuzzo, owner of the Eastside Grill Restaurant in Northampton, MA
• No Purchase Necessary •
Each Dining Hall will have two drawings:
One for board plan members
One for non-board plan members

For additional information, Fax: 545-9673
or e-mail: d_sutherland@auxwor.aux.umass.edu

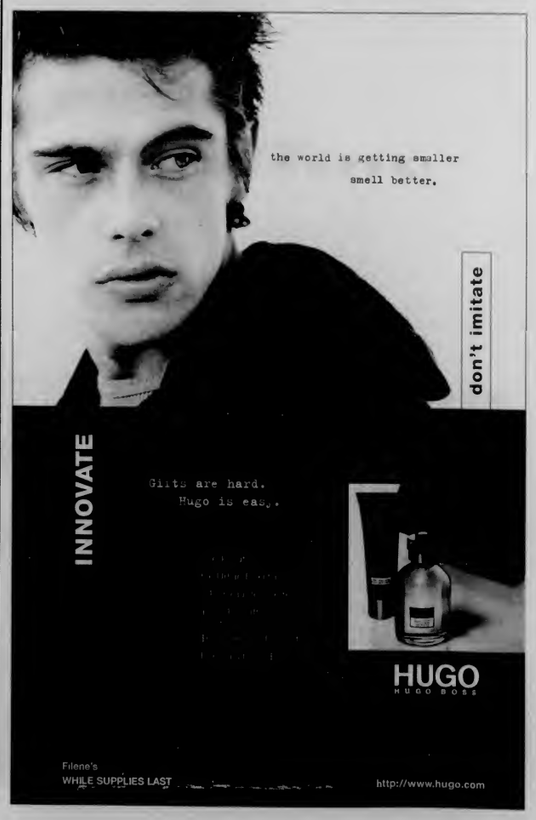
RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount — Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441

Featuring, "Saranac" $16.99 cse (your choice)

Bud Dry bots. $9.99 case

Now Open Sundays 1-6 P.M.

Busch & Busch "light" $11.99 30/pk. cans



"Micro" Bonanza Continues!
Catamount - All flavors including the popular "X-Mas Ale!"
Pete's - All flavors including the Imfamous "Winter Brew!"
Smuttynose - Old Brown Dog, Shoals Pale Ale, & "Chuck Wheat Ale!"
New Amsterdam - Amber, Ale, I.D.A. & Blk& Tan!
Middlesex - Brown Ale, Rasp. Wheat & Oatmeal Stout!
Mix/Match "two" 6/PKs... $9.95

Milwaukees Best $9.99 30/pk cans

Absolut $19.99 1.75 liter

Vodka 80° $8.99 1.75 liter

All Beers Plus Deposit OPEN 9:00AM-11:00PM VISA/MASTERCARD -Delivery Available-

■ dark

continued from page 5

This cannot be achieved with the standard Chanukah candles.

The only policy that must be changed before the lighting of Chanukah candles tonight is the policy against lighting candles in the dorm rooms. Many students in the dorms will light candles regardless of Housing Services policy. Lighting candles in the dorm rooms leaves students open to punishment. Resident Assistants can write up students who do not follow this policy. Jews are required to "publicize the miracle" of Chanukah by placing the menorah in the doorway of their house or dorm room as the case may be. They cannot just close the doors and hope the RAs do not notice.

The policy is being changed. A motion was brought before the SGA senate to change this policy before the holiday. Sen. R.J. Lemar brought this motion before the Senate, and because of his concern, the motion was passed unanimously. Housing services is currently reviewing the changes that need to be made to the current policy. Sen. Lemar has made many attempts to ascertain what is happening in housing services. I would at this time like to commend R.J. Lemar for all of his effort to stop anti-Semitism in the policies on this campus.

One thing remains to be seen — what will happen tonight? Will many Jews be written up for following their traditions, or will housing services make a last minute decision regarding the lighting of Chanukah candles? What I do know is that I will be lighting candles on all eight days of Chanukah in the traditional Jewish way.

Phil Blue is a UMass student.

■ eight

continued from page 5

the year.

My friends always felt that the one way to keep me included was to give me Christmas presents on Dec. 25. This was done with good intention, yet it always made me feel worse. Did I present them with Chanukah gifts? No. Somehow I let myself assimilate into their culture. I received the red and green packages with a grateful smile and wished them a Merry Christmas too.

Yeah, I had my own holiday. Chanukah is not the Jewish Christmas though. Over the years the presents worked their way into the Jewish homes. They were a way to make us poor little Jewish kids feel better. I don't say this for sympathy. There really is no reason for the gifts on Chanukah. Somehow, I always thought that this paralleled the two holidays.

I grew up watching Chrismas specials on television. The perfectly happy family around a tree, singing "Silent Night," and witnessing miracles. I trimmed my best friend's tree every year and ate her cookies. I continued to believe that I could celebrate both holidays. I know that I could have turned the television off or stayed at home but what about the lights outside my window or the music that rang through the mail? I knew the reality — I can't just ignore life.

So I asked my friends to get me Chanukah presents instead. It was a nice change. I had gift swaps instead of trying to forge a tree and I learned the joy of winning a good dreidle game. I see now that I was lying to myself and trying to hard to be, well, Catholic. As cliche as it sounds, it's true. Today I'm proud of my religion and of Chanukah. I still adore egg nog and think that the trees are really pretty — I just don't feel the need to have one of my own. I have learned that even though society pulls you to one thing, or drives you into the mainstream, if you're a duck, you're a duck, and if you're not, then you're not.

For the record I have gotten over the present stigma. If someone is nice enough to get you a gift, why complain about what the occasion is? Finally, the gifts are a perk of both holidays and are not necessary to the spirit or feeling of either Chrismas or Chanukah.

Sarah Kimmel is a Collegian columnist.

■ story

continued from page 5

could not be kindled. The store of pure olive oil, used to light the menorah, had been ransacked. The jug of oil, sealed to attest to its purity, had been destroyed or defiled. An intensive search led to the discovery of one untouched jug of oil, still sealed and fit for its job of bringing God's light into the world, which is one of the symbols of the radiant light of the menorah. However this jug of oil contained only one day's supply for the kindling of the menorah, whilst preparation of new oil would take at least eight days. However, the Jewish people experienced yet another miracle, the oil burned for the entire eight day period until the new supply of pure oil was established again.

In celebration of these two miracles, Jews around the world join together to kindle the light of Chanukah each year. However, the message of Chanukah is a universal one, timely and relevant to all people in all places. The Syrians were not, initially, bent upon the physical destruction of the Jewish people, but on eradicating their individuality. Their desire was to bring enlightenment, first by exposing, but ultimately by imposing its own culture. This inability to tolerate difference, to respect others' practices and beliefs, is one which plagues society to this day.

The message of Chanukah is one of support and encouragement. Celebrating difference and diversity is not a threat to positive self image. Taking pride in one's self cannot and should not invalidate others. Freedom of religion must be a basic building block of a free and equal society.

Each night of Chanukah we kindle one more flame to bring a greater measure of light to the darkness. This should be our path to self improvement, one more good thought, one more good word, one more good deed. This should be done until the world is filled with the positive energy of goodness that will usher in an era of ultimate peace and harmony. Jews call this "Moshiach," the era of the Messiah, and there's no time like the present.

Yochev Adelman is the co-director of Chabad House.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
The Collegain: More cracked up than your rear-view mirror

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN ONLINE!

Check it out! New England's Largest College Daily • www.umass.edu/rso/colegian Updated Daily

Work Over Break

We are offering great temporary positions taking your home during January Break

CONSIDER ALL WE HAVE TO OFFER:
• Starting Salary from $6.50 to $7.50 /Hour
• Paid Training and Management Programs
• Morning, Evening and Weekend Hours
• Flexible Schedules • Potential for Advancement • $$$ Potential
☆ Ideal for Students ☆

WORK 30 OR MORE HOURS DURING WINTER BREAK.
District Phone #s:
Boston- (617)484-1788; North Boston- (508)657-5522;
South Boston- (508)821-5888; Plymouth & Cape Cod- (508)833-0750;
New Hampshire- (603)472-8483; Maine- (207)854-0500;
(508)832-8152; Springfield(local)- (413)737-8938;
(508)756-5455; Hartford, Conn.- (860)645-6573

Interviewing at UMass Campus Center

INVENTORY SPECIALISTS
Dec. 10 8:30AM-8:30PM RM. 162-75
Dec. 11 8:30AM-1:30PM RM. 168C
1:30PM-8:30PM RM. 911-15

DISTRIBUTION MANAGER

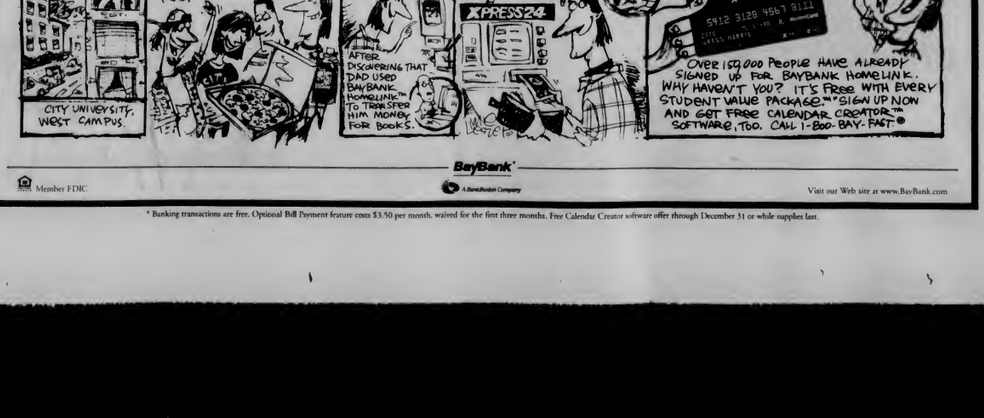
WANTED FOR SPRING SEMESTER

Must be available between 7:45am and 11:00am Monday through Friday

Come to the Collegian to apply, or call Ryan Courtemance or Alycia Hines at 545-3500

PRUDDY'S NEEDS YOU!

PRUDDY'S needs your support tonight at the town meeting at the Bang's Center at 7:00pm. Only our customers can tell the truth of what Pruddy's is all about to the Zoning board. Don't let strangers close down a business that you support using opinions, half truths and no facts.



BE THERE, GET INVOLVED!

Paid for by the friends of PRUDDY'S

What's on Tonight?

Check out the Daily T.V. Listings

Starting Dec. 9

* Banking transactions are free. Optional Bill Payment feature costs $3.50 per month, waived for the first three months. Free Calendar Creator software offer through December 31 or while supplies last.

■ sports briefs

continued from page 18

Playing well for UMass were Jason Greenlaw, Eric Blahut and Chris Blute on the outside. The middle was controlled by J.C. Laven and Patrick Moreau all day long. Pedro Fernandes played well as a defensive specialist. Wayne Chestna was solid on the right side, while Michael Shippee and Damian Gassparato handled the setting. Chris Lu was absent on the trip because he assisted the women's team in its A-10 regular season final match.

The men's club volleyball team received a 30 lb. turkey and beverages for winning, but John Madden wasn't there with his telestrator. The turkey was donated to Jessie's House in Northampton.

Attention Lacrosse Buffs!

• A required meeting for all players who intend to play for the UMass Lacrosse Club (JV-level men) in spring semester will be held on Dec. 13, at 4 p.m., starting in the northwest stairwell at Boyden Gym. First game is Feb. 28 on the turf at Sacred Heart University. Please call Coach Dietel at 545- 3815 by Dec. 12 so that a packet can be prepared for you to pick up at the meeting.

Bad Boy Killaz defeats Why? Because

• The Holiday Basketball tournament field increased this year to 20 teams, with each team playing three games and the top team in each of the four leagues going into a single elimination tournament.

Bad Boy Killaz, last year's runner-up, advanced to the finals by overpowering Operation Lockdown 57-36 and Real Deal 49-45. Why? Because beat Room 307 to advance to the championship game against Bad Boy Killaz. At the half Why? Because held a 3-point lead. The game was evenly matched down to the final two seconds when Killaz inbounded the ball successfully under tight pressure and ran the clock to hold onto a 47-45 victory.

Those interested in joining the action can enter spring basketball and ice hockey teams now.

Steamers Victorious, Hogs Beaten

• On the ice, 10 teams qualified for the playoffs, with the Steamers and the Hogs going undefeated in league play.

As the Steamers advanced in the tournament, the Hogs were slaughtered as the Smocks took over. The best-of-three was set up with the Steamers vs. the Smocks.

In game one, the Steamers heated up and took control, to win 2-0. Even when a win looked bleak, the Smocks would not succumb to the Steamers' foolish ways. They evened the series with a hard fought 5-3 win.

In the final game, the Steamers opened up firing with back-to-back goals seven minutes in. The Smocks got on the board but the Steamers increased the lead to 3-1 to end the first period. The Steamers scored the final goal of the game at 5:28 in the third period to claim a 4-1 victory.

Sports Briefs were compiled by Collegian staff member Jonathan M. Place.

■ Moore

continued from page 10

content. Occasionally he used a huge vibrator in unsuccessful attempts to milk strange noises from his guitar or mics, and sporadically added undulating tones from a bowed saw to the general din.

There's a thriving underground noise scene, which Sonic Youth has always had some relation to. Anyone familiar with Emil Beaulieau, CCCC, Aube, or the better-known Boredoms, Mark Ribot, John Zorn, or K.K. Null, couldn't have found Moore & Milstein's performance too outlandish. However, they might have found it a little boring. Noise can be crafted into incredibly beautiful or disturbing shapes, and there were moments of both at this show. Unfortunately, there were more moments of pretentious artistry than skillful improv.

POTATO LATKES

5 medium potatoes — grated
1 egg — beaten
1 onion — grated
5 TBSP — flour
1 TSP — baking powder
salt and pepper to taste

Mix all ingredients. Heat oil in frying pan. Using ladle, spoon in pancakes. Fry till brown on first side, then turn over. When done let drain on paper towels. Serve with sour cream and apple sauce.

Follow with 3 prune hamentashen and milk. Ending the debate to which is better, have hamentashen and latkes together. Have a happy Chanukah.

Provided by "Coach" Jane Schwartzman.

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

A holiday ride

Yonah Blum, director of programming at the Chabad House in Amherst, parked his Menorah-mobile in front of the Student Union Yesterday.

Advertise in the Daily Collegian

Let people know you are out there!

Thought of the Day

Consciousness: That annoying time in between naps.

SPAM stuff ads

$1 Sushi
Rock & Roll
10pm - 3am
Thur-Sat
Nites
BIRTHDAY PARTY: CHEF'S FREE MEAL & PICTURE - 4 PERSON PARTY
Authentic JAPANESE Restaurant
Gift Certificates Available
ICHIBAN
One Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton (413)585-1181
Tatami Room Special for the HOLIDAY SEASON
15% Discount with 6+ person party
Reservations Required

RESEARCH EXPERIENCE FOR UNDERGRADUATES
SUMMER 1997
MIT HAYSTACK OBSERVATORY
Undergraduate science, mathematics and engineering students are invited to apply for summer research positions at the MIT Haystack Observatory in Westford, MA. Research projects include radio astronomical studies, atmospheric physics investigations, and hardware and software development for data acquisition, processing, and recording systems. The positions are nominally three months in duration (June-August) and carry a stipend of $1300-1500/month depending on academic level and experience. Women, minorities and students with disabilities are encouraged to apply. For further information and application materials write to:
Director / REU Program
MIT Haystack Observatory
Off Route 40
Westford, MA 01886-1299
Tel: (508) 692-4764
Fax:(617) 981-0590
email: judy@critter.haystack.edu
Application deadline is 7 February 1997.
MIT is an affirmative action/equal opportunity employer

Scott's LIQUORS
OPEN: Mon.- Sat. 9a.m.-11 p.m. Tel: 549-2692
Shop Scott's & Save Lotts! THANK YOU FOR YOUR PATRONAGE
Corona 12 pack bottles $8.99 +dep.
Keystone Light 30-packs $10.99 +dep.
Heineken 12 pack bottles $9.99 +dep.
Miller Genuine Draft Regular & Light 24 12oz Bar Bottles $9.99 +dep.
Natural Light & Ice 24 12oz cans $8.99 +dep.
Southern Comfort 750 ml $7.99
Gordons Vodka 1.75 Liter $11.99
YIKES! Jagermeister 750ml $14.49
Cider Jack 6 packs $4.99
Seagram's Gin 1.75 Liter $15.99
Open Sunday Now "Till '97" ! (12-5)
GO UMass
Check Out Our Other Great In Store Specials
6 University Drive at Newmarket Center, Amherst
Tele-Check for your personal check
Alumni Stadium
SCOTTS Victory Market

Thursday•Friday•Saturday
Weekly
Drink Specials
Captain Morgan & Coke 2.00 16oz.
Red Dog 16oz. Drafts 1.50
Grape Crush 2.00 16oz.
Appetizer & Nachos
1/2 Price
~ New Hours ~
3-5 pm • Wed-Sat • 7-11 pm
Beat The Cover
Get in before 10 PM and No Cover Charge
PLAY KENO
fun•food•spirits
THE PUB
15 East Pleasant Street
Dance Music by
Pure Energy
D.J. Bob Paulin
Smoking Section 9 - 1

DON'T GO INTO HIBERNATION ON YOUR WINTER BREAK
UMass Lowell
Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17
spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell. If you want to move ahead in your educational program, and earn college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits if you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break at UMass Lowell.
DAY CLASSES: Monday - Saturday, 9am - 12noon
EVENING CLASSES: Monday - Friday, 6 - 9pm Saturday 1 - 4pm
Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
• Liberal Arts • Sciences
• Mathematics • Computers
• Social Sciences • Music
• Management
Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit
For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.
Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to: University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.
Name
Address
City
State Zip
Phone ( )
Institution Currently Attending
UMass Lowell UNIVERSITY COLLEGE Division Of Continuing Education

Advertise in the Daily Collegian

Let people know you are out there!

■ All-Americans

continued from page 18

leaves a little to be questioned. Junior keeper Sarah Moon of Rhode Island was named over Dion, which is a curious twist of fate. Coach Jim Rudy had recruited Moon a few years back, but Dion was on top of his list, and ready to go.

All year long, the Minutewomen's keeper was consistently in the Top 10 of the nation in goalkeeping. In the end, though, it was a matter of sight over thought. Moon saw the ball a lot more than Dion for a team that hosted, but did not compete, in the A-10 postseason tournament.

Iverson's second team selection was recognition well deserved for the junior defender. This season, the native of Walnut Creek, Calif., established herself as the heir to the defensive throne for next season. But, she also proved herself to be a player that can come through in the clutch.

Iverson netted the gamewinner against Duquesne (1-0 win on Oct. 27), and contributed to both UMass goals in their 2- 1 win over Harvard in first round NCAA action, scoring one and setting up the shot that led to the winning own-goal in triple overtime.

The remainder of the first team side were all familiar foes for the Minutewomen, except for Jen Hughes of Colgate, who they did not compete against this season. The rest of the team includes Connecticut's Kerry Connors, Ginny Woodward and Sara Whalen; Harvard's Emily Stauffer and Naomi Miller; and Dartmouth's Jenna Kurowski.

JORMA KANGANEN / COLLEGIAN

Senior Erin Lynch battles second team All-Northeast selection Margaret Tietjen is last month's Sweet Sixteen match.

THE "U" GAME
UNDERGRADUATE LOTTERY TICKET APPLICATION
UMASS v. UCONN
DECEMBER 27, 1996
HARTFORD CIVIC CENTER
$20.00 PER TICKET
LIMIT TWO TICKETS PER UMASS UNDERGRADUATE
DEADLINE TO ENTER IS MONDAY, DECEMBER 9
NAME:
LOCAL ADDRESS:
CITY: ST. ZIP:
LOCAL PHONE:
CHECKS PAYABLE TO: UMASS ATHLETICS
CC: VISA, MC, DISCOVER
EXP.
LOTTERY WINNERS AND LOSERS WILL BE NOTIFIED BY MAIL AFTER DECEMBER 9. RETURN APPLICATIONS TO THE CURRY HICKS BOX OFFICE BY 5:00 PM, MON., DEC. 9. NON-WINNERS WILL HAVE APPLICATIONS WITH PRE-PAYMENT RETURNED. A VALID UMASS STUDENTS ID WILL BE NEEDED WITH TICKET TO ENTER THE HARTFORD CIVIC CENTER.

ON SUNDAY DECEMBER 8TH, DON'T MISS ...
HOCKEY DAY IN THE VALLEY
UMASS VS. PROVIDENCE
GAME AT 2:00PM; PRE-GAME FUN STARTS AT 12:30PM
• A Skills Challenge where you show-off your talent in the Mullins Center during the game!
• THE GROUND ROUND & KLEINS ALL-SPORT SHOOT-OUTS !
• Autographs from UMass players after the game!
• Face Painting for the kids!
• On-Ice Prize Scramble
• Ground Round Treasure Hunt
• Prize Throw-Out -- great UMass stuff!
• Great Giveaways -- like hockey sticks & t-shirts!

HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS?
If you want to earn some money during your holiday vacation, come to work for the Barnes & Noble College Division. To determine which of the more than 20 college bookstores in Massachusetts will be closest to where you will be spending your holidays, please call Barnes & Noble Regional Office at (508) 934-6428.
Full and part-time jobs, immediate hires, flexible scheduling, friendly work environment, and store discount up to 35%.
We are an equal opportunity employer.
BARNES & NOBLE COLLEGE DIVISION

Over ~500~ Microbrews
Spirit Haus
Specialty Beverage Center
FULL REDEMPTION CENTER
Attention Grad Students: Take 10% off Regularly Priced Fine Wines
MICROBREWS
Redhook Ales (E.S.B, Porter, I.P.A., Rye, Hefe Weizen) $4.99/six
Ipswich (Ale, Dark Ale) $5.99/six
Saranac (Black+Tan, Pale Ale, Amber, Golden, Wildberry) $4.99/six or $18.99/case
Sam Adams Lager 12-pack bottles $9.99/six
BEER SPECIALS
Rolling Rock case bottles $13.99
Bud 16 oz. bottles $2.79/4-pack
Bud Dry 12 pack cans $5.99
Corona 12-pack bottles $8.99
SPECIALS
Myer's Dark Rum $10.99/750ml
Jameson $15.99/750ml
Frangelico $15.99/750ml
HALF KEG SPECIAL
Petes Summer Brew $75.00
DISCOVER VISA MasterCard
Micro-Brewed Beer Kegs In Stock
Wine Coolers • Ice • Mixers Mini Kegs • Beer Glasses
Rt. 9 East College Street • 253-5384
one mile east of Amherst Center on Rt. 9E

what's in a Z
ZENITH
Microsoft, Encarta, Natural, Powerpoint, Windows and the Windows logo are trademarks of Microsoft Corporation. Z-Station is a registered trademark of Zenith Data Systems Corporation. Intel Inside and the Pentium Processor logos are registered trademarks of Intel Corporation. Specifications and pricing subject to change without notice. Price shown is the Z20S direct price. Reseller price may be higher or lower than the Z20S direct price. © 1996 Zenith Data Systems Corporation.
Everything.
■ Complete multimedia computer customized for students
■ Campus Z-Station® features:
• Powerful Intel® Pentium® processor
• Large capacity hard drive
• Plenty of memory to run today's hottest applications
• Plug & Play into your campus network with a high-speed modem
■ Desktop Systems include Microsoft® Natural® Keyboard and Microsoft Mouse
■ Loaded with Microsoft software for study and fun
• Microsoft Office for Windows 95 with Word, Microsoft Excel, PowerPoint, Microsoft Access, Scheduler+, Encarta 96 Encyclopedia, Microsoft Internet Assistants
• Microsoft Windows 95 with Microsoft Internet Explorer 2.0
• Microsoft Plus!
• Games for Windows 95
• Norton AntiVirus and more
■ Hewlett Packard Color DeskJet available
■ Ask about Microsoft Programmer's Dream Pack

	Pentium 100 MHz	Pentium 133 MHz	Pentium 166 MHz	Pentium 200 MHz
Hard drive	1.2GB	1.6GB	2.1GB	2.1GB
Monitor	15" (13.7" viewable)	15" (13.7" viewable)	15" (13.7" viewable)	15" (13.7" viewable)
Price with LAN card	$1999 $1799	$1999 $2099	$2299 $2399	$2499 $2999

Experience Campus Z-Station.
The University Store
413-545-2619
http://www.zds.com
education@zds.com

ON THE MAIN FLOOR
GONZO
LOUNGE and TUNNEL
2 Dance floors = Twice the FUN!
DJ HUSH
LOTUS TURNSTYLE LOKI DARE
413-582-9898

Putting it all together.
Collegian Graphics

■ football

continued from page 18

Copper Bowl — Utah (8–3) vs. Oregon (6–5)...Did you say Utes? Yeah, the two Utes. Utah in an upset, and Joe Pesci wins player of the game.
Utah 34, Oregon 6

Peach Bowl — Clemson (7–4) vs. LSU (8–2)..."Going to the Peach Bowl, gonna eat a lot of peaches." LSU had a great year, and they'll cap it off in the Peach Bowl by de-clawing the Tigers.
LSU 37, Clemson 14

Alamo Bowl — Iowa (8–3) vs. Texas (7–4)...This might be a surprise. Texas will be here after getting their heads handed to them by Nebraska, but Iowa isn't invincible. Hell, they're not even good.
Texas 23, Iowa 18

Holiday Bowl — Wyoming (9–2) vs. Colorado (9–2)...This could get ugly quick. Wyoming does not have the talent to keep up with Colorado, though WAC teams usually do well in this, one the most exciting bowls. If you like offense, watch this one.
Colorado 56, Wyoming 17

Sun Bowl — Michigan St. (6–5) vs. Stanford (6–5)...Neither one deserves a bowl bid, but Michigan St. is up and coming, and Stanford is down and sliding. Sedrick Irvin is the man for the Spartans.
Michigan St. 34, Stanford 10

Independence Bowl — Auburn (7–4) vs. Army (9–1)...You have to love Army's fight, and you have to be disappointed with the Tigers' year, but they still have way too many weapons. My prediction? Army loses, and then invades Alabama until they agree to change those god–awful uniforms.
Auburn 31, Army 7

Orange Bowl — Virginia Tech (10–1) vs. Florida (10–1)...I'm sure the Orange Bowl is thrilled to have the Hokies on New Year's Day. No! Florida might win this one by 50, and the Big East wonders quietly why they ever let Va. Tech in the conference, and why they keep beating their marquee schools.
Florida 62, Virginia Tech 21

Outback Steakhouse Bowl — Tennessee (9–2) vs. Michigan (8–3)...For some reason, I crave a steak right now. Oh well. Peyton Manning warms up for his future status as Jets steak by flame–broiling the Wolverines. And then he goes out, and eats a big steak!
Tennessee 31, Michigan 22

Gator Bowl — North Carolina (9–2) vs. Miami (8–3)...The Hurricanes finished off a shaky season by upsetting Syracuse, but the luck runs out when they see Tar Heel QB Chris Keldorf slice and dice them.
North Carolina 38, Miami 20

Cotton Bowl — Kansas St. (9–2) vs. Washington (9–2)...The game nobody will watch, and rightfully so. The Cotton Bowl used to be a great game, but has fallen victim the almighty Alliance. Hail Alliance!
Kansas St. 27, Washington 24

Citrus Bowl — Northwestern (9–2) vs. Alabama (9–2)...This will be a good one. Northwestern has Darnell Autry on its side, but the Tide will be fighting to send Gene Stallings off with a win. A defensive struggle, with 'Bama taking home the fruit basket, or whatever they give you in Orlando.
Alabama 13, Northwestern 10

Rose Bowl — Arizona St. (11–0) vs. Ohio St. (10–1)...By far the most intriguing match–up of the year. The Buckeyes are reeling, their dream year cut short, again, by Michigan. Arizona St. has a shot to win the National Championship, but they haven't played anybody as good as the Buckeyes. This game comes down to Ohio St.'s ability to mount an offensive attack, which they will.
Ohio St. 35, Arizona St. 31

Fiesta Bowl — BYU (12–1) vs. Penn St. (10–2)...Another great match–up. BYU ran roughshod over the WAC this year, and are dying to prove to the nation that they can do it against a power like Penn St. Joe Paterno's boys will put up a fight, but the Cougars will match 1984's national championship season with a 13–1 record. The difference? No rings in 1997.
BYU 28, Penn St. 27

Sugar Bowl — Florida St. (11–0) vs. Nebraska (9–1)...What, no Tennessee? Yes, it's kind of shocking that the pre–season critics were wrong, and Florida St. is in prime position to win the whole thing. Why will they? Because Scott Frost cannot beat that Seminole defense, and Warrick Dunn will run like butter, 'cause he's on a roll! (O.K., sorry about that one.)
Florida St. 23, Nebraska 14

And with that, Florida St. becomes th 1996 National Champions. So after all that struggle, debate and whining, a team that nobody seems to know or care about (myself included) takes the whole thing.

Huh?

Pimp Daddy of the Year...It's like the Heisman, only funkier, with a little bit of soul. A lot of people wrote off Danny Wuerffel after the FSU loss, but the fact remains that Wuerffel was the best player on the best team in the nation this year, and in a year when nobody stood out, that's good enough for me.

Congratulations Danny, you're the pimp of the year. I can't afford to fly you in for the induction ceremony, so call me. I know some cheap Gainseville to Amherst bus rates. I could even get you a window seat, buddy! I know, I know, I'm so nice, but I've been nice my whole life. It's just me, I guess.

Booty Schwag of the Year Award...Here it is, the moment you've been waiting for since this all started in August. There were many willing candidates, and it was hard to pick just one. But I did, and I think you'll agree that they were schwag–erriffic.

They went 5–7, suspended 13 players for gambling and fired their coach. Who are they?

Boston College! Yes, crown the Eagles and anoint them holy, because our snotty brothers to the east take the big prize. Never in my life have I seen such a pitiful display. They represented their school about as well as O.J. Simpson has USC, and it's not like they didn't have any talent. Was it coaching? Yes. Was it the players? Yes. Was it the gambling? Yes. I think you can safely say that BC not only lived the schwag, they redefined the genre. Props to the Diggity–Dizzon and Heffe, co–conspirators in the schwag.

I promised myself I wouldn't cry...That's it. After a semester of laughs, schwag, and occasionally a little football, it's over. We had some fun, didn't we? But college football, like the changing seasons, has left us, and so I must leave you. I'm not really sad, because now I can sleep in on Wednesdays, so to hell with y'all anyway!

Just kidding. I'm tearing up, because I truly do love you guys. Later.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist.

Advertise in the Daily Collegian Classifieds

They Work!

Auto Glass Center — Same Day Service • Billed Directly To Insurance Company • Windshields Replaced — North Amherst Motors — A Collision Repair Center — 78 Sunderland Rd, North Amherst, MA — 549-2880 — (One Mile from UMass bus route)

EXERCISE!? ARE YOU NUTS? PLAY HARD! HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB AMHERST 256-6446

JEWISH LIVING COMMUNITY — Hillel House/388 N. Pleasant St./Amherst, MA — Rooms Available — For Information call Guy at 549-7471.

Don't Let The Marshall Catch You Going Anywhere Else! — Marshall STEINBECK — COLLISION REPAIR & AUTO BODY — 53 S. Prospect St. Amherst Center — • Imports and other unibody vehicles are our speciality. • Users of Sikkens paint products • Accepted by all insurance companies for collision repair or glass repair. — 256-8157 — 256-1385 — Shop Reg # RS1212

Pearl Street Nightclub — Live Music & Dance Club — EVERY MONDAY — INTERNATIONAL NIGHT — FEATURING WORLD BEAT, SOCA, CALYPSO, ASIAN, INDIAN & LATIN MUSIC — Sponsored by Amherst Cafe — EVERY WEDNESDAY SPONSORED BY ROZ'S PLACE WED. DEC. 4TH... On-E OF DEE-LITE — IT'S A DREAM ALL NIGHT RAVE NIGHTS — WED. DEC. 11TH... SPAWN, LAZER LIGHT SHOW WED. DEC. 18TH... GERRY KING OF SKY LAB — EVERY THURSDAY — THE AREA'S BIGGEST — MGM GRAND Dance Party — Hosted by Adam Wright of Today's 99.3 — EVERY FRIDAY 9-2am FREE BEFORE 10:00 — RETRO NIGHT — MUSIC FROM THE 70's, 80's & 90's — EVERY SATURDAY — ALL NEW!!! Welcome to... CLUB HOUSE — HOSTED BY DEAN JONES — GIVEAWAYS, FREE DINNER PASSES, THE HOTTEST & LATEST CLUB MUSIC WIN TWO MONTH-PASS TO HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB — THIS WEEK LIVE — Wed. Dec. 4 @ 8:00 pm — THE BATTLEFIELD BAND — Fri. Dec. 6 @ 7:30 pm — MURPHY'S LAW — FASTBREAK/ACCIDENTAL BIRTH/CAN'T SAY — Sat. Dec. 7 @ 8:30 pm — MAX CREEK — Sun. Dec. 8 @ 7:00 pm — DOC HOPPER/NIGEL 6 — Thurs. Dec. 12 @ 7:00 pm — ORANGE 9MM — Fri. Dec. 13 @ 7:00 pm — HATEBREED — GRIMLOCK/FURY OF V/ONSLAUGHT — Fri. Dec. 14 @ 9:00 pm — SLIP KNOT — COMING TO PEARL STREET — Fri. Dec. 20 ALL AGES M.O.D. — Sat. Dec. 21 21+ RAY MASON X-Mas Show — Tues. Dec. 31 21+ POPPA CHUBBY — Thurs. Jan 2 ALL AGES DISPAIR — Sat. Jan. 11 21+ JOHN CAFERTY & THE BEAVER BROWN BAND — Tues. Jan. 21 18+ JESUS LIZARD — 10 PEARL STREET, NORTHAMPTON — http://www.virtual-valley.com/pearl.street — 413-584-7771

The Smashing Pumpkins — Infinite Sadness Tour '96 — On Sale Saturday 10am!! — MULLINS CENTER — University of Massachusetts Amherst — JANUARY 28 7:30 PM — TICKETS ON SALE SAT • 10AM AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE, TICKETMASTER OUTLETS: FITENES • VIDEO HOME STUDIO • MAIN MUSIC SHOP • BLISS VIDEO • VIDEO PARADISE. CALL-FOR-TIX: (413) 733-2500. FOR MORE INFO CALL (413) 545-0505. EVENT DATE & TIME SUBJECT TO CHANGE. — PRODUCED BY METROPOLITAN ENTERTAINMENT GROUP

■ Georgetown

continued from page 18

the other end of the court. A minute and a half later, Inus Norville came away with a block and Padilla made the transition basket, to give UMass its first lead at 38–36.

A pair of Page free throws with 9:49 remaining tied the game again, and the two teams fought it nip–and–tuck from there.

Carmelo Travieso hit a transition score, but Georgetown big man Jahidi White answered with a hook shot. Page hit one from the charity stripe, putting the Hoyas up by one, but UMass came back with a Charlton Clarke (four points) basket.

After trading tallies for the next five minutes, Page, who did not score in the NCAA Tournament game against UMass, put the Hoyas up for good 50–49 with yet another free throw.

Georgetown pulled away from that point, with the majority of the points coming off trips to the line. UMass put three additional points on the board, also with free throws, before the final buzzer sounded.

Basit finished with nine points, while Ketner had 13. Each also had 13 rebounds. Padilla connected for 15 points and dished out five assists. Travieso had nine points.

■ Minutemen

continued from page 18

Minutemen will need to see more in the scoring department from their rookie frontcourt.

Going the other way, Ketner provided the bursts of energy UMass needed in the second half picking up the tempo with some crucial blocks leading the Minutemen on a 12–0 run to bring them back into the game. Freshman Ajmal Basit (9 pts) along with senior Carmelo Travieso each turned Ketner blocks into points. It was Basit who tied the game at 36 after the Minutemen were down by as much as 14.

Their inexperience got the better of them in the final minutes as they missed second chance baskets and failed to take smart shots.

UMass makes its home debut in the William D. Mullins Center on Saturday when it faces Wyoming at 7 p.m.

MINUTEMEN NOTES — Got your datebooks handy, hoop fans? While the Minutemen face a rough schedule this year, things won't be getting any easier for the next two seasons.

Yesterday, the UMass athletic department announced the Minutemen has agreed to a home–and–home series with the University of Kansas beginning next season. UMass will face the Jayhawks on Dec. 10 at 9:30 p.m. in the Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence, Kan. The second game will be played in the Mullins Center in the 1998–99 season. A date has not been set for the contest.

"This is a tremendous opportunity for our program and for our fans to have a team as rich in basketball history as Kansas to come to the Mullins Center," UMass athletic director Bob Marcum said. Marcum has seen Jayhawks hoops first hand when he was Athletic Director at Kansas from 1978–1982.

"We've always played a tough schedule here at UMass and to be the best, you have to play the best," Flint said. "Our program at UMass has been built on playing the top competition when ever we can, wherever we can. Just having Kansas on our schedule for the next two seasons is a testament to what we have built here at UMass.

The two schools have met just twice before, with Kansas holding a 2–0 lead in competition. The Jayhawks captured their first win over the Minutemen on Nov. 26, 1993 when they beat UMass 86–75 in the finals of the Preseason NIT at Madison Square Garden in New York. Kansas' second win came on Dec. 3 the next year when they offed the Minutemen 81–75 in the John Wooden Classic at The Pond in Anaheim, Calif.

■ basketball

continued from page 18

The center stated he "didn't find any reason" to declare his eligibility — apparently million dollar contracts aren't reason enough — and he's now started his final year in a Ute uniform.

Van Horn averaged 21.4 ppg and 8.8 rpg for last year's 27–7 squad, leading the Utes to a top–five national ranking. Already this year, Van Horn has helped Utah to a No. 3 rank (and one first–place vote), and looks to be a dominating force on WAC courts.

So give credit to those willing to stick it out, and wanting to get their degrees. It takes a lot to play top–level college ball. It takes even more to do it for four whole years.

• There have been some recent rumblings about the supposed end of a rather impressive streak in the realm of college hoop.

Before Massachusetts made its auspicious season debut in the Maui Invitational, there was the possibility that the Minutemen would have the chance to knock off the No. 1 team in the nation, thereby extending their streak of such a feat to four years.

Unfortunately for UMass fans, a few kinks were thrown into the mix: the Minutemen failed to reach the final of the early–season tournament; and Kansas, the team many thought would be the preseason No. 1, was actually ranked No. 2.

So fellow Atlantic 10 member Xavier took care of business, knocking off top–ranked Cincinnati last week, in a down–to–the–wire kind of game that any sports fan would love.

Add to it that the win was over a morally compromising Cincinnati program, which Sports Illustrated did a great cover story on last week, and it was all the sweeter.

• Miles Simon has been suspended from the Arizona hoop program for the remainder of the semester for academic reasons.

Simon had to compile at least a 1.8 cumulative GPA and complete at least 25 percent of his major requirements before his junior year.

Guess what? He didn't.

• From the Why–in–the–world–would–you–want–to–know– that Department: Did you know that there is a method to preparing the Fresno State coach Jerry Tarkanian's towels?

Yup. And Tony Costa, an equipment manager for the Bulldogs, is the man for the job.

The process: lay out the towel; fold it lengthwise; fold it lengthwise again; double the towel over, making sure to keep the edges inside; place the towel in water just long enough to keep it must.

Tarkanian sucks on the towels during a game, instead of drinking water when the games get tense.

Don't believe me? Fresno State visits the Mullins Center to face UMass on Tuesday, so you can see for yourself.

Casey Kane is a Collegian columnist.

Go Ahead, Card Me.

Talk about your great deal...the Okemo College VIP Card. For just $25, your first lift ticket (Mon.–Fri.) is FREE, then ski or ride for 1/2 price on weekdays and get $10 off on weekends and holidays for the rest of the season. Snickers, Mountain Dew and HMV Record Stores are throwing in special deals, too! So c'mon up to Okemo - it never felt so good to get carded.

OKEMO — WE'VE GOT YOU COVERED

Okemo Info/Lines: (802) 228-4041 • 24-Hour Snow Line: (802) 228-5222 • http://www.okemo.com

News: College Season Pass just $449 - Ski or Ride everyday

Holiday periods are 12/25/96 & 1/1/97, 2/15/97, 2/17/97. For the season pass, present your college I.D. and proof of full-time student status at the Okemo Mtn. Administration Office.

THE FINEST SINCE 1976

Handmade diamond engagement rings & featuring ideal cut Lazare Diamonds®

Setting the standard for ...BRILLIANCE™

Gifts from glass to gold.

silverscape designs — GOLDSMITH'S GEM GALLERY — One King St., Northampton 584-3324 — 264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA — BE A BARTENDER — 747-9888 — SPRINGFIELD

LONDON $149

FRANKFURT	$215
CANCUN	$129
LOS ANGELES	$149
ROME	$249
LISBON	$239
CHICAGO	$100
BANGKOK	$376
TOKYO	$346

FARES ARE EACH WAY FROM BOSTON BASED ON A ROUND TRIP PURCHASE. FARES DO NOT INCLUDE TAXES OR FEES. SOME RESTRICTIONS APPLY. SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE. SOME DESTINATIONS MAY BE CHARGED ONE WAY DUE TO U.S. / FOREIGN GOVERNMENT RESTRICTIONS.

CALL FOR A FREE STUDENT TRAVELS MAGAZINE!

Council Travel — 44 MAIN STREET AMHERST, MA 01002 — (413) 256-1261 — http://www.ciee.org/travel.htm — EURAILPASSES ISSUED ON-THE-SPOT!

R&P Liquors — • Weekly Specials on Regular Beers • Fine Wines — • Largest Selection of Micro-Ales in S.Amherst • Fridge Rentals — 509 West St. • South Amherst — Minutes from Mill Valley, The Brooks, & The Boulders — 253-9743

MICHAEL'S BILLIARDS — $5/Hr Everyday Unlimited Players! — Yankee Best! 1996 — 8 — • 60" Big Screen T.V. • 8- 9 ft. Tables • Live Entertainment Every Fri. & Sat. • All Sporting Events • Every Thursday Night $5 Cash 8-Ball Tournament 7:30 pm — 10A Belchertown Road Amherst, MA 01002 — 256-8284

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN — New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967

Catch it TODAY!

The Collegian's in-depth season preview of UMass Mens Basketball available at Collegian Newsstands everywhere.

A SPECIAL PUBLICATION OF THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN — '96 — UMass basketball

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Women's Long Term Therapy Group Weekly 1 1/2 hr meetings Tuesday night in Amherst For info, call (413)774-5418

APARTMENT FOR SALE

Puffton Village Large 1 bedroom, dishwasher/AC, $515 Heat included Available Jan 1 Call Helene or Doug 549-0766

1 BORM Puffton Apt. New carpet, paint, appliances Available January 1st, $515/month Call Doug 549-7463

2 bedroom, available now - Spring '97. Bus route. $720 (negotiable) Heat included 545-5725 (day) 546-2218 (night)

AUTO FOR SALE

Escort '86 runs good, new tires, battery etc $800 o/b.o 546-2288 lv msg

1984 Honda Accord 3-door hatchback Very Reliable. Looks Good. Asking $795.00 or best offer Call Jon 546-8115

'87 Grand Am 4dr 52K miles cruise, A/C, no rust $2995 Day 545-2040 Night 549-6675

AUTO FOR SALE

Blue Volsvagen Golf Excellent condition, born in 1990. $3000 negotiable. Call Guy 253-7243

1986 Oldsmobile Delta 88- Great car, low price- $500 Call Chris 549-0564

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS OVER BREAK - Work with Sierra Club to protect wilderness $275-$375/wk Fun atmosphere Call Terri at 256-6434

Abi Telephone Research Center seeks candidates for interesting part-time telephone assignments to collect data on a variety of research topics. Absolutely no selling involved. Computer/typing skills required. Flexible hours. Monday-Friday 5pm-11pm, Saturday 11am-5pm, and Sunday 12pm-5pm and 5pm-10pm. Must work a minimum of 20 hours per week. Start at $5.25/hour with paid training and earn up to $7.00/hour. Conveniently located in the new Venture Center with free rides on nearby bus lines. Interested candidates, please call (413)587-1607. An equal opportunity employer

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

EMPLOYMENT

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $15-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info: call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals Waterfront houses. Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

Apple IIGS W/Printer - extra disk drive Like new $50 549-4349

20" Color TV for sale Brand new $150 Paul 665-2019

Packard Bell P60 8MB RAM, 545 MB HD, monitor, multimadia, modem, software, HP Lazer Jet 4 $1800.00 546-7464

Complete 5 CD Stereo System! 5 band graphic aqualizer, duel tape deck and powerful receiver $250 or B/O Call Craig 546-6811

FOUND

Found Watch in Moher Auditorium Please call to identify 5-9170

FOUND

Found Men's Movado Watch on 12/2 on campus. Please call 546-2501

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs Guaranteed. $35 (800)776-9503 Doctor Approved

JAZZ BANDS

Jazz Band Needed Experienced or not. Come jam at our party. Will pay Dec. 6th. Call 253-8520

PERSONALS

Congratulations to the new sisters of Delta Zeta. Aimee, Meena, Alysa, Alyssa, Beri, Beth, Nicole, Elana

MARK SNOW-MAN Happy Holidays from your estranged Seven O's friends!

ROOM FOR RENT

Spring Semester Non-smoking female(s) to rent large room near campus & town. Call 549-3992

Looking for female to share 2 bdr apt. in Sunderland on bus route Dates- Jan./Feb. 1/ Aug. 31. Call 665-9056

ROOM FOR RENT

Looking for female roommates to share 4 bedroom apt Spring '97 on bus route. Must see!! Cheap!! Call ASAP. Ask for Laura 253-9823

Three females seeking one non smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan 1-May 31. Rent negotiable. Call Jess at 253-1797

ROOMATE WANTED

One Bedroom Available in Puffton two bedroom apartment Female wanted. On Bus Route 549-9293

One male to share rent at Townhouse Apts. for spring semester. Call 549-5993

Three friendly females looking for roommate to share Mill Valley Apt $150 including heat and hot water Call Sarah at 256-8780

Female Wanted to share bedroom in Puffton Village beginning Jan 1 or ASAP Call 549-4748

Two female N/S wanted to share double from 1/97 to 5/97, house in Amherst near bus $185/mo, plus heat Kim 549-7076

Room Available 5 bedroom house in Sunderland on bus route. Call for details 665-8279

SERVICES

Looking for that special holiday gift? Check out Mocha Jewelry at http://www@mochajewelry.com Fina and fancy jewelry at wholesale prices!

Computer Consultent Available WEB Authoring, Software & Hardware Installs, Repairs Call 6-0853

GORILLAGRAMS Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, etc. Send the crazy gorilla. We'll go anywhere, anytime!! Student rates available! Call 256-0287

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info.

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

1 bedroom apartment on bus line Available 1/97-9/97 $550/mo. or best offer. Call 665-3660

TO SUBLET

Teks over our lease 2/97 Large 2 bedroom apt. 5 min. from campus $600 Call 549-8511

TRAVEL

Spring Break America s Premier Student Travel Co! Party in Cancun & Nassau from $299!!! Find out how to go for free & earn Extra Cash!!! Call 1-800-798-1509

SPRING BREAK TRIPS Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida. Best Prices. Best Parties. GROUP DISCOUNTS. Space is limited. For free brochure CALL TODAY 1-800-95-9-4SUN

Winter Break Killington with the UMass Ski Club. Five nights lodging, 5 days skiing. During Collegiate Ski Fest $260. Call 545-3437

New Year's in Quebec City 3-5 nights in Quebec Hilton Optional Skiing at Mont Ste Anne Starts at $89. Call 545-3437 or 1-800-232-2415

Scuba Spring Break Dive Key Largo, Ft. Lam 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project Deep @ 800-282-0977

TRAVEL

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans Call Corinne 587-3011 413-781-6150

WANTED TO RENT

2 bedroom apt. for Jan 1 within 10 min. to UMass. Call Amy 546-4424

WANTED

Desperate for Bibliographic Material Must have vigorous book list, textbook, workbooks, and problems for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education) Will pay above $150. My phone may have been defective in previous weeks. Therefore, please notify by mail. Mey Dawkson, 67 Amity Place, Amherst, MA. 01002-2255. Don't hesitate, I am correct. Thank you.

Wanted: Tutor for AUTO CAD Release13 Will pay. Call Rob at 546-0272

STUDENTS Moonlighting as dancers/strippers in local clubs. If interested in sharing your story for my independent study photoessay on "creative student employment", call Caroline at 546-5269 for more info. Identity confidential upon request

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

K	A	R	E	N		S	E	M	I		D	E	F	T
A	L	I	K	E		H	E	A	R		E	X	A	M
T	I	B	E	T		I	N	C	A		T	I	R	E
Y	E	S		T	R	E	Y		N	E	A	T	E	N
			A	L	A	S		G	I	G	I
H	E	B	R	E	W		D	R	A	G	N	E	T	S
E	L	A	N	D		S	E	A	N	S		T	A	I
W	A	N	E		R	E	A	P	S		L	U	L	L
E	T	A		B	E	L	L	E		R	O	D	E	O
R	E	L	I	E	V	E	S		R	E	C	E	S	S
			B	E	E	S		M	U	C	H
I	N	T	E	R	N		D	I	N	T		Y	I	P
D	E	A	R		G	E	A	R		O	Z	O	N	E
L	I	L	I		E	Y	R	E		R	O	U	G	E
E	L	L	A		D	E	N	S		S	O	R	E	R

Collegian Classifieds "they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Blot
5. Sing like Bing
10. Towel pronoun
14. First name in gossip
15. Beaver's home
16. Water (Spanish)
17. Spring, in Israel
18. Lagoon surrounder
19. Measure for Dr. Frankenstein
20. Turns aside
22. Lets out of jail
24. They disappear on standees
26. Cannon of Deathtrap
27. Overshadowed
31. Harsh and metallic
35. Ready
36. Reamer
38. What person?
39. ___ Kong
40. Small, as eyes
41. Toolbox item
42. Resentment
43. River boat
44. Doric sound
45. Population count
47. Canned fish
50. Negative profit
52. Canou and Deighton
53. Wandering off
57. Stocked a trap
61. Geezer
62. Gallows knot
64. Irish newspaper
65. Mitch Miller's instrument
66. He played Gentleman Jim
67. Hog food
68. Saturates
69. Salad days
70. Tryout

DOWN

1. Gilbert of tennis
2. "Once In ___ With Amy"
3. Squadron
4. Coming undone, as cloth
5. Embraces
6. Rubbish!
7. Incense
8. Was a girl-watcher
9. Early woman reporter (2 wds.)
10. Largest city in the West Indies
11. Selves, in psychoanalysis
12. Draw a line
13. Entrance exams: abbr.
21. Strike sharply
23. Bowler Anthony
25. Passover feast
27. System of morals
28. Routine task
29. Ab material
30. Haute
32. Lover
33. Rise and ___
34. Meringue maker's discards
37. Model
40. Nursery furnishing
41. Most clamorous
43. Floating marker
46. Lists of candidates
48. Mutiny members
49. Watson's macromolecule: abbr.
51. Silent-night ruiner
53. River boat
54. Hamlet's phrase (2 wds.)
55. "___ for the home team"
56. Quayle's successor
58. Mah-jongg piece
59. God born of Chaos
60. Kind of store: abbr.
63. John, Jr. to Jackie

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Focus on the small things you can do that will make big improvements over the long run. Home remodeling, small gestures to loved ones, quitting smoking or starting a sensible program of diet or exercise could all be steps in the right direction.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
Stashing away a hefty nest egg could be the first step toward accomplishing something wonderful. A new romantic horizon unfolds, revealing possibilities you may not have imagined.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
Making commitments comes easily this week, and pays off in the form of increased trust and intimacy. Extra understanding is needed from a friend who's hurt. The healing process may take longer than anticipated.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
A distant person's message confirms a decision you made recently. A companion has a happy surprise—a real celebration may be in order. The weekend is good for social gatherings—you really enjoy the role of host.

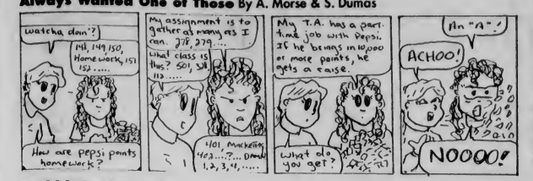
LEO
July 23–August 23
Although a sweetie demands an explanation for something innocuous, don't condescend to them. That would only feed their insecurity. Instead, calmly repeat the story, and address the underlying fears that are the real culprits.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
If you're planning an unusual business venture, use the early mornings this week to maximize your productivity. Networking helps you stabilize your finances, and may help you launch something really spectacular.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23
An "iffy" romance is well on the way to a resolution. Pushing for a certain outcome, one way or the other, could prove chancy, so exercise restraint and patience. Donate some of your time to a worthy charity for an energy boost.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
A good week to make a major purchase you've been thinking of for awhile. Spending time with a group could be the key to putting a new spark in your social life. You might even develop a new relationship.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21
A sibling may have some private news to discuss—this would be a great time to reach out and call them. Pay close attention before offering your advice—they may just want a willing ear.



CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20
A person with a thrifty streak has a lot to show you this week. Pay close attention and then apply what you learn. Planning ahead will pay off in the near future.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18
A riotous amusement or gathering means a fitting climax to a generally exciting and happy week. Don't try to host it, however—you'll enjoy it much more if you don't have to clean up afterwards.

PISCES
February 19–March 20
Shopping in an unusual place yields exciting bargains for your home. Avoid forcing your way through a barrier—there could be more to the situation than meets your eye. This is a time for waiting, not action.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom

My mom and I have a next door neighbor who does not like the cold weather.

He says he's going to tie a snow shovel to the roof of his car and head due south on the highway.

When someone asks him, "What's that thing on your car?" that's where he'll settle down.

He says that there are actually five seasons.....

spring, summer, fall, winter, and HELL..... which is near the end of February.

University³ By Frank Cho

Like Sands Through The Hourglass By Mucous Queen

Alien Crackbunnies By Darb

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

"Mrs. Stalnaker?! Neil Haggerty, Unity National Health Insurance. Put down the cheesecake now, or we'll double your premium!"

Quote of the Day

"WE ARE MICROSOFT. RESISTANCE IS FUTILE. YOU WILL BE ASSIMILATED."

–seen on bumper sticker

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN Top 10 By Brian Marchionni

Top 10 Things to do before the end of the semester

10) Drop by the University Store and get harassed for legally purchasing Gas-X.
9) Shower me with expensive gifts.
8) Open up some of those books you bought a few months ago.
7) Rinse, lather, repeat.
6) Hug a Whitmore employee.
5) Mentally prepare yourself for the defining event of our generation: "Beavis and Butthead Do America."
4) Jazz-ercise, jazz-ercise, jazz-ercise.
3) Rent one of them "Hey Vern" movies.
2) Protest the library as a phallic symbol.
1) Forgive me for this lame-ass list.

Today's Staff

Jacob W. Michaels
Night Editor

Lisa Chiu
Copy Editor

Jennifer Jutras
Photo Technician

Josh Sylvester
Production Supervisor

Joylyn Lombard
Jack Myers
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH	DINNER
Hamburger on a Roll Cheese Pizza Vegan Falafel Sandwich	Chicken Margherita, Shrimp, Pasta w/ Tom. Basil Broth Grilled Ham & Cheese

Hampshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Hamburger on a Roll Grilled Chicken Sandwich BBQ Beef on a Bun	Chicken Margherita Shrimp Alfresco Pasta Shells/ Tom. Basil Broth

Worcester

LUNCH	DINNER
Hot Turkey Sandwich Elbow Macaroni/Tomato Meat Sauce Lentil Chili	Chicken Margherita Shrimp Alfresco Pasta Shells w/ Tomato Basil Broth

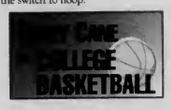
Berkshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Hot Turkey Sandwich Pizza Macaroni/ Meat Sauce Lentil Chili	Chicken Margherita Shrimp Alfresco Pasta Shells w/ Tomato Basil Sauce

Sports

Student Ticket Pick-Up for men's basketball vs. Drexel and Hockey vs. Princeton is TODAY at the Curry Hicks Cage starting at 7 a.m. Lines cannot form before 6:30 a.m. If they do, a lottery system will be used to distribute tickets.

Toasting the top returning seniors; No. 1 falls again



Connecticut lost.

That said, now that the regular season has begun, it is a fitting time to give a small tribute to the few, the proud — the NBA-caliber seniors who decided to come back to school.

Tim Duncan, Jacque Vaughn, and Keith Van Horn each passed at what would have been certain NBA careers for one more go at the collegiate ranks.

Wake Forest's Duncan has passed on two opportunities to jump to the pros. Scouts say Duncan would have been taken No. 1 over Joe Smith in the 1995 draft. Others say Philadelphia would have made up for its 1993 pick of Shawn Bradley by calling on Duncan.

But this year's most dominating center could have been a star in another sport, if he had so chosen. The Virgin Islands native was an Olympic-caliber swimmer growing up, before making the switch to hoop.

This year will be Duncan's chance to redeem himself for what many called a sub-par finish last year (Wake lost to Kentucky in the regional finals). He averaged 19.1 points per game, 12.3 rebounds per game and 3.7 blocks per game for the 29-5 Demon Deacons, and — here's the scary thing — he's only getting better.

Kansas' Vaughn's might be regretting his decision at the present time — as he watches his team while in street clothes, after tearing ligaments in his right wrist during a Sept. 11 pick-up game — but his decision to stick out his career in Lawrence could result in a championship ring.

The point guard, who posted averages of 10.9 ppg, 3.1 rpg and 6.5 assists per game, was touted as a definite first- rounder and a likely lottery pick in last summer's draft. NBA scouts said that Vaughn would have been the third PG taken after Allen Iverson and Stephon Marbury.

But Vaughn decided to stay and cited Robert Frost's "The Road Less Travelled," without sounding foolish, when he announced his decision. And in about a month, he will begin his final trip down the Road to the Final Four.

Utah's Van Horn probably had more reason than anybody to go hardship — the names Amy and Sabrina.

Sabrina is Van Horn's one-year-old daughter and Amy is the woman he took vows with last August.

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 15

Hoyas take revenge on UMass

Second half comeback falls short for UM

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

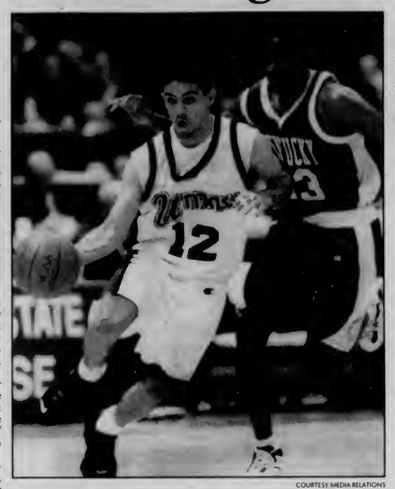
The differences, the most distinct of which was the outcome, were vast last night when the Massachusetts and Georgetown men's basketball teams faced off.

The starting line-ups were different, the star players were new, even Georgetown's uniforms were the new 1996-97 editions. But the most apparent difference from the last time UMass and Georgetown squared off (NCAA Elite Eight, March 23) was the final score.

Massachusetts	53
Georgetown	58

Riding a strong game from Victor Page, the Hoyas defeated the Minutemen — who played without forward, and leading scorer, Tyrone Weeks — 58-53 in the DirecTV Great Eight at the United Center in Chicago.

Massachusetts couldn't buy a basket in the opening half of the game, hovering in single digits until over halfway through the first frame. An Edgar Padilla three pointer cut the Hoyas' margin to 18-11.



Georgetown, meanwhile, broke out to an early lead on the strength of Boubacar Aw's inside play. Aw, who would finish with 14 points, had four buckets in the first seven minutes of play.

A Georgetown basket with just over 1:30 left produced the Hoyas' largest lead of the half at 27-15, but the Minutemen were able to connect on several free throws to cut the intermission damage to 29-20.

Whatever was said in the UMass locker room at halftime apparently worked, at least for a while in the second half. After allowing the Hoyas to dump in five points after the break, the Minutemen went on a tear, evening the score at 36 courtesy of a 12-0 run (Georgetown did not score in just under seven minutes).

With 12:13 remaining in the game, Ketner came up with a block and Ajmal Basit converted a dunk at

Turn to GEORGETOWN, page 15

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Edgar Padilla led UMass in scoring with 15 points as the Minutemen fell 58-53 to Georgetown in the DirecTV Great Eight.

GEORGETOWN (5-0)
Ya-ya Dia 4-6 0-2 8, Aw 6-11 2-2 14, White 6-12 2-2 14, Scheffey 0-6 2-2 2, Page 5-18 10-16 20, Touomou 0-1 0-0 0, Jones 0-0 0-0 0, Long 0-1 0-0 0, Watkins 0-0 0-0 0, Jackson 0-0 0-0 0. Totals 21-55 16-24 58.
MASSACHUSETTS (1-3)
Smith 0-5 1-2 1, Basit 2-9 5-6 9, Norville 0-1 0-0 0, Padilla 5-19 4-4 15, Travieso 4-10 0-0 9, Clarke 2-11 0-0 4, Ketner 4-10 5-8 13, Babul 0-1 0-0 0, Kirkland 1-2 0-0 2. Totals 18-68 15-20 53.
Halftime — Georgetown 29, Massachusetts 20.
3-pointers — Georgetown 0-2 (Scheffey 0-1, Page 0-1), Massachusetts 2-12 (Travieso 1-5, Padilla 1-6, Clarke 0-1).
Rebounds — Georgetown 39 (Aw 9), Massachusetts 58 (Basit 13, Ketner 13).
Assists — Georgetown 12 (Scheffey 3), Massachusetts 12 (Padilla 5).
Total fouls — Georgetown 17, Massachusetts 20. Fouled Out — Clarke.
Attendance — Not available.

HIGHLIGHTS — The Minutemen struggled early on, shooting just 19 percent from the field in the first half while only netting four points in the paint. In the second half, sophomore Lari Ketner got the ball rolling with a pair of big blocks which UMass turned into points on a 12-0 run. Massachusetts came back from a 14 point deficit to tie the game at 36 on an Ajmal Basit jam.

Both teams come in with different looks

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

What a difference nine months makes.

The last time Massachusetts (1-3) met Georgetown (5-0) under the premise of a Great Eight, the Minutemen were dancing to a different tune. While everyone knew that last night's game against Georgetown would be big, when the last whistle blew, UMass fans were forced to realize just how young their squad is.

Last year when the Minutemen faced the Hoyas, they boasted a 35-1 record, a consensus National Player of the Year in the middle backed up by a more than solid frontcourt and the nation's best backcourt. This culminated in a 86-62 romping over Georgetown and Allen Iverson, the eventual No. 1 pick in the NBA draft.

The tide turned last night when UMass fell 58-55 in the DirecTV Great Eight at the United Center in Chicago. Junior Victor Page, who was held scoreless last year against the Minutemen, led the way for the Hoyas with 20 points while the Minutemen continue to struggle.

UMass started the game a step behind as veteran big-man Tyrone Weeks, who leads the Minutemen in scoring, averaging 18 points and 10 rebounds, was sidelined with an ankle injury. With Weeks out, sophomore center Lari Ketner (13 pts) was forced to deal with containing the mountainous 6-foot-9, 290 lb. Ishidi White. Take out the veteran experience inside, and the Hoyas put the Minutemen's youth right in their face offensively.

At the end of the first half, UMass was down 29-20 shooting a pathetic 19 percent from the field while scoring just four points in the paint. Once again, the Minutemen proved that if they are going to live by their guards, they are going to die by them as well.

With senior guard Edgar Padilla shooting just 20 percent from the field this season, as opposed to 41 percent last year, points in the paint are even more crucial. However, with Weeks on the bench, the

Turn to MINUTEMEN, page 15

Results are in: bowl predictions, other awards, final farewells

So Ohio St. lost.

So Florida lost.

So Arizona St. could conceivably win a national championship.

Have I been wrong all along?

Take pity on me, sweethearts, for I know not what I do. The Buckeyes continue to suffer from the curse of the Maize and Blue, and the Gators just couldn't get it done. What I do know is that the regular season is over, and bowl season will soon be upon us. So strap in, because while the kilt may be on layaway, the Jaegermeister's gone and the flippers don't fit, there's still the "Luke Meredith on College Football" bowl preview. It's like Christmas early, isn't it?

Las Vegas Bowl — Nevada (8-3) v. Ball St. (8-3)...I don't know a thing about either one of these teams, but that hasn't stopped me before. Nevada romps in this one, because they have a cooler nickname.
Nevada 48, Ball St. 27

Aloha Bowl– — Cal (6-5) vs. Texas Tech (7-4)...Spend another uncomfortable Christmas dinner at the relatives watching Red Raider Byron Hanspard rip the Cal defense apart. Tech in a blowout, and hey, cheer up. At least now, you're old enough to drink on the holidays.
Texas Tech 42, Cal 7

Liberty Bowl — Houston (7-4) vs. West Virginia (8-3)...Oh my god, somebody actually scheduled this game. But what can you expect from the Liberty Bowl? Sad thing is, I'll probably watch this game.
West Virginia 28, Houston 16

Carquest Bowl — Syracuse (8-3) vs. Virginia (7-3)...An intriguing match-up. 'Cuse lost out on the Orange Bowl by choking to Miami, and Virginia is sneaky good. Actually, make that Tiki good, as in Tiki Barber. 'Cavs redeem a sketchy season in an upset.
Virginia 21, Syracuse 20

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 14

Cahill doing more than just killing time for UM hockey

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

A month and a half ago, when preseason prognostications of the Massachusetts hockey team began to pop up in the local newspapers, coach Joe Mallen told reporters that although his top line of Tom Perry, Warren Norris and Rob Bonneau would be strong, his team would need some others to step up and score some goals.

Gerry Cahill has officially answered the proverbial call.

After scoring 11 goals over the past three years, the senior has stepped to the forefront this year, skating with Bonneau on the top penalty-kill unit, and, most importantly, tallying seven goals.

Four of those goals have come shorthanded for the Dorchester native and Catholic Memorial product, who has already tied his career single season high with 10 points. Cahill scored a total of four goals last year, and entered the year with just one shorthanded strike.

Usually a fourth or third line skater, Cahill has made the most out of the opportunities given him this year, excelling not through tremendous skill but rather through determination.

"Gerry's been a hard working kid from day one and he's doing the simple things well," Mallen said. "He's been taking shots in the shooting area and not trying to beat that extra defenseman. By executing simple fundamentals he's been successful.

"It's just a culmination of all the hard work. He's more of a self-made player. He's worked his way into more playing time by just doing the little things well."

The reflection of his coach's confidence in Cahill is his time penalty killing, a position that requires a lot of varied skills from a hockey player.

The role requires poise and experience along with quick feet and a keen mind for anticipating the play. When a penalty killer gets a puck he can not try anything fancy, rather get it out of the defensive zone, attacking only in the most ideal conditions.

Much like the combination of Dave Poulin and Dave Reid which dominated all of the top NHL power play units while playing in Boston around five years ago, Cahill and Bonneau have been able to rush the puck up ice successfully of late, while nailing down things in their own zone.

"It's his first year killing penalties for us on a regular basis and he's immediately found some chemistry with Rob Bonneau," Mallen said. "Those are two guys that have a lot of speed and when they gain possession of the puck in the defensive zone, and they jump to offense, they can really create a treat right away."

"Playing with Robbie's been great," Cahill said. "He likes to get open too, and he'll try to break and get a goal."

The main advantage of his new role for Cahill though is the increased ice time. After years of sporadic shifts, Cahill now plays regularly and the lack of extended breaks has benefited the consistency of his game.

"If you're sitting on the bench for a while you start losing focus," he said. "Knowing that you're also going to go out and kill penalties keeps you more in the game. You don't have time to lose focus because you're always in the game."

Cahill burst onto the goal scoring scene, appropriately enough, shorthanded. With no score midway through the first period of the Army game on Nov. 22, Cahill scored a pair of shorthanded goals off of Bonneau feeds on the same penalty. The senior added another moments later, completing a natural hat trick in 2:34 and putting away the Cadets early.

Of Cahill's efforts Mallen said, "That's one of the best individual performances by any player ever in our program."

Cahill scored three more goals this past weekend against Air Force, two of them shorthanded.

Herein lies what is quickly becoming Cahill's niche. Last year's Minuteman team scored seven shorthanded goals all season. Cahill's four is only a pair behind Bonneau's single- season record of six.

While the cause of his sudden offense outburst is unexplained by Cahill, his coach looks at it as the byproduct of hard work, something he'd been looking for, and something he, and the rest of the UMass faithful, hopes to see continue.

"A lot of it's luck right now," Cahill said. "Everything I'm shooting's going in the net somehow and I really can't explain it. It's pretty weird. It's unexplainable."

"Don't stop now Gerry, keep going," Mallen said. "We said that we were going to have to get scoring from more people besides our so-called top scorers and goals by him have really helped break a couple of games open."

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

Senior Gerry Cahill (foreground) has stepped up on special teams to score four short-handed goals in the past four games.

UM All-Americans

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

Snow has officially hit the Pioneer Valley, Turkey Day has come and gone and the winter break is on the horizon, but for the Massachusetts women's soccer team (16-5-1, 7-0-1 in Atlantic 10) the press keeps coming in.

Last week, the NSCAA released their lineup for the Northeast Region All-American Team, and the Minutewomen garnered four selections to the best of this season's best. Seniors Erin Lynch and Rebecca Myers were selected to the All-Northeast Region first team, while juniors Erica Iverson and Danielle Dion were given second team honors. In a nutshell, these selections show the cream of the UMass crop concerning their graduating seniors, and the best of what's around for next year's campaign.

Lynch and Myers head a stellar departing senior class for the Minutewomen, as the team will have to address the loss of six starters next year. Along with midfielders Amy Powell, Julie Magid, Sandy Shimogaki and forward Tina Lightning, UMass has now officially ended an era where the nucleus of this year's team has gone to the NCAA Tournament four consecutive times, once to the final four (1993), with an overall record of 53-18-6.

Even though Myers missed half of this season with a torn ACL, the selection committee could not ignore the impact and presence of UMass' all-time leading goals and points scorer. Uncharacteristically, Lynch did not receive A-10 Player of the Year honors for the third year in a row. No matter, she was there for the Minutewomen as one-fifth of one of the best defenses in the nation this year.

At the end of the day, omitting keeper Dion off of the first team list

Turn to ALL-AMERICANS, page 13

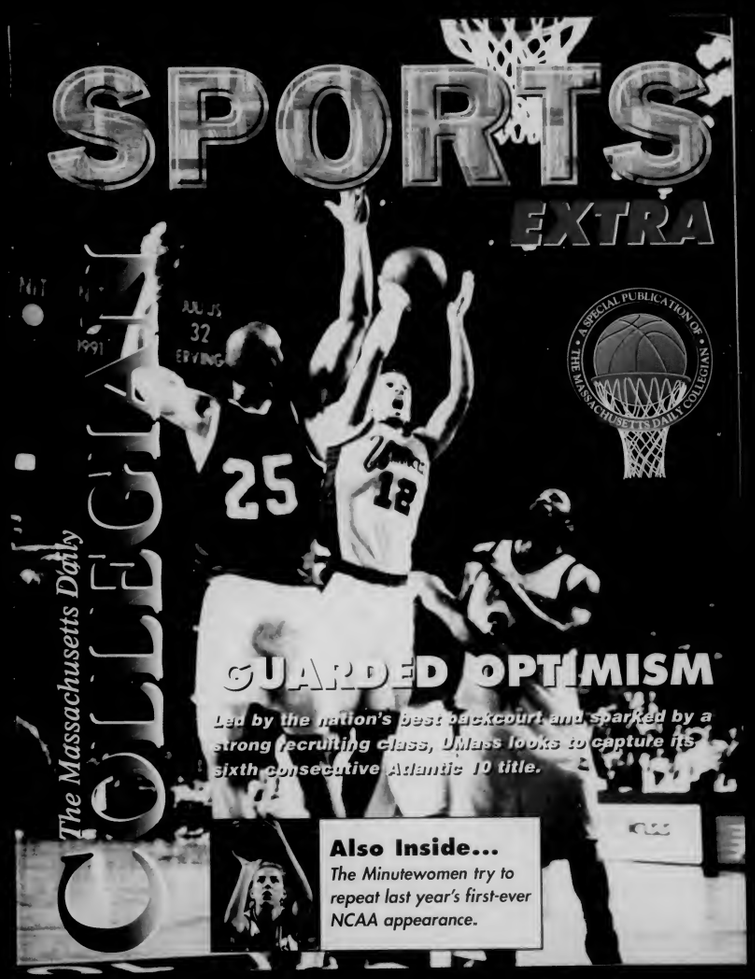
V–ball club takes turkey; Bad Boy Killaz win hoop

Last Saturday, the men's club volleyball team competed in the Princeton Invitational. UMass started the day off by beating a very experienced Columbia team 16-14, 15-6.



After tossing Columbia, UMass squared off against Haverford and spiked its opponents 15-11, 15-12. That's two in a row.

The third match of the day proved to be the toughest team UMass has played all year. A polished Villanova team, playing with great enthusiasm, defeated UMass 15-2. This game served as a wake-up call, as the 'Nova players upset UMass with its performance. The squad answered back with a convincing 15-5 thrashing of its own.

The momentum from this match carried over the rest of the afternoon. UMass finished off its bracket with an easy 15-9, 15-2 win over Rensselaer Polytechnical Institute.

The team finished 7-1 in its respective pool. In the semis, the Rams of West Chester went down 15-9, 15-6 setting up a rematch with Columbia, which stunned the host team in the other semi-finals. UMass defeated Columbia once again 15-9, 15-7.

Turn to SPORTS BRIEFS, page 12

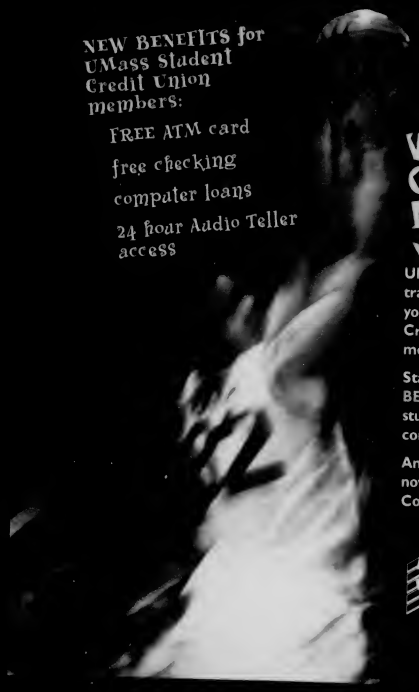
We're running our transition game to perfection!



NEW BENEFITS for UMass Student Credit Union members:

FREE ATM card

free checking

computer loans

24 hour Audio Teller access

WELCOME STUDENT CREDIT UNION MEMBERS TO YOUR TEAM!

UMass isn't the only team with a great transition game. We would like to welcome you, the members of the UMass Student Credit Union, as you make this important move.

Starting January 2, you'll get many NEW BENEFITS — like a free ATM card, special student checking, and great rates on computer loans, just to name a few.

And if you're not a credit union member now, make your move to the UMass Five College Federal Credit Union today!

UMass Five College Federal Credit Union

6 University Drive • Amherst • 549-7400
Across the street from Rafter's

NCUA

CONTENTS

Page 3 • UMass men's basketball — a glance at the 1996–97 Minutemen.

Page 5 • Conference preview — Atlantic 10 East capsules

Page 7 • Conference preview — Atlantic 10 West capsules

Page 9 • James "Bruiser" Flint — a look at the new coach as his career begins.

Page 11 • The best backcourt in the nation — profiles of point guard Edgar Padilla and shooting guard Carmelo Travieso.

Page 16 • Tyrone Weeks — a look at the senior frontcourt leader.

Page 19 • Charlton Clarke — the story of the sophomore guard now healthy enough for the bigtime.

Page 20 • The 1996–97 UMass men's basketball schedule

Page 21 • The 1996–97 UMass women's basketball schedule

Page 22 • Inus Narville — a profile of the junior who adds strength and size to the UMass line–up.

Page 23 • Lari Ketner — a look at the sophomore big man beginning his college career.

Page 25 • Mike Babul — a look at the rookie forward as he begins to define his role.

Page 26 • Monty Mack — a profile of the freshman recruit forced to sit out a season.

Page 27 • Andy Maclay — a profile of the walk–on football player who returns for another season.

Page 29 • Ajmal Basit — a look at the newcomer who will be an immediate contributor.

Page 30 • Winston Smith — a profile of the top–rated swing-man who is ready to roll.

Page 31 • Chris Kirkland — a look as the freshman forward tries to make a name for himself.

Page 33 • Ross Burns — a profile on the sophomore walk–on beginning his second year.

Page 34 • UMass women's basketball — a preview of the 1996–97 Minutewomen.

Page 37 • Joanie O'Brien — a look as the women's coach tries to build on success.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS EXTRA

New England's Largest College Daily

Project Supervisors

Jacob W. Michaels ..... Editor-in-Chief
Ryan Duques ..... Special Issues Coordinator
Casey Kane ..... Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm ..... Sports Co-Editor
G. Tony Morse ..... Production Manager
Alycia Hines ..... Business Manager

Contributing Writers

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr. ..... Sports Associate
Luke Meredith ..... Sports Associate
J.R. Adams ..... Staff Writer
Mike Cotey ..... Staff Writer
Steven Grant ..... Staff Writer
Jormia Kansanen ..... Staff Writer
Leigh Torbin ..... Staff Writer

Photography

Elizabeth Brown ..... Photography Editor
Thang Vo ..... Photographic Technician
Hui Gao ..... Staff Photographer

Production and Design

Josh Sylvester ..... Editorial Production Mgr.
David Voldan ..... Advertising Production Mgr.
Marc Dionne ..... Editorial Production
Andrea Briggs ..... Advertising Production
Keren M. Charles ..... Advertising Production
Brian D. Innocenzio ..... Advertising Production
Sam Smullen ..... Advertising Production
Kamali Thornell ..... Advertising Production

Advertising Sales

Jaclyn Alberti ..... Account Executive
Susan Elliott ..... Account Executive
Jason Endich ..... Account Executive
Nelson Ferreira ..... Account Executive
Jon Fowler ..... Account Executive
Ben Hartmere ..... Account Executive
Jennifer Kulm ..... Account Executive
Luis Luna ..... Account Executive
Ella Perez-Feldes ..... Account Executive
Tony Sardinas ..... Account Executive
Scott Sisun ..... Account Executive
David Smith ..... Account Executive
Rebecca Stefansky ..... Account Executive
Christine Stewart ..... Account Executive
Poh-Ying Wong ..... Account Executive

Professional Staff

Lyle A. Henry ..... Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski ..... Asst. Oper. Manager
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. ..... Graphics Advisor

Special Thanks

Brigid Connelly, And L. Morse, Sybil Johnson, Kitty & Elmo Servais, Julius Sweeney, William Szafarowicz, UMass Media Relations

Sports Extra is a special publication of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, a registered student organization at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. The Collegian reserves all rights to this magazine. No portion may be reproduced or distributed without prior written consent from the Collegian Executive Board.

Copyright 1996 The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

YOUNG GUNS

The Minutemen found the fountain of youth when they signed a talented crop of rookies to help [illegible] the 1996-97 campaign.

By Casey Kane
Collegian Sports

On paper, the Massachusetts men's basketball team lost much in the time between its trip to the Final Four and its trip to this year's Maui Classic: consensus player of the year Marcus Camby and coach of the year John Calipari both left Amherst for the NBA; while a graduation crunch knocked Dana Dingle, Donta Bright, Rigo Nuñez, Ted Cottrell and Giddel Padilla out of the line-up.

In actuality, however, UMass has retained a solid nucleus and added top-notch newcomers to ensure the Minutemen's continued success.

The two starters UMass returns are seniors Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso, a guard tandem touted as the nation's best backcourt. Playing a record number of minutes last year, the two were responsible for a large part of the Minutemen's scoring.

Padilla, a 6-foot-2 point guard with defensive speed and a good range from beyond the arc, finished the season with an 8.9 points per game average and a .416 shooting percentage. He dished out a single-season UMass record 247 assists and made a single-season record 108 steals.

Travieso, an off-guard who found his niche as the resident long-range sharpshooter last year, comes into the 1996-97 campaign ranked third all-time at UMass in the three-pointers made (153) and attempted (412) categories. He scored an average of 12.6 ppg last season, including a .405 three-point percentage.

"The guards are the one's that are the leaders on the floor," Flint said. "There's only so much coaching a coach can do from the sidelines. You have to have somebody out there that can transform that to the other players on the court."

Sophomore Charlton Clarke, whose first season was hampered by an early-season injury, will see increased time off the bench spelling Padilla and Travieso. The injury forced Clarke to sit out 14 games and he struggled to find his shooting touch when he returned to game action. But a successful summer of basketball, including a stint in Italy, has given Clarke a renewed sense of confidence.

Senior Tyrone Weeks returns after summertime speculation that he would sit out a year on a medical redshirt due to foot problems to lend size and experience to the UMass frontcourt.

"I want to win as many games as we can, try to go back to the Final Four, to go out and play hard every game," Weeks said.

Flint has expressed the intent to establish UMass' post-presence this season, and Weeks is the main man in that system. The senior forward recorded 5.8 ppg and 5.2 rebounds per game.

"[Weeks] was a leader last year. He was a leader in the locker room, made guys come out and do what they are supposed to," Flint said. "That's what senior leadership is all about."

Helping Weeks in the frontcourt will be junior Inus Norville. Norville (2.4 ppg, 2.1 rpg) considered transferring to North Carolina-Asheville during the summer to be closer to his Fayetteville, N.C. home, but decided to return to Amherst.

Ross Burns and Andy Maclay, both sophomore walk-on guards, also return to add to the Minutemen's depth.

Several newcomers will also get a chance at big-time college basketball. Highly touted center Lari Ketner makes his collegiate debut after sitting out last year due to Proposition 48 requirements. Even before he played a college game, Ketner was being dubbed an NBA prospect.

Ketner will get relief in the form of freshman center Ajmal Basit, who comes to UMass via hoop-haven St. Anthony's in Jersey City, N.J.

Expected to see several minutes at the forward position are freshmen Chris Kirkland, Mike Babul and Winston Smith.

Rookie Guard Monty Mack will wait a year until he dons his UMass uniform, as he will sit out this year under Prop 16 restrictions. As a partial qualifier under the NCAA guidelines, Mack is allowed to practice with the team this season.

"We have to be very patient," Flint said. "We have a very young team and guys are going to have to learn to play at the level we play at. Our thing is to get better every day, learn from our mistakes and try to build as the season goes on."

The younger players do not have the luxury of getting their feet wet by playing an early-season creampuff schedule. The Minutemen faced a strong field over Thanksgiving break at the Maui Classic and Georgetown at the Great Eight.

"We have a tough schedule," Flint said. "But I want my guys to learn from their mistakes and get the opportunity to win. The pressure's not on us to win, the pressure's on us to prepare, and when you prepare the right way, you'll be able to perform."

In upcoming games, UMass faces Jerry Tarkanian's Fresno State squad; consensus preseason national player of the year Tim Duncan and Wake Forest; the perennially strong North Carolina Tar Heels; a renewed rivalry with Connecticut; intrastate rival Boston College; and Maryland.

And that's non-conference.

"We've always played a really good schedule," Flint said. "We've always played really good teams early."

Used CDs and Imports Bought/Sold/Traded

TURN IT UP!

5 Pleasant St. • Northampton • 582-1885

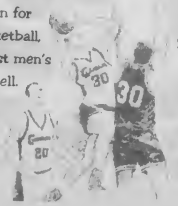
ON THE WEB: http://javanet.com/~turnitup

MIKE'S WESTVIEW CAFE

GO UMass BASKETBALL

Mike's wishes you a GREAT SEASON.

If you're not lucky enough to get tickets, come down to Mike's and watch the game.



Drink Specials Every Week.
16oz. Bud & Bud Lite Cups $1.
~ ESPN2 ~

WMUA 91.1. FM

THE STATION IN THE VALLEY FOR UMASS SPORTS COVERAGE!

Tune in to hear WMUA's sports staff bringing you live coverage of UMass Sporting Events. We're the Atlantic 10 Conference Flagship station for women's basketball, and cover most men's games as well.

Expect high-caliber and broad sports reporting from the first station to broadcast Water Polo live! Hear it only here, on WMUA—"Radio you Don't hear on the Radio!!"

WMUA's Sports broadcasts are underwritten in part by DAILY COLLEGIAN

ATLANTIC 10 EAST

Capsule previews of the A-10 East Division member schools

Fordham Rams

Location: Bronx, N.Y.
Home arena: Rose Hill Gymnasium (3,470)
Coach: Nick Macarchuk
Career record: 286–263 (19 years)
Last year's record: 4–23, 2–14 A–10 (sixth place East)
Top returnees: Sr. F Dustin Berrien (6.8 ppg, 5.1 rpg), Sr. G Ray Carroll (8.4 ppg, 3.9 rpg), Jr. G Billy Lovett (8.1 ppg, 2.7 rpg)
Top newcomers: G Scott Pomykaluk, F/C Calvin Price, G/F Collin Watson, F Maurice Curtis
Outlook: The Rams struggled after making the transition to the A–10 from the non-scholarship Patriot League, but they should have help this year as they return six players. Carroll, point guard Lovett, and top three-point shooter Chris DiVescio lead the backcourt, while Berrien and Gantyie Mack will have to step up to power the frontcourt. Watch for freshman Curtis to mix in during the second semester.

Massachusetts Minutemen

Location: Amherst, Mass.
Home arena: Amherst, Mass. Mullins Center (9,493)
Coach: James [illegible] Flint
Career record: [illegible]
Last year's record: 19–12, 9–5 A–10 (first place East)
Top returnees: Sr. F Edgar Padilla (8.9 ppg, 4.7 apg), Sr. G Carmelo Travieso (7.6 ppg, 3.2 rpg), Jr. F Tyrone Weeks (5.8 ppg, 5.2 rpg)
Top newcomers: G Lou Roe, F Winston Smith, F Mike Babul, C Ajmal Basit, F Jon Eastwood
Outlook: UMass' last Player of the Year Marcus Camby and Coach of the Year John Calipari and is still the consensus pick to win the A-[illegible] and Travieso are to lead as the nation's best backcourt [illegible] Weeks and Padilla give them more rest [illegible] Roe, who got off to academic regulations [illegible] Those Rams are expected to combine with Notre Dame [illegible] UMass's second-ranked recruiting class. The Minutemen also bring in one of the nation's best recruiting classes.

Rhode Island Rams

Location: Kingston, R.I.
Home arena: Keaney Gymnasium (4,200)
Coach: Al Skinner
Career record: 116–116 (eight years)
Last year's record: 20–14, 8–8 A–10 (fourth place East)
Top returnees: Jr. G Tyson Wheeler (16.6 ppg, 6.0 rpg), Sr. G Chad Thomas (11.8 ppg, 4.9 rpg), So. F Antonio Reynolds (12.1 ppg, 8.7 rpg)
Top newcomers: C Matt Selmer
Outlook: The other teams in the A–10 East did not lose a single player. Last year's A–10 Rookie of the Year Reynolds will be a force to be reckoned with in the paint his year, and Wheeler will be dominant at the point. The only glaring problem: Cuttino Mobley, who returns after being redshirted last year, and Chad Thomas, who more than capably filled Mobley's shoes, will both seek time at the two spot. Josh King will most likely be URI's small forward.

St. Bonaventure Bonnies

Location: Olean, N.Y.
Home arena: [illegible] Center (6,000)
Coach: Jim Baron
Career record: 48–65 (nine years)
Last year's record: 10–16, 4–12 A–10 (fifth place East)
Top returnees: Sr. G Shandue McNeill (11.3 ppg, 5.1 rpg), Jr. F Kenny Mumford (11.5 ppg, 5.3 rpg), Jr. G/F Rashon Palmer (16.1 ppg, 3.7 rpg)
Top newcomers: C Conrad Cruz, G Tim Winn
Outlook: [illegible]hill, who should break the St. Bonaventure record for steals this year, will be a scoring force for the Bonnies. Swingman Palmer was the second leading scorer in the A–10 last year, and should see continued success. Chris Lumsden missed all of last year after shoulder surgery, and his return will help the Bonnie's, who [illegible] finish in the middle of the pack.

St. Joseph's Hawks

Location: Philadelphia, Penn.
Home arena: Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse (3,200)
Coach: Phil Martelli
Career record: 19–13 (one year)
Last year's record: 19–13, 9–7 A–10 (third place East)
Top returnees: Sr. G Terrell Myers (11.6 ppg, 2.7 rpg), Jr. G Rashid Bey (7.8 ppg, 3.1 rpg), Sr. F Dmitri Domani (8.3 ppg, 5.7 rpg)
Top newcomers: F Harold Rasul, G Tim Brown, G Andrae "Yah" Davis
Outlook: St. Joseph's surprised many with its down-to-the-wire finish against Nebraska in the NIT Final Four last year, especially considering what the Hawks faced during the year [the Lute Olsen–Arizona incident]. But that was last year. And now the Hawks are looking down the barrel of the A–10's grill, and they are without last year's leading scorers Reggie Townsend and Mark Bass. The newcomers should make an immediate impact in helping a relatively young squad.

Temple Owls

Location: Philadelphia, Penn.
Home arena: McGonigle Hall (3,900)
Coach: John Chaney
Career record: 540–188 (24 years)
Last year's record: 20–13, 12–4 A–10 (third place East)
Top returnees: Jr. F/C Marc Jackson (9.7 ppg, 7.0 rpg), Sr. F Huey Futch (7.1 ppg, 3.5 rpg), Jr. F Lynard Stewart (7.2 ppg, 3.8 rpg)
Top newcomers: F Adrian Dunkley, F Rasheed Brown, G Quincy Wadley, G Juan Gatcher
Outlook: Chaney was somewhat unhappy with the play of his team last year, and [illegible] putting it mildly. The Owls shot just .389 from the field in the 20–13 campaign. This year, Chaney has brought in the school's [illegible] of the [illegible] newcomers). The Owls, however, will [illegible] and Jeremy Miller (who left Philly to play [illegible] and [illegible] Levan Alston, Dennis Battie and William Cunningham.

COME CELEBRATE A
UMASS VICTORY AT PANDA EAST
CHINESE &JAPANESE RESTAURANT
103 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)256-8923 • 256-8924
GO UMASS !

ULTIMATE AEROBIC TRAINING
Stairmaster 4400 PT

CLIMB
PLUS
KEISER
NAUTILUS
FREE-WEIGHTS
STAIRMASTERS
LIFE CYCLES
LIFE ROWER
RECUMBENTS
CYBEX UBE
NORDIC TRACK
TREADMILLS
AEROBICS
4 Months $189
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
460 West St.
South Amherst
256-0080

CAMPUS GEAR
THE BEST SELECTION FOR UMASS HOOPS
✗T-SHIRTS ✗SWEATSHIRTS ✗HATS
✗JACKETS ✗JERSEYS ✗SHORTS
Open til' 7:00pm ❖ Stop by before the game ❖ Always open Sundays
413-549-0944
255 Triangle St., Amherst
Between Dairy Mart & Northampton Co-op Bank

ATLANTIC 10 WEST

Capsule previews of the A-10 West Division member schools

Dayton Flyers

Location: Dayton, Ohio
Home arena: University of Dayton Arena (13,455)
Coach: Oliver Purnell
Career record: 123–109 (11 years)
Last year's record: 15–14, 6–10 (fourth place West)
Top returnees: Jr. F Ryan Perryman (13.4 ppg, 9.3 rpg), So. F Coby Turner (5.3 ppg, 2.6 rpg), Jr. G Rodney Horton (5.8 ppg, 2.1 rpg)
Top newcomers: F/C Mark Ashton, G Darnell Hoskins, G Tony Stanley
Outlook: The Flyers had to deal with more than the regular problems of a season (injuries, missed games) last year. They also had to face the sudden death of popular and productive forward Chris Daniels. This year Dayton has security in frontcourt players Perryman and Turner, who looks to up last year's numbers. The perimeter players are young, but show potential.

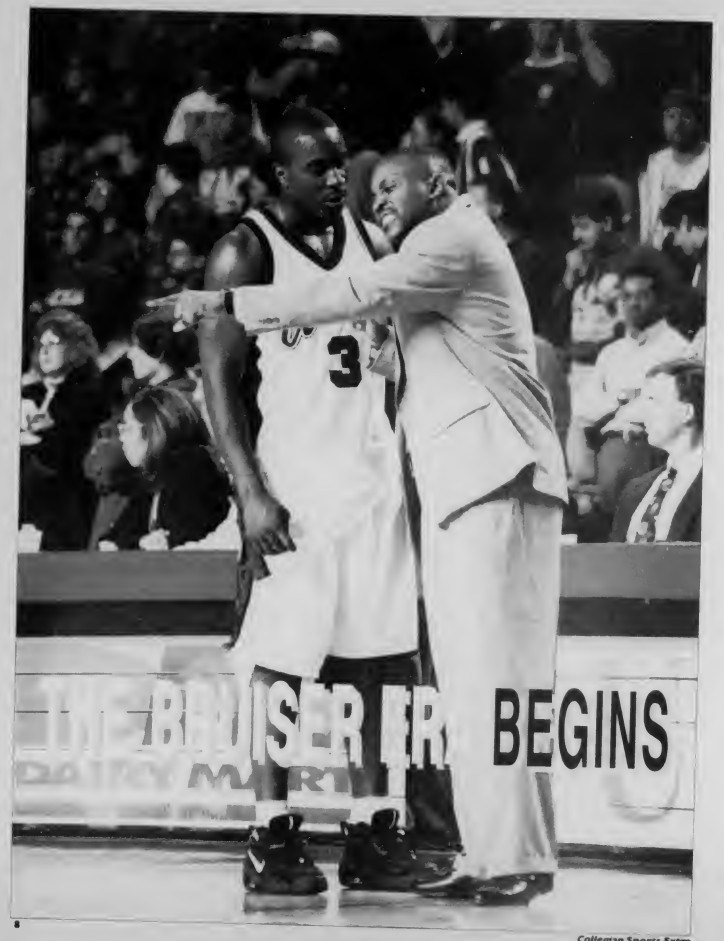
Duquesne Dukes

Location: Pittsburgh, Penn.
Home arena: A.J. Palumbo Center (6,200)
Coach: Scott Edgar
Career record: 88–58 (five years)
Last year's record: 9–18, 3–13 A–10 (fifth place tie West)
Top returnees: Sr. G Tom Pipkins (14.1 ppg, 2.7 rpg), Jr. F Kevin Price (14.7 ppg, 6.7 rpg), Jr. G Mike James (14.2 ppg, 3.5 rpg)
Top newcomers: F Clifton Jones, F Rob Johnson, F Devone Stephenson, G Markell Sneed
Outlook: It is said that experience pays off. If so, the Dukes are in a good position, returning all five starters from last year's squad, which lost nine games by eight points or fewer. Pipkins, who has already totaled over 1,000 career points, and James will team in the backcourt, while Price, Nick Bosic and Neil Hood will take care of the frontcourt duties.

George Washington Colonials

Location: Washington, D.C.
Home arena: Charles E. Smith Center (5,000)
Coach: Mike Jarvis
Career record: 214–116 (11 years)
Last year's record: 21–8, 13–3 A–10 (first place tie West)
Top returnees: Jr. C Alexander Koul (14.9 ppg, 7.8 rpg), So. G Shawnta Rogers (10.5 ppg, 4.7 rpg), So. G J.J. Brade (8.0 ppg, 3.6 rpg)
Top newcomers: G Kinte Smith, F Patrick Ngongba, G Jackson Payne
Outlook: GW features another strong and young A–10 backcourt with Rogers and Brade. In addition, the Colonials have preseason A–10 Player of the Year Alexander Koul at center. This is a major factor, considering that GW is one of only two A–10 schools that has proven players at the center position, Temple being the other. GW lost Kwame Evans and Vaughn Jones, but should rebuild those spots with Yegor Mescheriakov and Darin Green.

La Salle Explorers



Location: Philadelphia, Penn.
Home arena: CoreStates Spectrum (18,168)
Coach: William "Speedy" Morris
Career record: 183–119 (10 years)
Last year's record: 6–24, 3–13 A–10 (fifth place tie West)
Top returnees: Jr. G Mike Gizzi (13.4 ppg, 5.5 rpg), Jr. G Shawn Smith (8.9 ppg, 3.9 rpg), Sr. F Everett Catlin (7.4 ppg, 6.7 rpg)
Top newcomers: G Donnie Carr, F/C Travar Johnson, G Ronnie Braxton
Outlook: The Explorers have a solid guard tandem in Gizzi and Smith, but the questions lie up front. Romaine Haywood graduated and took the bulk of La Salle's scoring with him. Catlin and Olof Landgren will team in the frontcourt, but Morris is without a proven center. Lari Kenner was supposed to fill that spot before he changed his mind and headed north to UMass. Now it will be up to Johnson or Jasper van Teeseling.

Virginia Tech Hokies

Location: Blacksburg, Va.
Home arena: Cassell Coliseum (10,000)
Coach: Bill Foster
Career record: 517–309 (29 years)
Last year's record: 23–6, 13–3 A–10 (first place tie West)
Top returnees: Sr. F Ace Custis (13.4 ppg, 9.5 rpg),
Top newcomers: F Andre Ray, F Jesus Rodriguez, G Brendon Dunlap
Outlook: The Hokies lost four of five starters from last year's NCAA team, meaning Custis will go it alone in Blacksburg this year. Unproven youth could be a problem for Foster, who will retire at the end of the season, but he is more concerned about who will play the role of big man on his squad. Keefe Matthews may be the man, but then again it might be Alvaro Tor. Either way, Foster has got to find someone to take the defensive focus off of Custis.

Xavier Musketeers

Location: Cincinnati, Ohio
Home arena: Cincinnati Gardens (10,100)
Coach: Skip Prosser
Career record: 53–33 (three years)
Last year's record: 13–15, 8–8 (third place West)
Top returnees: So. G Gary Lumpkin (11.2 ppg, 2.7 rpg), So. G/F Darnell Williams (12.3 ppg, 4.3 rpg), So. G Lenny Brown (12.5 ppg, 4.1 rpg)
Top newcomers: F/C Nate Turner, F James Posey, F Torraye Braggs
Outlook: Prosser has all five starters back, and he expects big things from them all. He seems to have no problems getting guards to his program (his current roster lists six of them), and he has started to build a frontcourt. Lumpkin will feel most of the pressure, but he should get help from Brown and, in the frontcourt, T.J. Johnson. But like much of the A–10, Xavier lacks a true center.

By Chris Stamm
Collegian* Sports

Massachusetts' men's basketball coach James "Bruiser" Flint first had an inclination that coaching basketball was something he wanted to do with his life when he was just a sophomore playing ball at St. Joseph's University.

"My dad coached what they call Biddy League, in the Sonny Hill League [in Philadelphia], and one morning he needed somebody to help drive the kids to the game," Flint recalled.

"So he calls me up at seven in the morning to get me to drive these kids to the game. I drove them, but [when we got there] the other coach didn't show up, so he said, 'I'll coach this team, you coach my team.'"

"After the game, I was collecting the uniforms and all the little kids were asking, 'Are you coming back next week?' and one little kid kept saying, 'Come on back. We'd rather have you coach than your dad.' And to be honest with you, I've had the bug from that point on."

In roughly 11 years since that day, Flint climbed the ranks from player to assistant coach and is now replacing one of college basketball's most famous coaches.

When Minuteman coach John Calipari opted to leave UMass to coach the NBA's New Jersey Nets, the Massachusetts administration didn't need to look past the end of the bench for his replacement.

As an assistant coach under Calipari for the past seven years, Flint has been a major force in bringing the UMass program into the spotlight, most notably for his strength as a recruiter.

In the summer of 1995, Flint was a finalist for the coaching job at his alma mater St. Joseph's, and while he was not hired, it was clear that he was ready to take control of his own team.

Flint got two chances to get his feet wet last season. When All-American center Marcus Camby collapsed before the tip- off at St. Bonaventure and Calipari accompanied him to the hospital, Flint coached the team to a 65-52 win. Later in the season, he took the reins at home when Calipari was ejected in a 86-76 loss to George Washington.

Now Flint, 31, is the man in charge full-time and the second youngest Div. I coach, next to East Carolina's Joe Dooley.

One of the first hurdles he must overcome is comparison with his predecessor. As an assistant, Flint was a cornerstone of the program, helping the Minutemen to five consecutive NCAA Tournaments and an overall record of 183-53 in seven years — the fourth most victories in that amount of time.

While aware that many may try to compare him to Coach Cal, Flint is not concerned.

"When people talk about UMass basketball, they're going to talk about John Calipari, that's the first name that's going to come up," Flint said. "I could be here for 20 years and they will still be talking about him."

With the help of a strong freshman class, Flint is looking to expand upon the success he had been a part of during the Calipari years.

"As head coach, I want to win a National Championship," Flint said. "I don't know if I'm going to do it this year or when I'm going to do it. My whole thing, especially with this team, is to get better as the year goes on, try to improve as a coach and as a teacher. I think if I can do that, then my team will improve."

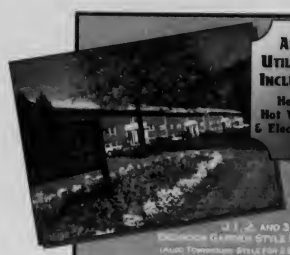
As far as improvements are concerned, Flint says that the general philosophy of the program will not change drastically now that he is at the helm. There are reasons why UMass has emerged as a basketball power over the years, and he is reluctant to change the style of the team he helped to build.

"We are going to play the same attacking, aggressive, rebounding, in your face, dive on the floor type ball that we've played in the past," Flint said. "It's not like I'm coming here and I'm not familiar with the situation.

"I've been here for eight years now. I know the system and I think it's a good one. There may be some things that we'll do differently, but I'd say it's going to be about 95 percent the same."

The one aspect of the team that will see some changes is UMass' frontcourt. With Camby's exit to the pros and the graduation of Dana Dingle and Donta Bright, there are three empty spots in the starting line up.

As for frontcourt veterans, only sixth and seventh men senior Tyrone Weeks and junior Inus Norville are back for the '96 '97 campaign.



However, Flint has confidence in his rookies, and feels that with time, they will adjust to the college game. Though he does have the privilege of a returning backcourt which is touted as "the nation's best," Flint insists that they will not be forced to do it all.

"We have always said if you don't have post-presence then you're a fraud," Flint said. "Don't think that we are going to shoot 50 three-pointers a night because we have Carmelo and Edgar out there. I like our style of play. It's well balanced and everybody gets a chance to do their thing."

It's a two way street for his players as well.

Turn to FLINT, page 38

ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED
Heat, Hot Water & Electricity

1, 2 AND 3 BEDROOM GARDEN STYLE UNITS
(ALSO TOWNHOUSE STYLE FOR 2 BEDROOM)

- CONVENIENT TO AMHERST, UMASS & INTERSTATE 91
- SCENIC HIKING TRAILS ON 28 WOODED ACRES
- OLYMPIC SIZE POOL
- TENNIS, VOLLEYBALL AND BASKETBALL
- FREE PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION
- 24 HOUR MAINTENANCE

CLIFF SIDE APARTMENTS
(413) 665-9930
MON-FRI 8:30 - 8:30
SAT 10 - 2

Summer learning at UMass Boston ranges far and wide.

In Ireland
Ireland Today

In Mexico
Spanish Language and Culture

Along the New England Coastline
Exploring the Coastal Environment

On Nantucket Island
Playwriting and Performance

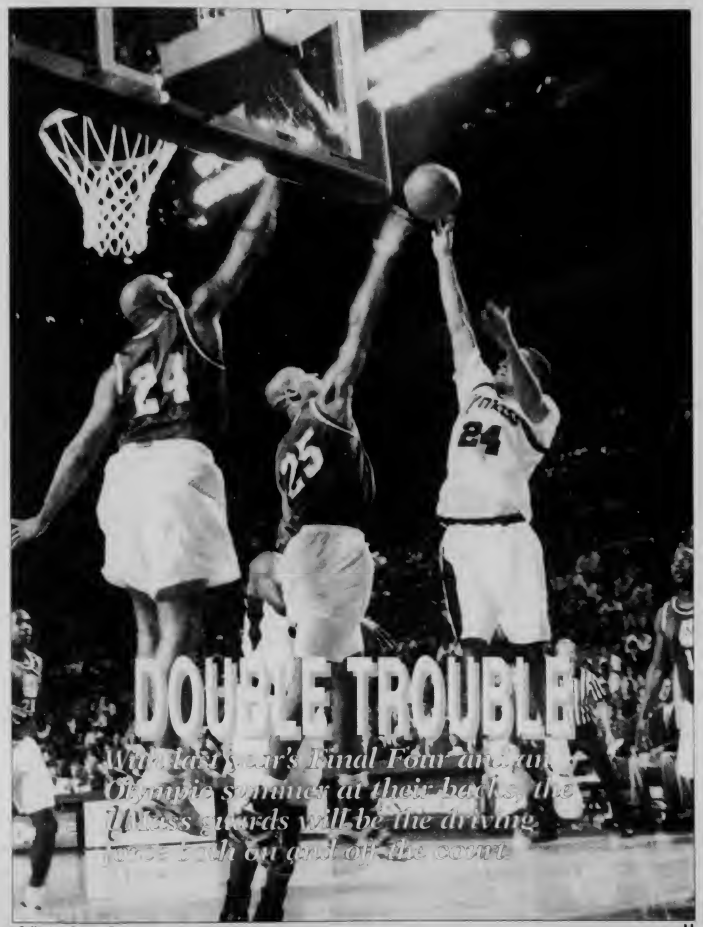
On Nantucket Island
Marine Biology

For information about these programs—and over five hundred courses available this summer—contact

Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Boston
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston, MA 02125-3393

Tel 617 287-7915
Fax 617 287-7922
Email dce@umbsky.cc.umb.edu
Web www.conted.umb.edu

Apparently we went to the Commonwealth



UMass Boston

4 SEASONS
RTE. 9 HADLEY 584-8174
Monday - Saturday 9:00am-11:00pm
Not Responsible for typos
Visa, Mastercard & Discover accepted

VISA

DISCOUNT LIQUORS
BEER • WINE • KEGS • ICE • CIGARS

SAM ADAMS 24-12oz Bott. $18.99 + dep	HARPOON 24-12oz Bott. $17.99 + dep	SARANAC 24-12oz Bott. $17.99 + dep	MOOSEHEAD 24-12oz Bott. $15.99 + dep	HEINEKEN 24-12oz Bott. $18.99 + dep	KILLIAN'S 24-12oz Bott. $16.99 + dep	CORONA 24-12oz Bott. $16.99 + dep	MOLSON 24-12oz Bott. $15.99 + dep
MICHELOB & LT 24-12oz Bott. $16.89 + dep	RED WOLF 24-12oz Bott. $14.99 + dep	BUSCH & LT 30pk-12oz cans $11.99 + dep	MILLER HIGH LIFE 30pk-12oz cans $11.99 + dep	BUD DRY 24-12oz Bott. $9.99 + dep	M.G.D. & LT 24-12oz Bott $9.99 + dep	SALE UNTIL NEXT YEAR!
SEAGRAMS 7 $8.99/ 750ml	CROWN ROYAL $13.99/ 750ml	J & B SCOTCH $14.99/ 750ml	SOUTHERN COMFORT $8.49/ 750ml	BARCARDI RUM $7.99/ 750ml	SAMBUCA ROMANO $15.49/ 750ml	JACK DANIELS $11.99/ 750ml	CANADIAN MIST $7.99/ 750ml
JOSE CUERVO $9.99/ 750ml	FREE GIFT WRAPPING!		GOLDSCHLAGER $14.99/ 750ml	10% OFF ALL CIGAR PURCHASES w/ UMASS B-BALL TICKET STUB!		DEWARS SCOTCH $14.99/ 750ml	COOKIES & CREAM $8.29/ 750ml
ALL YOUR HOLIDAY & GIFT GIVING NEEDS!		WOODBRIDGE Cabernet & Chardonnay $10.99/ 1.5L	ROUND HILL Cabernet & Chardonnay $10.99/ 1.5L	CARLO ROSSI $6.99/ 4.0L	R. H. PHILLIPS Barrel Cuvee Chard. $5.99/ 750ml	FETZER Barrel Select Chard. $8.29/ 750ml	RIUNITE WINES $6.49/ 1.5L
		KENDAL JACKSON Chardonnay $9.99/ 750ml	GLEN ELLEN Chardonnay $4.49/ 750ml	WATERBROOK Chardonnay $7.99/ 750ml	FRANZIA $6.99/ 5.0L box	VICHON Merlot & Chardonnay $7.69/ 750ml	DRAGANI Monte Palciano $3.49/ 750ml
SCHARFFEN-BERGER $10.99/ 750ml	TAITTINGER $22.99/ 750ml	KORBEL $8.69/ 750ml	BALLATORE Spumante $4.99/ 750ml	GOOD LUCK TO BRUISER & UMASS BASKETBALL!		MERRY CHRISTMAS WISHES TO ALL.... From the Krupczak Family & Sean Barry
DOMAINE CHANDON $11.99/ 750ml	MARTINI & ROSSI $8.49/ 750ml	TOTT'S $4.99/ 750ml	COOKS $4.49/ 750ml

DOUBLE TROUBLE

With last year's Final Four and an Olympic summer at their backs, the UMass guards will be the driving force behind our quest for the court.

Edgar Padilla

6-2 • 175
Sr. Guard • Toa Alta, P.R.

"UMass has been a winning program since I've been here. It means a lot to me to come to a program like this where everybody's working hard."

–Edgar Padilla

1995-96
8.9 ppg, 247 assists, 108 steals

Career
6.9 ppg, 433 assists, 184 steals

By Casey Kane & Chris Stamm
Collegian Sports

At the beginning of last year's college basketball season, critics scrutinized the Massachusetts backcourt of Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso.

With the loss of proven point guard Derek Kellogg and little help coming off the bench, as then-freshman Charlton Clarke was sidelined with a knee injury early in the campaign, the pair needed to prove itself.

In a matter of months, they went from being the center of skepticism to the center of attention, earning the title of "best backcourt in the nation" by media throughout the country.

After leading the Massachusetts men's basketball team to its first-ever NCAA Final Four and playing on the Puerto Rican National Team in its 10th place showing in the 1996 Atlanta Olympics, the dynamic duo returns to provide the nucleus of a young UMass squad.

You've heard all the cliches: they were born on the same day on the same island of Puerto Rico. Now hear what the tri-captains have to say about Massachusetts basketball.

Edgar Padilla

The critics were especially hard on Padilla.

When Kellogg came to UMass, critics across the state bounded then-UMass coach John Calipari for giving the guard a chance. Those critics went only slightly easier on Padilla, who entered last season as a relatively untested and therefore relatively unproven point man.

One thousand three hundred fifty one minutes after the 1995-96 college basketball season started, Padilla and his backcourtmate Travieso were being lauded by media nationwide as the best guard tandem in the country.

The praise didn't come easily, as Padilla played an average of 36.5 minutes per game to earn his 8.9 points per game scoring average.

After Clarke was sidelined with an injury during the season opener, Padilla and Travieso were left with little on-court relief. This year, with Clarke healthy to start the year, Padilla should see more rest, which could in turn make him more effective — a thought opponents dread.

Travieso has found his niche as UMass' resident long-range bomb specialist, while Padilla settled into his role of coordinating a calculating defense.

But that was last year that the two searched to find and distinguish their roles. This year, they have a greater task at hand — providing guidance and leadership to the group of newcomers involved with the UMass program, while preparing themselves for the relentless focus opposing teams will surely give them.

"[Being the nation's best backcourt]'s not really the pressure we have right now," Padilla said. "The pressure we have right now is to lead these guys. The toughest thing for us right now is leading these guys and being leaders for these guys because we haven't done this before.

"With these new guys, it's on us whatever they do. We have to help them out, but sometimes that gets kind of tough because sometimes you have to get going yourself," he continued. "Nobody's going to help you and you have to be ready everyday and help them to be ready everyday."

However, being the top-rated guard tandem has come because of the tandem's working together. Padilla and Travieso have a almost telepathic way of communicating, which helps UMass and foils the opposition.

"I just know the way he plays," Padilla said. "The way he shoots, and where he wants the ball. He knows I'm going to get him open, that I'm going to get him the ball. And I just give him the ball where he wants."

Facing the last year of his collegiate career, Padilla exudes pride when he talks about his days as a Minuteman.

"UMass has been a winning program since I've been here. People work hard here," he said. "All my life I've worked hard, my family's worked hard.

"It means a lot to me to come to a program like this where everybody's working hard and everybody's trying to get better and everybody's trying to work for the same thing. You've got to feel proud about it.

"To be surrounded with guys and coaches that work hard for everything they have and are working hard for whatever they want, that's what I want. That's the way I was raised and that's the way I grew up. That really makes you feel proud to be part of this program."

That pride was also present, though the point guard's jersey was different, when Padilla played for the Puerto Rican National team as this year's Olympic Gam-

"It meant a lot [to play for the national team]," Padilla said. "The national team was struggling in Puerto Rico when I was growing up. That was their role. When I was growing up, instead of watching the NBA, I was watching the national team play in any tournament they went to.

"For me to have an opportunity to be a part of that team and not only be part of it, but going to the Olympics. Not every athlete gets the opportunity to go to the Olympics.

It meant a lot to Padilla to give something back to the island where he got his basketball start.

"It's something unbelievable," he said. "It's hard to describe how good you feel when you're a part of that team and when you play for your country. The country where you learned to play basketball, and you have the opportunity to give a little back to them."

His family means a lot to Padilla.

"My father, when I was growing up, was at every game I played in," Padilla said. "I don't think [my parents] realh understand what's going on so far. They know that I'm playing, but they don't really understand the level I'm playing at and the opportunities I may have after this.

"[My brother] believes this more than I do."

The senior now stands toe-to-toe with his final year in maroon and white. As he looks simultaneously back on his career and forward to his future, Padilla has considered the thought of continuing his basketball career in the NBA.

"I look at [the NBA] the same way I looked at the national team," Padilla said. "It's hard for me to believe that I'm going to have an opportunity."

That NBA career could start with his former coach. Calipari has stated that in next June's NBA Draft, he will look to add one of his former guards to his New Jersey Nets roster.

"We're a package," Travieso said at the thought of splitting up the tandem.

Carmelo Travieso

If the senior tri-captain is one thing, he is a true guard. He can pass, he can play defense, and most of all, he is UMass' leading outside threat.

"Trey-vieso," as the Minutemen faithful have lovingly dubbed him, proved his merit last season as he rose to prominence. Playing almost every game in its entirety with an average of 35.8 minutes per game, Travieso tirelessly made the most of his minutes on the floor.

Anyone who has watched the 6-foot-2 senior from Thayer Academy on the court can attest to his marksmanship. In last year's home game against Temple, Travieso scored a team-high 26 points with eight treys. Against Duquesne, he lit it up for 33 points on 11-for-13 three-point shooting.

After drilling 104 three-pointers last season setting a new Atlantic 10 record, he is well on his way to writing himself into the history books. In fact, Travieso needs just 68 more treys to become UMass' all-time leader in that category.

That may not be easy to do, now that the Travieso/Padilla backcourt has been named the nation's best. UMass's sharpshooter is sure to be the target of many an opposing defense, but Travieso is not concerned.

"Just because we're labeled as that [the best backcourt in the nation], people are going to come out and try to prove that we're not, or that they are just as good as we are supposed to be," Travieso said. "This kind of reminds me of when me and Edgar were starting, we were going up against guys that were supposed to be the best backcourts and how hard we had to work to beat them.

"We were in their shoes once and now they want to prove themselves to us. We just have to go out and not forget all the things that give us this recognition and keep working hard. It's just a label, if you don't go out and play hard, it goes right out the window."

There are a lot of things working in Travieso's favor that point towards another successful season. Playing in last summer's Olympics with Padilla, the friends and roommates off the court cemented their friendship even further.

"The more time we spent together on and off the court, it helped us as friends and as teammates," Travieso said. "We spent a lot of time together since the beginning of last year. And now this year, it seems like I've seen him everyday practicing on different teams and playing. I guess it helped us because we got closer.

"I don't know how much closer we can get, but I guess it is always going to help us when it comes down to playing on the court."

Off the court, Travieso, along with some of his teammates, have become a role model for the nation's Hispanic community. While his hard work and dedication pay off in athletics, he feels this is something that can be applied to life in general.

"It's [speaking to the Hispanic community] important because we are doing something that is positive," Travieso said. "We are in college and playing basketball so a lot of kids look up to us. A lot of people in the Hispanic community look up to us because of what we were able to accomplish.

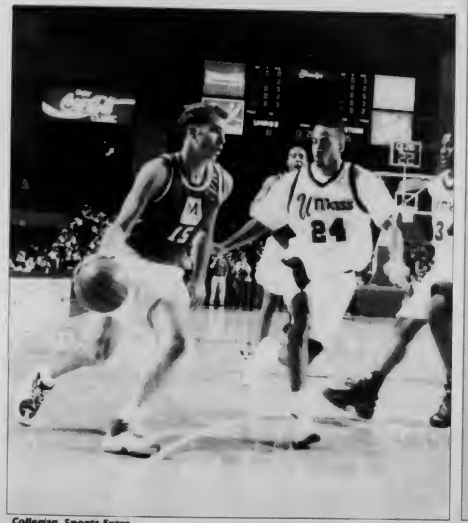
"We like to go out and talk to these people to let them know that we come from the same background and it just took a little bit of desire and determination to get to where we wanted to go. If you work at something, you can do the same thing."

Travieso will have to be a role model for his team as well. With the addition of six rookie players, some of whom will see considerable minutes in the frontcourt, he and Padilla will be the glue that holds the team together.

"At first it's going to be a little bit different because we have to adjust to their style of play and they will have to adjust to our style," Travieso said. "But that is what practice is for, that's what the coaches are there for, to restrict people's games, to tell players what they need to do so we can gel together as a team."

Regardless, Travieso thinks the team's style of play is much more important than who is on the court. In fact, he sees shadows of past UMass teams similar to this year's squad.

"We've won a lot of games here because of our effort and our style of play," he said. "Not because of who jumps higher, who shoots better, or who looks better. We win games the old fashioned way, we just go out there and tough it out."



Playing his final year in maroon and white, Travieso is beginning to think of life after the last whistle sounds. When former UMass coach John Calipari joined the NBA's New Jersey Nets, he remarked that he would be interested in signing one of his former guards.

"You always try to reach as far as you can go as far as you can push yourself," he said of playing in the NBA. "The NBA, that's as far as you can go in basketball, that's where everybody wants to play. Hopefully, I'll get the opportunity, but not that many people get to play with that elite group of players."

And if his dream of playing with the big boys doesn't come true?

"I'm a finance major and I've always wanted to be a stock broker, so hopefully I'll be in the money one way or the other."

Either way, the Minutemen have struck it rich in the backcourt.

Carmelo Travieso

6-2 • 180
Sr. Guard • Boston

"We win games the old fashioned way, we just go out there and tough it out."
–Carmelo Travieso

1995-96
12.6 ppg, 79 assists, 49 steals

Career
7.2 ppg, 121 assists, 71 steals

Tyrone Weeks

6-7 • 260
Sr. Forward
Philadelphia

"As long as Ty plays the way he has in the past, rebound the ball and play great defense, that's showing what needs to be done by example."
–James "Bruiser" Flint

1995-96
5.8 ppg, 5.2 rpg,
17 blocks
Career
5.1 ppg, 5.0 rpg,
29 blocks

TY'S TIME TO SHINE

Weeks brings experience, leadership to team

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Sports

We've all seen the Sports Center highlights.

It's tournament time and the current, soon–to–be NBA super–star is strutting his stuff after throwing down a crowd-pleasing jam. He averages 25 points a game and he and the rest of the world knows it.

There is something to be said about quiet, consistent leadership and the Massachusetts men's basketball team has a prime example of such in senior tri–captain Tyrone Weeks.

Throughout his last two years on the floor for the Minutemen, Weeks has been a quiet leader. While playing alongside one of the strongest frontcourts in the nation last year, the Philadelphia native proved to be one of the NCAA's top sixth men.

This year, things have changed.

Gone is the front court duo of forwards Dana Dingle and Donta Bright. With two big holes to fill and a roster deep in rookie talent, Weeks will not only be playing an increased role on the court but in the locker room as well.

After sitting out his first year due to Prop 48 restrictions and battling through injuries his sophomore and junior seasons, the 6–foot–7, 260–pound power forward comes to the 1996–97 campaign free from injury.

"He worked hard this summer and he's in great shape," Massachusetts coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "We talked a lot this summer. This is the first year he has really been healthy in the preseason and he has actually been able to work over the summer.

"We've just got our fingers crossed and hope things work out for him because he is excited about the season. This is his opportunity to go out there and show what he can do as a full–time player."

While the media focused on the slam–dunking exploits of All–American Marcus Camby and the potent guard tandem of Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso during last year's NCAA Tournament, Weeks battled in the shadows, putting up some impressive numbers.

In UMass' 79–63 Sweet Sixteen win over Arkansas last year, he led the Minutemen with 16 points and seven boards. In the squad's 86–62 beating of Georgetown in the Elite Eight, Weeks led UMass with eight rebounds in the win.

Night after night, Weeks came off the bench and played with the aggressive intensity that is UMass basketball whenever his team needed him, whether it be for eight minutes or 28 minutes.

However, he often stepped onto the court in pain, hampered by a nagging foot injury that by season's end had many writers speculating if he would even play this year.

Why? Why would someone inflict pain upon themselves night after night?

"I knew that my team needed me and that once I quit, things might not work out for us," Weeks said. "I wasn't worried about myself, I was more worried about the team. Once I walked out onto the court, I blocked all of that [pain] out and played hard for everyone."

As a senior, Weeks will be one of a handful of veterans looked upon to shape the attitudes of the younger players, yet this is not something new to him.

"I tell [the rookies] don't ever give up, don't ever stop playing," Weeks explained. "When you are on the court, play as hard as you can and it will get better for you. Because if you don't play hard, then you won't get better as a player."

His coach sees him as a leader as well.

"He was a leader last year," Flint said. "He was a leader in the locker room. He made guys come out and do what they were supposed to do. As long as Ty plays the way he has in the past, rebound the ball and play great defense, that's showing what needs to be done by example.

"If a guy gets out of hand and he has to get on him a little bit, that's fine too. That's what senior leadership is all about. I always tell my guys that you don't have to be vocal, you have to lead by example, and that's what Tyrone does."

Turn to WEEKS, page 38

COLLEGE BREAK SPECIALS
Ski Europe This Year for $998

Great Skiing... Fabulous Price... Ambiance

DATES: JANUARY 10-17, 1997, OR MARCH 14-21, 1997

INTERLAKEN IN SWITZERLAND

Ski the fantastic Jungfrau ski region. The world's longest lift (Shilthorn)... highest railway station (Jungfraujoch)... highest restaurant (Piz Gloria). Close-by Berne, Switzerland's medieval capital.

Trip Includes:
Round Trip on Swiss Air from Boston or JFK to Zurich (Newark & Philly available)
6 Nights Accommodations, Breakfast & Dinner Daily
Airport Transfers, Taxes and Service

We offer Ski & Adventure Travel packages throughout the United States, Canada, & Europe. Please contact Linda for your full color brochure.

Ski 93 Trips & Adventure Travel
P.O. Box 338, Auburn, NH 03032
Call Toll Free 1-800-845-7669 or 603-483-2933
Visit our site: http: /www.Ski93Trips.com
E-Mail: Ski93Trips@Worldnet.att.net

◆ Vegetarian Chili
◆ Hot Mulled Cider
◆ Soup & Sandwich...
◆ and "The Best Coffee in the Valley"

ADVOCATE ★ BEST OF THE VALLEY READERS POLL ★ 1996

103 N. Pleasant
Amherst

Open
7 Days
a Week

MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Proud Home of UMass basketball and
YOUR ENTERTAINMENT DESTINATION
THE GREATEST COLLEGE BASKETBALL FANS IN THE COUNTRY!
Box Office & Event Information (413) 545-0505
Public Skating & Racquetball (413) 545-3990
Function Room Rentals Group Sales, Administration (413)545-3001

AWARD WINNING LOCAL SERVICE
• Full Service Autobody Insurance Approved
• Full Selection of Genuine GM Goodwrench parts.
• Mass. State Inspection Station #3243
• Fine Selection of New and Used Cars & Trucks.
• Ask About Our FREE 18 Point
PAIGE'S Amherst CHEVROLET Geo
DICKINSON ST. • BETWEEN RT. 9 & MAIN ST.
253-3444 • PARTS LINE 253-5928

WINTERBREAK & SPRINGBREAK
Ski Snowboard
Party in the Snow
From Only $229
5 Day Lift Ticket
5 Nights Luxury Condo or Hotel
5 Days & Nights of intercollegiate Parties / Contests
INTERCOLLEGIATE SKI & SNOWBOARD WEEKS '97
• Mt. Orford
• Mt. Tremblant
• Mt. St. Anne
CANADA
Sponsors Include Molson & Labatts
PLEASE NOTE LEGAL DRINKING AGE is 18
Call or E-Mail For a Free Color Brochure
www.skitravel.com
• Discount For Group Leaders
• Campus Reps Can Earn a Free Trip
SKI TRAVEL UNLIMITED
1-800-999-SKI-9

Charlton Clarke

6-3 • 205
So. Guard • Bronx, N.Y.

"You don't key on me, I'll kill you. That's the mentality I have. If everybody's going to slack off on me, I'm just going to kill them softly."
–Charlton Clarke

1995-96
1.4 ppg, 16 assists, 10 steals
Career
1.4 ppg, 16 assists, 10 steals

SITTING PRETTY

Clarke brings depth to nation's best backcourt

By Casey Kane
Collegian Sports

After Charlton Clarke went down with a broken bone in his foot during the Massachusetts men's basketball team's season opener against Kentucky last year, the effect of the injury was two-fold.

The then freshman was burdened by not only his foot, but also by the weighty expectations regarding his play.

As one of the two top-rated recruits UMass brought in that year (along with Lari Ketner), Clarke was expected to perform well, and perform early.

After missing 14 games, the guard struggled to regain his form and shooting touch.

But it is a new year and Clarke is prepared to prove his worth to those who doubt his ability.

"I'm on a warpath, I can really say," Clarke said. "I feel like I have to prove myself to everybody. Basically come out and be the player I know I can be."

Clarke now has the framework to do just that.

Last year he laid the foundation, learning the guard-game from UMass' current starting tandem, Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso. Even while injured, Clarke was able to watch the two, talk to them, preparing himself mentally until he was eventually able to play against them, and others.

"There is no pressure [on me]," Clarke said. "I'm in cruise control right now. I'm at the top of the ship."

This past summer Clarke was a member of Team America, an elite group of collegiate athletes who played a two-week tour in Italy. He was a standout on the trip, averaging 22 points 7 rebounds and 5 assists per game.

The sophomore was named the team's most valuable player after guiding the group to a 8-1 record, including a 30-point win over the Italian Junior National Team.

"I went over there to get my confidence back. I lost a lot of weight, I was working out all that time," Clarke said. "A trip like that made me get my confidence back. I played with a lot of great college players who have proven themselves. For me to go down there with them was a big thrill for me."

This year, Clarke will be the man UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint will rely on to relieve Padilla and Travieso. A versatile player, Clarke can either run the point or play the off-guard, making him a valuable resource off the bench for Flint.

"If Edgar goes out with foul trouble I'm at the one [position], if Carmelo goes out with foul trouble I'm at the two," Clarke said. "I'm there to take off pressure from [Edgar and Carmelo] because everybody's going to be gunning for them this year. Basically, I'm there to say 'Listen, those are my two guys and they're on my team and that's not going to happen.'"

Clarke is happy with his role on this year's team. He is slowly making the transition into a leadership role, while still learning the system.

"I'm definitely comfortable with my role on this team," Clarke said. "There's no pressure. I'll come in and get my quiet 15, quiet 20 and everybody'll be like 'where did he come from?'

"Nobody's expecting me to do anything because I didn't do anything last year. You don't key on me, I'll kill you," he continued. "That's the mentality I have. If everybody's going to slack off on me, I'm just going to kill them softly."

Before UMass, Clarke was a stand-out at St. Raymond's in the Bronx. There he averaged 27.6 points, 7.3 rebounds and 5.4 assists a game.

"In high school I was aggressive," he said. "I took the ball to the basket and shot whenever I felt comfortable. Basically be a player. Last year I wasn't a player, I was anxious and fidgety. Now I just have to slow down a step, play like the player that I am and have fun."

Last season at UMass, Clarke played alongside fellow St. Raymond's alum, Dana Dingle. This year, Clarke's uniform is emblazoned with No. 3, Dingle's old number, a fact Clarke attributes to his summer success in the number and a silent tribute to Dingle.

"I felt like last year the No. 5 gave me bad luck," he said. "I changed it to three because I wore it a couple of times when I was home, and plus because of Dana. Dana went to my high school and I felt like he didn't get the recognition in that number like he should have."

Welcome UMass Student Credit Union members to your team!

NEW BENEFITS for UMass Student Credit Union members:

- FREE ATM card
- free checking
- computer loans
- 24 hour Audio Teller access

If you're not a credit union member now, make your move to the UMass Five College Federal Credit Union today!

UMass Five College Federal Credit Union

6 University Drive • Amherst • 549-7400
Across the street from Rafter's

Starting January 2, 1997

NCUA

UMass basketball 96-97

MEN'S

Nov. [illegible]	[illegible] Maui Invitational
Nov. [illegible]	at Dunmade • [illegible]:00pm ESPN
Dec. 1	Georgetown • [illegible]:40pm ESPN
	(DirecTV Great Eight at United Center, Chicago)
Dec. 7	Wyoming • [illegible]:00pm WGGB
Dec. 10	Fresno St. • [illegible]:40pm ESPN
Dec. 12	Drexel • [illegible]:00pm WGGB
Dec. 14	at Wake Forest • [illegible]:40pm ESPN
Dec. 20	North Carolina • 9:00pm ESPN
	(Jimmy V Classic
	at Meadowlands, NJ)
Dec. [illegible]	at UNC-Wilmington • [illegible]:40pm ESPN
Dec. [illegible]	Connecticut • [illegible]:00pm ESPN
	(Clash at Hartford Civic Center)
Jan. 2	Davidson • 6:00pm ESPN2
Jan. 5	St. Joseph's • 7:00pm
Jan. 8	at La Salle • 8:00pm
Jan. 12	Virginia Tech • 7:00pm
Jan. 14	St. Bonaventure • 9:00pm ESPN2
Jan. 18	Boston College • 7:00pm CBS
	(Commonwealth Classic at Fleet Center)
Jan. 21	Rhode Island* • [illegible]:40pm
Jan. 25	at Temple • 12:00pm ESPN
Jan. 30	at George Washington • [illegible]:40pm ESPN
Feb. 1	Xavier* • 7:00pm ABC
Feb. [illegible]	at Fordham • 9:00pm MSG
Feb. 6	Duquesne* • 7:30pm
Feb. 8	at Rhode Island* • 12:00pm ESPN
Feb. 11	St. Bonaventure* • 7:30pm
Feb. 15	Maryland • 4:30pm ABC
	(at Worcester Centrum)
Feb. 20	Fordham • 7:00pm WGGB
Feb. [illegible]	at Dayton* • 7:00pm
Feb. [illegible]	at St. Joseph's* • 9:40pm ESPN2
Mar. 1	Temple* • 7:00pm ABC
Mar. 5-8	A-10 Tournament
	(at Core States Spectrum)

* Atlantic 10 opponents

WOMEN'S

Nov. 24	Ohio State
Nov. [illegible]	at Lehigh
Nov. [illegible]
[illegible] Dec. 1	Hartford Connecticut Connecticut Classic
Nov. [illegible]	at Connecticut
Dec. 1	UNLV Vol
Dec. [illegible]	at Stanford
Dec. [illegible]	at Holy Cross
Dec. 11	Kent
Dec. 22	Hartford
Dec. [illegible]	St. Women Christmas Tournament
Dec. [illegible]	at Women
Dec. [illegible]	New Hampshire Colegate
Jan. 4	Rhode Island
Jan. [illegible]	at Fordham
Jan. 11	at St. Bonaventure
Jan. 16	La Salle
Jan. 18	at Duquesne
Jan. 21	at Rhode Island*
Jan. [illegible]	St. Joseph's
Jan. 25	Temple
Jan. 29	at Virginia Tech
Feb. 2	George Washington
Feb. [illegible]	at Temple
Feb. [illegible]	at St. Joseph's*
Feb. 13	St. Bonaventure*
Feb. 16	Fordham
Feb. 19	at Xavier*
Feb. 22	Dayton*

Atlantic 10 Championships

Feb. [illegible]	Opening round (Campus site)
Feb. [illegible]	Quarterfinal (Campus site)
Mar. [illegible]	Semifinal
	(Campus of highest remaining seed)
Mar. [illegible]	Championship game
	(Campus of highest remaining seed)

* Atlantic 10 opponents

Work Over Break

We are offering great temporary pa[illegible] taking inventories near your home d[illegible] January Break.

CONSIDER ALL WE HAVE TO OFFER:

- Starting Salary from $6.50 to $7.50 /Hour
- Paid Training and Management Programs
- Morning, Evening and Weekend Hours
- Flexible Schedules • Potential for Advancement • $$$ Potential •
- ☆ Ideal for Students ☆

WORK 30 OR MORE HOURS DURING WINTER BREAK.

District Phone #s:

Boston- (617)484-1788; North Boston- (508)657-5522; South Boston- (508)821-5889; Plymouth & Cape Cod- (508)833-0750; New Hampshire- (603)472-8483; Maine- (207)854-0500; Worcester- (508)832-6152; Springfield(local)- (413)737-4934; Providence, R.I.- (508)336-5655; Hartford, Conn.- (860)645-6573

RGIS INVENTORY SPECIALISTS

Interviewing at UMass Campus Center

Dec. 10 8:30AM-8:30PM RM. 162-75

Dec. 11 8:30AM-1:30PM RM. 168C
1:30PM-8:30PM RM. 911-15

OCMP

THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN

CURRENTLY FEATURING THESE FINE RESTAURANTS:

Just because you're a college student doesn't mean you have to eat like one

Amber Waves

Newman Center Cafeteria

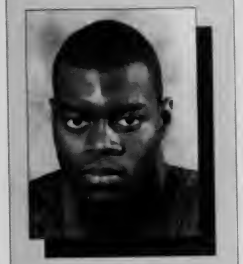
The Black Sheep

El Acuna

Amherst Delivers

Rafter's Sports Bar & Restaurant

Subway



Cutty's

DeLano's

Bueno Y Sano

FOR MORE INFO:
1-888-211-6267

Inus Norville

6-8 • 225
Jr. Forward
Fayetteville, N.C.

"I'm ready to do whatever they ask me. I'll go in and rebound, defend, run the court, grab loose balls. Just play hard and have fun."

–Inus Norville

1995-96
2.4 ppg, 2.1 rpg,
22 blocks
Career
2.5 ppg, 2.2 rpg,
43 blocks

RISING TO THE TOP

Veteran forward adds experience to frontcourt

By Steven Grant
Collegian Sports

Marcus Camby, the last of five teammates running back to the defensive end, raises his fist in the air after passing half-court. John Calipari turns and points to his sub, already on the edge of his seat. At the next whistle, No. 50 heads into the game, and holds down the fort until the superstar catches his breath.

That was a frequent scenario last season, when the Massachusetts basketball team was headed for the Final Four and its greatest year ever.

Now Camby and Coach Cal have headed for bigger and better things, but Inus Norville, No. 50, still remains.

The opportunity, however big or small, is now there for Norville to decide when he enters a game. And if he makes the most of it, he'll be the one telling coach James "Bruiser" Flint when he wants out of a game.

The question is, can he be the next man in the middle, or will the spot go to an aspiring, hungry newcomer like Lari Ketner or Ajmal Basit?

"I don't know what exactly my role on this team is right now, to tell you the truth," said Norville. "It's like Coach Flint said, anybody can start. So we'll see. I'm ready to do whatever they ask me. I'll go in and rebound, defend, run the court, grab loose balls. Just play hard and have fun."

That's been Norville's philosophy to date, and when you're backing up the best player in the nation, it's probably one of the best there is. Actually, when given quality minutes, the man his teammates refer to as "Big Dog" has put up quality numbers.

Last season, when Camby left the Southern California game with an injury, Norville came up with nine points on 4-for-6 shooting, eight rebounds and three blocks in 28 minutes. Seven games later, when he notched 10 points and four boards in 27 minutes at Duquesne.

Although he seems to shy away from discussing the idea, Norville has at least a chance at logging serious minutes on a regular basis.

"Time will tell, I can't predict," he said. "Anything can happen. I could go down tomorrow and break my leg or something. Right now, I'm just hoping this team will come together and be successful as soon as possible."

The Minutemen's lone junior thinks it's just a matter of time.

"It's hard to say just when," he says. "It depends on how well we play with each other. We're such a young team. In a couple of weeks or so, when everybody learns all the plays, we'll be a good team."

Norville feels the program didn't skip a beat when it replaced Calipari with Flint to teach those plays, especially with experienced players like Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso easing the transition. He sees the two coaches as different individuals but

Turn to NORVILLE page 38

L-TRAIN ARRIVES

Sophomore Lari Ketner has some big shoes to fill

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Sports

Put quite bluntly, the last guy who played center for the Massachusetts men's basketball team was fairly decent.

There will be a new face camped out under the basket at the William D. Mullins Center this year though, and while he's received hype in several preseason national publications, Lari Ketner realizes that he is not No. 21.

"[Marcus Camby] was a different type of player," Ketner said. "He was a lot more versatile than me. I'm more of a true center, so there aren't many comparisons. We're different. People will probably expect things out of me that they would probably expect out of Marcus, but I'm going to focus on what I can do."

For a year Ketner watched from the sidelines, sitting out last year as a Prop 48 student. An example of what a hard-worker Ketner is, though, is that he earned a spot on the Athletic Director's Honor Roll last year with a GPA of over 3.0.

Unlike most newcomers, he has had a year to bond with his teammates, get acquainted with his new surroundings, and most of all, get a sense of the grit and tenacity that defines what John Calipari always referred to as simply "UMass basketball."

Ketner has never played a regular-season minute in Amherst, but the 6-foot-10, 270-pound center from Philadelphia has already been billed as an NBA prospect. Camby proved his NBA worthiness by dominating against some of the nation's top centers.

In 1996-97, Ketner's first collegiate season will see him posting up against Tim Duncan at Wake Forest, Alexander Koul of George Washington, and Temple's Marc Jackson, a preseason third-team Dickie V. Rolls Royce.

"I wanted to play against the best and I'm going to get my opportunity this year," an excited Ketner said.

It isn't only on the court, but on the sidelines where Ketner will face challenges, James "Bruiser" Flint will be matching wits this year against the best in the business (Dean Smith, John Thompson, Roy Williams, Jerry Tarkanian, John Chaney, et. al.) many of which will no doubt attempt to pressure the rookie.

Here, the year of collegiate seasoning has helped prepare Ketner, who knows his role on the team and what he will need to do and what his teammates are capable of doing.

"I have to rebound and be a solid low-post player," Ketner said. "I hustle, dive out of bounds for balls, and try to be in the right place at the right time on offense and defense. I'm here for rebounding, defensive shot blocking and some scoring here and there."

Flint agrees.

"If he can come out here and rebound the ball and play good defense, that's all I ask," Flint said of Ketner's place on his team. "If he can do that, we'll be fine."

Ketner exhibited his defensive skills in the two exhibition games, which the team played prior to press time, while also demonstrating a sweet little hook shot on the offensive end of the court with great touch.

Ketner will quickly look to emerge from Camby's shadow and establish himself as an equally effective, yet different player.

No writer, trainer or coach is going to get on Ketner about bulking up the same way they did with Camby. Ketner is his own center who would just like to play his game, and prove himself to UMass fans.

"I just have to come in here to play and show the fans what I have," Ketner said. "The coaches and players know what I can do, now I just have to show the school. Marcus is gone and I have to fill in his shoes and I'm anxious to show everybody what I can do and get that whole comparison thing over with."

Playing center with different styles, Ketner might hope the on-court comparisons to Camby soon end, and that he is only mentioned in Camby's breath three years from now; when the Media Relations staff is placing his name besides Camby's in the school's record book.

Lari Ketner

6-10 • 270
So. Center
Philadelphia, PA

"If he can come out here and rebound the ball and play good defense, that's all I ask. If he can do that we'll be fine."

–James "Bruiser" Flint

High school
Roman Catholic High
Philadelphia
24.0 ppg, 15.0 rpg,
4.6 bpg

WIR SPRECHEN VOLKSWAGEN

The Valley's largest VW inventory! Whether it's a tune-up or a full blown restoration project, from engine valves and bearings to door handles or gas caps, we have the parts for just about any model VW ever made! Plus a full inventory for Japanese and Korean cars and trucks.

WE SPEAK VOLKSWAGEN!

It All Starts With Parts...

BECK/ARNLEY WORLDPARTS

PELHAM

AUTO PARTS

ROUTE 9

AMHERST/ BELCHERTOWN LINE

256-0457

WELCOME STUDENTS

FRIENDS, RELATIVES & VISITORS!

KLEIN'S ALL★SPORTS

Welcomes You To The Convenient Hampshire Mall Location.

KLEIN'S ALL SPORTS COUPON

RECEIVE

20% OFF

ANY NON-SALE ITEM

EXPIRES 1/31/96

HAMPSHIRE MALL, HADLEY

KLEIN'S ALL★SPORTS

FOR ALL YOUR SPORTING GOOD NEEDS!!

NATIVE SON SEEKS IDENTITY

Mass. product Mike Babul looks to contribute in first season

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Sports

Identity.

An identity is something that every freshman searches for in his first semester on campus. Whether you are an English major, a pre-med prodigy or a standout recruit for the top-ranked Massachusetts men's basketball team, you spend the early portion of your college career trying to find out exactly who you are.

Freshman swingman Mike Babul doesn't, by any means, suffer from an identity crisis, but for the first time since he was seven years old, he won't be known as one of the Babul twins.

Now, he is simply 6-foot-6 Mike Babul, a true freshman with tremendous athletic ability who will vie for the starting small forward spot on one of the nation's best collegiate basketball teams.

On the other hand, Mike's twin brother, Jon, is a true freshman with tremendous athletic talent who will compete for a starting position on one of the nation's top collegiate basketball teams.

Identity crisis? Nah.

Jon will be toiling on the Georgia Tech hardwood for the next four years, and it will be a new experience for the UMass Babul not being on the floor with his partner-in-womb.

"It was a tough adjustment, at first," said Babul of playing basketball without brother. "It is difficult without him because we used to help each other out, but it hasn't been that hard because I'm surrounded by good players.

"Like, in high school it was just basically me and Jon, and a few other kids. Now, everybody's just so good which makes the adjustment that much easier."

Babul, alongside his brother, was a standout at North Attleboro High School in eastern Mass. where he averaged 20 points and eight boards during his senior season, establishing himself as one of the top 60 high school hoopsters in the country (as rated by Reidel's Roundball Review).

Over the summer, Babul played with UMass teammate Monty Mack on the Boston entrant in the Boston Shootout, winning the tourney for the Hub and displaying the kind of talent that was headed Amherst's way.

New Jersey sent a team to Boston that included Ajmal Basit and Winston Smith; so, the b-ball fans in Beantown got a first hand look at what will be going on in western Mass. for the next four years.

"[The Boston Shootout] was fun," Babul said. "It was the second year I played in it, so I was used to the atmosphere. It was good to play in the tournament with Monty. We had a great team."

Babul was on a great team this summer where he was pretty much The Man, or at the very least one of The Men. Now, he's one of five freshmen and six newcomers (Lari Ketner is a Prop 48 sophomore) to join one of the nation's best squads. He's just one of the guys looking for playing time.

Looking to fit in. Looking for an identity.

"I'd like to come in and make a pretty good contribution my freshman year, score some baskets and mainly play good defense and rebound," Babul said of his role on this year's team. "There's a little pressure to perform [in the home state]; a lot of people know who I am. I want to do good and people probably expect it.

"I just want to get some time this year, contribute and progress every year."

UMass head man Bruiser Flint acknowledges the fact that with Babul and Co., he has a corps of freshmen that needs to perform.

"Since I have five [freshmen], they're going to have to play a large role. If my freshmen don't play, I've got four guys, so they're going to have to play," Flint said. "They're going to have to go out there and give it their best shot, but they're freshmen. At times they don't understand the intensity level that they have to play with."

Therein lies the adjustment for Babul, and the rest of his freshman squad. It's a whole new ball game in college, and Babul will have to quickly find out what kind of player he can be at UMass if the Minutemen are to live up to their vast potential in the near future.

He knows the team's identity, he just needs to figure out his own.

Mike Babul

6-6 • 190
Fr. Forward
North Attleboro

"There's a little pressure to perform, a lot of people know who I am. I want to do a good job, and people probably expect it."
–Mike Babul

LEARNING FROM THE BEST

Mack to learn backcourt system while sitting out this season

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Sports

Monty Mack can still remember the first time he knew he wanted to be a Minuteman.

"When they beat North Carolina," Mack said. "I was watching the game with my friend and he asked me if I'd go to UMass if they asked me, and I said yes."

When Mike Williams hit the game-ahead bucket in the Minutemen's 10-8[illegible] win over North Carolina in the 1993 Preseason NIT, he not only helped UMass defeat the No. 1 team in the nation, he also set the program up for the future.

For the 1997–98 season, that is.

One of the more vaunted newcomers in the most recent recruiting class, Monty Mack will have to sit out the 1996–97 season due to academic guidelines. Mack scored 810 on his SAT's, but NCAA guidelines require an 820 to play.

"It's real disappointing, because I came only 10 points away," Mack said. "But practice will make me better. If I work hard this year, I'll be ready for next season."

One of two Massachusetts products in the new class (along with Mike Babul), Mack comes to Amherst from South Boston High, where he averaged 19.7 points and 7.3 rebounds his senior year. In addition, he, along with Babul, was named to the Boston Herald's "Dream Team", and was ranked among the top 75 recruits in America by Reidel's Roundball Review.

But the most impressive work Mack has done to date occurred in June's Boston Shootout. He scored 26 points per game, and was named Most Valuable Player of the Shootout while leading Boston to the title.

The addition of Mack brings versatility to UMass' backcourt. He can either play point guard or off-guard, and his style of play is in line with the tradition of UMass basketball.

"Hard and smart," said Mack of how he likes to play. "And you have to play with your heart."

Mack will have some pretty big shoes to fill come next season. Carmelo Travieso and Edgar Padilla, senior captains often touted as the "nation's best backcourt," will be graduating, leaving Mack, along with Charlton Clarke and newly signed Rafael Cruz to run the show. But as Mack watches from the sidelines this year, he has already picked up a lot from the senior leaders.

"I knew Carmelo from before, because we played on the same summer league team in Dorchester," Mack said. "He's helped me out by telling me where to go, how to do things. Edgar has helped me defensively, because he's one of the best defenders in the country."

Mack was mostly recruited by James "Bruiser" Flint and John Robic, under ex-coach John Calipari. Calipari left in June to take over the NBA's New Jersey Nets job, leaving Flint with the job of molding this new class to UMass standards.

"I felt closer to Bruiser [because he recruited me]. I wanted to play for Coach Cal, but his goal was to become an NBA coach, and I wouldn't want to stop him from achieving his dream, just like I wouldn't want anyone to stop me from achieving my goals."

One of the first returns to Comic to UMass since the Minutemen reached the pinnacle of their success by playing in the Final Four last April, Mack said he can feel the tradition built by his predecessors.

"You can feel the tradition when you step in [the William D. Mullin Central]

Turn to MACK, page 38

SKI THE B-EAST

BERKSHIRE EAST

- Vertical Drop 1,180'
- 33 Diverse Trails
- Night Skiing
- 4 lifts: 1 Summit Triple Chairlift, 2 Double Chairlifts, 1 Surface Lift
- 100% Snowmaking
- 2 Base Lodges: Crazy Horse Lounge
- Live Music Friday Nights

NEW 96/97

Blizzard Island — Forest Managed Skiing & Boarding Terrain

Half Pipe — Snowboarding Zone

Snow Making — New Pipes Lines and Snowmaking Guns

Student Lift Tickets Only
Weekend & Holidays $25 / Weekdays $20 / Nights $12

Custom Mid Week Pass
ONLY $99
Customize your own Pass.
Choose 1 weekday (Monday thru Friday) PLUS get 1 night FREE (Wed thru Friday)
Example: Wednesday days and Friday Nights
Ski or Ride the entire season on your day & night

Great Gift Ideas!

Berkshire East Ski Area
P.O. Box 727
South River Road
Charlemont, MA 01339
413-339-6617

HOT MAMA'S™
Super Natural Foods
The Valley's Favorite Salsa, Dips & Hummus Available at
UMass People's Market
Also Available at Stop & Shop, Bread & Cicus and other fine stores throughout the Valley

KICKIN' IT AT UMASS

Two-sport athlete returns to basketball court

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Sports

Sophomore Andy Maclay is one of a rare breed of athletes on the Massachusetts campus, and in the entire world of sports for that matter.

Maclay is a walk-on forward/guard on the Minuteman basketball team. That in itself is a feat to be amazed by, but what really sets the 6 foot–4 second year athlete apart from the rest of his peers is that he is the top punter and placekicker for the UMass football squad as well.

As a two-sport athlete Maclay has the ability to use each sports individual intricacies and talents and apply them to the other — a benefit that makes him particularly valuable to both head hoop coach James "Bruiser" Flint and gridiron guru Mike Hodges.

"Andy brings that football enthusiasm to the team," Flint said. "He works hard every day in practice."

Besides his tremendous, versatile athletic ability, Maclay is a standout student. In the 1995 fall semester, the Stroudsburg, Pa. native was named to the Athletic Director's Honor Roll for having a GPA over 3.0.

All of these aspects of Maclay's broad life make him a true asset to the UMass athletic department and the Massachusetts campus as a whole.

Being such an asset to both the football and basketball squads makes it essential for Maclay to be sure of the role that he plays on each team.

His role on the gridiron is fairly straightforward and in some ways similar to the role he must take on on the hardwood.

As a punter/placekicker, Maclay is a spectator for the better part of the action, so he doesn't get as much chance to contribute as a running back or a linebacker would. Those facts alone make it all the more important that he execute when he does get the chance to strut his stuff. When the UMass offense falters it is his job, and his job alone, to push the opposition's offense as far back as he can by unleashing a mighty boot.

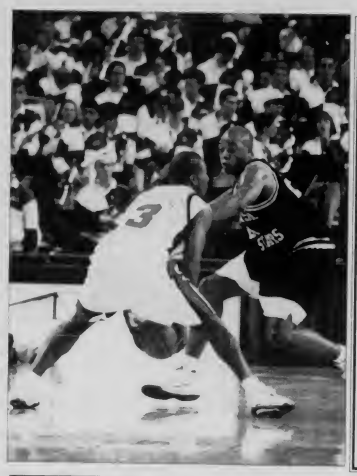
On the basketball floor, his role is a bit more subtle, and less dramatic.

As Flint mentioned he is inherently a hard worker, a guy who's going to give every ounce of energy he has for the good of the team. He is a bench player who will fight hard in practice, and sweat until he runs out of glands.

It is the job of Maclay — and fellow sophomore walk-on Ross Burns — to keep the pressure on Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso in practices.

Turn to MACLAY, page 38

Monty Mack



6-2 • 185
Fr. Guard
South Boston

Andy Maclay

6-4 • 190
So. Guard
Stroudsburg, Penn.

Jonathan Reid LTD

THE COMPLETE MEN'S STORE
HAMPSHIRE MALL
HADLEY, MA

WE SPECIALIZE IN DRESSING MEN FOR INTERVIEWS, BANQUETS OR ANY CASUAL OUTING, WITH PRICES TO FIT ANY BUDGET. WHEN APPEARANCE COUNTS, COUNT ON JONATHAN REID LTD.
WE PRIDE OURSELVES ON FRIENDLY, PROFESSIONAL, and COURTEOUS SERVICE.

BRING IN THIS AD WHEN PURCHASING ANY SUIT OR SPORT COAT AND GET 20% OFF ALL ACCESSORIES.
exp.3/30/97

It looks like the real world.
It feels like the real world.
It pays like the real world.
It's an internship.
Unreal.

Call for more information on this unbelievable opportunity

Kathleen M. Kane
The Steffen Agency
1351 Main Street
Springfield, MA 01103
413-748-6000

Northwestern Mutual Life
The Quiet Company.®

ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
Corner of Rte. 116 & Rte. 9 at South Amherst, MA (413) 253-9528

Give the perfect gift for holidays with Atkins Country Fruit & Specialty Gift Baskets.

Poinsettias • Kissing Balls • Christmas Trees & Wreaths • Candle Centerpieces • and much more!

Atkins gives A TASTE OF THE COUNTRY for the HOLIDAYS
Homemade • Pies • Breads • Cookies • Cakes • Pastries

Stop In For Shopping Pleasure!

FRESHMAN BIG-MAN STEPS IN

Basit brings size and speed to fledgling Minuteman frontcourt

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Sports

The William D. Mullins Center opens for business Saturday for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, and a new era will begin for the Minutemen.

The team will not just usher in a new coach, James "Bruiser" Flint, but a freshman class considered to be one of the best in the country.

One of those freshman that will be looked upon to fill the considerable gap left by the loss of Marcus Camby, Donta Bright and Dana Dingle in the post is 6-foot-9 Ajmal Basit.

Coming into this new era, the collegiate game will be imposing at times for the newcomers. The thing that will help Basit the most is not just playing the game, but learning the game.

Before starting his basketball education under Flint, he received his schooling in the game from one of the best in the high school ranks, Bob Hurley, Sr. Hurley is the coach of St. Anthony's in Jersey City, N.J., a basketball super talent factory. Some of the players that have come out of this school have been ex-Duke star Bobby Hurley, NBA guard Terry Dehere, and current Fordham standout Billy Lovett.

For Basit, the lessons he learned from Hurley have already taken effect on his collegiate game.

"Basically, I learned the game more than anything, and how to win," Basit said. "How to prepare yourself mentally, and now when I'm here, I can understand the things he has taught me before that I took for granted. Just about playing, taking care of your body, resting, and a lot of the mental and physical preparation you need for the game.

"The main thing is the way you practice, is the way you perform in the game. So, I practice hard, so the game is easy. That is what he taught us, practice is hell, but the game is fun.

That mental part of the game is one of Basit's assets.

The forward knows that mental mistakes can be corrected, but your physical size can not be changed. If it is a matter of using speed against a bigger player, he will blow past them for the layup. If it is a matter of having a size advantage on a smaller forward, he will use that to get the best post position.

"I have been told that you will never be the most athletic and you will never be the most talented, because no matter where you go someone will be more athletic and talented," Basit said. "But you can always play smarter than someone, and that's what I try to do.

"I try to use that to my advantage, and if I am taller than someone, I'll utilize that, and if I'm quicker, I'll utilize that. The main thing is that I have to think, and that is the key to my game."

Basit has had a stellar career up to this point, being one of the stars for Hurley, and [illegible] for the New Jersey team at this year's Boston Shootout. He averaged 16 points and 15 rebounds for St. Anthony's, and if he and fellow forward Lari Ketner can get on such a tear for UMass, visions of Camby dancing around Minutemaniac heads will no longer be an issue in this holiday season.

As the No. 1 man for a long time, he will have to get used to being the No. 2 or No. 3 man for a while, and that is no problem for him.

"This year, I think I have to get used to coming off the bench, and I might start some games. Let's don't know," Basit said. "I just have to come in, rebound, score and I am taller than other players in the 3-10 at the four [position], and quicker than a lot of the bigger guys. So, if I do those things, and then I can help the team win, and that is what I'm concerned about."

Basit received a learning experience on a member of the U.S. women's basketball squad at the Atlanta Olympics, Sheryl Swoopes. He was schooled by the gold medal-winning forward in the fact that you can not take anyone, whether male or female, easily in the game of basketball, or life.

"I just learned not to underestimate nobody," Basit said. "I thought that she was a girl, I could push her around, but she is strong. I didn't realize that those women workout, and they ain't weak. They have lots of moves, and they go hard all the time."

Early back problems have bothered Basit, and the coaching staff has wanted to be patient due to the strain a trip like the Maui Invitational can do to. But everything is fine, and he is raring to go.

"Right now, we have to play one of the toughest schedules in NCAA this year. When we play and go against the top competition we'll only get better, and four years from now, we're still going to be here.

"From all of us, the talent that is here has not fully developed yet, and the only thing that can happen is that we'll get better," Basit said. "Right now, people say that UMass is going to fall down, and things like that, but that is not true. We are young, and people have to understand that.

"The future for UMass is so bright now, and people have to understand, and look at the big picture. You are not going to find any other school with five, six, seven players that are going to be here three to four years from now. No other school in the top ten has that right now."

Ajmal
Basit

6-9 • 220
Fr. Center
Jersey City, N.J.

SMITH SWINGS INTO ACTION

New Jersey native to fill void left by loss of Dingle and Bright

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Sports

"You ain't got a thing, if you ain't got that swing." — Duke Ellington.

One of the things about jazz music is the intermingling of lead, bass and a rhythm that drives constantly, but has subtleties that both exhilarate and stimulate the cerebral cortex.

With freshman forward Winston Smith of the Massachusetts basketball team, this is one of the reasons he likes jazz, but also why he enjoys playing basketball so much.

Winston Smith

6-5 • 195
Fr. Forward
Elizabeth, N.J.

The versatility, creativity and virtual effortlessness of idols such as Michael Jordan, Magic Johnson and Larry Bird are what drives his love for the game. Simply said, he has a thing for the swing position.

"To me, basketball is like jazz. You ever listen to jazz?" Smith asked with enthusiasm. "It just flows, and when you're in a groove, you're unstoppable. Once you're in the zone, no one can guard you. One day you might be off, the next day you might be on fire. That's what I love about basketball, because it has so many mood swings."

His versatility at the small forward spot will be key for UMass this season. The team will look to reload after the departures of Final Four participants Donta Bright, Dana Dingle, each of whom could play almost anywhere on the court.

"I just want to go out hard, and play consistent basketball," Smith said. "Whenever coach wants me to play, I want to contribute.

"If he wants me to play the two, I'll play the two. If he wants me to play the three, I'll play the three, and if he wants me to play the four, I'll play four. Its not one basic position that I can play; I can play almost any position on the floor."

Smith is one of a continuing tradition of New Jersey players in Minuteman basketball. One that instantly comes to mind is UMass second all–time leader in points scored and number one rebounder, Lou Roe. While the No. 15 hangs in the rafters of the William D. Mullins Center, No. 20 will be carrying the torch of the warrior–like work ethic.

"I don't know what it is, but UMass brings a lot to the table for New Jersey players," Smith said. "Not just basketball, but a great education. A lot of people have been very friendly with us, that's what it's all about, and that's why black students want to come here. Its not just because of basketball, it's education and how people treat you."

One of his fellow Garden State–ers on this year's squad is freshman forward Ajmal Basit. They played on the New Jersey team that competed in the Boston Shootout this year, and made a connection with each other that eventually brought them both to UMass. As with any true measure of friendship, it is not the quantity of time they have spent together, but the quality.

"We worked out good for that team," Smith said. "Me and Ajmal are good friends, but he goes his way, and I go my way. That's why I think we keep a strong relationship, and it's not that we basically have to keep together all the time. "We have some really good times, and that's good. We get together and talk about things, and that's how our relationship is."

With any transition in life, the switch from the high school game to the collegiate level will be a tough one, but Smith is optimistic. He admits he has to shoot the ball more consistently, and play better defense, but he is working on those aspects of his game. Travelling will be the toughest part of the college game to get used to, though, as road trips across towns or counties are replaced by plane trips across time zones.

For Smith, the shoes of Dingle and Bright will be tough to fill, but coach James "Bruiser" Flint has been telling him to keep it to the basics.

"With Dana [Dingle] and Donta [Bright], they were seniors and they had the chance to score more," Smith said. "With this team, and the small forwards, all we have to do is play good defense and rebound. That's all the coach is asking from us right now, a good hard effort."

The versatility of Smith as a player appears will translate to the team as a whole. With fellow freshmen Chris Kirkland, Mike Babul and Basit, the ability to play more than one position can only help the team down the line. He compares this squad's potential to last year's Kentucky squad, but of course, without the instantly recognizable star power.

"People are going to fear our versatility, with all of our players, and people will fear our press," Smith said. "We have so many guys coming at you now, not just seven guys like last year, we will be eight, nine, ten players deep. So, a lot of people will be scared of us, because we will keep coming at you, and keep coming at you."

"This class brings a lot to the table, versatility and strength. Give us two years, and this program will still be on the rise. This class is real good."

FITTING INTO THE UMASS MOLD

Preseason hustle has coaches praising Kirkland's work ethic

By Mike Corey
Collegian Sports

After last season, the departure of forwards Donta Bright and Dana Dingle had the skeptics and fans thinking that, in 1996 the Minutemen might be lacking the front court players necessary for success.

Fortunately, the Minutemen have Chris Kirkland, a 6–foot–6, 200–pound freshman from Pittsburgh, Pa., who is a strong candidate for the starting spot at small forward. Along with senior Tyrone Weeks, Kirkland should provide a good balance for the Minutemen up front with his quick athletic ability, making him a very versatile player, one of the same caliber as Bright and Dingle.

Kirkland shows good speed, with the ability to take his man off the dribble to the basket, or to pull up for the outside jumper. He also has the ability to work well down low in the post position, and says that Weeks and junior Inus Norville have helped him get adjusted to the UMass system.

"On the court, if I don't know where to go they're always telling me to go here, do this, do that, and that's really big here with these guys," Kirkland said.

Coming out of Sto Rox High School in Pittsburgh, Kirkland averaged 25.9 points and 13.1 boards in his senior year, on his way to earning Western Pennsylvania Player of the Year and Pittsburgh Post–Gazette Player of the Year honors. As a junior, Kirkland put down 20 points a game along with 14.7 boards while leading his team to the Western Pennsylvania Championship.

Kirkland, who has been playing basketball since junior high, said that it was his brother that got him started and interested in the game of hoop.

"My brother influenced me to play basketball," Kirkland said. "When he was in high school I used to go to his games and see him play, and I always tried to be like him."

Back in the early days, Kirkland was a guard before making the switch to forward, even spending time at center in high school. Highly recruited by a host of schools including North Carolina, Villanova, Duquense, and Pittsburgh, Kirkland explained why he chose UMass.

"I like the way they play, they play under control, they're aggressive, they rebound and are big on defense," Kirkland said. "They've got a great system and I think I can fit in here."

So far, Kirkland has been exposed right off the bat to the UMass style of play and said that head coach James "Bruiser" Flint has them practicing hard, and that he's starting to adapt to UMass basketball.

"Bruiser is making us work hard, and he makes it tough because he wants everybody to be competitive and to work harder," Kirkland said. "I think that I'm getting pretty adjusted and starting to learn how everyone plays. My goal is to just play hard and help the team to win."

After a magical season a year ago, Kirkland will be one of the many new freshman called upon to step in and fill some pretty big voids left from last year's UMass squad.

Once again, the Minutemen know they have not been handed a token schedule, and Kirkland knows the expectations at UMass, of himself, and the pressure they both entail.

"I think there's pressure for the whole team, because of what they did last year, but we just have to go out and play hard," Kirkland said. "As for me personally, I think I put a lot of pressure on myself to go out and do good 'cause a lot of people might say, 'who is this guy, I've never seen him play and I don't know if he's that good.'"

Kirkland will have an opportunity to play this season and to prove his abilities. Expect him to log some quality minutes for the Minutemen, along with many of the newcomers stepping in for UMass this season. Kirkland is the kind of player who with his dunks, rebounds and steals, will look to continue to add excitement to the UMass game. He knows his business out on the court, but while off it he says he is just a relaxed kind of guy.

"I just like to go out and have fun, and with this team these guys are fun to be with," Kirkland said. "I don't like to be serious all the time, I like to hang out, but on the court it's a time to get serious and I think we're going to show that this season."

Chris Kirkland

6-6 • 200
Fr. Forward
Pittsburgh

"They are a great system and I think I can fit in here."
–Chris Kirkland

High School
Sto Rox High
Pittsburgh
25.9 ppg, 13.1 rpg

CAMPUS CENTER HOTEL

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

We're Here to serve you... and your guests, colleagues, family & friends.

A FULL SERVICE HOTEL
EASILY ACCESSIBLE TO ANYONE IN THE 5 COLLEGE COMMUNITY

VISA · AMERICAN EXPRESS
Free HBO
DISCOVER · MasterCard

Features:
•116 Modern Hotel Rooms • Several Dining Alternatives
•Short Walk to the Mullins Center
•Special Parking Rates in the Adjoining Garage
•Special Discounted Rates

Best of luck to UMass Basketball in the upcoming season

Call Today: 549-6000 For Your Reservations

more info: http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~uvctv19

UMass Minuteman Basketball

UVC-TV 19 proudly presents another year of ESPN on UVC.
Look for these basketball games on UVC-TV 19 channel 19 on HSCN.
Including pre- and post- game shows.

Nov. 25	Maui Invitational: UMass at Chaminade	1:30pm
Nov. 26	Second Round	6:30pm
Nov. 27	Final Round	10:00pm
Dec. 4	Great Eight: Umass vs. Georgetown	7:30pm
Dec. 10	Fresno State	7:30pm
Dec. 14	Wake Forest*	8:30pm
Jan. 30	George Washington*	7:30pm
Feb. 8	Rhode Island	12:00pm
Feb. 25	St. Joseph's	12:00pm
Mar. 5-8	A-10 Tournament
Mar. 5	First Round Games
Mar. 6	Quarterfinals
Mar. 7	Semifinals
Mar. 8	Championships

UVC-TV 19 SPORTS

*no pre- or post- game show

SPONSORED BY HOUSING SERVICES CABLE NETWORK AND DAILY COLLEGIAN

WALK-ON LOOKS TO IMPROVE

With hard work, Burns seeks to build on last year's effort

By J.R. Adams
Collegian Sports

Everybody knows the names Travieso and Padilla, but Ross Burns is a name that few are familiar with.

Ross is part of the depth of the Minuteman back court.

If you take a look at the rosters of the top teams in the nation, you will find a common trend: depth. The Massachusetts Minutemen had that depth last season when they made the run to the Final Four, and this season they have players like Burns, working hard outside of the spotlight to build up to that point once again.

Burns walked-on to the Minuteman roster last season, and game-in and game-out, he patiently waited for his chance to share the spotlight with higher profile players.

For most people this would be a difficult role to play, but Burns knows that it comes with the territory of being a walk-on.

"I've got to work hard every day, push the guards as much as I can in practice and pick up the intensity level," Burns said.

Burns takes the back seat to "the best backcourt in the country" with a lump of pride, after having a highly successful high school career.

Before playing in the Maroon and white, Burns took a post graduate year at Cushing Academy. Traditionally a strong New England prepschool hockey hot bed, Burns left his mark on the hardwood.

He averaged 25 points and six rebounds per game in prep school, leading his team to a 20-3 record and a New England Prep School Championship at Cushing Academy.

Before playing for coach William Wenning at Cushing, he played hall for four years at Greenfield High School.

In his senior year at Greenfield, Burns, averaged 24 points, 6.5 assists, and three steals on his way to a Western Massachusetts state title and an All-Western Mass. selection.

After his year at Cushing, the 6-foot-3 guard had a few options open to him as far as playing college hall was concerned.

Where would he play? The main decision was whether to go to a Div. II school to strut his stuff or try to make a name for himself in a national Div. I power.

Burns was recruited by a number of Div. II schools and a few lower-profile Div. I schools, but chose to try to take his game to the next level.

"On the depth chart I'm 12[th man] right now," Burns said. "I can't do much about that but work hard in the weight room on off-days. Even on on-days I have to just work as hard as I can and try to get extra work in."

Burns sees the Minutemen's return trip to the Final Four as a work in progress.

"It was a great experience, it's something that I definitely want to do again" Burns said of last year's trip to the Final Four. "We want to try to push the team as much as we can to try to get back there because it was a great trip.

"Right now we're not a Final Four team, but that's because we are a young team. By March we may very well be a Final Four team," he said. "It all depends on our improvement, of course.

Burns saw the added depth as an advantage.

"Talent wise, we are more talented than last year's team, we have more players than last year's team. We're 11 or 12 deep, that's what we were not last year," he compared.

"We might take some lumps early on, but come March there aren't going to be too many teams looking forward to playing us."

Burns saw limited action during last year's championship run, but he gained valuable experience playing with and against the nation's best players in practice. Most noted was his effort in UMass' Elite Eight win over Georgetown.

He scored four hoops last season in actual game play, but feels that his hard work and determination will someday give him a piece of the spotlight.

"I'm a part of a UMass basketball family that I enjoy, I'm just happy to be a part of it."

Ross Burns

6-3 • 180
So. Guard
Greenfield

"We might take some lumps early on, but come March, there aren't too many teams that are looking forward to playing us."
–Ross Burns

1995-96
0.4 ppg, 4 assists,
1 steal

UP FOR THE CHALLENGE

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Sports

After setting a school record with 20 wins, and reaching the NCAA tournament for the first time in school history last season, the Massachusetts women's basketball team looks to build on last year's achievements in the 1996–1997 season.

But they'll have to do it without two of the greatest players in UMass history. Octavia Thomas and Melissa Gurile have graduated, leaving behind a legacy the younger Minutewomen hope to fill.

"They started since their freshman year. They knew what to do, and we knew what to expect from them," UMass coach Jonnie O'Brien said. "Now that we've had our experience we need to teach the kids what to do [Thomas and Gurile] took a lot of the shots, and now we'll be in the mix of those big shots."

Though UMass has lost the services of Gurile and Thomas, it does think the Minutewomen aren't talented. Back for their senior season are veterans Beth Kuzmeski and Crystal Carroll.

Kuzmeski returns as the Minutewomen line leader. The team leading three point threat drained 46 three-pointers last season. She also ranked second on the team in assists with 78, and led the team in steals with 81.

There's some expectations in the leadership role. We have to keep a positive attitude, and believe in each other. We [Carroll and Kuzmeski] have to make sure we step it up, relate to our teammates what we need to accomplish. Personally, the expectations are definitely higher."

Carroll, a 6-foot-2 forward from Watervliet, N.Y., will help soften the blow left by the absence of Gurile and Thomas in the paint. A third team All-Atlantic 10 selection last season the past two seasons, Carroll averaged 12.7 points and six rebounds in 1995–96, and recorded 11 rebounds in the team's overtime loss to Michigan State in the NCAA tournament.

"Now they've been thrust into the role of leaders of the team, and now they're the ones the younger players on the team are going to look up to and try and emulate," O'Brien said. "But they can't change, they have to keep doing what they're doing, and they'll be fine."

Also back to help is senior point guard Sabriya Mitchell. The 5–foot–3 Newark, N.J. native led the Minutewomen in assists in 1995, ranking fifth in the Atlantic 10 with 132 assists, and brings experience to a young backcourt, having started 32 of 33 games in 1995–96.

Junior Kara Tudman is expected to open the season as the team's starting center, despite starting only three contests last season. Also expected to see minutes for the Minutewomen are sophomores Jaywana Bradley and Yolanda Rayside. Rayside, a 6–foot–3 center from New York City, began to show flashes of greatness late last season, averaging 12 minutes and 4 rebounds over UMass's last 12 contests.

Bradley, who can play either guard or forward, also emerged late in the Minutewomen's NCAA season, grabbing 16 minutes a game over the last 11 games of the season.

By reaching new heights in 1995, with a first–ever NCAA tournament bid, does Joanie O'Brien feel added pressure to get back as soon as possible?

"By achieving [an NCAA bid], expectations are high," O'Brien said. "But it's a good pressure. Success breeds success, and we want everyone to know we're for real. So, yeah, there's pressure, but it's a self–induced pressure."

Along to help O'Brien get back to the NCAAs are two talented newcomers. Kelly Van Huisen, a 1995 Boston Globe "Dream Team" selection from the basketball factory of Haverhill High School, is expected to step in immediately and help out in the backcourt.

In addition, Alison MacFarland, a 5–foot–9 guard from the ominously named Brick, N.J., is also going to see a lot of minutes for the Minutewomen.

"I'm past seeing them as freshmen," O'Brien said. "They're way ahead of what a freshmen should be, especially defensively."

Van Huisen has shined in two early–season exhibition games, and has been a pleasant surprise for UMass.

"I just want to do my part, stop my player on defense," Van Huisen said. "I want to open it up for people like Crystal [Carroll] to score."

For all the success of last year's Minutewomen, they still have yet to capture the elusive Atlantic 10 title.

"We want to go back [to the NCAAs], but we want to go back as champions," Kuzmeski said. "The A–10 championship comes first, and it would be nice to go to the NCAAs as champions."

Talking to the Minutewomen, there seems to be a common theme for this 1996–97 outfit. Playing together.

"The focus is on five playing as one," O'Brien said. "We have to play together as a group, and do the things we need to do to become better basketball players."

Sports Weekend
Every Monday in the Collegian

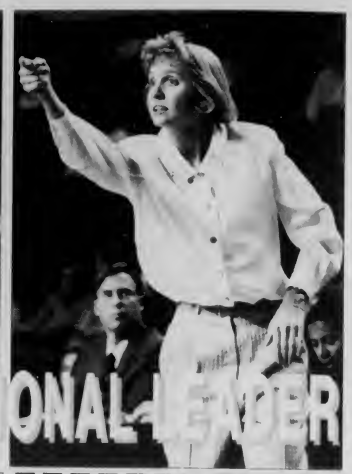
WorldWide Cafe



@ the Holyoke Mall
"Where Gourmet Coffee meets the World Wide Web"

The Home of:
- Outstanding, organic gourmet coffees - by the cup or "buy" the pound
- Bagels baked fresh daily
- Our World Famous Frozen Cappuccinos
- Soups, sandwiches, pastries, cookies, brownies & more

PLUS
- The World Wide Web on a FULL T1 - 55 times faster than your 28.8 bps modem
- 21" color monitors, network printers, Internet Phone, your own E-mail account, CU-seeme, Chat & much, much more
- Friendly, experienced Internet Assistants to help you get started & answer your questions

World Wide Café, Inc.
Holyoke Mall @ Ingleside
Located across from Abercrombie & Fitch next to Sears
Tel: 413-536-2298
Fax: 413-536-9791
E-mail: wwc1996@aol.com
Visit our homepage @ http://wwcafe.com

DOMINO'S PIZZA

OPEN TILL 3 AM
SUN.-WED.
4 AM THURS.-SAT.!!

MEAL FOR TWO
Medium Two-Topping Pizza
Plus Two Sodas
Second Two-Topping Pizza $4.99
$8.75
Expires 1/31/97

MEAL FOR FOUR Large Two-Topping Pizza
Plus Four Sodas
Second Two-Topping Pizza $5.99
$11.75
Expires 1/31/97

CUSTOMER APPRECIATION SUPER SPECIAL
Buy Any Pizza
Get One of equal or lesser value
$1.99
Expires 1/31/97

FREE DELIVERY!! AMHERST (256-8911)

$10 OFF
Any Lifetime Warranty Muffler

OR

$25 OFF
Any Catalytic Converter

Offer requires presentation of this ad. Ad must be presented at time of purchase. Not valid with other discounts. Expires 1/4/97.

MIDAS

Rte. 9 • Hadley (Near Hampshire Mall)
586-9991
Free Shuttle Service to Campus

MasterCard VISA AMEX DISCOVER

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Sports

Inevitably in this world, a person is defined, by their actions.

As a major college women's basketball coach, those actions are often put under the microscope and over-analyzed.

For Massachusetts coach Joanie O'Brien, her spirited and intense sideline mannerisms exemplify her personality. However, it is what's beneath those actions that really defines the Minutewoman coach.

"I'm a pretty emotional coach, but I try to pride myself on discipline, on doing things for a reason, doing things right," O'Brien said. "I think part of my job as a basketball coach is to try to take advantage of the talent I have.

"Hopefully people see that I'm a very disciplined coach, and get the most out of my players. That's what I'm trying to do."

And that's why she is the way she is. O'Brien wants nothing less than the best from her players, therefore the players get nothing less than her best.

Her intensity is spurred on by her desire to continue building this team, and reaching new heights with the Minutewomen every season.

From her playing days at Penn State and her assistant coaching tenure at Auburn, she has brought an intense, winning attitude to a program that did not win a single game the year prior to her arrival.

"I think it's in my Irish blood. I've always been an intense player. Nobody could ever question my heart, my desire. I always gave everything I had, every chance that I had," O'Brien said. "That's the kind of thing I expect from my players.

"I don't spend a lot of time worrying about myself. Most of my energies go into worrying about this team, and the players on this team. The things we need to do, I think since I've been here, I've tried to do things in what I call 'The Right Way.'"

"The Right Way" must be the winning way because in just five years on the UMass sidelines O'Brien has become the second-winningest coach in Minutewoman history.

Her debut campaign with the Massachusetts program was 1991-92, a year in which her team logged a 4-24 record that included a 14-game losing skid to end the season.

O'Brien's 24 losses in that season were more losses than she suffered in all her five years (149-20) at Auburn as an assistant.

Seasons like those will try any coach's patience, and often make her wonder why she's still in coaching, but O'Brien's reasons for wielding the whistle and clipboard go far beyond wins and losses.

"I enjoy the game of basketball. Sometimes the Xs and Os part is the part I like the best — you either have it or you don't," said O'Brien, who has coached the Minutewomen to 68 victories in her five-year tenure in Amherst. "Fortunately for me, I've been able to be good at the Xs and Os. You know, that's why I do it. I enjoy it. I enjoy working with the kids, teaching the kids."

Since O'Brien's first two years of rebuilding, the team has won 53 games against only 35 losses, including last year's record-breaking 20-win season that saw the Minutewomen venture into March Madness for the first time in UMass women's hoop history.

Her relentless pursuit of excellence is apparent in the way she carries herself; it gives the young players an attitude to emulate, an example to follow on the court. On the other hand, Joanie's off-the-court persona is one of major contrast to her fiery, temperamental, competitive approach to coaching.

"I'm really Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde because when you take me away from basketball and I'm pretty shy, pretty quiet," O'Brien said. "Honest to God, I really don't care how people perceive me. I'm willing to be me; I'm honest, I'm really straight forward, to the point. That's me."

That's Joanie O'Brien.

ULTIMATE AEROBIC TRAINING

Stairmaster 4400 PT

CLIMB

PLUS
KEISER
NAUTILUS
FREE-WEIGHTS
STAIRMASTERS
LIFE CYCLES
LIFE ROWER
RECUMBENTS
CYBEX UBE
NORDIC TRACK
TREADMILLS
AEROBICS

4 Months $139

AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 460 West St. South Amherst 256-0080

Sports

Every Monday in the Collegian

Check out UMass basketball on the WORLD WIDE WEB

http://www.umass.edu/rso/~collegian

■ Flint

continued from page 9

"It's a little bit different this year," Travieso said. "[Calipari] isn't around and we have to look to another guy to be there and lead us through the whole season, but we have a lot of confidence in Bruiser and what he can do. He was a big key last year, and I'm looking forward to listening to him and seeing what he has in store for us this year."

On the whole, Flint has managed to make a smooth transition to his spot as the man in charge, keeping a healthy dose of perspective about him.

"We have to be very patient," Flint said. "We have a very young team and the guys are going to have to learn how to play at the level we play at. Our thing is to get better everyday, to learn from our mistakes and try to build as the season goes on.

"I'm not going to say that we're going to jump out of the gate and do this and do that. The pressure's not on us to win, the pressure is on us to prepare and when you prepare the right way, you'll be able to perform."

■ Maclay

continued from page 27

They have to make sure the nation's best backcourt maintains their high level of play throughout the season, without any letdowns or slumps.

Maclay has to work hard in practice, for the good of Edgar and Carmelo, and the whole team. Even though, more often than not, he'll register in the box score as a DNP-CD (Did not play, coach's decision) he plays an integral part in the success of the 1996-97 Minutemen.

So, maybe even more rare than his ability to play two sports, or maintain a 3.0, or do both in conjunction, is his ability to give so much to the basketball team and get so little credit.

■ Weeks

continued from page 16

Lead by example.

That is something Tyrone Weeks has done throughout his entire life. Weeks was recently profiled in a U.S. News & World Report feature on kids that beat the odds. Growing up in Philadelphia, Tyrone proved to be a role model for his younger brother while he helped his mother overcome a drug addiction.

"Basketball has been a big motivator for me," Weeks said. "I didn't know that my life would go as far as it did in basketball. That's what I try to stress to kids growing up. Don't give up. Everything is not perfect in life, but lean towards something that is good and hopefully it will get you out of the situation you are in."

■ Mack

continued from page 27

The first day of practice, you come in and people are diving for balls, and we had to adjust. Pretty soon everybody's diving for balls."

Bay State basketball experts consider the signing of Mack, along with Babul, a recruiting coup. It used to be that UMass never got the local schoolboy blue-chippers. Players like Patrick Ewing, Rumeal Robinson and Travis Best shunned Amherst for greener pastures outside their native state. But with the success of the Minutemen in the 90's, fans are hoping that that trend is over, and the future of Minuteman basketball is homegrown.

■ Norville

continued from page 22

with the same goals in mind and similar methods of achieving those goals.

"Basically, it's the same person," he said. "They're the same in some ways yet different in others. They both wanted us to play hard, and with a good attitude. I guess Coach Flint learned a lot of things from Coach Cal, but he goes about the coaching in his own way.

"Coach Flint is a good coach. He keeps us motivated and we're having fun. I think he'll do the same job as Coach Cal, even if he doesn't have as big a name as him. Maybe someday he will."

Norville arrived at UMass with Camby, when the team was starting to receive national respect. And now that he's been here a couple of years, life in college basketball isn't quite as intimidating anymore. Whether he and his team are taking on a St. Bonaventure or a Kansas, the preparation and mindset is the same.

"When I first came here everybody was talking about how we were going to be playing teams like Arkansas and North Carolina," said Norville. "But then we went out and showed we could beat those teams. And now we're just used to playing them.

"But when you have a big crowd you always have that extra motivation to go out there and go hard. Even when you're getting booed it makes you give that extra effort. It's that much more fun."

First on the agenda for Norville is winning the national championship. If that could be attained, he'd throw aside any personal goals he may have.

"Once this team starts clicking, we'll be able to compete with the best of them," he said. "And as for me, whatever happens — happens."

Minutemen Basketball
NAISMITHS
Sports Bar
10 T.V. Sets-13 Drafts
Kitchen-Pool-Great juke Box
211 Worthington St.
Springfield, MA (733-5107)

SUBWAY
256-1919
4 Main St.
Amherst, MA 01002

It looks like the real world.
It feels like the real world.
It pays like the real world.
It's an internship.
Unreal.
Call for more information on this unbelievable opportunity.
Kathleen M. Kane
The Steffen Agency
1351 Main Street
Springfield, MA 01103
413/748-6000
Northwestern Mutual Life
The Quiet Company.

SHOW YOUR SUPPORT FOR THE TEAM WITH OFFICIALLY LICENSED
U M A S S
CLOTHING AND GIFTS
AREAS LARGEST SELECTION FOR ADULTS-YOUTH-CHILDREN
• T-SHIRTS • SWEATSHIRTS
• HATS • GOLF SHIRTS
• SWEATERS • JACKETS
• GIFTS • GOLF ACCESSORIES
... AND MORE
✓CHAMPION ✓GEAR FOR SPORTS ✓MJ SPORTS
✓THE GAME ✓STARTER ✓AND OTHER FAMOUS BRANDS
CONVIENTLY LOCATED IN THE CAMPUS CENTER WITH PARKING IN THE ADJACENT PARKING GARAGE
UNIVERSITY STORE — Campus Center 545-2619 — Regular Hours M-F, 9-5 Sat 10-5
CALL FOR EXTENDED HOURS ON GAME DAYS
COUPON
Imprinted UMASS Clothing and Gifts
Amt. of Sale _____
Amt. of Discount _____
20%
UNIVERSITY STORE Campus Center 545-
MAY NOT BE COMBINED WITH OTHER DISCOUNTS OR COUPONS
EXPIRES 4-30-97

Hand Poured
Hand Scented
Gift Baskets
Fund Raisers
Heritage Candle Co.
A Complete Line of Candles and Accessories!
236 North Pleasant Street, Amherst
256-4797 • 967-3464

Performance Collision Center
"AUTO BODY SPECIALISTS"
Eric Curran
Manager
315 Russell Street RTE. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
413-584-6090
Mass. License #1882

OLDSMOBILE
Minuteman
VOLKSWAGEN
Patricia Dolan
SALES REPRESENTATIVE
TEL 617-275-8000
FAX 617-271-1325
39 NORTH ROAD
BEDFORD MASS 01730

JUNGLE RED SALON
$2 Off Any Haircut or Nails
Call 549-1840 for an appointment, walk-ins welcome.
233 N. Pleasant St. / Amherst, MA 01002
Next to The Pub
Exp. 12/31/96

R&P Liquors
• Weekly Specials on Regular Beers
• Fine Wines
• Largest Selection of Mixers in S. Amherst
• Fridge Rentals
505 West St. • South Amherst
Minutes from Mill Valley, The Brooks, & The Boulders
253-9742

381 COLLEGE ST
AMHERST
RT 9 EAST
253-9661
Automatic
Drive Through Service
Amherst Sunshine Car Wash

Claudia's Cafe
Open every day. 549-7122
1 E. Pleasant St., Amherst

CAPTAIN VIDEO
Come check us out!
Tel. 549-6016
OPEN:
MON.-THURS. 10am-9pm
FRI., SAT. 10am-11pm
SUN. 12-9pm

LEGENDS
SPORTS BAR & GRILL
WATCH ALL
NFL NHL NBA
Plus All College Basketball & Football Games Here
16 oz. Bud and Bud Lite Bottles $2
456 Sumner Ave. • At the 'X' • SPFLD • MA • 733-3113

(413) 256-1385
(413) 256-8157
Marshall Steinbeck Collision, Inc.
COMPLETE AUTO COLLISION AND PAINTING SERVICES
GLENN LaPLANTE
MA I.C. #1508
53 SO. PROSPECT ST.
AMHERST, MA 01002
STATE REG. #1212

LORENZ
LORENZ
Authorized Service
All Makes & Models Serviced
BUICK
Cadillac
GMC TRUCK
Oldsmobile
PONTIAC
• Weekday, Night & Saturday Service available
• Quick Lube Plus Program
• ASE & GM Certified Technicians
• Towing, Rental Cars & Free Estimates
Your Award Winning GM Connection Est. 1954
1-800-247-4742
369 Federal Street • Greenfield, MA
Exit 27, Off Rt 91 to Rt 2 East
First Exit • South Rt. 5 & 10 (Federal St.)

NEWS 40 WGGB
YOUR HOME FOR LIVE, LOCAL NEWS AND UMASS BASKETBALL

LIVE ON NEWS40

December 7	Wyoming	8pm
December 12	Drexel	7pm
January 21	Rhode Island	7:30pm
February 1	Xavier	2:00pm
February 15	Maryland	1:30pm
February 20	Fordham	7:30pm
March 1	Temple	2pm
March 7	A-10 Tournament	7pm

G UMass

PRE-GAME SHOWS LIVE FROM RAFTERS AMHERST

January 21	7pm
February 1	1:30pm
February 15	1pm
March 1	1:30pm
March 7	6:30pm

...AND REMEMBER TO WATCH THE NEWS40/UMass Coach's Show
Sunday nights at 11:35pm, with Mike Ratte and Coach James "Bruiser" Flint, throughout the season

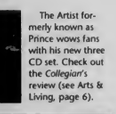
The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN



Volume CVI Issue 64 | New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 | Friday, December 6, 1996

Final four bound

The UMass men's water polo team will be in California this weekend to try to capture an NCAA title (see Sports, page 12).

He's still our Prince

The Artist formerly known as Prince wows fans with his new three CD set. Check out the Collegian's review (see Arts & Living, page 6).

WORLD

Rebel violence resumes in latest Bangui conflict

BANGUI, Central African Republic (AP) — Rebellious soldiers fired rockets at a downtown hotel yesterday and French troops began evacuating foreigners as fighting raged in the streets of the capital.

Two rooms in the Sofitel Hotel were damaged in the early-morning attack near the French Embassy. Presidential guards, backed by French troops, attacked the rebels in a two-hour firefight.

There were no reports of injuries, but it was the worst clash since the soldiers rose up on Nov. 15.

The fighting raised fears of a repeat of a May army mutiny, in which dozens of people died when French and African troops engaged in days of fierce fighting with the mutineers.

This mutiny has been mild by comparison, but both sides have become increasingly impatient as time goes by with no resolution in sight.

The mutineers are demanding the resignation of President Ange-Felix Patasse, saying he has failed to pay their salaries and has undermined the army by diminishing its role and using foreign troops to keep him in power.

Patasse, whose 1993 election ousted a military regime, has refused to step down and is demanding that the rebels disarm before he'll consider their grievances.

NATION

Minister kills man, self in Pa. crime of passion

CHADDS FORD, Pa. (AP) — Friends remember a gentle 72-year-old retired Presbyterian minister who taught Sunday school, sang in the church choir and always built the set for the annual Christmas show.

They remember he'd been depressed since leaving his wife. The gun — they didn't know about that.

On Monday afternoon, the Rev. Richard Whiteside shot one man to death in a Delaware County home, then pistol-whipped, choked and shot a woman he secretly desired. Thinking her dead, he flopped into a chair, recited a prayer for forgiveness and put a bullet in his own head, police said.

Police said Whiteside was jealous of the woman's new relationship with the man, a high-school sweetheart.

"I want people to know what a good friend Dick has been for most of the folks around here," said the Rev. William Hess, who worked with Whiteside before the 20-year church veteran retired in 1987.

The former minister killed Merton Ronald Radloff, 54, of Rock Hill, S.C. Radloff's fiancee, Sharon Devilbiss, 54, survived — the bullet just grazed her.

Whiteside first met Ms. Devilbiss two years ago as they rehearsed for a musical revue. He left his wife a year ago and began renting a room in her home.

This fall, Hess said, Whiteside received treatment for depression.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 18	HIGH: 33 LOW: 21	HIGH: 30 LOW: 5

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics.....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial.....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 12

President requests service of Mt. Holyoke prof for CIA

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

Big Brother just got a little closer to home — President Bill Clinton announced today that Anthony Lake, a professor of international relations at Mt. Holyoke College, will move from his current post as national security advisor to director of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

News Analysis

He will assume the helm of the scandal-plagued agency once Clinton is re-inaugurated in January.

For the CIA, a change in leadership could not have come at a better time. The agency's history contradicts any notion that it acted in defense of democracy — from accusations of human rights abuses in Guatemala to financing a war against the elected government of Nicaragua by selling crack cocaine in Los Angeles. Lake's most pressing challenge will be to address these controversies and then, redefine the role of the CIA in the post-Cold War world.

His colleagues in the Pioneer Valley are somewhat optimistic about the chances for success.

"He might shift it to be a more open agency," said Steve Jones, a professor of Russian and Eurasian studies at Mt. Holyoke. "He'll bring a good deal of knowledge about social and economic issues as well as questions of 'high politics.'"

However, Jones said it was unlikely that Lake would end traditional intelligence "gathering" methods.

"[Lake] will not attempt to end covert policies," he said.

Nevertheless, Mt. Holyoke faculty and administrators said they were proud to have such a close association with the nation's intelligence community.

"[Lake's] colleagues and former students here know him to be a thoughtful scholar, an astute policy analyst and a forceful leader with a strong moral compass," said Mt. Holyoke President Joanne V. Creighton in an official statement. "I am confident that he will continue his record of judicious service and effective leadership."

Even considering his qualifications, adjusting to the job will not come easily.

"One thing that [Lake] does not have is a lot of experience running a bureaucracy," said Eric Einhorn, professor and chair of political science at the University of Massachusetts.

With a budget of approximately $28 billion a year, Einhorn said one of Lake's greatest challenges will be coordinating the vast array of agencies which compose the U.S. intelligence network — a job he called "tremendously difficult."

In a world where national security is increasingly being defined in terms of economic security, as opposed to military security, Einhorn said Lake could move the agency away from the clandestine operations of the past towards a role with more connections with U.S. industry overseas.

Lake does bring unique specializations to the post — specifically his expertise in Latin American and African politics.

If the agency is to mold its future as a catalyst of U.S. economic advancement in the Third World, a director with focus on these regions seems to be a perfect fit — for the CIA.

`Fill–A–Bus' ends this afternoon

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

Clothing, food and toy donations are still being accepted in the fourth annual "Fill–A–Bus" drive which ends at 3 p.m. today. All proceeds will benefit the Amherst Survival Center.

The bus, which is located in front of the Student Union, will be driven to the Survival Center, a non–profit organization where drive volunteers will help unload the donations at the end of today.

"The Center is also going to try to have people there who are going to benefit from our donations, but they close at 3 p.m. so they are looking into alternate arrangements," said drive coordinator Kreg Espinola.

The Center is operated by two paid staff members, and the remaining staff are volunteers.

"The interesting thing about the Center is that the same people who benefit from the Center are also volunteers at the Center," said Karen Elam, coordinator of UMass' Community Service Project, the group sponsoring the fundraiser. "There is a real effort to create a community at the Center."

Vange Westcott, the Survival Center's director, has been involved with the Center for the past 20 years. She started going to the Center as a married college student with children who needed assistance. She has been working at the Center ever since.

"There are many college students who come in here for food or clothes. It's not always easy to go through college when you are on your own," she said.

The Amherst Survival Center opened in 1976 with the purpose of providing a place where both families and individuals struggling in today's economy could come together to share their information and frustrations, thus helping them to survive.

The Center receives their resources from Amherst community groups, local grocers and businesses, religious groups and individual donors.

Espinola said there were 30 to 40 students who volunteered their time to help out with the drive. Among the many jobs they did were to post 2,000 flyers.

"We wanted to solicit the attention of people within a mile radius of the bus," Espinola said.

Volunteers also helped to educate students on campus about homelessness and poverty.

Espinola commented that the response from the UMass community has been great so far.

"People do care and do understand, the response has been wonderful," he said.

"The Fill–A–Bus project is going remarkably well. It looks like most of the bus is full already," Elan agreed.

Elan credited two reasons for the event's success.

"One reason is due to Kreg's [Espinola] effort in getting the word out," she said. "And the second reasons is the University community is really responding."

Before the drive began, Espinola met with Westcott and Kate Cameron, assistant director of the Center.

"We wanted to know the basic needs of the Center," Espinola said.

Turn to Bus, page 2

COURTNEY SMITH/COLLEGIAN

Lazy Days of... December?
Students welcomed the winter sunshine yesterday afternoon outside the Campus Center.

Clinton selects cabinet; Albright makes history

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Settling on his second-term national security team, President Clinton yesterday chose U.N. ambassador Madeleine Albright to be the first female secretary of state and Republican Sen. William Cohen to be his defense secretary.

A senior White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, also said Clinton had decided to name Tony Lake, his national security adviser, to be the new CIA director. Sandy Berger, Lake's deputy, will move up to the top spot.

AP PHOTO

Liz Albright

Clinton was expected to announce the choices yesterday afternoon. All the appointments are subject to Senate approval.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher and Defense Secretary William Perry are resigning. The decision leaves the future of CIA director John Deutch in doubt. He had been a candidate for defense secretary and is still mentioned as a possibility to replace Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary. Though the appointments of Lake and Berger amount to a second-term reshuffling, the nominations of Albright and Cohen are trailblazing choices.

Albright, whose family fled the communist takeover of Czechoslovakia when she was 11, would be the first woman to hold America's senior diplomatic post. The selection of Cohen, the retiring Maine lawmaker, is in keeping with Clinton's promise to include Republicans in his administration.

Other details about the president's new national security team:

•Albright, 59, is a naturalized American citizen, the daughter of a Czech diplomat whose family moved from Czechoslovakia to the United States when she was 11. As U.N. ambassador, she has been known as a hawk on Bosnia intervention and NATO expansion.

•Cohen, 46, is a Republican moderate who announced earlier this year that he was retiring from the Senate after three terms. He rose to national prominence when he cast one of the first GOP votes to impeach President Nixon and later played a leading role in the Iran-Contra hearings.

•Lake, 57, is a reserved New Englander who has eschewed the spotlight as Clinton's national security adviser. The author of five books on foreign policy, Lake served in the State Department in both the Nixon and Carter administrations. Before joining the Clinton administration, he had been teaching international relations at Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley, Mass., and raising 28 head of cattle on his farm.

•Berger, 51, worked in Lake's shadow as deputy national security adviser but won Clinton's respect for his consensus building and organizational abilities. Before joining the Clinton administration, he worked as an international trade attorney and partner at a major Washington law firm. Like Anthony Lake, he worked in the Carter administration — as deputy director of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff from 1977 to 1980.

Scott proposes fiscal plan at Faculty Sen. meeting

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

University administrators and faculty discussed final allocations for the fiscal year 1997 (FY97) and future plans for the spring semester at the final Faculty Senate meeting of the fall semester.

Chancellor David K. Scott presented the Report on Final Allocations FY97 Compared with Proposed Allocations in the Strategic Action Plan. The report showed a $2,066,000 increase in the final base allocations. The FY97 original plan within Scott's Strategic Action Document totalled $11,960,000 in allocations, yet received $14,026,000 in the final base allocations.

According to Scott, the increase arrived from three main areas. One million dollars came from the UMass President's Office.

"The extra million from the President's Office is in response to our campuses financial need," Scott said.

Another million came from both increased revenue from fees and research funding.

Funding for the improvement of classrooms received $250,000 in the final base allocations.

A total of $821,000 will be used for the major initiatives of the Strategic Action Plan. Large allocations were given to Teaching, Learning and Curricular Reform ($210,000) and Capitol Campaign Service ($254,000).

"These final base allocations put the University roughly in balance," Scott said.

Scott also said that many degree programs have been eliminated. Since 1990, 28 have been stopped, while only 11 have been created.

Scott told the Board of Trustees at a recent meeting that eliminating degree programs is very difficult for the University.

Provost Patricia Crosson informed the Faculty Senate about the Board of Higher Education's concept paper about the proposed Honors College.

"Our Honors Program should represent the Honors College. We will have to bring this issue forward as soon as possible," Crosson said.

Vice Chancellor Royster Hedgepath updated the senate about the state legislation matching funds decisions. According to Hedgepath, 50 cents of state money will be given for every dollar of private funds raised.

"Hopefully, there will be additional state allocations," he said.

President of the Graduate Student Senate Deepika Marya said that students were being stopped from sharing information through the systematic removing of flyers.

Marya said that flyers were being removed from bus stops overnight, whereas they used to be removed weekly.

"We consider this as a move to silence students," Marya said, later asking the Chancellor who was responsible for this decision.

Availability of parking spaces was another major concern voiced at the meeting.

Gov. Weld comments on effects of Hawaii court decision

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — A Hawaii court's decision allowing gay couples to receive marriage licenses in that state has given Gov. William F. Weld an opportunity to frame his views on the subject.

The governor, responding to questions from reporters on Wednesday, said he would veto any Massachusetts proposal to ban gay marriages, although he does not yet think the state is ready for its own law recognizing them.

Weld, however, said that if Hawaii's decision to grant the licenses is upheld by its own Supreme Court, Massachusetts would have no choice but to offer gay couples married in Hawaii the same legal rights and obligations it extends to straight couples.

On Tuesday, two gay tourists from Boston, David Dudley and Edward Koh, went to the Hawaii Department of Health and requested a marriage license hours after the judge's ruling.

The couple of 10 years was denied one by workers acting on the advice of state attorneys. The Hawaii attorney general has asked for a stay of the judge's ruling and is expected to appeal to the Hawaii Supreme Court.

"My position, as a matter of law as the chief executive officer of the state, would be that couple would be entitled to the benefits and burdens of married status in Massachusetts," Weld said.

"If you don't take that view of the law, then you take a cross-country train trip and you're married or not married depending on what the statute of the state that your train is traveling through says," the governor added. "A Reno (Nev.) divorce is a lot quicker than a divorce in other states, and we recognize Reno divorces."

The Hawaii Supreme Court ruled in 1993 that denial of marriage licenses to same-sex couples amounted to gender discrimination under the state constitution's Equal Rights Amendment.

Gay couples have been trying to get married legally so they share property rights and things as simple as hospital visitation privileges extended to family members.

The state Supreme Court sent the case back to a lower court to give the state a chance to show a compelling public interest in allowing such discrimination.

In a two-week trial in September, Deputy State Attorney General Rick Elchor insisted the judge and the state Supreme Court misread the state constitution and the state law.

"The law does not discriminate on the basis of sex," he said. "It makes distinctions on the basis of sexual orientation, not sex."

In his ruling Tuesday, Circuit Judge Kevin Chang said the state failed to show any compelling reason to deny the marriages.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Friday, Dec. 6

Lecture — The Geoscience Lecture Series will present Pierre Biscaye in a talk entitled "Particles and Ice Cores — What Can We Learn From the Paleoclimate from the Dust on the Balance?"* at 3:30 p.m. in Morrill II, room 131.

Performance — University Dancers will perform Thursday, Dec. 5 through Sat. Dec. 7 at Bowker Auditorium. Reservations may be made by calling 545–2511. Tickets are $7/general admission, $4/students, and $2/seniors and children. UMass students free. Reservations are recommended.

Discussion — Kate Hoffman, a traditional Reiki master/teacher will discuss the "Reiki — Usui System of Natural Healing," which is based on a 2500–year–old Buddhist healing technique, at 7 p.m. at Third Wave. Admission is free.

Saturday, Dec. 7

Bazaar — Grace Church will hold its annual St. Nicholas Bazaar from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Parish Hall, 16 Spring St., Amherst. For more information, call 256–6754.

Fair — The Sunderland Congregational Church will hold its Annual Gingerbread Fair from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Religious — A free Chanukah party will follow the 6 p.m. menorah lighting at Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. Donations of gifts for the needy will be accepted and greatly appreciated.

Reading — Author Nancy Garden will read from and discuss her new book, Good Moon Rising, at 3 p.m. at Third Wave Bookstore.

Monday, Dec. 9

Lecture — The Cannabis Reform Coalition will host a speech by the author of the critically–acclaimed "On Drugs," Professor David Lensen, during its upcoming general meeting at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Notices

AIDS Day — UMass is participating in the global observance of World AIDS Day which will take place from Nov. 25 through Dec. 6. You can get HIV/AIDS information and a red ribbon to pin on yourself or on our "Remembrance Tree" at the Campus Center Concourse table each day. Visit the Faces of AIDS art display and the Five College AIDS Quilt at Earthfoods. Watch Boys on the Side on HSCN. Activities will culminate with a candlelight vigil on the Student Union steps at 5 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 6 and a march to the First Congregational Church on Main St. in Amherst for a gathering of Remembrance and Hope. Refreshments will be served. After that, there will be a poetry/prose reading followed by an open mike at 8 p.m. at Claudia's Cafe. For more information, contact Health Education at 577–5181.

Training — Applications for the Mediation Training workshop from Jan. 13–17 are available in Campus Center room 823, and are due back on Friday, Dec. 6.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584–8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly Delesus at 546–1083.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

Menorah Lighting — All are welcome to attend the lighting of the 6–foot menorah in front of the Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at the following times: Thurs. Dec. 5 at 5 p.m.; Fri. Dec. 6 at 4 p.m.; Sat. Dec. 7 at 6 p.m.; Sun. Dec. 8 time TBA; Mon. Dec. 9 at 7 p.m.; Tues. Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.; Wed. Dec. 11 at 8:30 p.m.; Thurs. Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in photo, layout, copy and marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae, and R&B dancers for next semesters annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546–2714 for audition information.

Theatre — UMass Theatre Guild presents the musical The Pajama Game. Dec. 5–7 at 8 p.m. with a matinee performance on the 7th at 2 p.m. All shows are in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Tickets are $4/students and senior citizens and $6 for everyone else and are available at the door and in advance at Tix Unlimited, 545–0412.

Campus Police Log

Accident — Property Damage
Dec. 4
A minor two–vehicle accident on Massachusetts Avenue was reported.
A vehicle in parking lot 44 was broken into; a stereo system was stolen.

Annoying Behavior
Dec. 5
An individual in Wheeler Residence Hall reported a possible peeping tom outside of a window.

Assault & Battery
Dec. 5
An individual in Gorman Residence Hall reported being assaulted. Charges may be filed upon completion of investigation.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering
Dec. 4
A vehicle in parking lot 44 was broken into; CDs and ski boots were stolen.
The trunk of a vehicle in parking lot 43 was broken into; tools and tire changing equipment was stolen.

Disturbance
Dec. 4
A fight between two individuals in Brooks Residence Hall was resolved by officers.

Hazardous Materials/ Spills
Dec. 4
A small hydraulic oil spill on Hicks Way was cleaned up.

Vandalism
Dec. 4
A vehicle in parking lot 44 was damaged.
A bus stop bench was damaged on Governors Drive.
Dec. 5
A window was smashed on a vehicle in parking lot 44.

Bus

continued from page 1

"They serve a variety of people not just the homeless. The help struggling families, immigrants and their families and others as well."

After the amount of donations received last year, Westcott said the Center is looking forward to receiving this year's.

"Last year we receive plenty of donations from the event," she said. "This year's donations will be very helpful as well."

Due to colder temperatures and recent welfare cuts, Westcott said that the Center has been busy.

"There have been lots of people coming in the past few weeks," she said. "Many of them are coming in for groceries because this allows them to get their bills paid and stay caught up on their rent."

Although winter clothing is preferable, students can donate any type of clothing they would like to help fill the bus, Espinola said. Neither the toys nor clothing have to be new.

"The good thing about this drive is that if the Survival Center doesn't need the donations, they bring them to the Salvation Army," Espinola said.

Although the drive ends at 3 p.m. today, Espinola wants to remind everyone that the Survival Center takes donations year round.

Espinola became involved in Fill–a–Bus through his community service learning class. He said his professor offered him the coordinating position even though he has fulfilled his requirements.

He said he enjoys volunteering his time to the less fortunate whenever possible.

"I am doing this to help the less fortunate benefit especially during the holiday season," Espinola said. "There is a myth in the Amherst community that there are no homeless, no people starving, but there are.

"They are just not as visible as in the inner cities like Washington D.C. and Chicago. If the problem is not visible then less people feel inclined to become involved.

"The community and the University as well do a fair share but a lot of time I think they [the homeless] are forgotten."

Espinola said he thinks the drive has been so successful because it is done around the holiday season when most people are happy and willing to share with those less fortunate.

"The homeless are still out there when the holidays are not around," he said. "I think they still go unrecognized during other parts of the year."

Espinola said he would like to see others get involved with helping the homeless more.

"People need to get involved in community service for longer than one to two hours in the community service class," he said. "So many people go to a shelter for a community service class and never go back."

Elam said she would like to see the Fill–A–Bus drive get more people involved in community service as well.

"This is a great event, but I would like to see it used as a spring board to get the UMass community more involved in other areas of community service as well," she said.

Elam explained that students don't have to be involved in a class to volunteer their time and services. She said there are many upcoming event next semester in which students can get involved whether it's for a day or long term.

"Students who are interested should call our office and we can help them find a place to volunteer at. We also have a volunteer fair every semester, that students can get ideas from," Elam said.

The Spring Volunteer fair is Feb. 5, and for more information on community service ideas call 545–3327.

Work faster with it.
Simplify your life with it.
Communicate to the world with it.
Have fun with it.
Get $150 back with it.

Power Macintosh® 7600
132 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM
15" display/keyboard
Now $2,558

Power Macintosh® 7200
120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM
15" display/keyboard
Now $1,918

Apple® Color StyleWriter® 2500
Up to 720x360 dpi
Now $329

Check out Apple's Holiday Savings.
Right now Apple Computer is it, offering a $150 rebate when you purchase a Macintosh® personal computer and an Apple® printer. Fact is, your timing couldn't be better to get your Mac,® a machine that features some of the world's most innovative technology. And it's easier to use than anything you'll encounter in your class schedule. So get to your campus computer store and pick out your Mac. It'll help keep you ahead in your classes (or at least tied). And right now, you'll come out $150 ahead on the price.

Power Macintosh® 5260 120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/14" built-in display/keyboard Now $1,559
Power Macintosh® 8500 150 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/17" display/keyboard Now $3,548
Macintosh® Performa® 6400CD 180 MHz/16MB RAM/1.6GB/8X CD-ROM/15" display/keyboard Now $2,198
Apple® Color StyleWriter® 1500 Up to 720x360 dpi Now $239

UNIVERSITY STORE
The University Store
Campus Center
Hours: M-F 9-5, Sat. 10-5
545-2619

©1996 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo, Mac, Macintosh, Performa, Power Macintosh and StyleWriter are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Apple made its rebate offer valid from November 2, 1996, through January 15, 1997, while supplies last and subject to availability. To qualify for rebate, printer, computer and an Apple monitor (if sold separately) must be purchased on the same invoice. Offer good on any Macintosh desktop computer with any Apple printer. Void where prohibited by law. See participating retailer for further rules and details. All Macintosh computers are designed to be accessible to individuals with disability. To learn more (U.S. only), call 800-600-7808 or TTY 800-755-0601.

Officials to shut down reactor citing safety as main reason

By Brigitte Greenberg
Associated Press

WATERFORD, Conn. — Company officials have decided to pull the plug on the Connecticut Yankee nuclear power plant, the nation's second-oldest reactor.

In a move that had been expected, the plant's board of directors voted unanimously Wednesday to close the Haddam Neck plant after 29 years in service. The reactor had been licensed to operate until the year 2007.

"We are all sorry and disappointed that the plant will not be able to finish its license life," said Ted Feigenbaum, chief nuclear officer for Northeast Utilities. The plant had been shut down since July because of safety concerns.

The company hopes to move most of the plant's 522 employees into positions at other nuclear plants, said Jere LaPlatney, unit director at the plant. About 100 workers will be left there by the end of 1997, he said.

Decommissioning the plant is expected to take at least five years and cost about $400 million. Roughly half of that money has been collected by the utility in a special decommissioning fund.

The company will seek to recover the balance from ratepayers over a period of several years. Feigenbaum stressed, however, that closing the plant will save about $100 million because the company can buy power at a lower cost than it would take to produce it at the plant.

"We determined... that it was in the best interests of our ratepayers and customers to discontinue operation of Haddam Neck," Feigenbaum said.

Rates will go down for customers, company officials said, but by how much could not immediately be determined.

Connecticut Yankee, a 582-megawatt plant, began commercial operation in January 1968. In October, a company study found it was too costly to keep operating.

The reactor has been shut down for safety problems since July.

Summer inspections found that a backup safety system might not work properly in an emergency. In August, even while it was shut down, a serious nuclear accident could have occurred, regulators said, when the water level over the fuel core dropped by about three feet.

Operators failed to notice the problem because gauges had been disconnected.

All four of Northeast Utility's nuclear plants in Connecticut, including the three-unit plant at Millstone station, are currently shut down due to safety problems. The company has been relying on small generators and imported supplies to power the state.

A separate economic analysis will be conducted on whether it is economically feasible to continue operating Millstone Unit 1, the oldest of the Millstone units. Feigenbaum said he expected Unit 1 to pass.

The announcement of the closing of Connecticut Yankee came during an enforcement conference with federal regulators, who sought answers to what it has identified as approximately 40 apparent violations of Nuclear Regulatory Commission standards at the plant. The NRC could impose fines against the utility.

The enforcement conference was held in Waterford. The plant's owners had voted on Connecticut Yankee's fate at a separate meeting at the company's headquarters in Berlin.

Hubert Miller, the NRC regional administrator, said his agency needed to get to the root causes of the problems at Connecticut Yankee because the company owns other plants and will be handling dangerous radioactive materials during decommissioning.

Jim Lieberman, director of the NRC Office of Enforcement, said Connecticut Yankee was an example "of how not to run a nuclear power plant."

The apparent violations can be attributed to widespread problems at every level of the operation, from the very design basis of the plant to the philosophy of plant managers, said John Haseltine, the company's engineering director.

When questioned by NRC officials about whether a lack of money caused managers to ignore the problems, Haseltine said it was not a question of money but more an acceptance of "living with known problems."

Russian coal mine strikers demand back pay

By Julia Rubin
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Russia's prime minister said yesterday he has made an emergency transfer of $236 million to miners protesting chronic wage delays in the third day of a nationwide strike.

Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin, whose government is under increasing pressure from a critical parliament, said the miners should get the money soon. But he acknowledged miners' complaints that huge sums promised in the past often haven't arrived.

Chernomyrdin said the latest funds had been allocated since Tuesday.

Strike leaders were in talks with the government, and had no immediate comment.

The miners are demanding months of back pay and benefits, and an end to chronic wage delays. They have idled more than half of Russia's 240 coal mines and called on the government to resign.

The miners' union says there are up to 400,000 workers on strike, while Rosugol, the state coal company, put the figure at 61,000, the Moscow Tribune reported yesterday.

In some regions, teachers, power workers and others have joined the strike.

"The government has not fulfilled our demands to solve the back-payments problem," Sergei Zheltyakov, a miners' union leader in the Siberian region of Krasnoyarsk, told the ITAR-Tass news agency earlier in the day. "Therefore we no longer trust it."

The government's debt to the coal industry has been estimated at $270 million.

Chernomyrdin said the government is investigating why earlier subsidies didn't reach miners, and he lashed out at the state coal company.

"If a company like Rosugol can't do its job, then it should be replaced," the prime minister said.

Rosugol's president, Yuri Malyshev, sounded conciliatory after a Cabinet meeting, telling reporters that the latest government subsidy should be enough to end the strike. He said mining regions will get a total of $300 million by year's end, including credits and debt offsets.

Strikes and labor protests have become common across Russia due to a cycle of debts that leave millions of state workers unpaid for months. Total wage arrears have reached about $8 billion, the government says.

The coal industry's troubles run even deeper. Many inefficient mines depend on huge government subsidies, and the government plans to shut 80 of them in the next few years.

Usually, miners' strikes have ended when Moscow pays off at least part of the debt.

The Communist-dominated Duma, the lower house of parliament, appealed to President Boris Yeltsin today to take personal control of the crisis, and threatened a no-confidence vote in the government if the situation is not resolved soon.

COURTNEY SMITH-COLLEGIAN

What you looking at?
Two–year–old Dilber Mamedzadeh of Amherst hangs out with one of the ducks yesterday afternoon at the campus pond.

Campus Activities at the University of Massachusetts Presents
Something Every Friday
A weekly series of FREE special Events

Comic Improv Group
Scared Scriptless
Bluewall Café, 8:00pm
December 6, 1996
Followed by the hit movie
"Trainspotting"
Choose Life. Choose a job. Choose a starter home. Choose owner insurance, leisure wear and matching luggage. Choose a future. But why would anyone want to do a thing like that?

CHECK OUT N.Y.C.'S BEST IMPROV COMEDY!

UMASS Student Opener
Pele's Desire

PolyGram Music Giveaways!!
Check out our website:
www.umass.edu/campact/events/calendar.htm
The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
This series is made possible by a grant from Auxiliary Services and the Vice-Chancelor for Student Affairs

DAILY COLLEGIAN and ICP present:
The First Annual UMass bandwidth
Spanning Five UMass Bands
Watch here for band listing!
18+
CLUB METRO NORTHAMPTON, MA
Monday Dec. 9th
Doors Open @ 7:00
Bands Start @ 9:00
$5 admission ($4 with this ad)

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Sumanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Michael Elliott News Editor Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Weld a cut above the rest

Jacob W. Michaels

Massachusetts Governor William F. Weld made a brave move this week when he said the Bay State would recognize gay marriages performed in Hawaii.

According to the Boston Globe, Weld views the "Defense of Marriage Act," passed by Congress to allow states to ignore gay marriages sanctioned by other states, as clearly "unconstitutional."

According to Weld, and many other legal experts, the law violates article IV, section 1 of the U.S. Constitution, which says "Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other State."

The Globe then reported that "Weld said that his primary obligation as governor is not to adhere to the will of Congress but to the words of the U.S. Constitution."

It's to Weld's credit that he has enough backbone to say out loud what everyone else knows, despite the fact the majority of Congress, Democrat and Republican, voted for the measure and the President of the United States signed it into law.

Weld's principled stand is so far beyond what we expect from any politician in this day that he deserves to be lauded, even though he is only doing his job.

Unfortunately, other politicians don't seem to be as principled.

Besides the obviously unconstitutional Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA), there is also the Communications Decency Act (CDA), passed within the last year. The law purports to limit "indecent" speech on the Internet, despite the First Amendment, which clearly states, "Congress shall make no law... abridging the freedom of speech."

The folks who are sent year after year to Washington don't care about doing what they're supposed to, only what they think the people want. And while that is part of their job, they can't trample over the most important document in this country's history.

Fortunately for us, the document that they're ignoring realized that this situation could eventually occur and set up a series of checks and balances to stop it. The Supreme Court has the ability to declare a law unconstitutional, and it is almost certain that both the DMA and the CDA will end up there.

But even that is not a perfect situation. The judges on the Supreme Court are not perfect.

Take the comments of State Sen. Robert Antonioni (D- Leominster) about what the Supreme Court might do should the DMA end up there: "Aside from overturning the expressed will of the elected representatives of the people, I'm not sure that the U.S. Supreme Court wants to take such a significant and perhaps unprecedented leap in reengineering social policy."

It's not the Supreme Court's job to look at that though. They are simply supposed to determine whether or not a law contradicts the Constitution. But, it's not that easy. The Justices don't operate in a vacuum, and they aren't completely unbiased.

As hard as the Supreme Court works to do what's right, it's important to make sure there's as little room for error as possible.

That means making sure all politicians are as responsible as Weld, and don't blatantly ignore the Constitution. The only way to do that is to let the politicians know that that's what the people want, which means letters.

So sit down and write them a letter, telling them how little you appreciate their attempts to ignore the Constitution by voting for measures like the Communications Decency Act and the Defense of Marriage Act. At the same time drop a not to Weld's office letting him know that his sense of responsibility is not only noted, but greatly appreciated.

Jacob W. Michaels is a Collegian columnist.

That's a lot of money

Adam Millington

On Tuesday, November 19, free-agent slugger Albert Belle signed a contract with the Chicago White Sox that made him the highest paid player in baseball history. He agreed to ink a deal that will pay him $55 million over the next five years.

When I heard about this, I didn't really think about it very much. With players' salaries soaring beyond control in baseball today, it seemed like just another high-priced, disgraceful and ridiculous contract any sports fan is used to. However, over the recent holiday break, I felt compelled to analyze his salary more closely just to see what his paycheck breaks down to during a normal season of baseball. Here's what I came up with:

Albert Belle will earn $55 million for five years with the Chicago White Sox. That, of course, equals $11 million per season. Let's assume that Mr. Belle will play 150 games per year. Please keep in mind that the regular season is 162 games, but I am using this number because I am taking into account a possible trip to the disabled list or a suspension. Any sports fan who is familiar with Mr. Belle's character understands the validity of the latter reason. Based on this 150 game season and his $11 million annual salary, Mr. Belle will be paid over $73,000 per game. THAT'S ONE GAME!

Is your tongue off the floor and back in your mouth? Good, let's take those numbers a step further. With Mr. Belle hitting in the third, fourth or fifth spot in the batting order, he will more than likely get up to bat at least four times per game. Hence, Mr. Belle will be paid over $18,000 each time he gets up to hit. Does the floor taste any better? Remember, he could strike out, ground out, fly out, hit into a double play or even a triple play and so on. But that doesn't matter; he'll still get his $18,000.

$18,000 for just getting off the bench. After seeing this, I was thoroughly disgusted. There are hard working Americans who work all year long to make that much money just to survive and put food on the table to feed their families. With one at bat, he could pay for about 75 percent of my college tuition here at UMass. In one month, he will make more money than some, if not most, people will earn in their lifetime. Do the math, it's not that hard.

This recent event is not what baseball needs right now. With attendance down, dwindling fan interest, constant labor disagreements that were only recently resolved and strong competition from the NBA and NFL, I cannot foresee Major League Baseball surviving the way it is. I am of the opinion that the fans, who will more than likely feel the effects of this contract in higher prices at the ballpark, will become even more discouraged with baseball than they already are. Not only that, this contract has just paved the way for future stars of the game to ask for as much or more than what Belle makes because they feel that if he can get this much, so can they. Don't be surprised to see Ken Griffey Jr. sign a contract equal to, if not greater than, Belle's when his time expires in Seattle.

If anything is going to suffer from this, it's baseball itself. Small market teams like Kansas City, Montreal, Milwaukee and Pittsburg are now at a severe disadvantage since they probably cannot afford to match the offers big time ballclubs like the Yankees and Red Sox can offer a free-agent superstar like Mr. Belle. To better understand how small these clubs are and how competition is all but destroyed, just look at the facts: the combined salaries of Mr. Belle and teammate Frank Thomas, which is over $18 million per year, exceeds the payrolls of the Brewers, Expos and Pirates, combined! How can small clubs compete with numbers like that?

I hope this commentary gives you a sense of the madness that is plaguing Major League Baseball. Please keep an open mind while reflecting on this. I am not a sports management major; I'm not a math wiz; I'm not an expert in statistics. I'm just a regular guy who likes sports but is becoming increasingly discouraged toward baseball in light of the recent events. As a final note, I am currently taking "The Jackie Robinson Initiative" course here at UMass. When I enrolled in it, I hoped that by learning about baseball's importance in shaping and influencing American society, I could regain the enthusiasm and respect I once held for the game but lost due to high salaries and the 1994 strike. After the recent developments in Chicago, that enthusiasm and respect I once held for the game are gone. I ask all you baseball fans, do you still have enthusiasm and respect for baseball?

Adam Millington is a UMass student.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Jeremy Brothers

In the "Things which I forgot to say thanks for last week" department...

I'm thankful that the Campus Center basement has now become a crafts marketplace. Now we have another reason to skip classes, staring at homely pieces of glass and felt displayed on homemade paper for ridiculously jacked-up prices. Next year we can only hope they rip up the garage and put that Wal-Mart in that Chancellor Scott has been promising for so long.

I'm thankful that the "dangerous loner" quotient has taken a drastic turn upwards. Before long, I'll be able to have a pale, lanky, trenchcoat-clad Tourette's victim in every class, no longer just as staff at the Collegian. A word to the wise — if UMass is going to start recruiting these upstanding young examples of stability, then they have to keep their maintenance up. One almost broke in my History 100 class a few weeks ago. Those 10 free trips to Mental Health Services aren't going to cut it... As fun as they are to look at, our learning process isn't enhanced by some idiot in the corner drooling and muttering something about the impending millennium.

***

Y'know, no matter how many times I see that episode of "Benson" where the Governor's staff simulates global thermonuclear war and they simulate killing a young Missy Gold, it still gets me a little weepy. The one thing I still don't understand is how they can call "Benson" a spin-off of "Soap" when he goes from being Mona's butler to the Lieutenant Governor...

***

Jeers to UPC, who screwed every single person attending the Rollins show Monday evening at the Fine Arts Center by advertising the show at 8 p.m., instead of at 7 p.m., when the show really started. Not only did they make dozens of people miss the first hour of the show, but they managed to piss off all the people who had tickets in advance with the barrage of people stomping in a hour late wondering "Hey, is that him speaking already?"

We won't even go into the fact that UPC never told your beloved Collegian staff member that he could have spoken to Rollins after the show at the press conference, or that there ever was a press conference, for that matter.

In the "Things that I should have gotten over months ago, but for some reason, haven't" department...

Boston Magazine's ridiculously biased round-up of New England schools, of which all five members of the Five College consortium were included. Amidst the cutesy illustrations was a disgusting joke making light of violence on campus that began "How many UMass students does it take to screw in a light bulb?" In addition to this ridiculously unfunny shot was a list of some of the campuses' must-take courses. Among them a history class on baseball which had never been taught before and was only a few weeks into the semester. Meanwhile, our neighboring schools were pelted with jokes about roaming "a capella" groups. (Okay, those were a little funny...)

But when looking at the Five College system, let's remember, without getting too snooty — it's a misnomer. There are four colleges and only one university. It's a pride thing. Don't let Boston's many bastards get us down. If they're trying to keep the spirit of the Brahmin alive, let them pick on Boston College.

***

Corrections and responses to complaints about this week's Arts & Living pages:

1. You're right, Ms. Peron and Mr. Guavera weren't lovers, not in the traditional sense at least. But are we really sure that Alan Parker won't rectify this situation when Madonna and Antonio Banderas are involved? He did direct Pink Floyd: The Wall, didn't he?

2. Sure, but isn't it really about the love of the sport?

3. Just because he's on a stage speaking, doesn't make it a "spoken word" performance. It also doesn't mean that it's "art."

Jeremy Brothers is a Collegian staff member.

Prospective columnists!

Start thinking about next semester. Speak to Mike Burke for details.

Finding equal protection in Hawaii

John DelBarba

The Hawaii Supreme Court has stated in Baehr v. Lewin that couples do not have a fundamental constitutional right to same-sex marriage arising out of the right to privacy or otherwise. The court additionally found, though, that Hawaii Revised Statutes (HRS) discriminates on the basis of sex, and unless the state can prove it has a compelling interest in doing so, this thereby implicates the equal protection clause of article 1, section 5 of the Hawaii Constitution.

This particular finding by the Hawaii Supreme Court has created a hysteria surrounding same-sex marriage that has simply confused and misled the public. It is a hysteria of gay marriages coming to a town near you. The hysteria- based confusion blinds the majority of people by attacking an unpopular group at the expense of individual rights.

Should we not all be protected equally under the eyes of the law? I should hope that regardless of personal attacks which are based on hysteria generated by stereotypical fear, at some point someone will see through the fog of this mess and realize the hidden attack on individuals and Hawaii's equal protection clause.

Hawaii's Constitution, in regard to equal protection, is much more elaborate than the United States Constitution's guarantee of equal protection. The 14th Amendment simply states that a state may not deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Hawaii's Constitution, by way of Article 1, section 5, states that "no person shall be denied the equal protection of the laws, nor be denied the enjoyment of the person's civil rights or be discriminated against in the exercise thereof because of race, religion, sex or ancestry." Thus, the Article explicitly states that state-sanctioned discrimination against any person in the exercise of his or her civil rights is in clear violation of the Hawaii Constitution.

The court held that sex is a suspect category for purposes of equal protection analysis under article 1, section 5 of the Hawaii Constitution and that HRS @ 572-1 is subject to the strict scrutiny test. The court held that "(1) HRS @ 572-1 is presumed to be unconstitutional (2) unless Lewin can show that (a) the statute's sex-based classification is justified by compelling state interest and (b) the statute is narrowly drawn to avoid unnecessary abridgments of the applicant couples' constitutional rights."

The court remanded this matter for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. Subsequently, on remand the district court found that the State failed to show any compelling interest in denying gay couples the right to marry. Yet, one day after this finding, the judge ordered a stay of his decision until the State can once again appeal their case to the Hawaii Supreme Court.

Clearly, Hawaii's Constitution prohibits discrimination based on sex; clearly, Hawaii's Constitution prohibits the denial of one's civil rights. Moreover, the paramount principle called into question is Hawaii's Constitutional guarantee that no person shall be denied the equal protection of the laws.

My fear is what won't happen through the court system. First, the hysteria will probably generate enough energy that the Hawaii Legislature will create some type of legislation that continues the attack on same-sex marriage. Second, if the legislature decides not to grapple with this political volleyball, it will surely be resolved through the court system.

My particular problem with this approach is that some homophobic judge, one who has a difficult time understanding and grasping the concept of neutrality and equal protection as it relates to same-sex marriage, will get his or her hands on this case and carve a Machiavellian slice out of the reasoning, and the logic, of the Hawaii Supreme Court.

John DelBarba is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor

Levenson unclear

To the editor:

Columnist Daniel Levenson's article in the Nov. 25 issue of the Daily Collegian ("State should pay for what they own"), contains some points which deserve clarification. Mr. Levenson expresses some concern about the about the portion of the service fee which is used to pay for certain facilities on the Amherst campus. The following is background information which can help set the context for the issues raised in the column.

Buildings of public institutions nationwide are normally funded through the issuance of long term debt (bonds), federal appropriations or through the generous support of donors. When bonds are involved, responsibility for paying debt service over a period of time rests either with the state or the institution (or in some cases a combination). State bonds are usually paid by general or dedicated tax or fee revenue. The same holds true for institutionally incurred debt. In this state, the University of Massachusetts Building Authority was created as the vehicle through which the University can issue long term debt for capital projects.

It is also common nationally that auxiliary enterprise facilities such as dormitories, dining halls, athletic facilities and other special purpose buildings be funded by institutions rather than through state capital outlay appropriations. Campuses generally meet the debt service payments for these facilities through fees or other dedicated revenue streams. As far back as the 1950's, this has been the way most of the facilities on the Amherst Campus have been funded. Since state finance law prohibits the use of appropriations to pay debt service, the only available funding source to the campus is fee revenue, revenue from sales and services, gifts or other institutionally generated funds.

On the Amherst Campus, $406 of the $722 yearly Service Fee goes to pay the debt service for residence halls, dining halls, campus center/student union, stadium, Cage, Mullins Center and the parking garage. All of these facilities were constructed and/or renovated in whole or in part by the Building Authority (or its predecessor). No part of this portion of the fee goes to pay any operating costs associated with these facilities. The Knowles Engineering Building was also constricted by the Authority, but the debt service is paid by overhead recoveries on grants and contracts. In much the same way that the bank "owns" your house if it holds the mortgage, the bondholders own these facilities until they are fully paid off. This would be the case even if we ceased using or use it for a different purpose. We are legally obligated to meet debt service payments.

The author raises a very crucial point in addressing the question of the role of the state in helping support this campus and its facilities. The overall condition of most of our facilities is dismal, primarily as a result of diminishing state resources for basic maintenance, renewal and replacement. We estimate that the deferred maintenance liability on the Amherst Campus is in excess of $300 million with about one third of this amount in auxiliary facilities. Students have been rightfully concerned about the impact of state operating budget reductions on tuition and fees they must pay. A more insidious situation is the gradual disinvestment by the state with respect to our facilities. We are seeing this by the state expecting the campus to assume a greater responsibility for construction and renovation of non auxiliary facilities. The consequences of this have the potential of being far more onerous and long-lived both financially and in the quality of campus life than operating budget reductions.

Paul J. Page
Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Jewish Affairs

Friday, December 6, 1996

Goldbaum heads Jewish Affairs; office brings change to UMass

By Bryan Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

In a typical week, Larry Goldbaum will attend a seemingly intolerable number of meetings in an attempt to learn as much as possible about others groups, to foster better relations between African-American and Jewish people and other groups on campus.

It has been nearly two years since Goldbaum was hired as Coordinator for the Office of Jewish Affairs at the University of Massachusetts, and he is still in the process of building relationships with the administration and Jewish communities.

Quick accomplishments

Goldbaum said he has found the job difficult, but is proud of his accomplishments. Last year the Office of Jewish Affairs teamed up with the Black Student Union and the Office of ALANA affairs to co-sponsor a speech by Morris Dees, director of the Southern Poverty Law Center.

"It was nice to have a speaker that united groups instead of polarized them," Goldbaum said.

He said he hopes to work along side the Black Student Union and ALANA Affairs to co-sponsor more speakers and events. There are tentative plans to organize an Easter- Passover celebration in the spring, Goldbaum said.

Goldbaum has also worked with other offices in an attempt to establish a series of workshops educating faculty and staff about the religious and cultural backgrounds of different groups.

Try Sek, the administrative assistant for the Office of ALANA Affairs said the two offices work together.

"We are in the process of working with the Office of Human Relations and the Cultural Food Night in the Spring," Sek said.

In November, the Office of Jewish Affairs coordinated a Muslim-Jewish workshop in conjunction with the Muslim Students Association and the Offices of Human Resources.

The workshop was attended by staff in the hopes that it would increase their awareness of the student population.

"The workshop went great, I hope to organize more of them," Goldbaum said. "People really want information, they want to know about Jewish and Muslim holidays."

Amin Amisted, from the Office of Grants and Contracts and a Board Member of the Muslim Students Association, said the goal of the workshop was to teach people to be more "supportive and acceptive."

The workshop first discussed the religious significance of Rosh Hashanna and offered a brief introduction to the primer lunar calendar and the lunar month of fasting, Ramahban, Amisted said.

Goldbaum is also working on a project with the Black Student Union which uses theater to foster and explore relations between different communities. Laura Tichlar, graduate assistant to the Office of Jewish Affairs and director of the recent performance, God of Vengeance, is helping to create the theater outreach program. The initial meeting for the project was held last Wednesday, but interested students can contact the Office of Jewish Affairs.

The community reacts

Goldbaum's most important role has been to act as a liaison to students concerning administrative policy and issues involving anti-Semitism.

"Having Larry Goldbaum as a liaison cut some of the red tape with administration," said Jay Bragg, of the AIPAC (American Israeli Public Affairs Committee). "Before Larry, Jews weren't being represented in the administration."

"Before, the brunt of dealing with anti-Semitism was left in Hillel's lap and not on the administration," said Saul Perlmutter, executive director of Hillel.

"[Goldbaum] deals with administrative policy, it is nice to have someone there concerning Jewish issues," said Chabad House Program Director Yonah Blum.

The candle controversy

One of the policies that Goldbaum has advocated to be amended is the interim housing policy toward candle lighting. Currently, no candles are allowed to be lit in a dorm room because of the fire hazard they may present. Goldbaum said students have complained because it prevents them from performing religious activities in privacy.

Goldbaum said the interim policy, which allows students to light candles in designated places such as lounges, is still not sufficient.

"None of us wants to see a fire that could damage property and lives, "he said.

Goldbaum said that the current policy is rarely enforced, and that it would make more sense to have students notify their resident directors of the exact dates they need to light candles and take the proper safety precautions.

"We understand why students want to light candles, but there is a risk. We want to put our finger on the correct reasonable accommodation without creating a risk to the larger community," said Housing Director Michael Gilbert.

Gilbert said there will be review and debate over the next few months when a final policy will be decided on. He said it is a difficult issue because they want to preserve students freedom without creating fire and safety hazards.

He said that in Sept. 1995 a policy was implemented banning all candles from the dorms, but by midsemester the dialogue that was issued led to the creation of the current interim policy which can be found in the Housing Manual.

The office operation

The office of Jewish Affairs is part of Student Affairs and is funded by the administration. Goldbaum's immediate supervision is Associate Vice Chancellor Janne Vanic, who is responsible to Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Tom Robinson. The office of ALANA affairs is funded by the student activities fund and is responsible to M. Ricardo Townes, the director of Campus Activities.

Perlmutter said the office was created by a Task Force on Jewish Awareness which was created in 1994. Students complained after several anti-Semitic incidents that they did not have adequate representation in administration. The Task Force decided to create the Office of Jewish Affairs for a trial three year period. After approximately a year of searching, Larry Goldbaum was hired in May of 1995.

Goldbaum brought a great deal of experience to the job as former head of Student Activities at Hampshire College, where he also worked informally as an advisor to Jewish Students. He was born in Denver and attended the University of Chicago, and then attained his Masters in Economics from UMass.

COURTESY JLC AT HILLEL

L to R: Sophomore SOM major Todd Lieberman, sophomore interior design major Ivana Kurian, junior communications major Melissa Norman, and senior BDIC major Jay Bragg have fun living at the JLC.

Jewish students living large at JLC

By Sarah J. Kimmel
Collegian Staff

There is a living community on the border of the UMass campus of which few students are aware. It's not a dorm and it's not an apartment. Though is located between fraternity houses, it is not part of the Greek community. This small living community is located on the second floor of the Hillel House.

The Jewish Living Community (JLC) is composed of 24 UMass students. These young adults share a kosher kitchen, two bathrooms, a washer, a dryer and a lounge with a television, all of which are located on the same floor as their spacious rooms.

The students also have access to a library located on the first floor. The living package includes a Friday night Shabbat dinner and a Sunday brunch each week. These meal times give everyone a chance to sit together and relax after a hard week," said senior economics major Guy Chayoun. the floor's resident assistant.

In order to live in this one-of-a-kind community, an interested student must submit an application and go through an interview process. They must show an interest in being a significant part of the Jewish community. Anyone is welcome to apply to be part of the JLC, but it is intended to cater to the Jewish students on campus.

The residents of the JLC are very diverse in their interests and personalities. There is a violinist, a member of the National Ski Team, a blooming politician who worked on the Clinton campaign, several members of the Greek community and members of many UMass organizations.

These individuals are from all denominations of Judaism — from the girl who keeps Shabbat every week to the young man who is just learning about the details of his religion. The kosher kitchen is kept by all of the residents, and observances are respected by everyone on the floor.

The residents all care for the building and share chores in order to keep the kitchen and the bathrooms clean. Dishes are done by whoever uses them, and since everyone uses the lavatories, everyone cleans them.

There are floor meetings every two weeks where the group plans programs like their upcoming ski trip. In the past, they have had barbecues and late night dance parties. These event shouldn't be confuse with the events sponsored by Hillel, though — the JLC is a completely separate entity from the UMass Hillel. The JLC is not an RSO and, therefore it plans its own events and has more freedom to what it wants.

The JLC is a very informal setting. The residents scream at the television as members of the UMass basketball team run past on the screen. Here, there are no quiet hours, but if the noise gets too much for someone they will quiet down.

"Everyone is very respectful of each other," said Melissa Norman, a junior communications major.

The majority of the residents of the JLC have lived in the dorms. Zeesie Pertain is a junior political science major who moved to the JLC after living in Coolidge.

"The dorms were fun, but I was looking for more of an off campus experience. I didn't want to live in an apartment because I wanted more of a community," she said.

Sophomore civil engineering major Omri Poreth moved from Orchard Hill to the JLC.

"I moved off campus for the bigger room and the friendly environment here," Poreth said.

Ivana Kurian is a transfer from Alfred University in New York and is a sophomore interior design major. She said she felt it was important to be part of "a Jewish community." She describes the dorm as "a large mass of people, not a community. In a dorm no one knows who their neighbor is."

"The JLC offers Jewish students an alternative living situation where they can experience Jewish culture and heritage together," Chayoun said.

My mom's Jewish, and my dad's not

Jeremy R. Adams

The same member of one particular Christian organization has approached me and questioned my faith in God and dedication to my worship twice in the last month. I never really know what to tell him, because when I get past the initial reaction of anger from his rather belligerent violation of my privacy, I am rather intrigued by the offer to explore my religious options.

The problem I have with partaking in his study group's meetings, or even going to church, is that I am very confused about where I stand religiously.

My father was a church organist as a second job for most of my life, which meant that I spent a lot of time in a lot of different churches over the course of my childhood. My mother is Jewish. She was born in the Netherlands, and her parents were survivors of the Holocaust.

People tell me I am Jewish because my half comes from my mother's side, but I have never actually practiced Judaism or even attended Synagogue. My father went from gig to gig while keeping up his first job as a professor.

